Since casting his presidential vote in 1856, at the mouth of a six-shooter, for John C. Fremont, Mr. Ostrander has been a loyal supporter of the principles of the Republican party. When the news of the firing of Fort Sumter, in April, 1861, was heard in Merced county, there was great excitement among the Union and the Confederate sympathizers, and when it was proposed to raise the American flag there were threats of pulling it down. Mrs. Ostrander made her husband promise to refrain from talking politics. On his way to Snelling with a man from Louisiana, the subject of raising the flag was brought up, but Mr. Ostrander, true to his promise, said nothing. When his companion, Mr. Gwyn, said, "If the flag is put up, it will be torn down." Mr. Ostrander could contain himself no longer, and said, "Both of my grandfathers fought in the Revolution, my father fought in the war of 1812, and if the flag is put up and torn down I will kill the ——— that pulls it down." When he returned he told his wife that he had broken his promise. The Unionists decided that it was best to defer the flag raising until the Fourth of July, but the night of the third of July the flag pole was chopped up, so there was no flag raising the next day. The next year, previous to July 4, 1862, Mr. Ostrander obtained from those who had contributed to the purchase of the flag, permission to put it up in his yard, and on that glorious day it was unfurled to the breeze, and strange as it may seem was never molested, but was kept flying during the remainder of the Civil war.

Returning to New York state in 1852, Mr. Ostrander married Lydia Wheeler, who was born in Malone, N. Y., and died, in 1890, in California. Five children were born of their union; namely:

Frank, district attorney of Merced county, who died in 1900; Jasper, a physician, who died in 1902; Willis, an inventor, who resides in Chico; Sadie, the wife of Thomas Crew, of Chico; and Frederick G., a prominent attorney of Fresno, who is an ex-district attorney and ex-judge of Merced county. In 1876 Mr. Ostrander was presidential elector of the fourth congressional district, being elected on the Hayes and Wheeler ticket. He was the first president of the Merced County Agricultural Society and later of Agricultural District No. 21, comprising Merced and Mariposa counties, and was appointed by Governor Markham to serve one term of four years as a member of the Yosemite valley and Mariposa commission. He is a life member of the Society of California Pioneers of San Francisco, and belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. While he has always participated in all movements that have tended to advance the interests of the community and has taken pride in the success of the same, his greatest pride is in being able to have kept the American flag flying during the Civil war.

EDWIN JAMES LEONARD. The present county recorder of Madera county is a descendant from the very earliest settlers in America, for the Leonard family was represented among the pilgrims on the Mayflower and was of English extraction. Both in times of war and peace its members have proved themselves worthy citizens of our republic. They built the first iron foundry in the United States, thus inaugurating an enterprise that has since become of vast extent and importance. During the Revolutionary war one of the family bore arms in defense of independence and liberty. James Leonard, who was a son of this Revolutionary soldier, was himself of loyal and patriotic spirit, which he showed during his service in the war of 1812. During the next generation James Edwin, a son of James, became a soldier in the Black Hawk war and proved himself the possessor of true Revolutionary courage.

James Edwin Leonard was a native of Norwich, Conn., and grew to manhood upon his father's farm. When Iowa was still an undeveloped region he identified himself with its pioneer farmers, settling on a rich tract of bottom-land five miles from Sabula, Jackson county, within close proximity to the Mississippi river. He witnessed the growth of that locality from its raw and crude primeval condition to one of the most fertile and valuable sections of the west. Residing there during by far the greater part of his life, he naturally had a circle of acquaintances that was limited only by the number of pioneers in the county. At the time of his death, which occurred at seventy-six years, in 1900, he was the oldest surviving settler of the entire county. His wife, who was born Maria Higgins, was a native of Jacksonville, Ill., and died in Iowa. Her father, James Higgins, who was a native of Nova Scotia, removed to Illinois and settled on a farm near Jacksonville, Morgan county, where he died.

Four children comprised the family of James Edwin and Maria Leonard, namely: Henry, who still lives near Sabula, Iowa; Bessie, wife of M. H. Cassell of Los Angeles; Edwin James of Madera; and Mrs. Mary Kuhn of Davenport, Iowa. The third of these, Edwin James, was born near Sabula, Iowa, August 19, 1860, and during boyhood years worked on the home farm during summer months and studied in country schools in the winter. Further educational advantages included attendance at the Davenport high school and two years in Cornell College, where he took the studies of the freshman and sophomore classes. Leaving college before entering upon his junior year, in 1879 he went to Leadville, Colo., to assist in the Grant smelter under ex-Governor J. B. Grant of Colorado, Mr. Leonard's uncle, Judge James Grant, being financially interested in the project. In 1881 he left Colorado for California and settled in Madera (then Fresno) county, where he became interested in the sawmill business. One of his earliest ventures was the building of the Miami sawmill in Mariposa county, where he engaged in the manufacture of lumber with William H. Crooks as a partner. In 1883 he built a new mill with a larger capacity and continued to manage the same with his partner until 1891, when he sold his interest. He then purchased the Oak Park ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, which he improved by building an excellent system of ditching for irrigation. Making his home on the ranch, he engaged in the raising of Holstein cattle there until 1900, when he moved into Madera, and has since disposed of his ranch property. At one time he owned an interest in the Gambetta mine at Grubgulch, Madera county, but after working the claim for three years he sold out.

The marriage of Mr. Leonard united him with Melvina Oxendine, who was born in Calaveras county, her father, Meldred Oxendine, having been a pioneer of this state. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard are the parents of two children, Mamie and Mart. For several years Mr. Leonard was a member of the state Democratic central committee, and he has also served on the county central committee. In 1902 he was the Democratic nominee for county recorder and won the election by a majority of one hundred and fifty-four, taking the oath of office in January, 1903, for a term of four years. In fraternal connections he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having been initiated into that fraternity in the Madera Lodge.

WILLIAM C. WILSON. The county of Kern has a full quota of live, energetic, progressive business men, who have been active and influential in developing and advancing its industrial and financial interests. Prominent among the number is William C. Wilson, of Bakersfield, the present county auditor. The descendant of an old and honored Virginia family, he was born August 15, 1851, in Surry county, Va., a son of James Wilson. His paternal grandfather, a lifelong resident of Virginia, was of English descent, his parents having been born in England. He owned a large plantation on the James river, opposite Jamestown, and had many slaves. He served in the war of 1812, belonging to a Virginia regiment. He lived to be seventy-nine years of age.

A native of Virginia, James Wilson was employed in agricultural pursuits during his active career. He died in the prime of life, in 1852, when his youngest child, William C., was but a year old. His wife, whose maiden name was Julia A. Cabaniss, was a native of Virginia, and there spent her entire life, dying at the age of sixty-five years. On being left a widow she and her three sons made their home with her husband's grandfather, living with him until about 1860, when, in order to give her children better educational advantages, she removed to Smithfield, Va. When war was declared, in 1861, she took her family to Rutherford, N. C., and remained there until the close of the conflict, when she returned to Smithfield.

Educated mostly in private schools, William C. Wilson remained at home until 1869, when he came to Fort Jones, Siskiyou county, Cal., where he had an uncle living, borrowing money to pay his fare out. He attended the public schools for awhile, and then began for himself, the first year thereafter being employed as a clerk in a general store. In 1870, having previously returned the money which he had borrowed, and in addition saved enough to pay his expenses through college, he entered Heald's Business College, in San Francisco, from which he was graduated. Mr. Wilson subsequently became hotel and telegraph clerk at the Tubbs hotel, Oakland, and was afterward in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railway Company for a time. Coming then to Kern county, he was first agent in Delano, and was then sent to Mojave, where he was agent and operator for a year, during which time the railroad was extended to The Needles.

Resigning his position with the railway company, Mr. Wilson embarked in mercantile pursuits in Mojave, and had just got well started when, at the end of two years, he lost everything by fire. Nothing daunted, however, he started anew, and subsequently opened a branch store at Randsburg, putting in a stock worth $20,000. Again he lost by fire, his branch store and all of his stock, on which there was no insurance, being burned. He had other property, being the owner of valuable mining claims, and these, and his general store in Mojave, he sold, paying up all his indebtedness in full. Continuing his residence in Mojave, he ran a drug store and operated the postal telegraph office until October 9, 1900, when he was for the third time the victim of a fire, his office, store, home and everything being consumed. Having previously built a telephone line from Mojave to Randsburg, a distance of forty-three miles, he now assumed the management of it, taking the superintendency that the operating firm had given up. Putting in an exchange at Randsburg, Mr. Wilson extended the line to the Stringer district and Johannesburg, and was successful in his operations. He also built two business blocks in Mojave, and at Cameron, eleven miles from there, he owned a ranch, the management of which he supervised. In November, 1902, Mr. Wilson accepted the Democratic nomination for county auditor, and was elected by a majority of six hundred and fifty votes. Taking the oath of office in January, 1903, he has since resided in Bakersfield, where he has built a fine, modern residence.

In October, 1890, Mr. Wilson married Annie McNicoll, daughter of A. McNicoll, who is associated with the McNicoll Elevator Company of San Francisco. Politically Mr. Wilson is a Democrat in national affairs. Fraternally he is a member of Tehachapi Lodge No. 313, F. & A. M., which he helped to organize; of Bakersfield Chapter, R. A. M.; and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

JOHN MARION JONES. The sheriff of Madera county is a member of an old southern family. Through his paternal ancestors he traces his lineage to Wales, while his maternal progenitors were of English extraction. His grandfather, W. T. Jones, was a native of old Virginia and became a planter in Tennessee, where he remained until death. The other grandfather, Charles Pigg, was also of Virginian birth and became a pioneer planter of Tennessee. During the war of 1812 he enlisted in the service of the country and took part in the memorable engagement at New Orleans under Gen. Andrew Jackson. In his brave service as a soldier he displayed the inheritance of a patriotic spirit from his father, who was a Revolutionary hero. W. C. and Mary Frances (Pigg) Jones, were natives of Tennessee and made their home upon a plantation in Smith county, near Gordonsville, that state. From that homestead during the Civil war W. C. Jones went forth to serve the Confederacy as a member of a Tennessee regiment. When defeat met southern arms he returned home and resumed the management of his estate, but later settled upon a plantation in Davidson county.

In the family of W. C. Jones there were five children, all but one of whom are living, John Marion being the eldest and the only one in California. He was born near Gordonsville, Tenn., September 7, 1865, and during boyhood years attended district schools and the Dekalb County normal school at Alexandria, Tenn. His education was brought to an abrupt termination through a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which confined him to bed for sixteen months. As soon as he was able to travel he came to the Pacific coast, where in a month he had entirely recovered his strength. After coming to Madera in 1885 he secured employment on the Hely ranch. Two years later he became a teamster with the Madera Flume & Trading Company, and continued in their employ until 1892. His next position was with the Yosemite Stage & Turnpike Company as teamster, engaged in hauling supplies, and later in charge of the teaming and supplies, with headquarters at Raymond. During his last year with them he superintended the oiling of the company's road from Raymond, a distance of twenty-eight miles.

The Democratic party, of which Mr. Jones has always been a firm supporter, brought his name before their county convention in 1902 and made him their candidate for county sheriff. Elected by a plurality of seventy, he took the oath of office in January, 1903, for a term of four years, and has since given his attention with conscientious fidelity to the discharge of official duties. It is his ambition to preserve law and order in the county and every precaution is taken to secure the protection of law-abiding citizens. The State Association of Sheriffs of California numbers him among its members, while fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias, Madera Lodge No. 280, F. & A. M., in which he was made a Mason, and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, in Fresno.

JOHN HENRY ELFERS. In the annals of Stanislaus county no more worthy name is found than that of John Henry Elfers, who, as owner of a highly-improved ranch lying one mile south of Crows Landing, is an able and important factor in developing and advancing the agricultural interests of this section of the state. A native Californian, he was born July 24, 1864, in Camptonville, of thrifty German ancestry, being a son of Archibald Diederich Elfers.

Archibald Diederich Elfers was born and educated in Hanover, Germany. When a young man he left the Fatherland, resolving to make his fortune in a newer country. Sailing around Cape Horn in 1849, he came to the gold fields of California, and for nearly twenty years thereafter was employed in mining, being at first located in Downieville, and subsequently in Camptonville. In 1864 he removed to San Francisco, where he resided several years. Locating on the west side of the San Joaquin valley in 1869, he engaged in farming and stock-raising, buying at first a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres. He afterward bought a large tract of land near Crows Landing, Stanislaus county, and made other additions by purchase until he had fifteen hundred acres of land in his possession. Continuing in his chosen occupation, he was successfully employed in agricultural pursuits until 1900, when he turned the management of his large ranch over to his son Louis, and removed to Alameda, where he is now living retired from the activities of business, being a hale and hearty man of more than fourscore years. Of his union with Catharine Elfers, a native of Hanover, Germany, eight children grew to years of maturity, and five are living, John Henry, the special subject of this sketch, being the second son.

Obtaining a practical knowledge of the elementary branches of learning in the public schools, John Henry Elfers was subsequently thoroughly drilled in the art and science of agriculture by his father, with whom he lived and worked until after attaining his majority. Coming to Stanislaus county in 1880, he soon began farming on his own account, and is now carrying on an extensive and profitable business as a general farmer and stock-raiser. He has fifty acres of land devoted to alfalfa and three wheat-fields, one containing one hundred and twenty acres, another containing two hundred and fifty acres, while the third contains three hundred and twenty acres. Mr. Elfers rents eight hundred acres of land from his father, while, in company with his brother Charles, he rents seventeen hundred acres, and in addition to these large tracts he has recently, in partnership with his brother and others, purchased two thousand and four hundred acres of the Jones tract. By the exercise of his native industry and his able business capacity, he is meeting with unquestioned success in his undertakings; he has firmly established himself in the confidence of his friends and fellow-citizens, and has won for himself a good record as an honest man and a valuable member of the community.

In Stanislaus county, near Newman, Mr.

Elfers married Dorothy Kricke, a native of Germany, and they are the parents of two children, Charles and Ruth. Taking an intelligent interest in public affairs, Mr. Elfers is actively identified with the Democratic party, the principles of which he at all times supports.

FRANK EDWIN HOWE. To the born agriculturist, the man who appreciates the dignity and utility of his work, and delights in close association with nature, there would seem to be no more gratifying accomplishment than converting a profitless tract of land into one of fertility and promise. This has been done with more than ordinary zeal and intelligence by Frank Edwin Howe, one of the early settlers of Kings county, and the owner of a ranch of eighty-five acres eight and a half miles southeast of Hanford. Since 1885 Mr. Howe has had his successes and failures in the west. He was born in San Mateo county, Cal., January 31, 1853, and has risen to his present position solely on his own merits, unaided by either influence or material assistance.

Henry Newcomb Howe, the father of Frank Edwin Howe, was born in Maine, but went to New Brunswick at an early age, and devoted his energies to the timber and milling business. He married Rebecca Jane Hall, a native of New Brunswick, and started housekeeping in a lumber camp with few of the advantages or comforts of life. Even in this isolated region the reports of the discovery of gold on the Pacific coast penetrated with disquieting effect, and Mr. Howe was one of the first in his neighborhood to heed the clarion call to fortune. Embarking in a sailing vessel with his wife he accomplished the long and tedious journey around Cape Horn, arriving in San Francisco in 1850, only to find that city practically deserted. Everyone of energy or ambition had taken himself to the mines, and thither went Mr. Howe; but a short experience convinced him that his fate was that of the average miner. He had thoroughly learned the saw-milling business in Maine and New Brunswick, and he naturally depended on his knowledge to tide him over the emergency created by having spent all of his money on the trip to the coast. In the Santa Cruz mountains, near Lexington, he and his brother, James S. Howe, built a saw-mill out of lumber hewed by their own hands, thereafter managing and operating the same until the fall of 1861. Desiring to live on a farm, Henry N. sold his interest in the sawmill to his brother and purchased a farm six miles south of San Jose, where he lived until 1863. His farm proving unsatisfactory he mortgaged it to secure funds to take him to the Caribou mining district. Here also disaster overcame him and he not only lost all available cash but his farm besides. Nothing daunted, he put his shoulder to the wheel and worked on different farms in Santa Clara county. In the meantime his sons, Frank Edwin and Fred, went to the Mussel Slough district, in what is now Kings county, and purchased a settler's right to four hundred acres of land, assuming the pre-emption indebtedness. They built a house, barn and sheds on their property, and in 1876 the father and the rest of the family came to live on the newly acquired farm. Henry N. Howe later bought eighty acres of railroad land and spent his remaining days there, his death occurring in 1895, at the age of seventy-seven years. The old place still shelters the wife who bravely shared his rising but oft-times discouraging fortunes, and who is now eighty-two years old. Mr. Howe was a Republican in politics, and an extremely public-spirited man, assisting among other things in the finishing of the construction of the Lakeside ditch.

Frank Edwin Howe received as good a preliminary education as the early schools of California afforded, and was reared to an agricultural life. He took up the farm on the Mussel Slough, Kings county, in 1874, prepared for the advent of his parents, and with his brother engaged in stock-raising and general farming. In 1877 a drought afflicted this part of the state and caused almost total loss to the ranchers. The Howe brothers lost seventy-seven head of cattle that year and a big crop of grain, so in March, 1877, they turned their attention to freighting to the Darwin mines. This was their only means of securing feed and seeds, and with the proceeds of their labor they rented from three to four hundred acres of land near Grangeville, and in time bought a threshing-machine, which they operated for several years. The season proved satisfactory and the crop large, and they rented more land and increased both their grain and stock production. In 1878 they purchased a homestead right to eighty acres, made their home there until 1885, and then sold out. Mr. Howe then purchased his present farm of eighty acres. Since then he has farmed alone, and has gradually enlarged his stock and grain interests, and has added alfalfa and dairying. His home farm is devoted exclusively to alfalfa and dairying, and another farm owned by him six miles west of Hanford, consisting of three hundred and twenty acres, is under stock and alfalfa. In 1904 he leased two thousand five hundred acres of land on Tulare lake, which is all under wheat. His operations are characterized by a thorough understanding of his occupation, by caution and business sagacity, and are proving all that he could desire from a financial standpoint.

May 22, 1877, Mr. Howe was united in marriage with Anna M. Dibble, daughter of Edwin

J. Dibble, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work. Five sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Howe, of whom two died in infancy. Those living are: Edwin H., Albert P., and Chester M., who are working the home place. Mr. Howe is an ardent Republican, and has served as a member of the school board. With his wife he is an active and influential member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It will be seen that Mr. Howe has been a man of courage and perseverance, that he has overcome many obstacles, and that he is entitled to all that a more kindly fate may bring his way. He is a genial and pleasant man and numbers among his staunchest friends the foremost people in his county.

WILLIAM THOMAS MOOREHEAD. By virtue of the fact that his residence and the larger portion of his land lies in Stanislaus county Mr. Moorehead is a citizen of this county, but he also maintains interests in Merced county by reason of a small part of his farm lying across the county line. A pioneer of this vicinity, he has witnessed its development from a wild country into one of the valuable agricultural regions of the state and has himself been a large contributor thereto. During the period covering about thirty years in which he has made his home on his present farm he has brought the land under cultivation to grain and alfalfa and has acquired dairy interests to the amount of about twenty cows.

The Moorehead family has been identified with Stanislaus county ever since the sixties, and mention of the family history appears in the sketch of Robert C., a brother of William Thomas, published elsewhere in this volume. The subject of this narrative was born near Lewisburg, Greenbrier county, W. Va., July 23, 1844, and at the age of six years accompanied other members of the family to Iowa, where he gained a rudimentary education in the schools of that day and locality. To a large extent, however, he is a self-educated man and has acquired his wide range of knowledge through habits of observation and reading that have characterized all of his mature years. When he was twenty years of age he crossed the plains with his father and two brothers and after his arrival at Boise Basin engaged with them in mining. The placer mines of Eldorado county attracted him to that part of California in 1868, but the results were discouraging and he determined to seek a more certain means of livelihood.

Upon his arrival in Stanislaus county in August of 1869, Mr. Moorehead found a wild country, offering few inducements to permanent settlers. For two years he worked as a farm hand and meanwhile became convinced of the fertility of the soil when crops were selected suited thereto. In 1871 he began to farm rented land on Crows Creek, and in 1875 bought the place four and one-half miles southwest of the present site of Newman. His landed possessions aggregate two hundred acres, of which thirty-five acres are provided with irrigation facilities that render alfalfa a profitable crop. In addition to his own place he cultivates a rented farm of three hundred and twenty acres adjoining, all of which is under grain. On the organization of the New Era creamery, the first enterprise of its kind in this region, he became one of the original stockholders and has since been associated with its management. Interested in educational affairs, he renders faithful service in the office of school trustee of Newman district. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Honor and in religion is a Presbyterian, being ruling elder of the church of that denomination at Newman. His wife, whom he married in Merced county and who was formerly Mary L. Johnsen, has been a life-long resident of this part of California. During the exciting days of '49 her father, Bernard Johnsen, a native of Germany, came to the gold fields of the west, but after a brief experience in mining turned his attention to farming, and also became interested in sheep-raising on the Merced river. The five sons of Mr. and Mrs. Moorehead, John B., William D., Malcolm E., Charles C. and Marion H., are young men of promise and education, and all, with the exception of the eldest son who is clerking in Modesto, still remain with their father, assisting him in the management of his large interests, and, by the experience thus gained, fitting themselves for positions of usefulness and honor in future years.

WILLIAM J. STOCKTON. As a representative of the intelligent and hardy pioneers who came to Los Banos at an early period of its settlement, and have since taken a conspicuous part in the development of town and city, we take pleasure in giving to the readers of this volume a brief sketch of William J. Stockton, a well-known and active citizen of this part of Merced county. As a general farmer and grain raiser he has been for many years intimately associated with the agricultural interests of this section, and as a blacksmith has been connected with its manufacturing prosperity. As a public official he has held many positions of prominence and responsibility, in each and every case discharging the duties devolving upon him with commendable punctuality and fidelity. A son of Samuel Whiteside Stockton, he was born, January 25, 1848, in Marion, Williamson county, Ill. His grandfather, Robert Stockton, a native of Virginia, served in the war of 1812 as a commissioned officer. He subsequently settled on a plantation in Alabama, removing from there to Mt. Vernon, Ill., as a pioneer.

Born and bred in Alabama, Samuel White-side Stockton became familiar with the various branches of agriculture when young, but began life for himself as a manufacturer of bells in Marion, Ill. In 1859, accompanied by his wife and their four children, he came across the plains to California, settling first in Marin county, and later in Nevada county, where he followed mining for awhile. Locating then in Colusa county, he carried on farming at Grand Island for a few seasons, being afterward similarly employed in Santa Cruz county. He died in San José at the age of sixty-seven years. He married Nancy Pope, who was born in Illinois, a daughter of Benjamin Wood Pope, a native of Tennessee. She survived her husband, and now resides in San José. Of their eleven children, six are living, William J., the firstborn, being the special subject of this sketch.

Living in Marion, Ill., until eleven years old, William J. Stockton there acquired his elementary education. With his parents he moved, in 1859, to California, coming by the Truckee route, and being six months and ten days crossing the plains with ox-teams. In the public schools of Nevada county, he continued his studies, completing his early education at the Watsonville Academy, studying for two years under Professor Van Dorn. He subsequently learned the blacksmith trade with his father, who had a smithy on his farm, and when of age entered into business with his father, with whom he continued in partnership until 1872. In that year Mr. Stockton rented land in Los Banos, and as a grain-raiser and blacksmith built up a large business, farming a thousand acres of land much of the time. In 1890, when the town of Los Banos was started, Mr. Stockton moved his smithy to its present site, and has since been busily employed, being the leading blacksmith of this vicinity.

Several years ago, Mr. Stockton purchased one hundred and fifty acres of land, lying three miles south of Los Banos, and, in partnership with W. L. Garrison, planted it all to alfalfa. He has made improvements of an excellent character on the place, and pays especial attention to dairying, keeping about one hundred head of cattle. In 1890 he embarked in the undertaking business, being the pioneer in that line of industry. He has since attended the Barnes School of Embalming, and has acquired proficiency in the art, which is so essential and in such general use throughout our nation.

Mr. Stockton has four children, Mrs. Belle Garrison, Alice, William J., Jr., and Alma Marion. In the management of town and county affairs he has taken an important part. For many years he served as justice of the peace, giving eminent satisfaction to all concerned in that capacity; also was county supervisor a number of terms, and for four years was county coroner and public administrator. He was made a Mason at Hills Ferry, and is now a member of Los Banos Lodge No. 312, F. & A. M., which he served as master three terms; he also belongs to Yosemite Chapter No. 12, R. A. M., and to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the Democratic party.

BENEDICT OLSEN. His humble home hedged in by the awe-inspiring mountains of Norway, Benedict Olsen was born June 12, 1871, and was reared in a typical home of the peasantry, descended from the historic Norsemen. His education was the best procurable in his home district, and was sufficiently broad to create discontent with his surroundings, no matter how well they had supplied the needs of his forefathers. Yielding to the impulse to immigrate to the United States in 1895, he landed in New York with twenty-four mile posts of his life already passed, and with hope in his heart, and determination in his mind. Crossing the continent to San Francisco, he engaged in the humble occupation of farm hand for a couple of years, and thus demonstrated his ability to till the soil and do with thoroughness and dispatch whatever work was assigned him. As a reward for his ability and faithfulness he was made manager of the James C. McDermott ranch March 12, 1897, and has since been identified with this large and important responsibility.

The McDermott ranch is located three and a half miles north of Newman, and comprises five hundred acres of alfalfa and seven hundred acres of barley and grain land. The owner of this large property is a wholesale meat merchant, with headquarters at No. 345 Tenth street, San Francisco, and from his farm he receives the greater part of the stock required in his business in the city. About one thousand head of cattle are fattened for market every winter and the superintending of these cattle and the planting and harvesting of the grain and alfalfa rest upon the shoulders of Mr. Olsen. That he is thoroughly competent to attend to the task assigned him is intimated by his long retention in the same position, and by the air of thrift and prosperity which pervades every department of the ranch. Pains-taking and conservative, thoughtful of the best interests of his employer, he is a man upon whom all rely who have ever been associated with him in whatsoever capacity, and furthermore, he is able to secure from his subordinates the best possible and most willing service. He is an appreciator of fine stock, of fertile, yielding land, and is able to turn it to the best financial account, as becomes a man of his extended and intelligent experience.

Thus far on his life journey Mr. Olsen is a bachelor, but an eminently genial and social one, taking his part in the diversions by which he is surrounded, and occupying a prominent place in the lodges of the Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World. In politics he is a Republican. That he has prospered beyond his immediate needs is evident from his ownership of a farm of eighty acres three and a half miles north of Newman, upon which he raises alfalfa, and which nets him a handsome addition to his yearly salary.

HON. ALEXANDER M. DREW. Conspicuous among the able attorneys of Fresno county is Hon. A. M. Drew, who is meeting with signal success in the practice of his profession in the city of Fresno, which has been his home for the past quarter of a century. A man of undoubted ability and integrity, he is prominent in social, legal, fraternal and political circles, and has now the distinction of representing the Sixty-first district in the state legislature. A son of Elisha Drew, he was born January 17, 1857, in Lena, Stephenson county, Ill. He is descended from an old and honored family of New England and comes of patriotic ancestry, his paternal grandfather, Captain Drew, having served as a private in the Revolutionary army and as an officer in the war of 1812.

A native of New England, Elisha Drew was born in 1806, in the northern part of Vermont. When a young man he lived for a few years in Ontario, Can., from there moving to Illinois in the early forties, and settling first near Galena. He subsequently took up land in Stephenson county, about four miles west of Lena, and there improved a farm. In 1875 he removed to the village of Lena and there spent his declining years, passing away at the venerable age of ninety years. He was in every respect a worthy citizen and a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was twice married, by his first wife, Anna Dart, having six sons, namely: James, who died at Sterling, Ill.; Elisha, a resident of Greenville, Tex., who served four years in the Civil war, enlisting first in the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and afterwards in the Forty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was wounded at the battle of Shiloh; Charles, who served in the United States navy during the Civil war and died in New York City; Isaiah, who served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil war and now resides in Marion Center, Kan.; Alfred, a resident of Rockford, Ill.; and Joseph, who served in the Ninety-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil war, was wounded in battle, and died in Kansas in 1865. Elisha Drew married for his second wife Caroline Smith, who was born in Ogdensburg, N. Y., and died in Illinois, at the age of sixty-nine years. Her father, Captain Smith, was an officer in the United States navy during the Revolution. Of this marriage five children were born, namely: Mrs. Montague, who died in Illinois; Mrs. Carrie Hawley, of Illinois; Alexander M., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Mary Lakin, of Palo Alto, Cal.; and Jessie, a teacher in the public schools of Salt Lake City, Utah.

Brought up on the home farm, A. M. Drew obtained the rudiments of his education in the district school, after which he entered the Lena high school, from which he was graduated in 1875. The ensuing year he taught school near Winslow, Ill. Coming to California in 1877, he continued his studies at Howe's normal school, in Sacramento, and after his graduation in 1878 taught school one term in that vicinity. In August, 1878, Mr. Drew located in Fresno, which was then but a small village, with but one brick building within its limits, and a population of four hundred souls. Continuing in his chosen occupation, he taught in the district schools for a time, making Fresno his home, although for four years he was principal of the Iowa Hill schools. During the time he was engaged as a teacher he studied law during his leisure moments, and in 1887 was admitted to the bar. The following year Mr. Drew spent in the law office of Wharton & Shaw, and from 1888 until 1890 was engaged in practice with Judge George A. Nourse and F. H. Short. Since that time he has practiced alone, and has won an extensive and lucrative practice, being one of the busiest and most successful lawyers of the city. Mr. Drew at one time owned a vineyard and orchard of eighty acres, most of which he set out himself, and is still interested in the culture of grapes to some extent. He is one of the oldest members of the Raisin Growers' Association, and frequently presides at its meetings.

In Sacramento, Cal., Mr. Drew married Abbie E. Pratt, a native of Maine, and a graduate of Howe's normal school. Three children have been born of their union, namely: Leslie M., who was graduated from the Fresno high school, and is in the employ of the Raisin Growers' Association; Arthur Homan, a pupil in the high school; and Gertrude S. Politically Mr. Drew is a steadfast Republican, and is a member, and former chairman, of the Republican county central committee. In 1902 he was nominated on the Republican ticket as representative to the state legislature, and was elected by a majority of three hundred, being the first Republican ever elected in the Sixty-first district, which is strongly Democratic. He is a member of the judiciary and other committees of the house, and has been quite active in legislative matters. Of the sixteen bills which he introduced, nine have become laws. One of the most important of these was the Drew State Text Book bill.

Fraternally Mr. Drew was made an Odd Fellow at Iowa Hill, Placer county, Cal., in 1882, and is now a member and past officer of Fresno Lodge No. 186, I. O. O. F. In 1897 and 1898 he served as grand master of the Grand Lodge of California; in 1898 he went to Boston as supreme representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge, and in 1899 went to Detroit in the same capacity. He is also a member and past chief patriarch of Fresno Encampment, Patriarchs Militant, past captain of Fresno Canton, and a member of Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he was formerly a trustee. He also belongs to the Fresno County Bar Association.

During the years of his residence in Fresno Mr. Drew has become intimately identified with numerous movements toward the upbuilding of the city. He is regarded as one of its public-spirited and progressive citizens, and a man who never hesitates to support well-considered projects looking toward the elevation of the social, moral, educational and industrial status of the city.

WILLIAM H. PARDEE, M. D. Among the most respected and esteemed residents of Dos Palos is W. H. Pardee, M. D., who has acquired distinction in various walks of life, and is well deserving of particular mention in this biographical work. As a brave soldier in the Civil war he won an honorable record, and as a physician and a minister of the gospel his career has been most useful and noteworthy. A man of broad and enlightened views, patriotic and public-spirited, he is noted for his earnestness of purpose and upright integrity, and wherever he goes he readily makes friends, his never-failing courtesy and genial manners endearing him to all. A son of Samuel Pardee, he was born November 24, 1834, in Windham, Portage county, Ohio. Of distinguished stock, he is a lineal descendant of a French Huguenot family that settled in Connecticut in early colonial times, among his ancestors being men that were active in public affairs and helped to secrete the charter given that state by Charles I, in the old tree at Hartford that has since been known as the Charter Oak. During the Colonial wars, and the stormy times preceding the great struggle for independence, the name of Pardee was one of prominence and influence, and has not yet lost its prestige, being known throughout New England, and in various parts of the Union, Gov. G. C. Pardee being a kinsman of Dr. Pardee, of whom we write. Asa Pardee, the doctor's grandfather, was a lifelong resident of Connecticut, and a well-to-do farmer.

Born and brought up on a Connecticut farm, Samuel Pardee subsequently became a pioneer of Portage county, Ohio, where he bought land, and was afterward engaged in general farming until his death, in the sixty-first year of his age. He married Celinda Stiles, who was born in Connecticut, of Holland Dutch ancestry, and died in New York in 1835. Her father, Captain Stiles, who came of Revolutionary stock, was born in Connecticut, and died in Vermont. She bore her husband six children, of whom William H., the youngest, is the only survivor.

Left motherless when but three months old, W. H. Pardee was brought up by an uncle, Mr. Collins, a mechanic, in Randolph, Ohio, not far from Hiram, which afterward became famous as the home of the late President Garfield, with whom Dr. Pardee was personally acquainted, both being attendants of the same church. After leaving the public schools of Randolph, Mr. Pardee attended the village academy for a while, subsequently continuing his studies at Bragg Academy. Beginning the study of medicine under Dr. George W. Bettes, of Randolph, he afterward entered the Physio-Medical College at Cincinnati, where he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1861. His period of college life embraced the troublous times preceding the outbreak of the Civil war, when party lines were drawn sharp and distinct, and the students from the north and from the south were divided, each having its special clique, and at times coming into contact with one another. After a memorable speech made in Washington by Senator Wade, a southern boy spoke disparagingly of the address, and of the northern cowards. Dr. Pardee, an ardent Union man, took up the cause of the northerner, hurling back the lie, and a battle royal ensued, in which he came out victorious.

Immediately after his graduation, Dr. Pardee enlisted in the Seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, but being taken ill was not mustered in with that regiment. On recovering his health he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into service in February, 1862. At the end of one year and nine months, on account of physical disability, he was honorably discharged from the service. Returning to Ohio, Dr. Pardee located in Marlboro, Stark county, where he remained as a physician and surgeon for sixteen years. Becoming converted in 1868, he studied for the ministry, and in Ohio was ordained. Removing to Fillmore county, Neb., in 1879, the doctor located in Geneva, where he organized a Christian Church, of which he had ministerial charge for a number of years. He likewise did much pastoral work in other places in Nebraska, organizing several flourishing congregations.

Coming to California in 1895, Dr. Pardee bought forty acres of land in Dos Palos, and embarked in the culture of fruit and the raising of alfalfa, intending to devote his time entirely to agricultural pursuits. He was not allowed, however, to give up either of his professions, being almost forced to practice medicine, being the first physician to locate here, and was also made pastor of the Christian Church. Soon after his arrival the doctor was elected president of Colony Exchange No. 135, and until his resignation was active in its upbuilding and advancement. He is now living retired in his pleasant and attractive home, loved and honored throughout the community.

In Ohio Dr. Pardee married Lucy F. Hough, who was born in Vermont, and died in Dos Palos, Cal. Two children were born of their union, both now deceased, one dying in infancy, and the other, Cora May, dying when twelve years old. Dr. Pardee married in Dos Palos, Mrs. Mary Payne, a native of Ohio. Politically the doctor is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he united with the Masons in Alliance, Ohio; was afterward a charter member of the Masonic lodge at Geneva, Neb., which he served as master two terms; belongs to Geneva Chapter, R. A. M., and to Wilson Post No. 22, G. A. R. also of Geneva.

ALBERT BAKER POWELL, M. D. A man of superior attainments and culture, well fitted by years of study and experience for a professional career, Albert B. Powell, M. D., is the leading physician of Colony Center, Dos Palos, where he also has a drug store and owns a well-stocked ranch. Well versed in medical lore, he has built up an extensive and lucrative general practice in this part of Merced county, and in his capacity of farmer finds great enjoyment as well as profit, taking especial pleasure in raising and caring for his fine herd of blooded stock. A son of William Henry Powell, a prominent farmer of Toronto, Ontario, he was born, March 13, 1859, near Toronto, of Welsh ancestry. His grandfather, W. H. Powell, a native of Nova Scotia, removed to Ontario, settling on a farm near Toronto, where he spent his remaining years. William Henry Powell married Lucy Jane Hall, who was born in New York state, a daughter of David Hall, a life-long farmer of that state, and into their household five children were born, of whom two sons and one daughter are living, Albert Baker of this review being the youngest child.

After completing the course of studies taught in the public schools of his native place, Albert B. Powell entered King's University, at Whitby, Ontario. Coming to Pasadena in 1888, he began the study of medicine the following year, and subsequently entered the medical college connected with the University of California, from which he was graduated May 26, 1891, with the degree of M. D. At once locating at Round Valley, Dr. Powell remained there two years, after which he practiced medicine in Petaluma for a year. Removing thence to Amador City, the doctor continued there as a physician for six years, building up a large medical and surgical practice. In 1900 he settled in Tracy, San Joaquin county, where he engaged in the practice of his profession, and was also district surgeon for the Southern Pacific Railway Company for three years. On March 25, 1903, Dr. Powell began the practice of medicine and surgery in the Dos Palos Colony, and has met with excellent success in his professional labors. He established also a drug store, which is complete in all respects. The doctor likewise invested in land, buying a ranch of forty acres, situated two and one-half miles from Colony Center, and here is engaged in raising alfalfa and dairying, having a herd of full-blooded Holstein-Friesians, in which he takes genuine pride.

Dr. Powell married, in San Francisco, Susau Lingenfeltzer, a native of that city, and into their home four children have been born, namely: Gladys E., William H., May E., and Lucy J. The doctor is associated with several fraternal organizations, being a member and medical examiner for the Modern Woodmen of America and of the Knights of the Maccabees, and medical examiner for the Royal Neighbors. He is likewise medical examiner for all of the old-line insurance companies, and is local surgeon for the Southern Pacific Railway Company. Politically he is a Socialist.

JOHN GILL. A capable and enterprising agriculturist, John Gill is industriously engaged in the prosecution of a calling upon which the support and wealth of our nation is largely dependent, being pleasantly located in Stanislaus county, about a mile north of Newman. A son of the late Samuel Gill, he was born August 2, 1842, in Pickaway county, Ohio.

A native of Ohio, Samuel Gill was reared to agricultural pursuits, and during his earlier life was engaged in farming in that state. Migrating to Iowa in 1863, he followed his chosen occupation in Ringgold county for nine years. Coming from there to California in 1872, he took up land in Tulare county, and was there employed in stock-raising until his death. He married Elizabeth Lukens, who spent her entire life in Ohio, dying in early womanhood. She bore him three daughters and two sons, John, the special subject of this sketch, being the fourth child in order of birth.

Educated in the common schools of Ohio, John Gill subsequently obtained a practical knowledge of the various branches of agriculture on the home farm. In August, 1864, at the age of twenty-two years he enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Ohio Regiment Infantry, and served till the close of the war. He participated among other engagements in the battles of Franklin and Nashville. He was afterward engaged in farming with his father in Iowa, and came with him to California in 1872, settling in Tulare county, about twenty-two miles east of Visalia, where he was engaged in stock-raising and stock-dealing for twenty years. Going to Fresno, in 1892, Mr. Gill was employed in business as a vineyardist for two years, having eighty acres of land set out with grapes. Removing to Stanislaus county in 1894, he traded his vineyard for three hundred and twenty acres of land, lying a mile east of Hills Ferry, where he resided several years. In October, 1903, Mr. Gill, having previously sold his ranch, rented the farm which he now occupies, and is devoting its one hundred and sixty-two acres to the raising of alfalfa, which is a most profitable crop for this section of the state.

In Ringgold county, Iowa, Mr. Gill married Catherine Bellamy, a native of Kentucky, and they have five children living, namely: Mrs. Laura May Osborn, residing near Portersville, Tulare county; Robert M., of Stanislaus county; Mrs. Alice Kate Dolby, of Stanislaus county; Mrs. Edna Belle Walhouse, of Livermore, this state, and J. Roy, at home. Politically Mr. Gill is a steadfast Republican, supporting the principles of that party by voice and vote.

IRA V. HILL. Representative of the wide-awake and energetic farming population of Kings county is Ira V. Hill, a rancher living five miles southeast of Hanford, who owns two other farms besides his home place of one hundred and sixty acres. Mr. Hill is a southerner by inheritance and earliest training; he was born near Martinsburg, W. Va., February 11, 1860, a son of George W., and a grandson of William and Mary A. (Kreckseker) Hill, all born in the same county in Virginia. Many of the members of the family have attained to fulness of years, the paternal grandfather attaining to one less than a century, while his wife reached three score. On the maternal side Mr. Hill comes from a prominent old Maryland family, his mother having been Melvina, daughter of Augustus Bell, both natives of Maryland, the latter a coal mine owner and extensive flour miller of Cumberland, Md. Mrs. Hill died when her son was eight years old, in Jefferson county, Kans., at the age of twenty-eight, her husband surviving her until 1888, when he was fifty-four years of age. George Hill devoted his entire active life to farming, and left the plow to respond to a draft in the Confederate army, serving through the greater part of the war.

The resource which has followed Ira V. Hill through life became apparent at a very early age, and influenced his career in an unmistakable degree. His home was evidently not to his liking after the death of his mother, and at the age of fourteen he ran away and made his way to Jefferson county, Kans., where he worked on a farm by the month during the summer, and attended school during the winter. Later on he journeyed west as far as Colorado, where he worked on the construction of the Santa Fe Railroad until February, 1878, when he continued his way to California, thus accomplishing a trip which he had had in contemplation since early boyhood. In what is now Kings county he attended school in the winter and worked on farms in the summer, but finally inherited what seemed a gigantic fortune to a struggling lad, and which amounted to three thousand five hundred dollars. The highmindedness which has since been apparent to his neighbors in Kings county was emphasized at this time, when he departed for Baltimore, Md., and took a course in a business college, thereby supplementing an education which he had earnestly striven to make broad and comprehensive.

Well pleased with what he had found in Kings county, he soon after returned and bought his present farm from the railroad company, which was entirely unimproved at the time. Since then he has changed the character of the land, has it all under ditch, and has set out eleven acres in vines, devoting the balance to alfalfa and general farming. He is the owner of an eighty-acre ranch two and one-half miles southeast of Hanford, under pasture, and of forty-seven and one-half acres one and one-half miles south from the city limits, under alfalfa and pasture. December 24, 1882, he was united in marriage with Melissa Liggett, a native of Tennessee, who came to California in 1881. Two sons are being reared in an atmosphere of geniality and encouragement, Monroe C. and George Howard. Mr. Hill is a firm believer in the benefits of education, and his own struggles to acquire knowledge has induced him to take a particularly active part in furnishing opportunities to the youth of his adopted county. He is a Democrat in politics, and has been a member of the school board for six years, during that time contributing both time and money to the improvement of the school and surroundings. At his own expense he erected at the schoolhouse a substantial shed for the care of horses during inclement weather, and has otherwise contributed to the pleasure and opportunity of pupils of the school. He is a man of high standing in the community, and is noted for his public spirit and practical usefulness.

MATTHIAS BECKER. Not only is the name of Matthias Becker identified with the successful dairying interests in Merced county, but he was one of the first to discover and promote the oil industry in the foothills, taking the initiative at great expense, and with faith in the local output of this resource. In the face of ridicule, and of interference with his proposed plans, Mr. Becker succeeded in finding oil at a depth of ninety-five feet; he continued to sink his well to a hundred and forty feet below the surface, the scarcity of funds, and a breakage in the machinery, thereafter hindering operations which it was his intention to continue indefinitely. However, owing to his successful demonstration, an interest in oil was developed, skepticism gave place to faith and enthusiasm, and a company which organized for the purpose, has accomplished much toward getting out the valuable deposits of oil.

Mr. Becker was born in the Rhine province, Germany, February 18, 1858, the fourth child in a family of six children, three of whom are in America. His parents, Matthias and Anna Maria (Haubrich) Becker, were born in the same part of the empire, spending their entire lives in the land which gave them a livelihood. Matthias, Jr., was educated in the public schools of Foehren, near his father's farm, and when he was fourteen he removed with his parents to Essen, Germany, famous as the seat of the great Krupp gun works. The youth availed himself of the opportunity presented by the works, learned the steel rolling trade there, and later operated a gas furnace in a glass factory. In 1882 he came to America and lived in Bethany, Mo., for four months, but farm work did not suit him, and he found employment in the Bessemer Steel Company's works in Pueblo, Colo., remaining there as a roll hand until 1884. At these works the first Bessemer steel rails west of the Mississippi river were made, and he assisted in the work. This year witnessed his departure for Gonzales, Monterey county, Cal., where he lived on a farm for a year, and then went to Los Banos, Merced county, locating in San Francisco in 1887. As a roll hand he was identified with the Union Iron Works in the latter city, but not being favorably impressed with the work he returned to Los Banos, and, when the land came into the market, homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, his wife preëmpting an equal amount of land. Mr. Becker then engaged in the dairy and stock-raising business on a large scale, but in time sold off the most of his land, at present owning about forty acres, all under irrigation and devoted to alfalfa and dairying. At present he milks about twenty-five cows of the Holstein breed, and is meeting with success in his undertaking. Practically all of the improvements are of his making, giving him a valuable and fertile property.

In Stockton, February 14, 1889, Mr. Becker married Augusta Christian Salau, who was born near Santa Clara, a daughter of Henry F. F. Salau, Sr., mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Becker are the parents of seven children, the order of their birth being as follows: Mary Eunice, Adolph Matthias, Matthias, Eugenia Dorothea, Herbert Edmund, Harold Louis, and Muriel Augusta. Mr. Becker is a Democrat in national politics, and fraternally is a member of the Woodmen of the World. He belongs to that class of rugged and determined men who came to the west with little save the advantages of good health and good will, and who work their way into useful grooves, winning respect for their energy, their courage, and their devotion to high ideals.

RICHARD BAKER. A life distinguished for its moderation, contentment and peace is that of Richard Baker, the inheritor of New England thrift and reliability, and the owner of a ranch of forty acres three and a half miles north of Newman. This genial farmer is a familiar figure in this section, having lived here since 1884, engaging in alfalfa and hay raising, and pursuing always the even tenor of his ways. Undoubtedly the same kind of existence was pursued by many of his ancestors in Hampshire county, Va., where he was born February 9, 1832, and which also was the birthplace of his parents, Richard and Mary (Martin) Baker, and the scene of the agricultural activity of his grandfather, Michael Baker. Both of these sires participated in the wars of their adopted country, the former in the war of 1812, in which he acquired the rank of captain, and the latter in the war of the Revolution, espousing the cause of the downtrodden colonists.

The Virginia home of the Bakers was a modest one, yielding a livelihood which permitted of few advantages for the six sons and two daughters, of whom Richard was the second oldest. He was permitted such education as was obtainable in the rural schools of Hampshire county, but eventually became dissatisfied with his prospects in the Old Dominion and looked around for broader opportunities. In 1853 he took the initial step toward reaching the coast, making his way overland to Missouri, where, the following year, he joined a caravan bound for the land beyond the Rockies. Driving an ox-team the most of the way, he eventually came to San Jose, but the same year went further south to Mexico, and engaged in raising cotton for a year. The experiment proving disastrous, he returned to San Jose, and in 1866 went to Hollister, remaining until 1884. The fall of that year he came to the San Joaquin valley, bought his present farm, and has ever since lived here alone, save for the help required to harvest his products. Mr. Baker has never felt called upon to identify himself with political or other public undertakings, although he votes the Democratic ticket, and is a steady attendant of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He is highly respected for his quiet and unostentatious life, for his honesty and uprightness, and for his generosity in aiding those less fortunate than himself.

GEORGE W. CLUTE. The owner of three eighty-acre improved stock and dairy farms in Kings county, George W. Clute is a representative of that class of men who embody good birth, fair educational advantages and the perseverance and determination to succeed in any occupation and community to which nature and destiny have assigned them. His practical, progressive and industrious habits as a farmer and stock-raiser have been evidenced in other directions during his long and meritorious career, and were conspicuous when he donned a soldier's uniform and took his place beside the defenders of his cause. Born in Wyoming county, N. Y., August 12, 1839, he is descended on both sides of his family from soldiers of the war of 1812, and his maternal grandfather, John H. Jones, was a paymaster in that momentous struggle. This sire owned a large tract of land in New York, and lived there until his death. His daughter, Harriet, the mother of George W. Clute, was born in New York, and died in Christian county, Ill., at the age of eighty-five years. Her father was a native of Virginia, and her uncle was captured, and presumably murdered, by the Indians. William Clute, the father of George W., was born in New York state, where he farmed and engaged in trading with the Indians at Schenectady. He served with distinction in the war of 1812, and died at the age of seventy-five years. Three brothers, one of whom was his father, came from Holland to America before the Revolutionary war.

At the outbreak of the Civil war George W. Clute was farming in Wyoming county, N. Y., and at the age of twenty-two had acquired a comfortable competence. He left his home to enlist August 6, 1862, in Company A, One Hundred and Thirtieth New York Volunteer Infantry, and was later transferred to the First New York Dragoons. He arose to the grade of sergeant, and followed the fortunes of one of the bravest bands of men who defended the Union cause. The First Dragoons started out with fourteen hundred and sixty-four men, of whom four hundred and sixty-one were killed, one hundred and thirty-one died of disease, and thirty-three died in prison. The heaviest loss falling to any cavalry regiment during the entire service was sustained at Todd's Tavern. Mr. Clute was twice wounded, a flesh wound in the side and a gunshot wound in the right foot, and after receiving them he lay on the field unattended for two days, having been fighting four days in succession. This occurred May 8, 1864, and he was laid up in the hospital at Alexandria, Va., four months, and was then discharged from further service in the Army of the Potomac.

Returning to his home in New York, Mr. Clute recovered from his trying experiences, and then went to Illinois, where he became foreman of construction on a railroad for three years. He next spent a year in McHenry county, then rented a farm in Christian county, that state, for three years. In 1876 he came to California and settled on railroad land for a short time in Tulare, now Kings county, later purchasing eighty acres in his present neighborhood, which he unexpectedly found was mortgaged for $1,100. He was obliged to pay the mortgage, and set about improving his farm, remaining on it until purchasing his present ranch of eighty acres in 1898. He is engaged in dairying and stock-raising, and has many fine improvements on his farms. He is public-spirited and enterprising, and interested in local politics, being an active member of the Republican party, and serving its welfare in many ways. For the past twenty-five years he has been a member of the county central committee, attending many county and state conventions. He is active in the affairs of the Grand Army of the Republic, and is a member and past commander of McPherson Post No. 51. Mr. Clute contributed time and labor to the digging of the ditches of his section, and at one time was superintendent of construction. In 1871 he married

Edna Dodge, a native of McHenry county, Ill., and has five living children: William E., who is renting one of his father's farms in Kings county; Charles D., who is renting the homestead of eighty acres; Elmer, an employe in the freight department of the Southern Pacific Railroad in Hanford; and Edith and Harriet at home. Grace, the second oldest child, died at the age of twenty-six. Mr. Clute has hewn a creditable career out of the rude possibilities of the far west, and is deserving of the universal esteem of his fellowmen.

PROF. ELMER EDWARD OGDEN. One of the grandest contributions of the United States toward the elevation of the intellectual and moral status of the entire world is the great system of public instruction, which was developed less than a century ago by a few liberal-minded, clear-sighted men, whose efforts in this line were rewarded by the establishment of our free public schools, supported by general taxation. That these schools may be carried on with the greatest possible benefit to the present generation of boys and girls, care is taken to secure competent teachers only in every department of education. Noteworthy among the instructors thus employed in our own state is Prof. Elmer Edward Ogden, principal of the grammar schools of Merced, a man of scholarly attainments, and of good executive ability. A son of H. T. Ogden, he was born, December 7, 1867, in Iowa county, Iowa, of English ancestors. His grandfather, Robert Ogden, a native of Harrison county, Ohio, became a pioneer farmer of Dubuque county, Iowa.

Born in Harrison county, Ohio, H. T. Ogden was taken by his parents to Dubuque county, Iowa, when a child, and was there reared and educated. Enlisting in Company A, Ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, in 1861, he took part in several of the engagements of the Civil war, and at the siege of Vicksburg was severely wounded. After being detained at the hospital several months, he was honorably discharged from the service on account of physical disability. Returning to Iowa, he continued in his former occupation as a stock-raiser, and was also identified with the management of public affairs for some time as county supervisor. Migrating with his family to California in 1883, he located in Merced county, and for nearly ten years was employed in grain raising, having near Snelling, a ranch of eight hundred acres. Removing to San Joaquin county in 1892, he took up land near Lodi, where he has since been successfully engaged as an orchardist. Professor Ogden is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the Free and Accepted Masons, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Augusta Smith, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of John Smith, who emigrated from Bavaria to Dubuque county, Iowa, going from there to Tama county, Iowa, where he was engaged in general farming until his death. Five children were born of their union, namely: Prof. A. L., principal of the Acampo schools, in San Joaquin county; Elmer E., the subject of this record; V. L., a teacher in San Joaquin county; Mrs. Florence Adams, of Acampo, and E. L., a resident of Merced county.

Coming with the family to Merced county in 1883, Elmer Edward Ogden assisted his father in improving a large ranch, and was also engaged to some extent in freighting, making long and hard trips into the mountains. On attaining his majority, he put into execution the plans that he had previously formed for advancing his education, entering the Stockton Business College, and subsequently taking a normal course. After obtaining his diploma, he taught in the district schools of Merced county two years, following which he studied for a year at the San Joaquin College, in Woodbridge. The ensuing few years, Prof. Ogden taught in the eastern part of Merced county, and then went to Volta, that county, where he was principal of schools for two years. In 1902 he was elected principal of the Merced grammar schools, a position that he has since filled with credit to himself and to the eminent satisfaction of the pupils, teachers, patrons and trustees.

In Plainsberg, Merced county, Prof. Ogden married Alice Wilson, a native of this county, and into their pleasant household three children have been born, namely: Marguerite, Thelma and Irene. The professor is a Democrat in his political affiliations, and is a member and ex-chairman of the county board of education, to which he was elected in January, 1899.

IRVING W. RIDER. Numbered among the successful farmers of Fresno county is Irving W. Rider, whose principal interests have been given to the dairy business since his location on his present property of one hundred acres. A native of Herkimer county, N. Y., he was born September 11, 1868, a son of Mathew Rider, a farmer by occupation. His grandfather Curtis Rider, who still resides on the old home place in New York state, was the descendant of sturdy Holland stock and gave to the American branch the many good qualities which distinguish that nationality. Mathew Rider married Frances Norton, also a native of Herkimer county, and the daughter of Samuel Norton, a farmer by occupation and a descendant of English ancestry. Mr. Rider died in his native state, but is sur-

Of the two sons and one daughter born to his parents Irving W. Rider was the oldest. He was reared on his father's farm, receiving a practical training along agricultural lines, while he attended the public school and Winfield Academy. In the fall of 1888 he came to California, locating first in San Francisco, shortly afterward, however, going to Oregon, where he engaged in farming in Klamath county for one year. Returning to San Francisco he became interested in the milk business, entering the employ of Uhls' X L Dairy & Bottled Milk Company, remaining thus occupied for four years. After one year in which he engaged in the livery business he became associated with E. Stewart in what was known as the Santa Clara Milk Company, a wholesale and retail milk business which was carried on in San Francisco for some time, having three different depots in the city and running fourteen wagons. The company was incorporated with Mr. Stewart as president and Mr. Rider as vice-president. In 1899 Mr. Rider sold out his interest and removed to Stockton, where he established a parcel delivery, eventually disposing of this and spending some time in Santa Cruz and San Francisco, before locating on his present ranch. This ranch of one hundred acres he purchased in 1903, its location on Valeria avenue making it especially desirable. The entire ranch is under alfalfa, while he is engaged in the dairy business. With practically nothing as a beginning in the way of improvements his property now ranks with the best in this section of the county, every acre being under irrigation. He is an enterprising and energetic farmer, with practical and progressive ideas, and well performs his part in keeping in the San Joaquin valley its prestige as an agricultural center.

In Vacaville, Solano county, Cal., Mr. Rider married Lulu May Brown, a native of that place, and born of this union is one child, Russell Elwood. Mrs. Rider is the daughter of George S. Brown, a pioneer of 1857. He was born in Berkshire county, Mass., near Pittsfield, a son of Sherman and grandson of Daniel Brown, both of whom were natives of the same place. The great-grandfather was a native of Connecticut, in which state his parents had settled upon their emigration from England. He served as soldier in the Revolutionary war. Sherman Brown, who was a master mechanic and farmer, in 1850 removed from his home in Massachusetts to Fulton county, N. Y., where he followed these lines until 1852. In that year he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama and locating in Marin county engaged as a builder. Later he removed to Solano county and engaged in farming and stock raising. Some time before his death, which occurred when he was nearly eighty years old, he made his home with his son, George S. Brown. He married Lucina Lester Warren, a native of Massachusetts, whose father was a farmer of that state, and whose descendants were active in the political life of the east, his grandson, Francis B. Warren, being a state senator. Mrs. Brown died in Solano county, leaving a family of six children.

George S. Brown was born February 13, 1843, the oldest in his father's family, and was reared to young manhood in the eastern states, removing to Fulton county, N. Y., in childhood, where he attended the public schools. In 1857 he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, and located in Marin county, where he engaged in the dairy business with his father. He there attended the Petaluma high school, remaining at home until attaining his majority, when he bought a farm near Vacaville, Solano county, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He purchased adjoining land until he had three hundred and twenty acres, but afterward entered the mercantile business in Sacramento. Upon withdrawing from the latter occupation he returned to Solano county and engaged in the fruit business, setting out sixty acres to orchard. He eventually sold this and removed to Santa Cruz, where he engaged in the dairy business and farming until 1900, locating then in Los Banos and following the same occupation. Three years later he purchased his present ranch of one hundred acres, which is devoted entirely to alfalfa. In Sacramento he married Lucinda Peck, a native of Oregon, and born of this union were four daughters and one son, namely: Minnie, Lulu May, Alice, Erma and George. With his family he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In political affiliations both himself and Mr. Rider are staunch Republicans. During the war Mr. Brown showed his patriotism by serving as a member of a military company in Solano county.

BARNEY SPRINGER. An early settler and a pioneer, Barney Springer is located six miles east of Portersville, Tulare county, where he is engaged in the cultivation and improvement of his property. A native of Greene county, Ill., he was born December 2, 1831, on Mound Prairie. The family was originally German, an ancestor having located in Sweden, then coming to America as early as the year 1600. Mr. Springer's great-grandfather, Isaac, was a resident of New Jersey, his son, Noah, a native of that state, being a soldier in the Revolutionary war. The latter located in Essex county, N. J., where David Springer was born. He served in the war of 1812, a volunteer from Steuben county, N. Y., where he was a farmer. From there he removed to Madison county, Ill., and was married there in 1825. Subsequently he removed to Jo Daviess county, same state, and followed lead mining for a time, making considerable money. Afterward he lived in Greene county for a time, finally returning to Jo Daviess county in 1832, and in June of that year, he died a victim of cholera, his wife, formerly Sallie Waddell, of Madison county, Ill., following him within twelve hours of the same disease. They were the parents of six sons, of whom Barney Springer was the youngest.

Left an orphan at an early age, he was cared for by relatives until he was four years old, when he went into the home of strangers and was reared to the age of eighteen years, in the meantime acquiring a public school education. In 1850 he decided to cast in his lot with that of the pioneer element which was contributing to the strength and upbuilding of California, and accordingly he crossed the plains, walking the greater part of the distance and driving an ox-team. He left Illinois April 3 and arrived in California September 1. For six weeks he engaged in mining in Nevada county, after which he came to San Jose, Santa Clara county, and engaged as a farmer on rented land. In the fall of 1854 he once more engaged in mining in Nevada county, remaining there for two years, when he returned to San Jose. Two years later he came to Tulare county and located five and a half miles northwest of Tulare and engaged in the raising of hogs. Three years later he located on the Tule river a mile southwest of Portersville, taking up a homestead, the fifth in this county. In 1883 he bought three hundred and twenty acres which he subsequently sold, and which is now owned by the Rosedale Water Company. His home place, six miles southeast of Portersville, to which he moved in 1891, comprises nine acres, although he originally owned four hundred acres. One-half mile from his home he owns a tract of three hundred and twenty acres.

Fraternally Mr. Springer is associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Pioneers of California, and politically he is a Socialist. Personally he is well and favorably known throughout Tulare county, his kindly ways endearing him to old and young alike.

ROSWELL R. DODGE. An example of one whose natural inclinations seem to be in the line of agricultural pursuits, is found in Roswell R. Dodge, a young and prosperous farmer and fruit-grower of Kings county, Cal. His productive farm, which came to him by inheritance, contains forty acres of the choicest land in his locality, being well located one mile west of Hanford. About fourteen acres of his place is in vines and fruit and he rents out twenty acres of his land for market-gardening. Mr. Dodge was born in 1874 on the farm which he now occupies, and he is a son of the late Roswell S. Dodge, whose biography may be found in another part of this history.

Left an orphan early in life, Mr. Dodge was reared by his guardian, his half-sister, with whom he lived until he went away to school. He was given the best education available in his locality and after completing the course of study in the common schools, he became a student at the San Mateo high school, where he completed his studies. Upon reaching his majority, Mr. Dodge came into his inheritance and by the careful, practical manner in which he has managed affairs on the ranch, he has not only shown himself capable of taking care of the property left him, but has greatly improved it, and thereby increased its value, until it is now worth at least $250 per acre. By his marriage, in 1897, he was united with Daisy Trehwhitt, who was born in Tennessee and their home is brightened by the presence of one daughter, Dorena. Mr. Dodge is a citizen whom it is good to know; he is well informed on general topics and keeps in touch with the times. Politically, he has always been a Republican and although patriotic and alive to the needs of the nation, he is not active in politics, but his voice is ever raised on the side of justice and humanity. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and in all affairs of life is a man upon whom his neighbors rely and one whom they thoroughly respect.

HENRY FERDINAND SALAU, JR., has made the best of such inherited gifts as industry, integrity, and practical common-sense, and to-day is rated as one of the successful farmers and dairymen of the vicinity of Los Banos. The family connection with California, from the time of its establishment in 1871, up to the present, is known to practically all who live in Merced county, and Ludwig Salau, the father of Henry F., is esteemed as one of the substantial and worthy residents of this section. Ludwig Salau, as well as his son, were born near Lybec, Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, the latter March 4, 1857. Besides this only son there were six daughters in the family, two of whom now live in America, and one of whom preceded her father and brother to the United States, settling in California. Losing his wife, Christine (Weaver) Salau, in the old country, father and son sailed for the United States in the fall of 1871, the elder Salau having spent many years as a weaver, and upon his arrival in America resided with his children until his death in 1882.

When Henry F. Salau, Jr., arrived in the west side of Merced county in 1871, the region was principally a sheep range, and his first employment was as a herder. Two years later he worked on a farm and drove a team, and in 1878 had saved enough money to enter his present ranch, which came into the market in 1887, and upon which he proved up in the spring of 1888. Previous to this he had broken the land and sowed it to grain, and at times had as many as sixteen hundred acres under various grains. In 1891 he homesteaded an additional hundred and sixty acres in the foothills, proved up on it, and devoted that also to grain. He has since gone back to live on the old place, taken up in 1878, and where he has about a hundred and ten acres in alfalfa. This is principally a dairy farm, and is rented out, having a capacity of one hundred milk cows, and one hundred and thirty head of other cattle. The farm is one which demonstrates what can be accomplished when a man possesses energy, resource and taste. The latter is evidenced in the general aspect of the farm. Mr. Salau exerts a social as well as agricultural influence in the community, is a factor in securing good government and superior educational advantages, and is an honored member of Mountain Brow Lodge No. 82, I. O. O. F., of Los Banos. In religion he is a Lutheran, and in politics a Republican.

ALBERT ELLES BROOKS. The business methods of Albert E. Brooks are such as to win for him the commendation of all who have had occasion to deal with him. His undertaking parlors are modern in all their appointments, thoroughly equipped, and up-to-date in every respect, and present a completeness of detail which give to him a supremacy in his line of work in Visalia, where he is located. A native of the state, Mr. Brooks was born in Butte county, April 11, 1859, a son of Julius Caesar Brooks. The elder man was a native of Ohio, who became a pioneer of Michigan, thence removing to Illinois, then to Iowa, where, near the city of Des Moines, he engaged in farming. Attracted to the west by the multifold opportunities held out in the early days of California, he crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1854, a member of a large train which made the journey in four months and twelve days. Despite their numbers, they had considerable trouble with the Indians, who stole their cattle and horses, Mr. Brooks having but four yoke of oxen left when he reached California. He immediately went to the mining districts in Butte county but instead of engaging in mining opened a dairy and carried milk to the miners by pack-train. After a time he sold his cattle and bought a mine which, though promising results, had been salted and proved his financial ruin. Forced to seek his livelihood by less precarious means he removed to Sutter county and in the vicinity of Nicolaus engaged in freighting for several years. Once more embarking in the dairy business, he located on Feather river and carried on this work successfully until the floods of 1868-69, during which he suffered great losses, as did all others in that neighborhood. In the fall of 1870 he removed to Burney Valley, Shasta county, and purchased a mountain ranch, where he carried on stock raising. Three years later he removed to Colusa county and engaged in wheat raising on rented land near the city of Colusa. This location remained his home for more than twenty years, when, in 1894, he removed to Lompoc Valley and near Lompoc bought a fruit ranch, consisting principally of an apple orchard, where he now makes his home at the age of seventy-eight years. For thirty years he has officiated as a deacon of the Baptist Church. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. In young manhood he married Mariam Wallace Haskell, a native of Illinois, and she is still living at the age of seventy-four years. Born of their union were six children, four sons and two daughters, of whom Albert Elles Brooks is the third in order of birth.

Albert Elles Brooks received his preliminary education in the common schools of California, when in 1876-77 he attended Pierce Christian College. Upon assuming independence Mr. Brooks' first experience was in the raising of wheat, his interests in that line being very extensive, as he had twelve hundred acres in cultivation. He continued in that occupation for a period of five years, when, in the fall of 1882, he located near Fresno, Fresno county. For five years more he followed farming operations. In 1887 he located in Selma and engaged in the undertaking business with a firm of that city, remaining so occupied for two years. Seeking again an agricultural life he accepted the position of superintendent of the California Prune Orchard at Farmersville, Tulare county, discharging the duties incumbent upon him capably for several years. In 1898 he bought a half interest in the Fresno Undertaking Parlors and retained this interest until 1902, disposing of it then on account of his health. In October, 1903, he came to Visalia and bought the Visalia Undertaking Parlors on the 10th of that month and has since conducted the same.

In Chico, Butte county, Mr. Brooks married Mary Belle Childress, a native of Butte county, and born of this union are four children, namely: Edith Pearl, Bessie May, Roy Oakland and Alvin Earl. In his fraternal relations Mr. Brooks is a member of Fresno Lodge No. 186, I. O. O. F.; Fresno Encampment No. 87; Canton Visalia No. 24; Fresno Rebekahs No. 158; Woodmen of the World of Visalia and the Acacia Circle W. O. W. of Fresno. He is a member of the First Baptist Church of Fresno, in which he officiated as trustee. In the construction of the building he acted as superintendent and handled all the money without bonds, an evidence of the high esteem in which he was universally held and the confidence which he enjoyed among his fellow-men.

CHARLES F. EDDLEMON. At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war Henry Eddlemon enlisted in the defense of the colonies and by valor on the battlefield assisted in gaining independence for our country. With a devotion to duty as strong in times of peace as in war, he took up the quiet life of a tiller of the soil in his southern home. Late in life he took his family to Missouri in a prairie schooner and settled upon virgin soil south of Perryville, where the remaining years of his long life were passed. At a great age he closed his eyes upon the scenes of time, cheered by a Christian's hope of eternal happiness. Throughout life he was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church and a friend of religion.

Michael Sides Eddlemon, father of Charles F., was born in North Carolina March 22, 1822, and grew to manhood in Missouri. During the Mexican war he served for nineteen months in Company I, Third Regiment of Missouri Mounted Infantry. The war ended, he returned to Missouri and embarked in the mercantile business at Pleasant Valley, Perry county, where the ensuing years passed uneventfully. At the opening of the Civil war in 1861 he volunteered his services to the Union, first serving as a captain in the Missouri State Militia, and later acting as first lieutenant of a regiment of Missouri Volunteer Infantry until the close of the war. Exposure to inclement weather and the hardships of army life brought on rheumatism, from which he never recovered. When the war ended he removed to the vicinity of Fort Scott, Kans., where he bought a farm and began to erect a house. Just before the house was completed he died, December 20, 1866. In religion he was a staunch member of the Methodist Church.

The marriage of Michael S. Eddlemon occurred in Perry county, Mo., March 1, 1849, and united him with Mary Conrad, who was born in that county March 17, 1827, being a daughter of Jacob and Selma (Bollinger) Conrad, natives of North Carolina. Her maternal grandfather, Mathias Bollinger, removed from North Carolina to Missouri and settled on the Whitewater river, in Bollinger county, where he engaged in tilling the soil until his death. Jacob Conrad, who was a son of Peter Conrad of North Carolina, removed to Perry county, Mo., where he was prominent among the early settlers. Both he and his wife remained in Missouri until their death. After her husband's death Mrs. Eddlemon continued on the farm near Fort Scott, Kans., for a period of ten years, but in 1876 brought her children to California and during the greater part of the succeeding years she has made Newman her home. In order of birth her children are as follows: Mrs. Sarah Jane Sever, who died in Kansas; Christopher C., a resident of Newman, Cal.; William Purvis, who makes his home in Nevada, Mo.; Jacob Henry, a merchant in San Jose, Cal.; George E., who died at five months of age; Ellen A., who died in infancy; Charles F., the subject of this sketch, who completes the family and is the youngest of the children. He was born at Pleasant Valley, Perry county, Mo., December 7, 1865, and in infancy accompanied his parents to Kansas. At the time of removing to California he was about ten years of age. For a year afterward the family lived in Contra Costa county and thence removed to Hills Ferry, where he and his brothers became interested in grain farming. In 1878 he began work as a teamster, driving six and eight-mule teams. When he settled in Newman in 1889 he started a dray business, which he has since conducted, having eight head of horses and several vehicles. In addition, in 1898 he became agent for the National Ice Company and now engages in the retail ice business, selling in Newman and vicinity, and shipping from Los Banos on the south to Crows Landing on the north.

The neat residence which Mr. Eddlemon built in Newman forms a pleasant home for himself and wife. The latter, formerly Miss Tessie Gray, was born near Fort Scott, Kans., and remained there until her marriage. On the organization of Oristamba Lodge No. 354, I. O. O. F., Mr. Eddlemon became one of its charter members and is now past grand. In matters political he votes for the men and measures of the Democratic party and in its local work at one time took a very active part as a member of the county central committee.

GEORGE BRAILSFORD. To his neighbors and friends who are engaged also in ranching in the vicinity of Hanford, the life of George Brailsford presents an example of industry and worthiness creditable alike to his native country and to the country of his adoption. Born in Yorkshire, England, June 12, 1850, he was reared to mercantile pursuits under the guidance of his father, William Brailsford, who was born in Derbyshire,

J. N. Patterson

England, and who became a large hardware manufacturer in Yorkshire. Working with hard metal was evidently not the occupation for which nature intended his son George, for shortly after his marriage to Martha Thompson, who was born in Derbyshire in 1849, he began to plan for a life in the country and far from the marts of trade.

Arriving in New York in July, 1884, Mr. Brailsford came by way of the Canadian Pacific to Hanford, where, after looking around for a time, he purchased forty acres of land, at that time a barren plain. Erecting a house and beginning the improvement of his land, he took great pleasure in the ideal climate and the clearer skies than he had known in England, and developed an inclination to branch out and become one of the foremost ranchers of his locality. He was one of the first in the section to set his land to fruit, and as success came his way he added to his possessions, and now has one hundred and five acres, all under fruit. He has given the subject the study necessary to place himself in the ranks of the successful and promising horticulturists, and his ranch presents every evidence of his thrift and painstaking methods. Fraternal-ly he is identified with Hanford Lodge No. 194, Knights of Pythias.

In early life Mr. Brailsford married in England, and his wife died in May, 1897, at the age of forty-eight years. She was the mother of one son, William H., who is now in partnership with his father, and lives with him on the home place. William H. was ten years old when the family came to America. He married Louise, daughter of Judge Justin Jacobs, the latter the first superior judge to hold that position after the organization of Kings county; he has been on the school board and is now a member of the Republican county central committee. Mr. Brailsford has one grandson, Howard G. The respect of his fellow-men, a comfortable competence, and a home wherein good-will and affection abide, is the heritage of this well-known and popular horticulturist.

JAMES NELSON PATTERSON. Residing about three miles west of Dinuba is James N. Patterson, one of the most active and intelligent farmers of Tulare county, and a citizen of worth and influence. One of the original settlers of Mussel Slough, he was a vigorous participant in the memorable troubles with the railroad company, with Major McQuiddy and others valiantly standing up for the rights of the ranchers already established there, and was one of the five men that was for eight months confined in the San Jose jail for his opposition to the company's claims. A son of Joshua Patterson, he was born

April 19, 1841, in Moultrie county, Ill., near Sullivan. His grandfather, James Patterson, a farmer first in Kentucky and afterward in Tennessee, served in the Revolution, taking part in the battle of Cowpens. He married a Miss Nelson, a kinswoman of General Nelson of Revolutionary fame, and both he and his wife became pioneers of Moultrie county, Ill., where they spent their closing days.

Born in Tennessee, Joshua Patterson accompanied his parents to Illinois, and during his earlier life was one of the most prominent citizens of Moultrie county. He followed farming to some extent, but was also interested in milling and mercantile pursuits. He accumulated considerable property, and with others helped to acquire the town site of the present city of Sullivan. He was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln. Subsequently migrating with his family to Davis county, Iowa, he improved a fine ranch near Bloomfield, where he lived for a number of years. In 1864, accompanied by his wife and a part of his children, he crossed the plains to California, and settled in Tehama county, sixteen miles north of Red Bluff. In 1878 he moved to Tulare county, where he spent his remaining years on his farm near Grangeville, in what is now Kings county. He was also a participant in the Mussel Slough difficulties. His wife, whose maiden name was Grizzie Ann Cates, was born in East Tennessee ninety years ago, and now resides in Tulare county, making her home with her son James. She bore her husband six sons and an equal number of daughters, and of the seven children that came to California three are living, two daughters and one son.

Having received a practical education in the common branches of learning while attending the public schools of Moultrie county, Ill., and of Davis county, Iowa, James N. Patterson engaged in farming on his own account, marrying and setting up an establishment of his own. In 1864 he started for California, joining a party that crossed the plains with fifty wagons drawn by horse and mule teams. Being unanimously elected captain of the company, he assumed the lead of the train, and followed the old overland trail. Stopping at Julesburg, Colo., where the only dwelling house was a log cabin, he made an impromptu boat in which to ferry the wagons and stock across the river, paying $400 for the four hundred feet of timber required for its construction. Prior to that time Mr. Patterson had taken a trip to Nevada, Iowa, in 1863, when Eddyville, Iowa, was the western terminus of the railroad, going after two desperadoes, whom he captured and took back to the Davis county jail. Continuing the well-worn wagon roads along the Humboldt, through Austin and Susanville, Mr. Patterson arrived in Tehama county, Cal., where he engaged in farming for awhile. He soon became active in public affairs, and in 1868 was elected county supervisor. Subsequently resigning the office, he settled north of Red Bluff, where he became well known as a stock raiser and dealer. Removing from there to College City, Colusa county, Mr. Patterson carried on farming, and also opened the first butcher's shop in the town. In the fall of 1877 he located at Mussel Slough, about a quarter of a mile from Grangeville, buying a settler's claim to eighty acres of land, which he graded and improved, sowing it to alfalfa, and setting out one of the finest orchards and vineyards in that locality. The railroad company laid claim to the land in that vicinity, endeavoring to take it away from the farmers, all of whom had settled on it in good faith, and did not propose to give it up without a brave struggle for their just rights. Mr. Patterson tried to buy his ranch, but the company refused to sell excepting at exorbitant prices, and then to buy a few of the ranchers, alleging as an excuse that they needed the land for other purposes. Mr. Patterson was one of the foremost in fighting the railroad company, being one of the organizers of the Settlers' League, formed for protection and to try to buy the land or raise money to fight for a title to it. A suit of ejectment was brought by the railroad company, and in the ensuing contest between the railway company and the settlers Messrs. Patterson, Doyle, Purcell, Pryor and Braden were convicted, and for eight months were confined in the San Jose jail, where, having the sympathy of the jailer and of the citizens, who recognized the injustice of the incarceration, they had as much freedom, after the first day, as when at home. Subsequently Mr. Patterson and Major McQuiddy made speeches all over the state, holding mass meetings, and so arousing the active sympathy of the public that the railroad officials were forced to yield, eventually selling to the settlers for $32.50 per acre. Mr. Patterson was obliged to mortgage his property, and finally to sell off a part in order to pay for the remainder. Locating on his present ranch in October, 1900, he has improved his eighty acres of land, erecting a substantial residence and farm buildings, and is successfully employed in dairying and stock raising, devoting his land chiefly to alfalfa.

In Davis county, Iowa, in January, 1859, Mr. Patterson married Mary E. Jones, a native of Missouri, and they became the parents of seven children, namely: Mary F., wife of S. J. White; Rosalia E., deceased; W. F., engaged in farming near Grangeville; J. B., a farmer near Dinuba; Mrs. Metta C. Gregory, living near Smith Mountain, Cal.; Mrs. Menta Medora Bain, living near Dinuba; and Mrs. Viola Pearl Lochuane, of Tulare county. Mrs. Mary E. Patterson died in Grangeville, Cal., January 9, 1887. In McPherson county, Kans., near Canton, Mr. Patterson married Mrs. Martha Ann (Jones) Thayer, a sister to his first wife, who was born in Davis county, Iowa, where her father, M. M. Jones, was a prominent farmer, and for many years justice of the peace. He died in Canton, Kans., in his ninety-ninth year. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have one child, Lizzie Mae. Formerly Mr. Patterson was very active in the Christian Church, serving for forty years as elder; he is not a believer in sectarianism, placing his faith in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Politically he is a reformer, independent of party restrictions.

JOSEPH L. PEARSALL. Prominent among the prosperous business men of Stanislaus county who have achieved success in mining operations is Joseph L. Pearsall, residing about four miles north of Newman. Active, keen-witted, far-sighted and capable, he has accumulated a competency through his own persistent and energetic efforts, and is now enjoying life as proprietor of a small but valuable and productive ranch. A native of New York state, he was born in 1855 in Chenango county, which was also the birthplace of his father, the late David Pearsall.

One of the most brainy and progressive men of his day, David Pearsall was born, lived and died in Bainbridge, N. Y. He was a farmer by occupation, but was also actively interested in other leading industries of the place, being a lumberman, a millwright, a real-estate dealer, a speculator and one of the most able and influential politicians of that section of the state. He was an extensive landholder, and in his various undertakings was uniformly successful. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Manning, also was born in New York state, and is now a resident of Bainbridge. She bore him four children, three sons and one daughter, Joseph L., the special subject of this sketch, being the oldest child.

After completing the course of study in the common schools, Joseph L. Pearsall was graduated from the Bainbridge Academy. Leaving home in 1879, he embarked in mining pursuits in Colorado, locating first in Leadville, and afterward in other parts of the state. He subsequently spent a short time as a miner in the Wood river valley, Idaho. Going to Washington in 1889, Mr. Pearsall discovered and located the Monte Christo mines, which proved rich in mineral deposits. Selling out his interests in that locality, he went to the Frazer river country, British Columbia, in 1894, and was there engaged in prospecting and mining for four years. Becoming interested in the mining operations in Alaska, Mr. Pearsall visited that region in 1898, and engaged in prospecting in the Nome and Yukon districts, locating the Mattie Gibson mine, which has paid well. He was successful in his operations, and is still interested in the copper producing mines of the Valdez district. On his present home place, Mr. Pearsall has forty acres of land, twenty acres of which he has sowed to alfalfa, while on the other twenty acres he raises olives.

Fraternally Mr. Pearsall stands high in Masonic circles, and has done much to promote the good of the Order. He is a member of Seattle Lodge, F. & A. M.; of Seattle Chapter, R. A. M.; of the Eastern Star; and of the Washington Lodge of Perfection No. 1, of Seattle, Wash. He belongs to Newman Lodge, I. O. O. F. Politically he is one of the leading members of the Republican party, and in 1904 was a delegate to the Stanislaus county convention. Mr. Pearsall has never married, being probably too much engrossed with business matters to attend to domestic affairs.

JOHN H. DAWSON. As a citizen who for more than a quarter of a century has been identified with the agricultural interests of Kings county, Cal., John H. Dawson is deserving of especial mention, and as president of the Kings County Live Stock Association, added interest is attached to his name. Born in Grant county, Wis., August 23, 1854, the boyhood days of Mr. Dawson were spent upon a farm, and, like the average farmer's boy, he obtained his education in the district schools. He left home to make his own career in the world, being thoroughly equipped with an ambitious spirit, which needed only the school of experience to broaden its powers and capabilities. After following various occupations in as many different localities, Mr. Dawson finally gave his entire attention to farm pursuits and the result has been even greater than he anticipated, assuring him continued prosperity. He now ranks among the most prosperous and substantial citizens of the Hanford district, having lived since 1882 on his farm, seven and a half miles northeast of Hanford, where he rented for the first few years of his residence, but subsequently purchased the land.

In tracing the ancestry of Mr. Dawson, we find his father, Jacob Dawson, to be a native of Kentucky. He was taken to Missouri by his parents when but seven years old, and in 1847 the father went to Texas for a short time. Returning north to Wisconsin in 1848, Mr. Dawson worked in the lead mines of that state for one year and in 1849 he left that section of the country for California. Upon the present site of Placerville, Mr. Dawson erected a cabin, which proved to be the first in the vicinity, and here he opened a general store, conducting a good business for several years. Returning to Wisconsin by the Panama route in 1852, in May of the same year, he was united in marriage with Lydia Fuqua, who was born in Kentucky, and taken to Ohio when quite small, and while still young her parents moved to Wisconsin. After marriage, Mr. Dawson settled on a farm in Wisconsin and devoted his entire attention to agricultural pursuits. The intervening years of his life have been spent in that state, and there he still enjoys life amid familiar scenes, having now reached the age of eighty-two years, his wife being seventy-seven years old.

Upon first leaving home, John H. Dawson went to White Pine county, Nev., remaining there about a year, and in January, 1876, he was persuaded to come to California. In Mariposa county he prospected in the mining camps, also followed teaming from the valley to the camps. It was in 1877 that he first took up his residence in Kings county, then Tulare county, and for a time he rented land from Thomas Thornton. This land afterward became the property of David Burris, and, renting from the latter gentleman, Mr. Dawson continued to remain on the ranch for several years longer, renting from 1878-82 sixteen hundred acres of land. The following year he rented twenty-three hundred acres, which he devoted to grain and before the close of that year he purchased two hundred and forty acres where he now lives. In connection with his general farming, he operates a dairy, making a specialty of the latter. He has a twenty-five-acre vineyard and one hundred acres of his land is used in raising alfalfa.

By his marriage, December 3, 1879, he was united with Henrietta Ehrhart, who was born in Decatur, Ill., and four children blessed their union. They are named William Otto, Lucile, Lydia and John Jacob. Mr. Dawson has made a decided success in introducing practical agricultural methods, and he was a director of the People's Irrigation Ditch, from 1886 to 1888, at which time he was elected president, serving until 1896. He then became a director and served two additional terms, resigning in 1898 in order to take a trip to Alaska. During the nineteen months spent in that far northern territory he prospected along Pick river and at Nome. Politically, Mr. Dawson is known as an independent Democrat.

BENJAMIN F. CROW. At the foundation of the agricultural success of Benjamin F. Crow is a determination to do well whatever task he undertakes, and to regard honest toil as the rightful heritage of the healthy, normal mind. He not only follows willingly the occupation of his forefathers, but seeks to improve upon their methods, and to dignify by study and research the oldest means of livelihood to which man is heir. His entire life has been spent in California. He was born near Oakdale, this state, October 30, 1866, the third oldest in a family of four sons and three daughters. His father, Lewis J., is one of the few remaining argonauts of '49 to still retain interest in life, and recall the trials and deprivations which greeted the courageous travelers from the east. He is one of the first who settled in Stanislaus county, where he began to raise stock on the Orestimba creek from where he eventually removed to his present home near Oakdale.

When he was two years old Benjamin F. Crow went to live with his paternal uncle, B. H. Crow, who was not blessed with children of his own, and ever since the two have been inseparable and always friendly associates. The boy was educated in the public schools and given a business training in the Stockton Business College, after which he continued to farm with his uncle, and eventually became a land owner near the latter's farm. He now owns a hundred and sixty acres under the ditch, and leases seven hundred and forty acres for grain and cattle raising, five hundred acres of this being also under irrigation. His property is well cared for and well adapted to the purpose intended, and the future will doubtless witness additions to the scope of Mr. Crow's resources. He has the inspiration of an interesting family to back him in his ambitions, his three sons, Benjamin Thomas, Roy Franklin and Arthur Ward, already displaying the traits which have made their father's success possible. Mr. Crow married in Oakdale, Ida Ward, a native of Stanislaus county, Cal., to whose wise counsel and economy he owes the encouragement and sympathy which have brightened his home and helped him in his upward course. Although in no sense a politician, he is a staunch Democrat, upholding the interests of his party with the same zeal and practical helpfulness which have caused him to be regarded as one of the community's most enlightened and progressive citizens.

JAMES S. ROWLAND, a successful blacksmith and wheelwright of Visalia, Tulare county, was born in Rock Island, Ill., November 30, 1848, the second in a family of three children born to his parents, Jacob and Ruth (Hobert) Rowland. The father was a native of Hancock, Md., who became a pioneer of Illinois in 1836, locating east of Alton, where he followed his trade of millwright. He also conducted mills, following this line of work in the Mississippi valley from St. Paul to New Orleans, during which time his family lived at Port Byron, Ill. In 1877 he came to California on account of his health, locating near Tulare river, where he lived retired until his death in 1901 at the age of eighty-five years. His wife, a native of Boston, Mass., died June 5, 1902, in this state, lacking one month of being eighty-five years old. Of their other two children, Marcus is located in Redlands, while Anna is the wife of Jacob C. Williams, of Visalia.

The education of James S. Rowland was received in the common schools of his native state, after which he engaged as night watchman in the employ of the Racine & Mississippi Railway. Later entering the operating department he was fireman for two years, when he was promoted to the position of engineer which he retained successfully for seven years on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway. In 1879 he followed his parents to California, locating in Visalia, where he engaged in blacksmithing and wagon-making, having learned this trade in Louisville, Pottawatomie county, Kans. For three years following this work he operated the engine in a flour mill in Visalia, after which he engaged again in the prosecution of his trade.

In Louisville, Kans., Mr. Rowland married Frances Wilson, a native of Canada, and they are now the parents of three sons and three daughters, namely: David H., a miller; Jacob, Ray, Alma, Ruth and Laura, all except David H. being still at home with their parents. In his political convictions Mr. Rowland is a Democrat.

JOSEPH CARMICHAEL. The young men of to-day who are inclined to underestimate the chances for success in the country, might derive encouragement and a change of opinion from the career of Joseph Carmichael, one of the self-made men of Merced county, and the owner of a ranch of seven hundred and sixty-four acres six miles from Snelling and twelve miles from Merced. Mr. Carmichael inherits the mental and bodily soundness of the sons of Scotland, in which country he was born June 24, 1851. He was educated in the town of Paisley, famous for its peculiar and beautiful shawls, and was reared in the humble home of a weaver, the calling which his father, Thomas Carmichael, adopted in early life. Mr. Carmichael learned the turner's trade in Scotland, following the same for ten years before leaving for the United States in June, 1875. Thomas Carmichael accompanied his family to America, reaching New York in September, and at once proceeded to California, locating at Woodbridge, San Joaquin county.

In 1876 Joseph Carmichael came to Merced county and rented four hundred and eighty acres, embodied in his present farm, purchasing the same at a later period, when his industry had accumulated sufficient means. He now has seven hundred and sixty-four acres, devoted to wheat, barley, corn, oats and hay, and he is also extensively engaged in raising high-grade horses, keeping on hand from twenty to fifty thoroughbreds. In addition to his home property Mr. Carmichael has two farms in Mariposa county, one containing four hundred and eighty and one four hundred and eighty-three acres, both of which are rented out. Both of the Mariposa county farms have valuable quartz deposits, yet undeveloped, which run from $300 to $385 a ton, and from which he hopes in time to reap large financial gains; also deposits of gold were discovered in the early days of placer mining in that county. For several years the Merced county farm had as honored occupants the father and mother of Mr. Carmichael, the former of whom lived to be seventy-seven and the latter seventy-eight years old. Mr. Carmichael has modern improvements on his farm, and under his management his land has increased in value and productivity. He is scientific, cautious, and thoroughly practical, understanding well the business requisites for successful farming, as well as the theoretical conclusions arrived at by the colleges and students of agriculture throughout this and other lands. Personally Mr. Carmichael fulfills the popular conception of an ambitious and tireless worker, who appreciates and avails himself of the many opportunities for progress and enjoyment now at the disposal of the up-to-date agriculturist.

EDWARD D. HALBERT. Six miles south of Portersville, Tulare county, on Deer creek, is located the large ranch of Edward D. Halbert, consisting of twelve hundred and seventy-three acres, devoted to the cultivation of grain and the raising of stock. A native of Missouri, he was born in Hickory county, November 23, 1846, a son of Joel B. Halbert. The latter was born in South Carolina, reared in Warren county, Tenn., and in 1842 removed to Hickory county, Mo. He was a physician of considerable prominence in the various communities where he made his home, and practiced his profession in Hickory county until his death, which occurred in 1876, at the age of seventy-three years. His wife, formerly Tirza Sherrill, was born in North Carolina and died in Missouri. They became the parents of nine sons and four daughters, of whom Edward D. Halbert was the eleventh child.

A limited education in the common schools of his native state was all that Edward D. Halbert was able to obtain, while he was trained in his home life to the habits of self reliance and industry characteristic of the pioneer lad. In 1864 he enlisted in the Home Guards and was in active service for two months. In young manhood he became interested in saw-milling, building a mill in Missouri, which he conducted until 1869. He then sold and removed to Hermitage, where he engaged as a clerk for a year and a half, when he came as far west as Nevada City and secured employment with the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway as contractor. Later he returned home and engaged in the harness business in Humansville, Mo. After a year and a half he found employment for the same length of time as clerk. Deciding to come west, he located in California in 1873, at Milton engaging as a sheep herder for one year, when he came to the San Joaquin valley. The first two months he spent near Huron, when he located in Tulare county. In 1878 he bought eight hundred head of sheep, and until 1894 was interested in sheep raising. In the meantime, in 1881, he purchased the ranch which he now owns, and which has since been his home. He has met with success in his farming and stock-raising pursuits and is numbered among the progressive and up-to-date farmers of Tulare county. Mr. Halbert was also a half owner in the Minnie Ellen mine from 1897 to 1901, in the latter year disposing of this interest in order to give his time and attention entirely to his ranch.

In Tulare county Mr. Halbert was united in marriage with Ellen Rhodes, a native of Tulare county, and a daughter of William and Sarah (Douglas) Rhodes, both of whom were natives of Tennessee. The mother is now a resident of Portersville. From Tennessee Mr. Rhodes moved to Texas, and from there, in 1857, came across the plains to California. Upon his arrival in the state he located near Visalia and engaged in the sheep business. In 1875 he made a trip to Arizona, driving a band of sheep and in the vicinity of Prescott was located until 1879, when he returned to his interests in California, where he had left his family. In 1880 he located in the vicinity of Los Angeles, where he was accidentally killed in 1885. Mr. and Mrs. Halbert are the parents of four children, namely: Lois, the wife of L. N. Sperry, of Elmwood, Cal.; Edward Fay; Roy Dent; and Ernest Sherrill, the last three named being at home with their parents. In his political convictions Mr. Halbert is a staunch advocate of the principles of the Republican party.

WILLIAM RADLEY. As superintendent of the famous Waverly ranch, one of the largest in Fresno county, Mr. Radley fills not only a position of prominence, but one fraught with numerous responsibilities. For the past seven years he has filled this position of trust and this of itself is a testimony of his worth. Born in Hamburg, Sussex county, N. J., he is one of seven children born to William and Mary (Abbott) Radley, both natives of that state, the former of Sussex county. When but nine years old William Radley, Sr., went to sea as a cabin boy on a merchant ship and followed life on the water for eighteen years, during which time he visited every country on the globe. It is said that travel is the best educator and it is true that Mr. Radley is conversant upon many topics of which the average citizen has little or no knowledge. His father, Joseph Radley, a lawyer by profession, was of English nationality.

Some time after his marriage, William Radley, Sr., went to Australia and for five years was located at Sydney, after which he sailed for San Francisco. Soon after his arrival upon the Pacific coast he came to the San Joaquin valley, purchasing twenty acres of land in the Washington colony, in Fresno county, where he followed ranching pursuits for about thirteen years. Selling his farm in 1902 he retired from active business pursuits and is now spending his declining years at the home of his youngest son, Richard, who is profitably engaged in growing fruit, hay and vines upon his fifty-six-acre farm, three miles west of Sanger. The other children of Mr. Radley are John, Anna, Mary, William, Thomas and Jennie.

In his early boyhood days, William Radley, Jr., accompanied his parents to Australia and it was in that country that he was chiefly educated. Upon the removal of the family to California he assisted his father in ranching pursuits until he accepted his present responsible position of manager of the Waverly ranch, two miles east of Sanger. The ranch contains five thousand acres, devoted to the raising of wheat and other grains, and constant employment is given to twenty hands; all of the repair work is done at the blacksmith shop which is located on the ranch. As manager of these broad acres the duties of Mr. Radley are manifold, and his personal supervision is given to every detail. Fraternaly he is allied with the Odd Fellows. Although a resident of Fresno county for but fifteen years, Mr. Radley has attained a position of prominence accorded to few so young as he, and his many friends predict for him a bright future.

SAMUEL REY. There are few men engaged in land occupations in Kings county whose experiences have been so varied, and whose skill in narrating them is so pronounced as in the case of Samuel Rey, owner of a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Hanford. In his later years Mr. Rey finds himself the possessor of a comfortable home, of a valuable property, and a ready income from general farming and the dairying of from between twenty to thirty cows. He is gifted with a retentive memory, and throughout his entire life has been a keen observer of men and events, cherishing in his mind many things of importance which escape the observation of the average sojourner.

Mr. Rey was twelve years old when he came to America with his father, Rudolph Rey, embarking in a sailing vessel which spread its sails upon the ocean for sixty-four days. He was born in Switzerland, September 14, 1838, and landed in the city of New Orleans in the fall of 1850, soon journeying northward to Illinois, where his father engaged in farming until his death, at the age of forty-five years. Samuel Rey was for several years employed in a hotel in Illinois, but in 1857 went to Keokuk, Iowa, where he teamed for about one year. He then removed to St. Joseph, Mo., walking nearly the entire distance, and there learned the barber's trade, which secured him a comfortable living for many years. Best of all his experiences, he likes to recall his association with St. Joseph, with Abraham Lincoln and the Confederate flag. The Great Emancipator used to stroll into the barber shop to be shaved, while in the town. One day he saw a rebel flag swaying in the breeze, and made the remark that he would like to have somebody take that "rag" down. That night, when his actions were covered with darkness, Mr. Rey stole out and took down the flag, presenting it the next morning to Lincoln when he came in for his usual shave. Mr. Lincoln told him to burn the flag, and at the same time presented him with five dollars out of gratitude for his consideration and bravery.

In May, 1861, Mr. Rey enlisted in an escort to cross the plains and protect the emigrants, departing from Omaha, Neb., June 3, 1861, and arriving at Walla Walla, Wash., September 16, after the usual adventures on the plains. Upon receiving his honorable discharge from the service in September, 1861, he engaged in mining at Orafino and Pierce City, Idaho, also profiting by the mining excitement on the Salmon river, later returning to Walla Walla, where he secured employment as steward in a hotel. In the spring of 1862 he went to the Florence Basin mines, and from there to Auburn, Ore., his next stopping-place being the site of Silver City, Idaho, which he helped to lay out, and where he conducted a shop for a few months. Those were exciting times in the new town, and it fell to the barber to help drive the gamblers and cut-throats out of the Golden Chariot and Ida Elmore mines, after they had killed one of the owners and spread consternation through the settlement. Alone and single-handed Mr. Rey descended into the mines, drove the men out, and won praise from the rugged and honest element assembled for the making of fortunes. At the same time he was operating a shop on Saturdays in the Flint district, nine miles from Silver City, during the daytime of other days busying himself with sorting ores. About this time a twenty-stamp mill was erected in the vicinity, but it was obliged to close down and the camp was abandoned in 1868. Mr. Rey then went to the Carlin district, in Nevada, where he operated a barber shop for a short time, after which he came to Woodland, Yolo county, Cal., on a visit, and then took a trip to British Columbia. For two seasons he mined and prospected in Alaska, but not realizing success, opened a barber shop in Seattle, and operated it successfully for five or six years.

In the meantime Mr. Rey had instructed his brother to purchase a ranch for him in Kings county, sending him the money to pay for it, and himself taking possession of the same in 1877. The ranch consisted of eighty acres, to which he soon added eighty more, and, thus established, he felt the need of somebody to share his rising and now almost certain fortunes. Like so many of his countrymen, he had come to America to get a start in life, and like so many others had left behind him one of whom he thought much, and who had been an incentive to hard and earnest effort. In 1876 Mr. Rey returned to Switzerland by way of Philadelphia, where the Centennial Exposition was then being held, and married, March 17, 1877, Louise Zubrist, a native of Switzerland, who immediately accompanied him to the farm in Kings county. Together this energetic couple have worked for the competence which is now theirs, and during all the years that have passed have maintained that perfect faith in each other, that desire to sympathize and be of practical use, which has made their home a peaceful and happy one. Eight children have been added to the household, and six have been reared from their cradle to maturity in an atmosphere of goodness and encouragement. Of these, Charles R. is a machinist of San Francisco; George Samuel is engaged in hauling cream for the dairy association; Albert P. lives at Randsburg, Kern county; Della L. is making her home in San Francisco; Clara is a stenographer in San Francisco and Annie is attending the state normal school at San Jose. These parents have given their children the best advantages within their power, and all are a credit to the training given them in their youth.

Mr. Rey is a Democrat in politics, but cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, at the time he was performing the humble service of shaving that statesman. He is identified with Mount Whitney Lodge, F. & A. M., of Dinuba, Cal. His wife is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Rey is somewhat interested in the development of oil in California, and owns fourteen acres in the Coalingo district, which, though promising, are as yet not in working order. In his heart this early pioneer carries a great love for all mankind and an intense desire to be of use to his fellow-men. In his various wanderings in small towns and mining camps he has invariably made many warm friends, and these tinge his memory with pleasant thoughts, and cause him to be glad that his life has been an active and adventurous one.

PETER BONDSON. In Peter Bondson, Kings county, Cal., has a Danish-American agriculturist who reflects credit both upon his native and adopted country, and who embodies those thrifty and substantial traits which make his countrymen a welcome addition to comparatively new countries. Mr. Bondson lives nine miles southeast of Hanford on a farm of three hundred and twenty acres, to which he came in 1875, and upon which he has brought about remarkable changes. The country was extremely wild at that time, and his neighbors were so far apart that the loneliness became monotonous. He assisted in the building of the ditch, which has increased the possibilities of farmers along its course, and until 1892 was engaged principally in grain raising, at which he made a comfortable livelihood. Since then he has conducted a dairy of from thirty-five to forty cows, and devotes considerable attention to raising calves for the market. His farm is well improved, and his family are surrounded with the comforts made possible by his industry and success.

Mr. Bondson came to America in 1870 from North Slesvig, Denmark, where he was born April 1, 1848, and where he received fair educational training in the public schools. He was reared on a farm, as had been generations of his family before him, and he had no thought save to succeed in and dignify this most honorable of occupations. Twenty-two years of age when he set foot in America, he came direct to California, of which he had heard much, and in Sonoma county found employment on a dairy ranch for a couple of years. He then went to Merced county and rented three hundred and twenty acres of land on Bear creek for two years, in the meantime saving his money and intending to embark upon an independent farming enterprise. His expectations were realized in 1875, when he bought and partially paid for his present farm, advantageously located along the ditch, and having excellent watering facilities. His home is presided over by his wife, formerly Delia Nantz, a native of Tulare county, Cal., and the mother of three children, the oldest of whom, Estella J., is attending the high school of Hanford, while Pearl and Arthur N. are at home with their parents. Mr. Bondson is a Republican in politics, and with his wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a steward, and toward the support of which he is a generous contributor. He is a hard-working, progressive and intelligent man, thoroughly in accord with the people and conditions of his adopted state, and able, by the exercise of consideration and integrity, to make his name respected and honored in the community.

NIS HANSEN. It is universally conceded by the majority of people that a man's success in life is measured by the rapidity with which he amasses wealth; the greater his wealth and the more quickly it is accumulated, the greater his success. As an example of one who has some claim to success and whose wealth has been attained in one channel of endeavor, appropriate mention may be made of Mr. Hansen, who, although of foreign birth, has been a citizen of the United States and of California since 1875, and at the present writing is a well-known rancher and fruit-grower in the vicinity of Armona, in Kings county.

United, as he is, by close ties to Schleswig, then a part of Denmark, for it was there that he was born March 17, 1859, Mr. Hansen remained in his native land until he was sixteen years old, spending his boyhood days on a farm. It was early in the year 1875 that he left home and friends and sailed for America to avoid having to serve in the army, having little or no taste for military life. Landing in New York city in May of the same year, he remained there only a short time, proceeding to California. At Vallejo he secured employment in a meat market, and for eighteen months he devoted his best energies to this business, subsequently following ranching pursuits for a time in Solano county, and for a couple of years in Kings county, then a part of Tulare county. A little later, Mr. Hansen purchased one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, which he at once began to improve and cultivate. Here for years he raised grain and carried on dairy farming to some extent, and in 1888 commenced to put out orchards. The latter yielded such fair returns that more attention was paid to fruit culture with each succeeding year, and at the present writing one hundred acres of his ranch is in fine bearing orchards and vineyards. Having prospered greatly Mr. Hansen has owned from time to time farms in different sections, his possessions now including thirty acres of choice land adjoining his home ranch, fifteen acres of which is in vines. That part of his land not devoted to fruit is utilized in raising alfalfa and for pasturage, and this season the entire ranch is leased to men who have worked for Mr. Hansen for the past sixteen years.

The home ties of Mr. Hansen date back to 1887, for at that time he wedded Josie Hutton, a native of California. She passed to her final rest in 1891, after a brief wedded life, leaving two children; of these, one is deceased and the other, Jesse, is at the home place. In 1894 Mr. Hansen remarried to Jennie Dickinson, a native of Maine. Four children have been born to this union, one of whom died in infancy, and in 1900 their mother also died. The children are Catherine, Jennie and Louis A. By his third marriage, Mr. Hansen was united with Minnie D. Hough, his present wife, who was born in Michigan, but was reared in Virginia. In his political views, Mr. Hansen is a Republican, but never aspired to office, preferring rather to devote his time and energy to his business pursuits, and by his straightforward methods, he has made many friends in his locality. His fine ranch is worth many times the purchase money, and could not be purchased for less than $250 per acre, being well located, three-quarters of a mile west of Armona.

ROSWELL S. DODGE. The name of Roswell S. Dodge will long be remembered as one of the honored pioneers of what is now Kings county, Cal., but what was formerly a part of Tulare county. Born in Michigan, August 10, 1831, the boyhood days of Mr. Dodge were spent on a farm in his native state, his education being received in the common schools of his locality. In 1852 Mr. Dodge crossed overland to California in search of a more promising field for the cultivation of his ambitions, but his roseate views of the golden future in this locality were somewhat lessened by the arduous toil to which the miners were subjected. In connection with mining operations, he also followed teaming in the mining district, a somewhat hazardous but paying occupation.

In 1870 Mr. Dodge took up his permanent residence in Kings county, and at that time he not only took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres of government land, but obtained possession of one hundred and sixty acres of Southern Pacific Railroad land just across the road from his homestead. This land was new and undeveloped and for a time Mr. Dodge teamed for his neighbors to get a start. He was one of the instigators and promoters of the People's Irrigation Ditch, which he assisted in constructing and which opened up the section it traversed for agricultural purposes, converting the arid, sandy desert into fertile fields. Here upon this land Mr. Dodge improved and cultivated his place until his death in 1881. By his marriage, in 1872, he was united with Mrs. Caroline Adams, who was born in New York, but who with her first husband and one daughter, Hattie J., came to California, where the husband afterward died. By her union with Mr. Dodge, one child was born, a son, Roswell R., and in 1880, the beloved mother passed to her final rest, leaving these two children to the care of her husband, who, however, survived her only one year.

Upon his death, the homestead farm passed to his son, Roswell R., and the one hundred acres of railroad land was left to his step-daughter, now Mrs. H. J. Bulloch. Later events developed the fact that Mr. Dodge's title to the latter place was not clear and in order to retain possession, Mrs. Bulloch was obliged to repurchase it from the railroad company. This she did and she still resides upon this fine farm adjoining the home of her half-brother; here she witnessed the development of the country from a wilderness into fertile and well-improved farms, dotted with happy and attractive homes, and it may be said that she has done her part to aid and bring about this transformation. Politically, Mr. Dodge was a life-long Republican and took an active part in both local and national politics. To such men as he, California owes much of her present prosperity.

PETER MILLER. The improvements noticeable in the agricultural sections of Stanislaus county are the direct result of the energetic efforts of a number of progressive, resourceful farmers, among whom Mr. Miller is influential and well known. Eight miles southwest of Newman stands his residence, surrounded by trees that he himself planted and farm buildings that he erected. In every direction, extending along the low foothills, are the acres that he owns and cultivates, embracing an extensive area of valuable grain land. To keep in touch with the developments made in agriculture has been an aim with Mr. Miller for many years, and accordingly he adopts improved methods of machinery and the most modern and improved ideas regarding the rotation of crops and cultivation of the soil.

Of German nativity, Mr. Miller is a representative of that class of German-American citizens whose thrift has been a prominent factor in the progress of the new world. He was born in Holstein, near Hamburg, and is a son of John and Angela (Loss) Miller, natives of the same province as himself. His father followed the occupation of brick-mason and contractor, but died in early life, before attaining the success that might have come to him had life been prolonged to old age. Later Mrs. Miller became the wife of Claus Ebbs and came to America in 1892. At this writing she makes her home on her son's farm. She was a daughter of Peter Loss, a farmer of Holstein. By her first marriage she has two sons, namely: Peter, with whom she makes her home; and John, who resided on an adjoining farm, till his death in July, 1904. Of her second marriage two daughters were born. The elder is Mrs. Mary Brauer, of Newman, and the younger, Maggie, is the wife of Henry Timm. Ever since the days of Martin Luther the Miller family has been devoted to the religious doctrines for which he stood.

Born October 11, 1856, Mr. Miller is now in the prime of life and the vigor of manhood. As a boy he attended the public schools in the village of Peisen, but when fifteen years of age he began to be self-supporting, and for some years worked on a farm. In 1880 he crossed the ocean to America and then proceeded across the continent to California, where he at once came to the west side of Stanislaus county. Having no means for the renting of a place, in the spring he secured employment as a farm hand by the month. After eighteen months, in the fall of 1881, he secured a farm outfit and with a partner, Charles Hagadorn, began raising grain on four hundred acres of irrigated land. That partnership continued until 1883, after which he engaged in wheat raising with John Hohn, the two continuing in partnership until 1886. During the latter year Mr. Miller purchased six hundred and forty acres on Bennett's Valley road, where he planted trees, erected a house and barns and took up the work of grain raising. By subsequent purchases he has acquired a very large property in low foothill land, his possessions aggregating thirteen hundred and thirty acres. It is worthy of note that almost all of this large tract may be plowed for grain and hay. Fine cattle and horses form a herd of stock whose value is constantly increasing. In the cultivation of the land ten horse-teams and fifty head of mules are used. The latest machinery is utilized, an instance of which fact is to be found in his combined side-hill harvester, the first machine of the kind brought into the valley, and in the operating of which thirty-two mules are used. Besides his grain land he owns forty acres on the Creamery road, where he raises hogs, cattle and horses, utilizing alfalfa for their pasturage.

The first marriage of Mr. Miller united him with Miss Julia Williams, of Newman, a native of California. She died on their home farm and her only child, Julius, also is deceased. The present wife of Mr. Miller was Miss Katie Jørgensen, a native of Holstein, but a resident of Newman at the time of her marriage. Four sons and two daughters were born of this union, namely: Peter, Jr., Henry, William, Walter, Katie and Elma. During the winter of 1892-93 Mr. Miller renewed associations with the friends of his childhood by visiting his native land. Around him there were many changes to be noticed, but in none was the change greater than in himself. He had left home poor and inexperienced, to go to a strange land with no capital save that of youth and willing hands. When he returned he was influential, experienced and successful, one who by careful observation and frequent reading had acquired a broad fund of information. He had gone away a German, but he returned a loyal American, proud of his adopted country and proud of the success he had attained in the midst of its opportunities. Now, as always, he clings to the Lutheran religion, the faith of his forefathers. In adopting American citizenship he acquainted himself with political affairs and keeps in touch with the issues before our country. Politically he votes the Democratic ticket. Especially in educational matters has his interest been deep and his helpful spirit manifest. Since 1886 he has been a school trustee and at this writing officiates as president of the board. In the capacity of trustee he assisted in the erection of the building now utilized for school purposes in his district. While especially concerned as to the education of the young, he is also interested in all measures looking to the material success and moral training of the boys and girls who are to have the responsibility for the future prosperity of our country. In every respect he has acquitted himself as a patriotic Californian, a loyal American and a helpful citizen of Stanislaus county.

EDWIN JAY DIBBLE, one of the first actual settlers in the neighborhood of Guernsey, Kings county, Cal., was born in Oneida county, N. Y., September 8, 1834, and comes of a fine old New England family of Scotch-English extraction. It was well for him that he was a lad of sturdy and reliant characteristics, for responsibility came his way at the age of sixteen, owing to the death of his father, Jesse Dibble, who died at the age of thirty-seven years. His mother, formerly Anna Palms, a native also of New York, lived to be seventy-seven years old and died in Oneida county.

When he arrived at twenty-two years Mr. Dibble left the home farm which he had managed for six years and found employment by the month in his native state. He went to Minnesota in 1860 and was there married, later locating on a rented farm in Allamakee county, Iowa, upon which he lived until 1863. He then crossed the plains and located near San Jose, Cal., where he rented land and also worked by the day until removing to Santa Cruz county, where he remained until settling on his present farm nine miles south of Hanford, Kings county. His land was a stranger to any kind of improvement, and its development went hand in hand with his active interest in the building of the Lakeside ditch, which came as a boon to the agriculturists and stock-raisers of Tulare county. From a barren region he noted the gradual unfolding of the great opportunities awaiting the enterprise of man, industriously applying himself to making his own home one of fertility and unquestioned promise. Fortunately he has been able to realize his expectations, and has accumulated a competency as a dairyman and grain raiser. In 1890 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres about two miles from the home place, and this is devoted to a dairy of twenty-five cows, and a herd of about one hundred and fifty hogs. This latter farm is under the management of his son George, who is making a practical success as a rancher.

With the assistance of a noble-hearted and helpful wife, who died in 1896, and who was formerly Hannah Blend, a native of Iowa, having been born in 1840, Mr. Dibble has reared a family of eight children, three others having died in early childhood. Of those who reached maturity, Annie is the wife of Frank E. Howe, a rancher; Le Roy is a rancher located near his father; Flora is the wife of Millard Welton, a rancher of Kings county; Judson also lives near his father; Lester has a ranch in the neighborhood; George leases his father's ranch; Abi lives at home; and Jesse assists his brother George. Mr. Dibble had few educational advantages in his youth, and this fact has led him to take a keen interest in the chances accorded the sons of Kings county pioneers. He has served several years as a trustee of schools, but has otherwise refused to hold any office whatever, although a staunch upholder of the Republican party. He is one of the men whose life has commanded respect and whose example is worthy of emulation.

JAMES W. RATH. Numbered among the successful business men of Tulare county, James W. Rath occupies a responsible position as head of one of the most extensive fruit canning concerns in the state, located at Visalia. Since his location in this city in 1897 he has held the position of manager of this business, first known as the Sacramento Packing and Drying Company, but is now called the California Fruit Camers' Association. Of strict business methods, conservative yet progressive, Mr. Rath has discharged the duties incumbent upon him in such a manner as to win the commendation of all associated with him. Born in Mason county, Mich., May 10, 1858, he is the son of Hans Rath, a native of New York state.

In 1846 Hans Rath went to Michigan and located in Mason county, where he engaged in farming, being at present located near the town of Ludington. His wife, formerly Marie Olsley, was also a native of New York state. She died in her home in Michigan in 1898, leaving a family of three sons and one daughter, of whom the daughter is deceased. The youngest of this family of children, James W. Rath, received his education in the common schools in the vicinity of his home, after which he attended a commercial college at New Haven, Mich. Upon assuming independence he went to New Orleans in 1877, and two years later located in Austin, Tex. He there followed the life of a cowboy for three years, when he came to California and in San Jose engaged as an employe for the San Jose Fruit Packing Company. He continued in this employment for several years, finally being promoted to the position of foreman of the cook room. In 1889 he went to Sacramento with R. I. Bentley and engaged as foreman of the Sacramento Packing and Drying Company, continuing in that location for eight years, when he came to Visalia and entered upon the duties of his present position. From the plans of Mr. Rath the canning factory was built, which has a capacity of about one hundred thousand cases of fruit (principally peaches) during the season, which lasts fifty-five days. This association embraces thirty-six plants from the Columbia river to San Diego, and in the busy season employs from five hundred and fifty to six hundred people. It is numbered among the most important industries of Visalia and adds no little to the financial prestige of the place.

In San Jose Mr. Rath was united in marriage with Ella Arnold, a native of Michigan, and they are the parents of two daughters and one son, namely: Ella, Jean and Arnold. In his political affiliations Mr. Rath is a staunch Republican and gives his support to the advancement of the principles he indorses.

DAVID JAMES FRANKLIN REED. A man of varied experience in life, energetic, intelligent and enterprising, David J. F. Reed is numbered among the representative agriculturists and horticulturists of Tulare county, and holds an assured position among the most esteemed and respected residents of Tulare. Although misfortune has sometimes followed him, he has pursued the even tenor of his way unflinching, by courageous perseverance conquering all obstacles, and is now enjoying to the utmost the reward gained by his years of faithful and intelligent toil. Wherever he has lived, he has been prominent in public affairs, and has rendered noteworthy service to his fellowmen. A son of David Reed, he was born in Massillon, Stark county, Ohio, April 12, 1832. His grandfather, Thomas Reed, the emigrant ancestor, was born in the North of Ireland, and after coming to the United States settled in Ohio, becoming a pioneer of Stark county.

David Reed was a life-long farmer, owning a homestead near Massillon, Ohio. He spent his entire life in Stark county, dying while yet in manhood's prime. He married Susan Simon-ton, who was born in Ohio, of Scotch parentage, her father having emigrated from Scotland to Ohio. Of her union with David Reed, three children were born, of whom David J. F., is the only survivor. After Mr. Reed's death she married for her second husband A. W. Vail, and removed to Laporte, Ind., where she resided until her death, at the advanced age of ninety years. Of her second marriage six children were born, four of whom are still living.

Removing with his mother and step-father to Laporte, Ind., when twelve years old, David J. F. Reed at once began to assist in the pioneer labor of breaking up the rough prairie land, and improving a farm. His educational advantages were very meagre, consisting of a few short weeks in the winter season. Leaving the home farm in 1851, he was clerk in a Laporte hotel for about a year. In 1852, desiring to try the hazard of new fortunes, he went to Chicago, which then contained only forty thousand inhabitants, with scarcely any of the modern improvements so characteristic of the present populous metropolis, its streets being veritable swamps, or mud holes. Entering the employ of the late Frank Parmelee, the founder of the Parmelee Bus Line, he remained with him two years. Returning then to Indiana, Mr. Reed opened a hotel in Valparaiso, but was unfortunate in its management, in the year that he ran it losing all of his capital. Going back to Chicago, he secured a position in the old Union Depot, and the following thirteen years was there employed by the Illinois Central and the Michigan Central Railroad companies, serving as baggageman the first two years, and as special policeman the last eleven years. He was there during the troublous time of the Civil war, and has no doubt that it was one of the hottest places in the country.

Locating in Plattsmouth, Neb., in 1870, Mr. Reed secured a position as foreman of material, and manager of a construction train, on the Burlington & Missouri division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and held it for two seasons. Settling then in Crete, Neb., he engaged in the grain and live-stock business. He built an elevator, but it burned down, and he had to rebuild it. He carried on a grain business, shipping on an average two cars a day to Chicago, and dealt largely in stock, shipping to both the Chicago and the Omaha markets. Successful in his ventures, Mr. Reed continued there for twenty years, in the time accumulating some means. He was an important factor in municipal affairs, and for consecutive terms served as mayor of Crete, and for one term county commissioner of Saline county. Selling his Nebraska property in 1890, Mr. Reed migrated to California, and settling in Tulare county purchased eighty acres of land lying one and one-fourth miles east of Tulare. He has improved the land, having it all under the ditch, and has it all set out to fruit, having a vineyard of thirty acres, while the remainder is devoted to prunes and peaches, in the culture of which he is quite successful. Mr. Reed has also been prominent in public matters in Tulare, having served for four years as a member of the city council, three years of the time being president, and for four years, from January, 1899, until January, 1903, serving as justice of the peace.

In Chicago, Ill., Mr. Reed married Evelyn Powell, who was born in Cayuga county, N. Y., but was brought up in Dupage county, Ill. She died in Crete, Neb., in 1888. Of the five children born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Reed, three died in infancy; Clarence E. passed away at the age of twenty-three years; and Gertie E. lived but eight years. Politically Mr. Reed has been identified with the Republican party since its formation, in 1856 casting his presidential vote for John C. Fremont. He is a consistent and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and while in Crete served on the official board, being president of its board of trustees.

EMERIE RENAUD. In the development and advancement of the agricultural prosperity of Tulare county are men of great intelligence, energy and enterprise, prominent among the number being Emerie Renaud, who owns and occupies one of the most attractive of the many beautiful home farms to be found in this section of the state. It is located about four and one-half miles north of Tulare, and in its appointments and equipments compares favorably with any in the neighborhood. A native of the province of Quebec, and the descendant of one of its oldest and most honored French families, he was born, July 25, 1857, near Montreal, which was also the birth-place of his father, Charles Renaud, Jr., and of his grandfather, Charles Renaud, Sr. The latter spent his entire life of sixty-three years near Montreal, being engaged in agricultural pursuits, and the farm which he managed for so many years is still in the possession of the family, being owned and occupied by one of his grandsons.

Successing to the occupation of his ancestors, Charles Renaud, Jr., carried on general farming during his life, which was comparatively short, his death occurring when he was but fifty-seven years of age. He married Marcellian Pelon, who was born in Quebec, a daughter of Celesta Pelon, a farmer, and she still resides in Montreal. Of the twelve children born to their union, ten are living, Emerie, the third child, being the only one in California.

Like the majority of farmers' sons, Emerie Renaud received his early education in the district schools, at the same time being well drilled in the various branches of agriculture. Leaving home when a boy of sixteen years, he came with a brother and uncle as far westward as Nevada. During the same year, 1874, he came to Sacramento, Cal., where he worked as a farm hand for two years. Thinking, however, to obtain money more rapidly with pick and shovel, he spent four or five years in the mines of Bodie, Cal., and Nevada, but his success scarcely equalled his anticipations. Returning then to Sacramento, Mr. Renaud married, and soon afterward in 1884, settled in Tulare county. Buying a farm on Elk Bayou, he operated it for a year, but found the land almost worthless. Renting land, he embarked in grain raising on a large scale and met with excellent success. Leasing from J. Goldman & Co. the old Stokes estate of three thousand acres, he raised immense quantities of grain, and with characteristic enterprise and thrift rented for a number of seasons a three thousand-acre ranch lying near Portersville. In the management of these six thousand acres Mr. Renaud used as many as one hundred head of horses and mules, employing in his operations twelve eight-mule teams. In 1903 he bought the old J. B. Zumwalt place, containing four hundred and twenty acres, lying north of Tulare, as above stated, and in its care has been exceedingly prosperous. He has one hundred acres of alfalfa, raises much grain and stock, and has a fine dairy, which is equipped with all modern improvements, including a separator. In addition to caring for his home farm Mr. Renaud also rents thirteen hundred acres of land adjoining his own, and devotes this tract to grain and stock raising also. He is continually adding to the improvements of his estate, and has now one of the finest farm residences to be found in this part of Tulare county.

In Sacramento, Cal., Mr. Renaud married Mary Giguere, who was born in Yolo county, Cal., a daughter of Frank Giguere, a '49er, and they are the parents of nine living children, all of whom are at home, namely: Joseph, Walter, Laura, Flora, Arthur, Blanche, Bryan, Elma and Collis. Politically Mr. Renaud is a steadfast adherent of the Democratic party, and is president of the board of school trustees of the Enterprise district. Fraternally he belongs to Tulare City Lodge No. 306, I. O. O. F.; to Tulare Encampment; and to Olive Branch No. 269, F. & A. M. He is liberal in his religious beliefs, a firm believer in justice, taking the Golden Rule for his guide, his motto being "Do right and it will be right."

WILLIS LAYTON PRATT, Sr. The Pratt family, which has a representative in Visalia in the person of Willis Layton Pratt, an old pioneer, came originally from England, three brothers crossing the ocean and locating in Jamestown in the early days of its settlement. They became prominent in the colony and were active participants in the various Indian wars which disturbed the country. In time members of the family located in North Carolina, and it was there that the birth of George Pratt occurred. In manhood he followed the occupation of farmer until his enlistment for service in the war of 1812, during which his death occurred. In his family was a son called Thomas, who was born in North Carolina, and following the example of his early ancestors immigrated to the middle west when it presented all the dangers and hardships of a pioneer country. He located in Putnam county, Ind., and there improved a farm for a number of years. Removing to Missouri he located first in Newton county and afterward in Marion county, this latter location remaining his home until after the war, during which he suffered many hardships and privations and eventually lost his property, when he went to Kentucky to visit a brother and there died at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife, formerly Mary Rogers, of Indiana, was a daughter of Samuel Rogers, a native of Kentucky and an early settler of the Hoosier state, where he followed farming as a means of livelihood. He removed to Missouri and died in Stewartsville. From his Scotch ancestry he inherited sturdy traits of character and a loyalty and patriotism that led him to enlist in the war of 1812, a soldier under the command of General Harrison. Mrs. Pratt died in Missouri, leaving a family of three sons and one daughter, of whom one son is deceased. Joseph, who served as a captain in a Missouri regiment during the Civil war, was a lawyer by profession and made his home in Arkansas until his death; Benjamin F., who also served in a Missouri regiment, is a farmer in Missouri; Mary became the wife of Alexander Forman, who served as a soldier in the Civil war and died in Missouri; the oldest of the family now living is Willis Layton Pratt, who was born in Putnam county, Ind., February 24, 1834.

In his native state Willis Layton Pratt spent the first ten years of his life, removing with his parents to Platteville, Wis., where he gained the greater part of his education in the public schools. In 1851 the family moved to Newton county, Mo., and he there found employment in lead mining until his departure for California in 1854. He was accompanied by his two brothers, the three earning their passage by assisting to drive, receiving for their services $10 per month, using their own horses. They had outfitted at Neosho, Mo., for the trip, and on the 10th of April started across the plains up the North Platte, thence through Sublett's cut-off, and through Goose Lake country to Yreka, Cal., arriving September 20, 1854. They were there compelled to pay $1 each night for the privilege of spreading their blankets out on the floor under the dining room table of a hotel. Their first week at mining was one of severe toil and brought them in only $9; they were more fortunate the second week and made $150 each. Until November, 1858, Mr. Pratt engaged in placer mining, meeting with a success which justified his long continuance in the work. Returning to Missouri in the last-named year by way of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec (being the second party that ever made the trip in that way, as after about three parties had passed over the route the natives resisted so strenuously it ceased to be a passage to the west). Mr. Pratt remained in the middle west until April, 1859. Getting together a herd of one hundred and fifty cattle he, with others, drove them across the plains to Honey lake, Lassen county, where he established a ranch. On the 24th of November of that year he married and located upon his property, where he continued to farm and raise stock until 1861. He then went to Virginia City, Nev., and engaged in the dairy business for one year, then located at Fremont Bend, Yolo county, Cal., where he engaged again in the stock business. The flood of 1862 brought him financial ruin in the drowning of stock and the death of those that escaped the water, and after this disaster he followed grain farming for two years. Locating in Yuba county, six miles from Marysville, he entered government land and in time owned five hundred and twenty acres which were devoted to general farming and stock-raising for about seven years. In 1881 he sold out this property at auction and removed to Tulare county, where he had four hundred and eighty acres adjoining Visalia. He here engaged in the raising of cattle and hogs, and also conducted a dairy. He bought adjoining property until he now owns eight hundred acres, under fence, and well improved in the way of buildings and general equipments. He built a fine residence on the home place and established two fine dairies which he now rents, and for some time was interested in the first creamery established here, giving no small effort toward its upbuilding. His property is under irrigation, much of the land being given over to the raising of alfalfa.

The wife of Mr. Pratt was formerly Mary J. Jones, a native of Tennessee, who crossed the plains with her father and located in Lassen county. They are the parents of the following children: George, a carpenter in Visalia; Laura, the wife of T. E. Hayes, a farmer in this vicinity; Thomas H., who conducts the dairy on this place; Frances, the wife of E. S. Nichols, of this vicinity; Willis L., Jr., a farmer and dairyman; Joseph, on the home place; and Lillie, the wife of L. J. McWilliams. In his fraternal relations Mr. Pratt is associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and politically is a true-blue Republican, having cast his first ballot for Fremont in 1856. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MISS AMANDA O. SWANSON. The Swanson family is widely known and honored in Tulare county, where John Swanson, the grandfather of Miss Swanson, built the first irrigation ditch. He came to California in 1849, crossing the plains, and upon his arrival in the state followed mining in Tuolumne county, near Gold Hill. In 1851 he went east via Panama, and after disposing of his holdings, returned with his family, consisting of his wife, Hannah, and their children. He took up eighteen hundred acres of land in Tulare county, in what is now known as the Lemon Cove country, where he was a successful pioneer, inheriting the sturdy traits of character which distinguish the natives of England, from which country his father had immigrated to America.

Coming to California with his parents in 1852, Aaron Swanson was reared and educated in this state. He has followed farming all his life, and now owns three hundred and twenty acres near Lindsay, upon which he is engaged in general farming. Personally he is a man of strong character and progressive ideas, keeping abreast of the times. His wife, formerly Mary N. Fletcher, was a native of La Salle county, Ill., and a daughter of William P. Fletcher, a native of Virginia and a descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestry. When sixteen years of age William P. Fletcher removed to Illinois and located in Jo Daviess county, where he found employment in the lead mines. During the Black Hawk war he served under General Dodge, after which he located within six miles of Freeport. He remained in Illinois until 1850, when he came to California and engaged in mining for three years. Returning to Illinois in that year, he remained a short time, when he located in Iowa, near Leon, and followed farming. In 1862 he crossed the plains and settled in Tulare county, purchasing land on Deep creek, near Visalia, where he established a comfortable home. Later he located in Washington, in which state his death occurred at the age of eighty-one years. His wife, formerly Narcissa Swanson, a native of Ohio, died in Oregon. They left a family of seven children, of whom three only are now living, Mrs. Swanson being the only one left in this vicinity. To Mr. and Mrs. Swanson were born five children, of whom two attained maturity. Of these Willard became a stockman in Tulare county, but is now deceased, his death having occurred in Chicago in 1898.

The only living child of her parents, Amanda O. Swanson is a native of Tulare county, and has spent her entire life within its borders. In 1892 she began improvements upon her property, purchasing twenty acres of land, which was immediately sown to alfalfa. Meeting with a success in her efforts, she has since purchased land adjoining, now owning one hundred and fifty acres two miles east of Tulare, of which seventy acres are under alfalfa. The entire property is under irrigation, and her interests are largely centered in stock-raising. Miss Swanson has won more than local renown for her success as an agriculturist, and especially for the progressive and up-to-date methods which have characterized her efforts. She is prominent in local societies, being a charter member and past officer of the Women of Woodcraft, and also belongs to the Tulare Grange. She is progressive in her views, believing with many others that politics would be elevated to a higher plane, that woman's best interests would be conserved, and the country a happier and better place, if justice and equality were accorded to all.

JOSEPH ELLSWORTH TILTON. To Joseph Ellsworth Tilton, who has been a resident of the Golden state for an unbroken period of forty-four years, belongs the distinction of having propagated the Tilton apricot, one of the most successfully grown varieties in the whole of Kings county. Although now well advanced in years, Mr. Tilton oversees affairs on his fruit ranch, located four and a half miles northwest of Hanford, in Kings county. Born in Noble county, Ohio, December 6, 1834, his boyhood days were spent on a farm, and he was educated in the common schools of his locality. At twenty-one he began teaching as a profession and taught four terms in the vicinity of his home. He continued to teach during the winter and farm during the summer until 1860, going that year to California, by the Panama route.

In the far west, he spent the first five years of his residence in Solano county, teaching during the winter months and following ranching during the summer months, renting land until 1877. During that year he, like many others, took advantage of the special inducements open to settlers in Kings county, then Tulare, and he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land from the Southern Pacific Company, near Grangeville. Here he farmed until 1880, raising grain mostly. He then set out fruit orchards as an experiment. In the meantime he rented the place which is now his home, and according to the conditions he was to plant and cultivate an eighty-acre tract, realizing for his trouble thirty acres after the first crop. He planted the thirty acres so obtained in fruit and vines. Having subsequently lost his place near Grangeville, he removed to his present home in 1895. He now has fifteen acres in fruit and an equal amount of land in alfalfa, and he ranks among the most progressive and practical agriculturists in his locality. A staunch adherent to the Republican party, he served two terms as one of the horticultural commissioners of Kings county. Fraternally he is allied with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

By his marriage in Solano county in 1866, Mr. Tilton was united with Elizabeth Reeve, daughter of George Reeve, a native of England and a California pioneer of 1849. Six children were born to them, the three eldest being daughters, named Addie T., Josephine T. and Mary Jane; and the three youngest being sons, Franklin E., George L. and John Wesley. The sons are all engaged in fruit ranching near Lemoore, Kings county. The youngest daughter died at the early age of eighteen years. Addie T. married M. D. Robinson, a prosperous rancher near Grangeville, and Josephine T. wedded G. H. Rogers, also a rancher in Kings county. In religion Mrs. Tilton is an Adventist, and Mr. Tilton a Methodist. Both are highly esteemed by their associates and neighbors and are influential in their immediate community.

THOMAS CALVERT CARRUTHERS.
Public-spirited, enterprising and progressive, Thomas C. Carruthers has been actively identified with the industrial, social and political advancement of Tulare for nearly four decades, and in the growth and development of city and county has given substantial aid. The leading undertaker of this section of the state, he is thoroughly skilled in the art of embalming, and his services are in demand wherever especial care and efficiency are needed. A son of John Carruthers, Jr., he was born, January 12, 1845, in Ogdensburg, N. Y., coming from honored Scotch ancestry, tracing his descent from the ancient family of "Caer Rythers," who were prominent in the eleventh century. His grandfather, John Carruthers, Sr., emigrated from Scotland to Canada, settling in Ontario, where he continued in business the remaining years of his life.

A native of Scotland, John Carruthers, Jr., was born and reared in Dumfries-shire, living there until after his marriage. Immigrating then to America, he settled near Ogdensburg, N. Y., but afterward removed to Prescott, Ontario, where he purchased land, and having improved a good farm, continued as an agriculturist, meeting with good success in his chosen occupation. He married Mary Calvert, who was born in Scotland, and died in Ontario. Of the six children that blessed their union, four are living, Thomas C., of this review, being the youngest, and the only resident of California.

At the age of sixteen years, having completed the course of study in the public schools of Prescott, Ontario, Thomas C. Carruthers began learning the miller's trade, serving an apprenticeship of three years in the nearby town of Morrisburg. Going from there to Sharon, Pa., he followed his trade there until 1864, when he started for California, coming by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and arriving in the month of April. Proceeding to Nevada City, he was employed in mining and prospecting for about three months. Luck being against him, Mr. Carruthers located in Sacramento, and for a time worked at his trade in the Pioneer Mills, being head miller. He subsequently bought the Healdsburg Mills, which he operated successfully, and later built the Alhambra Mill, on Putah creek, in Lake county, that being a burr mill, run by water power. Going thence to Santa Rosa, Mr. Carruthers, in partnership with J. Mather, bought the Santa Rosa Mills, which they rebuilt, putting in machinery for manufacturing flour by the roller process, and there carried on a substantial business for a number of seasons. Coming to Tulare in 1886, Mr. Carruthers, in company with the Bowles Brothers, erected the Tulare Mills, fitting them up with steam power and rollers, and ran them for two years. Disposing of his interest in the mills in 1888, he embarked in the furniture and undertaking business, becoming junior member of the firm of Black & Carruthers.

In 1892 Mr. Carruthers bought out his partner, and carried on the business alone until 1894, when he sold the furniture business to the firm of Wheeler & Johnson, and has since devoted his entire attention to undertaking, for which he perfected himself by taking a complete course in embalming. The Republican candidate in 1898 for county coroner, Mr. Carruthers was elected by a plurality over the other two candidates, and served in that capacity from January, 1899, until January, 1903. For eight years he was one of the school trustees; and for the past eight years has been a member of the city council.

September 25, 1873, in Healdsburg, Cal., Mr. Carruthers married Belle Heizer, and they have one child living, Grace, wife of J. F. Harding, of Salt Lake City, Utah. Robert Heizer, Mrs. Carruthers' father, came from old Virginia to California in 1853, crossing the plains with ox-teams, and being six months en route, bringing with him his wife and three children. He located in Solano county, near Vacaville, where he carried on farming for many years; he died in Tulare, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carruthers, with whom he spent the last few months of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Susan Hunter, was born in Virginia and died in Healdsburg, Cal. Politically Mr. Carruthers is a staunch supporter of the principles promulgated by the Republican party. Fraternally he belongs to Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M., having demitted from Santa Rosa Lodge; to Tulare Chapter, R. A. M.; to the Ancient Order of United Workmen; to the Independent Order of Foresters; and to Tulare Chapter, O. E. S. In 1904 Mr. Carruthers made a trip to the eastern states and Canada, visiting his old home, and renewing acquaintances with old friends, while on the journey taking in the St. Louis Exposition. Successful in his ventures, Mr. Carruthers has through his own efforts acquired some property in Tulare county.

HENRY C. HEITZEG. Noteworthy among the most active and esteemed citizens of Tulare is Henry C. Heitzeg, who has been prominently identified with the development and prosperity of this section of Tulare county, and, as opportunity has offered, has given his influence and encouragement to the establishment of enterprises conducive to the public welfare. Of thrifty German ancestry, he was born, March 30, 1859, in Freeborn county, Minn., a son of William Heitzeg.

A native of Hanover, Germany, William Heitzeg immigrated to the United States, hoping in this land of plenty to more quickly establish himself as a householder. Locating in Freeborn county, Minn., he was employed in agricultural pursuits for a few years. Removing to Faribault county, that state, in 1859, he entered land, and by dint of persevering labor improved a farm, on which he resided until his death, at the age of sixty-four years. Loyal to his adopted country, he enlisted in a Minnesota regiment, in 1863, and served until the Sioux outbreak was quelled. He married Elizabeth Ewald, who was born in Hanover, Germany, and now resides in Tulare. Of the nine children born of their union, eight grew to years of maturity, and seven are now living, four being residents of California, one of Arizona, and two of Minnesota. One son, Aaron, is a blacksmith in Coalinga, and another son, John, is a stockman in Delano.

At the age of sixteen years, having acquired the rudiments of his education in the district schools of Faribault county, Minn., Henry C. Heitzeg went to Freeborn county, where, by working as a farm laborer, he paid his way through the Albert Lea High School, taking the full course of four years. Returning to Faribault county he embarked in agricultural pursuits on his own account, locating near Banks, where he had the management of two farms. Removing to Wells, Minn., Mr. Heitzeg engaged in the harness business there in 1886, and continued for about five years, when, on account of ill health, he was advised by his physician to come to the Pacific coast. Arriving in Tulare on March 12, 1891, he soon began to feel the beneficial effects of the mild climate, and within a month thought himself well enough to work. Returning to Minnesota to settle up his business affairs, Mr. Heitzeg remained there seven months, and in the meantime lost thirty-six pounds of flesh. Concluding that California was the place for him, he came back to Tulare and started in the butcher business as senior member of the firm of Heitzeg & Drehlow. A short time later he bought out the interest of his partner, and continued alone until April 1, 1898, when he formed a partnership with John R. Hitchcock, the firm name being Hitchcock & Heitzeg. Locating on Kern street, the firm built up a large and lucrative wholesale and retail trade in meats of all kinds, and carried on a substantial business as stock raisers and dealers, managing both successfully until June 28, 1903, when Mr. Heitzeg, owing to the pressure of other business, sold his interest to his partner.

In February, 1903, Mr. Heitzeg was elected a director of the Tulare Irrigation District, which worked with the Bond Liquidating Committee, and soon found that if he accomplished the work necessitated by his position he must give it his entire attention. Therefore, after selling out to Mr. Hitchcock, he attempted the almost Herculean task of raising the entire amount of money needed to pay in full the Irrigation bonds and the accrued interest, a sum amounting to $670,000, although the directors had previously made arrangements to settle for fifty cents on a dollar. In order to do this, Mr. Heitzeg personally interviewed the property owners, many of whom resided in different places, including San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda and Stockton, securing their support to an equalized assessment. He was one of the most active workers in securing the needed money, which was collected and paid in full by October 1, 1903, in San Francisco. On returning to Tulare from that city Mr. Heitzeg was appointed one of the committee to solicit funds for a grand celebration and jollification in Tulare, and without any trouble soon had $3,800 collected for that purpose. At the celebration, October 17, 1903, the day and night fireworks were the most magnificent ever seen in the state, and the celebration one long to be remembered by every participant, although its joy was dimmed by the deplorable death of City Marshal George Martin by William Janes. Mr. Heitzeg subsequently bought land near the Bayou, and has checked and irrigated it. He has now four hundred and forty acres of land lying five miles south of Tulare, one hundred and seventy-five acres of which are sowed to alfalfa, the remainder being devoted to farming, grazing and stock-raising.

In Faribault county, Minn., Mr. Heitzeg married Addie M. Payne, who was born in Cohoes, N. Y., and was reared and educated in Faribault, Minn., where her parents settled in 1867. Her father was a farmer by occupation, both in New York and in Faribault, but subsequently became a merchant and hotelkeeper at Rice Lake, Minn. Two children have been born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Heitzeg. George, who lived but eight months; and Robert L. Politically Mr. Heitzeg is a straightforward Republican, and takes an intelligent interest in public affairs.

WILLIAM H. BLAIN. Fifty years of pioneer life have brought to William H. Blain a success which numbers him prominently among the men of the early day, as he came to California in 1854 with only twenty-five cents with which to start the fortune which is now his. As well as winning financial returns Mr. Blain is justly considered one of the best-informed men on the stock question in the San Joaquin valley, becoming thoroughly conversant with it through his wide experience. Born in Pike county, Mo., twelve miles from Bowling Green, January 3, 1839, he was the son of W. W. Blain, a native of Virginia and an early settler of Missouri. The latter engaged as a brick manufacturer, a mason and cooper in Bowling Green, and also conducted a hotel in that city, known as the Blain hotel, which he himself built of brick. In 1844 he also completed the court house in that city. Until his retirement he was engaged in the hotel business, after which he continued his residence there until his death. His wife, formerly Ann Turner, of Virginia, died in Hannibal, Mo. Of their family of nine children six are now living, and two came to California. The oldest daughter married Hugh Jones, a retired pioneer of 1849, having made the trip to the coast with her brother. She died in Gilroy.

The second child in his father's family, William H. Blain was reared in Bowling Green, receiving his education in the public schools, then of so primitive a character that but scant knowledge could be obtained through a limited attendance. He also learned the stock business to some extent while a resident of his native state, his first trip across the plains in 1854 being made with a drove of cattle. He was then but fifteen years old, yet he took a man's place in standing guard and in all the other duties that fell to the members of the company. They left Missouri on the 20th of April, 1854, and arrived in Santa Clara in October, their journey having been made to Sublett's Cut-off, thence down the Humboldt by way of the Thousand Springs valley to Walker's, thence to Tuolumne county, Cal., this route being selected in order to have feed for their cattle, as there was but little travel that way. Mr. Blain was located near Santa Clara until December of the same year, when he went to Monterey county (now San Benito), where he conducted a stock ranch for one year. Returning to Santa Clara, he engaged in farming on shares until 1857, when he went to Tuolumne county and engaged in hauling lumber. Locating again in Monterey county, he undertook the raising of cattle on shares, being located in Pacheco Pass. He sold out in 1863 and in June of that year drove through to Visalia, Tulare county, and engaged in teaming to the mountains until the spring of 1865, spending his first winter in Wilcox canon. In 1865 he began the sheep business, in which he continued profitably for four years, at the end of that period going to White Pine, Nev., where he opened and conducted a butcher shop, later following the same occupation in Eureka. Returning to Visalia in 1873, he opened a butcher shop here and for many years continued in this occupation. In conjunction he carried on an extensive cattle business, having at one time six hundred head. He owns an improved cattle ranch of thirteen hundred and twenty acres near Monson, Tulare county, on Cottonwood creek; three hundred and fifty acres three and a half miles northeast of Visalia, devoted principally to the cultivation of alfalfa and to stock-raising; about five thousand acres in the foothills of this county, all fenced and devoted to stock-raising; one hundred and sixty acres seven miles east of Visalia, and a handsome residence in Visalia. For a time he also engaged in the dairy business, but abandoned this later and continued alone in stock-raising.

In Santa Cruz Mr. Blain married Sarah Collier, and they became the parents of two children who are now living, Mrs. Laura Zimmerman of Tiburon, Cal., and William, a resident of Bakersfield. In Visalia Mr. Blain was united in marriage with Julia Strube, a native of Texas, who crossed the plains about 1861 and located in Visalia. They became the parents of four children: Frank L., in partnership with his father; George William, deceased; Gladys and Marguerite, the two last at home. Mr. Blain is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Visalia, and in various ways demonstrates his strong interest in the upbuilding of the city and community. He is a member of the Independent Order of Good Templars, of which he is past officer, and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In the organization and upbuilding of the San Joaquin Valley Cattle Growers' Association Mr. Blain took an active and helpful part. In religious affiliations the family attend the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES M. SLINKARD. An enterprising farmer, James M. Slinkard is successfully engaged in the dairy business three miles south of Tulare. A native of the state, he was born in Mariposa county, March 12, 1861, a son of J. M. Slinkard, Sr. The latter was born in Arkansas, in which state he grew to manhood and married, engaging in agricultural pursuits as a means of livelihood. Deciding to immigrate to the more remote west, he crossed the plains in 1852, bringing with him his wife and two children, and on the Gila river another child was born, a daughter, whom they called Melvina Gila. Coming by the southern route, they reached California after a six-months trip, and after disposing of their stock, took passage on a boat bound for San Francisco. From that city they went to Stockton, thence to Mariposa county, where Mr. Slinkard engaged in mining for many years. He met with sufficient success to justify his long continuance in the work, but later located on Bear creek, Merced county, and engaged in grain farming and stock-raising. In 1869 he came to Tulare county and followed the same occupation until his accidental death, which was caused by the brake on his wagon giving way. This occurred October 27, 1899, when he was seventy-three years old. His wife, formerly Harriet Roberts, made her home with her children and died at the home of her son, James M., January 7, 1905.

To Mr. and Mrs. Slinkard were born nine children, of whom Richard J. died at Deer creek, Hot Springs; William J. is located on a ranch at Lincoln, Cal.; Melvina Gila is the wife of B. H. Klein, of White River, Cal.; Charles M. died in 1876; Mollie A. is the wife of J. A. Norvell, of Merced; J. M. is the subject of this review; A. Newton is located in Modoc county, Cal.; Annetta, the wife of Charles Peim, died in Washington; and John A. died at the age of eleven years.

James M. Slinkard remained at home with his father until he was twenty-one years old, in youth attending the district schools of Merced county, where he spent his first eight years, and those of Tulare county. He followed farming in young manhood, at twenty-three years of age renting a farm on Tule river, where he engaged in grain raising. Locating on the property where he now resides he has since carried on general farming and dairying, being engaged in the latter business only since 1900. Of the four hundred and seventy-one acres which he operates along the Southern Pacific Railroad, twenty acres are in fruit, eighty-five acres are in alfalfa, while the balance is given over to pastures and grain. All of this land can be irrigated in the Tulare Irrigation District, of which he has been a director since 1895. In 1897 he was elected president, which office he has since held, working with indefatigable energy to devise means to pay off banks, traveling throughout the county making collections. October 17, 1903, he had the pleasure of watching the burning of the bonds. For all that he has accomplished in this work Mr. Slinkard merits the high esteem in which he is universally held.

In 1885, in Visalia, Mr. Slinkard was united in marriage with Mrs. Ella M. (Churchill) Ayer, a native of Illinois, and the daughter of Zenas Churchill, a pioneer farmer of California. Mrs. Slinkard was the widow of Charles S. Ayer. They settled on eighty acres of land on Tule river eight miles southeast of Tulare, where Mr. Ayer died. Before his death he and his wife negotiated for the purchase of the property where Mr. and Mrs. Slinkard now reside, and upon which Mr. Slinkard has put the present improvements. In his political affiliations Mr. Slinkard is a staunch Democrat. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Tulare, where he was first admitted to the organization, and of which he served two terms as noble grand. He also belongs to the Encampment, of which he is past chief patriarch; the Rebekahs; Woodmen of the World; and the Improved Order of Red Men.

THOMAS BLADES is known throughout Tulare county as a successful stockman, and a citizen of broad and liberal ideas fostered by travel and contact with the world. He was born in Lincolnshire, England, April 29, 1853, the second in a family of seven children, of whom only four are now living, he being the only one in California. His parents, Henry and Mary (Lincoln) Blades, were both natives of the same place, where the death of both occurred. His father being a farmer, Thomas Blades was reared to the practical duties of a farmer's son, attending the public schools of England until eighteen years old. In 1871 he came to America and located in Pontiac, Mich., finding employment on a farm until 1875. In March of that year he came to California for the sake of a milder climate, locating at Riverside, where he bought six acres within the city limits, consisting of two blocks near the center of the city. This he set out to lemons. He also bought ten acres near Riverside and engaged in horticultural pursuits, but gave the most of his attention to the Riverside Land & Water Company. In 1887 he sold this property and located in Tulare, accepting the position of superintendent in the construction of the irrigation system for the Tulare Irrigation District, also acting as superintendent in the construction of canals and ditches until completed and ready for running water. He then took a trip to the World's Fair, thence to the West Indies, traveling over Cuba and acting as interpreter for the Costa Rica government, as he speaks the Spanish language fluently. For two years Mr. Blades continued his travels, spending considerable time in Central America and on the Isthmus of Panama but eventually returned to Tulare county, having found no climate more desirable than this. Upon his second location in this county he engaged in buying and selling cattle, locating on a fine farm, where he raises high grade Durham cattle. Mr. Blades has been connected with the Elk Bayou Ditch Company for some time, acting as director until 1904, when he resigned from the office.

In Tulare Mr. Blades married Mrs. Elmira Love, a native of Petersburg, Ill. She is a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Blades is a staunch Republican in his political convictions, but as a citizen of the community gives his most earnest support to all movements calculated to advance the general welfare regardless of party restrictions.

JAMES HENRY CLAY McFARLAND. Prominent among the successful citizens of Tulare county, Mr. McFarland occupies a place of importance as a horticulturist, as well as rancher and stockman. In 1891 he purchased his present property, consisting of eighty acres located four miles south of Tulare, and he has since devoted his time and attention to its improvement and cultivation. Born in Springfield, Mo., August 19, 1849, he is the youngest child in a family of three sons and five daughters, all of whom attained maturity though only five are now living. His grandfather, Jacob McFarland, a native of North Carolina, took his family to Cooper county, Mo., in which state William McFarland, the father of James H. C. McFarland, spent the remainder of his life. In manhood he followed the occupations to which he had early been trained, becoming a farmer and stockman on property located five miles from Springfield, where his death occurred in 1863. In his political affiliations he was a staunch Whig and a supporter of the Union, and upon the breaking out of the Civil war he organized the first Home Guards in the county. His wife was in maidenhood Martha Roberts, a native of East Tennessee, whose father John Roberts, took the family to Missouri, locating first in Cooper county and later in Springfield, where his death occurred. Mrs. McFarland died in 1880. Of her three sons all volunteered their services to the Union: George, now a resident of Springfield, serving in a Missouri regiment; John, also a resident of Springfield, serving in the Eighth Missouri Cavalry; while James Henry Clay McFarland, no more than a lad in years, was mustered into service in the Fourteenth Missouri Cavalry, in Company F, at Springfield, in March, 1865.

James Henry Clay McFarland was reared to young manhood upon his father's farm in Missouri, attending the district school until taking up the duties of manhood, which came early in the pioneer days. After his enlistment for service as a soldier his regiment was sent west for frontier duty against the Indians in western Kansas, Colorado and New Mexico. A battle was fought at Salt river with the Cheyennes and Comanches, who were defeated, the army continuing in that location until the government made a treaty on the site of Wichita, Kans. In November, 1865, Mr. McFarland was mustered out of service at Fort Leavenworth, being discharged at St. Louis. Then just a little more than seventeen years old he returned to school for a time, shortly afterward beginning farming and stock-raising for himself. He located upon a farm of eighty acres five miles from Springfield, and conducted the same with success until 1887, when he came to California and located in Tulare county. In 1891 he purchased his present property, the first purchase consisting of twenty acres, to which he later added sixty acres. Twenty-nine acres of this property are in orchard and forty-five in alfalfa. Until recently he engaged in the dairy business, but this interest he has now disposed of. In addition to this ranch he owns three hundred and twenty acres of the bayou three miles from Tulare, used for stock-raising.

Near Springfield, Mo., Mr. McFarland was united in marriage with Martha Wharton, a native of Greene county, Mo., and daughter of Emsley Wharton, who moved from North Carolina to Missouri as an early settler and there his death occurred. During the Civil war he served in the Eighth Missouri Cavalry, U. S. A. To Mr. and Mrs. McFarland have been born two children, Clara, the wife of W. C. Abercrombie, of Tulare, and Charles, engaged in stock-raising and dairying six miles south of Tulare. Mrs. McFarland is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In his political convictions Mr. McFarland holds himself independent of party restrictions, giving his support to the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

GEORGE HEIDT. Actively identified with the agricultural interests of Tulare county is George Heidt, whose well-conducted farm lies about six miles northwest of the city of Tulare. Energetic, industrious, and possessing excellent business qualities, he has been uniformly successful in his labors, giving to whatever he has attempted his best efforts, and from a modest beginning has advanced to a good position, both socially and financially, among his fellowmen. A native of New York, he was born, October 17, 1856, near Pike Pond, now Kenoza Lake, Sullivan county, being the youngest child of Peter and Mary Heidt, who emigrated from Germany to the United States, settling on a farm in Sullivan county, N. Y.

Brought up on a farm, George Heidt attended the district school as a boy and youth, in the meantime becoming familiar with agricultural pursuits. After the death of his father, which occurred when George was seventeen years old, he was practically thrown upon his own resources, from that time becoming self-supporting. With his brother Edward he went to Pennsylvania, where for two years he was employed in getting out tan bark by contract. Returning to his old home, he worked there until April, 1877, when, in search of better opportunities for advancing his financial condition, he came from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast, locating first in San Francisco. Securing employment as a wood chopper in San Mateo county, Mr. Heidt also worked for a Mr. Sweat for a time, and was subsequently in the employ of A. Fay, a dairyman, for five years. Industrious and thrifty, Mr. Heidt invested his savings in land, coming to Tulare county in 1882 and buying his present farm. The season proving a dry one, he went back to the coast, and during the summer worked in a lumber mill. Taking possession of his ranch in the spring of 1883, Mr. Heidt began its improvement, and succeeded in raising a good crop. The same year, having irrigated his land, he began to raise alfalfa, which he has since continued. For a number of seasons Mr.

Heidt worked as a wage-earner on the coast, putting the money that he thus obtained in farm improvements, one year running a farm in San Mateo county. He has two hundred and twenty-seven acres of land in his ranch, forty acres of which he has sowed to alfalfa, the remainder, with the exception of a good-bearing family orchard, being devoted to grain and pasturage. He pays much attention to stock-raising and dairying, and is a stockholder in the Tulare Rochdale Association and the Co-Operative Milling Company.

In San Mateo, Cal., Mr. Heidt married Laura Moore, a native of this state, and into their pleasant household nine children have been born, all of whom are living at home, namely: Charles, Ella, George, Frederick, Elmer, Lester, Albert, Elsie and Mary. Politically Mr. Heidt is a strong adherent of the Republican party, and has rendered good service a number of terms as school trustee, serving in both the Enterprise district and in San Mateo. Fraternally he belongs to Tulare City Lodge, I. O. O. F.

WILLIAM MOSES MUNSON. The name of William Moses Munson takes high rank among the extensive wheat and barley raisers of Stanislaus county. Operating upon leased land two thousand acres in extent, this honored promoter of a great western resource evidences profound knowledge of his chosen calling, having devoted years to the study of soil and other requisites for its successful carrying on. His ranch has the finest equipment known to modern grain raisers, and his home and family represent the highest type of community well-being which ennobles the western slope. A native son of California, Mr. Munson comes of a family numerous identified with the coast, and established here in 1849 by his father, Charles Munson, a native of Maine and part owner of the boat in which he accomplished the feat of sailing around the Horn with his wife. Charles Munson succeeded as a hotel man of French Camp, one of the important early settlements of the state, and eventually devoted his entire time to farming until shortly before his death in September, 1891, at the age of seventy-one. His wife, Rebecca S. (Elsmore) Munson, also a native of Maine, died in 1882, at the age of fifty-seven. This courageous couple reared their seven sons on their ranch in San Joaquin county, on the old French Camp road. All the children were given as good a public school education as the times permitted, and thoroughly were trained in everything pertaining to farming.

William Moses, the fifth oldest of this family, engaged in ranching in San Joaquin county for several years, and in 1886 became identified with

Olli . S. Wilson

Stanislaus county, locating on a ranch near Turlock. In 1896 he changed to his present ranch of two thousand acres six miles west of Crows Landing, which he has since made his home, becoming one of the most prominent and influential of the grain raisers of this section. Through his marriage with Josephine Nicewonger, born near Stockton, San Joaquin county, Mr. Munson became associated with another pioneer family of the state, the head of which is Levi H. Nicewonger, a native of Westmoreland county, Pa., and at present living on a farm on the French Camp road. Though seventy-two years of age, Mr. Nicewonger is still recognized as one of the successful and extensive farmers of his neighborhood, evidencing in mind and heart the moderation and common sense which has characterized his life. Mr. and Mrs. Munson have an interesting family of seven children, all living at home; namely: Mary, Frankie, Merced, William, Josephine, Gertrude and Levi. For many years Mr. Munson has influenced educational matters in Stanislaus county, and as a school director has insisted upon a high standard and competent teachers. Politics have played a minor part in his career, although for years a Republican, a few years ago he changed his preference to the Democratic party. He leads a busy and practically useful life, is popular among his many friends and business associates, and in his home is the personification of kindness and consideration.

OLLI SKEEN WILSON. This honored veteran of the Mexican war is a member of a colonial family, founded in America by John Wilson, a native of the north of Ireland, of Scotch ancestry, and an immigrant to Virginia, where he enlisted in the Revolutionary service. A son and namesake of this Revolutionary hero was born near Charleston, S. C., and became a farmer in Stokes county, N. C., where he also preached in the Baptist denomination. As early as 1815 he took his family to the then wilderness of Indiana, settling in Washington county, and becoming a pioneer preacher on the Blue river. A tract of land that he entered and later sold for $10 an acre is now a part of the city of Indianapolis. Among the children born of his marriage to a daughter of Lamar Skeen was a son, Joel, who was born in Stokes county, N. C., and became the owner of a valuable farm on the East Blue river, twelve miles from Salem, where he died at seventy-six years. The wife of Joel Wilson bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Williams, and was born near Salisbury, N. C., where her father, Dill Williams, an Englishman and a sailor, had settled on a farm, remaining there during the balance of his life. At the time of her death, which occurred in Washington county, Ind., she was seventy-eight years of age. Of her twelve children only three sons and one daughter are living. Three of the sons came to California, namely: Olli Skeen, of Dinuba; Ozborn Lamar, a pioneer of 1849, now living at Hanford; and Wylie, who resides west of Dinuba.

Of the twelve children the second in order of birth was Olli Skeen Wilson, who was born near Salem, Washington county, Ind., December 16, 1823, and received the meagre educational advantages afforded by the subscription schools of early days. In 1846 he enlisted in Company D, Second Indiana Infantry, and went to the south, where he served under General Taylor in various engagements with the Mexicans, including the battle of Buena Vista. At the expiration of his military service he was honorably discharged in New Orleans. During his service in the war his life was once saved by a strange coincidence. In one of his battles he carried in a pocket a purse with money and a Testament. While fighting at the front a ball struck him over the heart, but was diverted by the Testament and thus his life was spared. After his return home he engaged in farming and stock-raising, also served as township trustee for sixteen years, and occupied a position of honor among his associates.

In Jackson county, Ind., Mr. Wilson married Miss Elizabeth Hamilton, who was born in that state and died there in 1870. Her father, James Hamilton, came from the vicinity of the James river in Virginia and as early as 1815 settled in the sparsely inhabited regions of Indiana, where he transformed a tract of raw land into a well improved farm. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson there were seven children, namely: Robert Fulton; Mrs. Theresa I. Weddle, who resides in Dinuba; Rebecca F., who died at four years of age; Mrs. Clara Arnold, who resides near her father; Willard, who died in Indiana in 1870; Sarah J., wife of Edwin Giddings, of this vicinity; and Dora, who died after the removal of the family to California. The eldest son, Robert F., was accidentally killed at Lemoore November 11, 1882, by the explosion of anvils during a gubernatorial celebration in the town.

After the death of his wife Mr. Wilson sold his Indiana farm of four hundred and twenty acres and settled up his business affairs in that state. In 1874 he came to California and was the pioneer settler in the northern part of Tulare county, where he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres and took up a homestead of the same size, on which he first engaged in grain-raising. Later he laid out a vineyard of twenty acres, planted an orchard, and put a large tract under cultivation to alfalfa. Since then he has sold sixty acres and given two hundred and thirty-three acres to members of his family, but still owns forty-five acres one-half mile south of Dinuba, as well as town lots in Dinuba and a residence which he rents. On his home place he has a vineyard of twenty acres and an orange grove of two hundred trees, as well as a field of alfalfa and an orchard of assorted fruits. Though retired from active cares, he still superintends his property and in mind and body retains the activity of earlier years. In national politics he gives his support to the Democratic party.

YEISER HUGH MORRIS. The rapid development of the rich agricultural resources of Tulare county is due to the strenuous efforts of men of brain and enterprise, who bring to their calling excellent judgment and superior business methods. Conspicuous among this number is Yeiser Hugh Morris, whose finely improved ranch, located about five miles northwest of Tulare, is one of the best in its appointments of any in the vicinity, giving ample evidence to even the most casual observer of his skill and ability as a practical farmer and rural householder. A native of old Virginia, he was born, September 23, 1853, near Scottsville, which was also the birthplace of his parents, John and Lucy (Cleveland) Morris. His paternal grandfather, Lee Morris, a planter, served in the war of 1812, after which he settled near Scottsville, Va., where he spent his remaining days. His maternal grandfather, William Cleveland, was also engaged in agricultural pursuits in the same place.

The fifth child in a family of six children, of whom three are living, Yeiser Hugh Morris grew to manhood on the home farm, obtaining his knowledge of books in the district school and in the graded school of Scottsville, and acquiring a good knowledge of agriculture under his father's wise instructions. Beginning life on his own account at the age of twenty-one years, he went first to Indiana, and for three years was employed at different kinds of work near New Ross. Desirous of seeing more of his native country, Mr. Morris then proceeded westward to Tama county, Iowa, locating near Toledo, where he remained for another three years. Not entirely satisfied with his prospects, he then journeyed to Oregon, and after spending the winter in that state came, in the spring of 1884, to Tulare, Cal. The two ensuing years he worked as a farm laborer, becoming familiar with the agricultural methods employed on the Pacific coast. In 1886 he wisely invested his money in land, buying a farm of eighty acres four miles northwest of Tulare, which is devoted to grain and alfalfa. Enterprising and thrifty, he at once began the improvement of his property by erecting a residence and a set of outbuildings. In the care of his land he has met with well-merited success as a general farmer, each season raising bountiful crops of grain and alfalfa, and also paying much attention to dairying and stock raising, keeping a fine lot of cattle and hogs. In addition to managing this place, Mr. Morris leases the George H. Ingham ranch which adjoins his place of residence, and consists of two hundred acres of well-improved land owned by his wife.

In 1898, Mr. Morris married Mrs. Bertha (Ray) Ingham, who was born in Syracuse, N. Y., a daughter of Frederick Ray, who migrated from the Empire State to California. Politically Mr. Morris is a faithful supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He finds but little time to give especially to public matters, but he takes a keen interest in everything pertaining to the advancement of the agricultural and industrial prosperity of town and county, and is a member of the Rochdale Association; of the Co-Operative Creamery Company; and of the Tulare Grange.

DOMINGO GASTAMBIDE has proven himself one of the successful and enterprising pioneers of Merced county, in whose veins flows the blood of the Latin races. On the paternal side he is of Spanish ancestry. His birth occurred in France in 1843, and his early training was gained on a small farm near Sare. His father, Baptiste Gastambide, moved across the border upon starting out upon his independent life, and there married Maria Elisalda, a native of France, who bore him several children, the oldest of whom is Domingo.

The first event out of the ordinary in the life of Domingo Gastambide was his immigration to America in 1862. Coming at once to California he engaged in the butcher business in the mines at Almaden. Prices were high and business was good, and a year later he removed to Monterey county and began herding sheep. Two years later he began a sheep business of his own in Monterey county, and at the end of eighteen months came to the west side of Merced county and engaged in the sheep business in the foothills, since which time his name has been identified with sheep raising, and he has been one of the most extensive and successful in this line in the county. In 1877 he entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land, added to the tract from time to time, and now has fourteen hundred acres in his home ranch five miles from Los Banos. Here he established a camp in the early days. Each year has witnessed improvements on his place, which is devoted entirely to sheep and grain raising. Besides, he owns twenty-two hundred acres in the foothills, on Ortigalito creek, and at times has three to four thousand sheep. Years of practical experience have made him one of the best posted and most scientific farmers and sheep raisers in this part of the state, and his advice and counsel regarding these important resources invariably receive the attention due his sound judgment and self-earned success.

The Gastambide home is commodious, well furnished throughout, and with due regard for the comfort and convenience of the happy family under its roof. In San Francisco Mr. Gastambide married Maria Ethevery, who was born in France, and by this marriage four children have been born: Pedro, Maria, Annie and Bertha. Mr. Gastambide ranges his sympathies on the side of Republicanism, and votes that ticket with care and discretion. He is a member of and generous contributor to the Catholic Church at Volta.

GEORGE BERTCH. A successful rancher and stockman of Tulare county, George Bertch is located upon his property of seven hundred and fifty acres nine miles west of Tulare, which has been the scene of his labors since the fall of 1882. He was born in Baden, Germany, in Lichtenau, December 11, 1841. His parents, George and Saloma (Faulhauer) Bertch, were both natives of the same place. His father, who was a farmer, brought his family to America in 1853, locating near Buffalo, Erie county, N. Y., making that place his home for many years, eventually coming to California, where he is now spending his last days at the age of ninety years. The mother was burned to death in 1895, by an explosion of a coal oil stove.

Of a family of ten sons and two daughters, of whom five sons are living, George Bertch is the oldest. Until he was twelve years old his home remained in Germany, where he attended the public schools. The trip to America was made upon the sailing vessel Havre, and occupied forty days. After the permanent location of the family in Erie county, N. Y., George attended the public schools for a time, but with the spirit of thrift characteristic of his race he early sought and found employment on neighboring farms, giving to his father all that he made up to the time of his twenty-first birthday. In 1863 he came to California by the Nicaragua route, and after a long and tedious voyage landed in San Francisco June 11, 1863. He easily found employment on farms in Napa county, where he remained for six years, and then located in Ventura county, where he purchased one hundred acres and engaged in general farming and stock-raising until 1873. In the last named year he went to Stanislaus county and followed farming near Grayson, being principally interested in grain raising. After about nine years in that locality he located on Robert's Island, San Joaquin county, and farmed for two years. In the fall of 1882 he came to Tulare county and with the results of his years of energy and thrift purchased a ranch of seven hundred and fifty acres nine miles west of Tulare. This property was without any improvement at that time. He at once bored an artesian well four hundred and seventy-five feet deep, and as soon as it produced sufficient for irrigation began farming. He put in alfalfa and ever since has engaged in stock-raising. He has met with a most gratifying success, improved his farm, by putting up modern buildings, irrigating by ditch and well, and has brought his property to rank with the most valuable in this section. Two hundred and fifty acres of his extensive ranch are devoted to alfalfa, while his attention is given to the raising of stock and the management of a dairy enterprise.

In Stockton Mr. Bertch married Caroline C. Minges, a native of that city, whose father, John Minges, came to California as a pioneer and became an extensive farmer in San Joaquin county. They are the parents of four children: Laura Pearl Georgia, Carroll Minges, Henry Harrison, and George Leslie, all attending school in Tulare. Mrs. Bertch also owns valuable property, having a ranch of thirty-two acres one mile and a half west of Tulare, which they make their home, as in so doing they are enabled to give their children better school privileges; she also owns a ranch of two hundred and twenty acres in San Joaquin county, as well as property in Tulare. During Mr. Bertch's residence in Tulare of eleven years he served as alderman for four years, being a staunch Republican in his political convictions as well as a citizen whose strongest desire is to advance the general welfare of the community. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and fraternally is prominent in the Odd Fellows lodge, being past grand of the lodge in Tulare, past chief patriarch of the encampment, and both himself and wife associated with the Rebekahs and they are also identified with the Fraternal Aid.

JOHN DORR, a German by birth and parentage, was reared in Bavaria, confirmed in the German Lutheran Church and educated in the German schools. In the town of Essingen, Bavaria, where he was born February 12, 1858, he passed his boyhood years in the home of his parents, John and Catherine (Hauck) Dorr, and was one of a family of nine children, all but three of whom still survive. His father is now dead, but his mother is living and still makes her home in Germany. From the age of thirteen years he began to learn the barber's trade under the instruction of his father, and worked at the occupation in his home locality until twenty-two years of age. Meanwhile, he had read much concerning the United States and all accounts impressed him favorably. Believing he could better his condition he crossed the ocean in 1880 and without delay secured work at his trade in New York, but a year later went south to Texas and worked in Austin and Palestine for a short time. Returning to the northern states, he was employed in Fort Wayne, Ind., for a short period.

Coming to California in June, 1884, Mr. Dorr conducted a barber shop in Galt, Sacramento county. During 1886 he came to Tulare and bought an interest in a barber shop owned by Tony Schenck, continuing in the business for two years with the same partner, but eventually buying him out and operating the shop alone. In 1890 he bought twenty-three acres of wild land in the Bishop colony and from year to year his earnings were devoted to the improvement of the land. Finally, in 1899, he sold his barber business and settled on the property, which is situated three miles northeast of Tulare, and on which he has erected a farm house and other buildings. By the raising of alfalfa he has secured feed for his cows, and a part of the place is in an orchard.

In Cincinnati, Ohio, September 26, 1887, Mr. Dorr married Miss Susan Nicholi, who was born in Bavaria, and died at Tulare, Cal., in 1899, leaving three children, Ida, John Lewis and Nellie. Since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Dorr has given steadfast allegiance to the Republican party and has maintained a warm interest in movements conducive to the prosperity of his county, state and country. In the Tulare City lodge he was initiated in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he has also become an active member of the Woodmen of the World.

EDWIN E. MORRIS. Previous to his location in California as manager of his son's ranch, known as the Chicago Ranch, Edwin E. Morris was variously interested in the fruits of the state and had become well acquainted with its possibilities. For many years he has been prominently identified with the business life of Chicago, in which city he still owns considerable valuable property, through his work as a merchant broker becoming acquainted with the fruit interests of California. Born in Brighton, Sussex, England, August 10, 1826, he is the youngest child of his parents and the only one now living. Both parents, Joseph and Ann (Marchant) Morris, were natives of Brighton, England, and in her native country Mrs. Morris died, leaving a family of eight children. Every advantage was given Edwin E. Morris in an educational line, receiving his preliminary education in Brighton, after which he was graduated from Eton in 1847. For one year following he attended Cambridge University, when he left school and learned the trade of miller and engineer in Kent. In 1850 he came to America, locating in New York, where he remained three years, following his trade. Deciding to locate in the newer city of the middle west, Chicago, he became associated in 1853 with the Blackall Company, a tea, coffee and spice firm, superintending the construction of a large factory and roaster in their interests. Later he became a partner in the firm, remaining so engaged until 1861, in which year he established a business of his own, known as the Phoenix Coffee & Spice Mills, in the John Wentworth building. This firm was known as Morris, Claves & Co., which carried on a wholesale coffee and spice trade, during the Civil war filling the largest government contracts of any firm in the city. After the close of the war he sold his interest in the business, and after a relaxation of two years, during which he made a trip to Europe, he engaged as a merchant broker in Chicago, handling California fruits, both dried and green, the firm name in Chicago being Buchanan & Co. As early as 1885 he came to California and bought fruits, and was the first to get advance on bills of lading in the state, principally through his friendship with Banker Gage, of Chicago, from whom he had a strong letter on the subject. He continued to buy fruits until 1890, in which year he retired from active participation in business. Some time previously Mr. Morris' son had bought land in Tulare county and developed what is universally known as the Chicago ranch. Pleased with the idea of locating permanently in California Mr. Morris undertook the management and improvement of the ranch in 1890, and since that time has given his entire time and attention to the same. He now has four hundred and eighty acres of rich land, lying eight miles west of Tulare, of which one hundred and sixty acres are in fruit, the balance being devoted to alfalfa. Mr. Morris still owns property in Lake View, Chicago, and also property near the corner of State and Twelfth streets, which he purchased in 1867, and upon which he built stores and flats which have brought him in a handsome income since. Mr. Morris has made of the Chicago ranch one of the finest fruit ranches in the county, and has met with most gratifying results in his efforts.

In England, in 1857, Mr. Morris was united in marriage with Annie Oliver, a native of London. Her father, William Oliver, is the largest mahogany and rosewood merchant in the world, carrying on a business which was established by William Oliver & Son over a century ago. Mrs. Morris died in 1890, leaving two children, of whom Lydia is the wife of W. S. Wilson, of Baltimore, Md., and Joseph O. is one of the leading attorneys of Chicago, his offices being located in the Rookery building. Mr. Morris is a member of the Episcopal Church, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. While a resident of Chicago he took an active part in local affairs, and was a citizen upon whom the public honor might safely rest. He was also a member of the Chicago Board of Trade. One of the most important events in the career of Mr. Morris was the introduction of the hog product in England, the years of 1872-3-4-5 and 6 being given over practically to that interest. Mr. Morris is a progressive and broad-minded citizen, a cultured and educated gentleman, an active participant in all that pertains to the general welfare. He has won the cordial good will and fellowship of all with whom he has come in contact since locating in Tulare county by the qualities which have distinguished his citizenship.

HENRY EWING SPEAR. A native son of California, Henry Ewing Spear is a son of John L. Spear, who immigrated to this state in 1853. Born in Page county, Va., July 1, 1811, he is a son of Jacob and Polly (Hardberger) Spear, both natives of Pennsylvania, who removed to Virginia soon after their marriage. There were nine children in the grandparents' family, but during the Civil war Mr. Spear lost track of them and now does not know how many are living. Reared in his native state of Virginia, J. L. Spear there married his first wife, who bore him a daughter, Sarah Ann, the deceased wife of Edward Davis of Exeter. Some time after this marriage Mr. Spear migrated to Missouri and there his wife died in 1836. In 1844 he wedded Mary R. Garvin and to them six children were born, one dying in infancy. Those living are as follows: Jacob; Margaret, wife of John Fox, a resident of Los Angeles county; Frances Eliza, wife of R. C. Glass of Bakersfield; Agnes, wife of John Woolley, a resident of Fresno county; and Henry E., the personal subject of this review.

In 1853 John L. Spear crossed the plains to California. Upon arrival he first settled in Stanislaus county. Two years later he went into the placer mines, following mining until 1861, in that year coming to Tulare county, first settling on eighty acres of timber land, but soon afterward locating near Farmersville, where he resided until his death in 1892.

Henry E. Spear was born near Hills Ferry, Stanislaus county, April 28, 1855. When but a babe he was taken to Amador county by his parents, and in 1861 accompanied them to Tulare county, where he has since made his home. When old enough he took part in the work of the home ranch and in 1884 took entire charge of the place, which he has since conducted. In addition to this ranch he and his brother, J. B. Spear, own two hundred and eighty acres on section 24, one mile north of Exeter. They also own eighty acres on section 6, township 19, range 26. The majority of this land is devoted to general farming.

Mr. Spear was married in Visalia to Belle (Canfield) Clark, who is a native of Tulare county and a daughter of Cyrus Canfield, who was born in Ohio and during the Mexican war served in the army as captain. In 1850 he crossed the plains to Salt Lake City, where his wife's parents died. In 1853 the journey westward was resumed and after a tiresome trip across the mountains, the party arrived in Los Angeles. Five years later Mr. Canfield removed to Visalia, where he was engaged in the stock business and also served as deputy county clerk. His next location was Owens river and from there he went to Nevada, where he died in 1890. He married a Miss Allen, who was born in New York state in 1827 and died in San Jose in June, 1872.

To Mr. and Mrs. Spear have been born four children, Lena, Laura and Eula, all at home, and John, deceased. Mr. Spear has taken an active interest in educational affairs and has served as school trustee of Locust Grove district for the past seven years. In political belief he is a Democrat, but has neither the time nor the desire to take part in public affairs other than those of local interest. During his residence in Tulare county he has met with financial success, but in gaining his position of prominence he has never neglected the duties of a citizen. He is one of those broad-minded men, firm in his belief, but always open to conviction. Both he and his wife have made scores of true friends in Tulare county, who are at all times happy to receive them within their homes.

SANDY J. WHITE, of Armona, is one of the many sons of Missouri to contribute to the well-being of Kings county. He was born in Phelps county, near the county seat, December 15, 1857, a son of Isaac N. and Nancy (Hopkins) White, who were born in the south and were very early settlers in Missouri, where the father died at the age of forty-five, two days before the birth of his son, Sandy J. When he was seven years old his mother died, and it fell to his lot to make his home with his maternal grandmother until his fourteenth year. He then struck out for himself and went to Kansas to live on a farm with his uncle near Topeka, and in 1875, when eighteen years old, came to California, arriving in Woodland with ten cents in his pocket. This fact did not discourage him, however, for he soon found work on a farm, where his willingness and ability not only secured the good will of its occupants, but fair remuneration considering the time and place. In 1878 he came to what is now Kings county, and worked on a ranch for a year, going then into the employ of another rancher with whom he remained a year also. During the following four years he rented a ranch near Hanford, and then went to San Jose, where he clerked in the wholesale and retail grocery business of the Farmers' Union. After five years of mercantile experience he settled in Tulare and engaged in the real-estate business for a year, then married Mary F. Patterson, a native of Iowa, who came overland to California in 1864, locating in Shasta county. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. White, Everett and Lloyd E. Soon after his marriage Mr. White bought a ranch near Tulare, besides lots and residences in the town, three years later disposing of his property and purchasing an eighty-acre ranch three miles south of Armona. This land he set out to vineyard and orchard, occupied and improved it for nine years, and then sold and purchased his present valuable farm. In the meantime he has bought and sold, exchanged and improved other properties, and has encouraged many to take up land and make their home in this fertile and promising community. His farm is under a high state of cultivation and he makes a specialty of fine Jersey stock for dairying. Mr. White is an upright and conscientious man, faithful to friends and duties, and one of the most helpful and progressive up-builders which this county has known.

EDWIN BLODGETT. Prominent among the active and thriving farmers of the San Joaquin valley is Edwin Blodgett, a man of ability, intelligence and good business capacity, whose handsome property lies eight miles from Oakdale, on the Berneyville road, his ranch being on the Stanislaus river. He is a man of liberal views and of greatest integrity, energetic and capable, and throughout the community is held in high regard as one whose word is as good as his bond. Of English ancestry, he is directly descended from one of three brothers that emigrated from England to the United States in old colonial days and settled in Massachusetts, where numerous members of the Blodgett family still live, honored and respected by all. A son of Solomon Blodgett, he was born September 5, 1848, in Putnam county, Ohio, near Ottawa, and there spent his childhood.

A native of Ontario, Solomon Blodgett learned the trade of saddler and harness-maker when young, serving a full apprenticeship. Subsequently removing to Putnam county, Ohio, he followed his trade for awhile, after which he was employed in farming for several years. In 1864 he started for California with his wife and four children, and with a bunch of horses. Shipping the latter to St. Louis, he procured his outfit in that city, and came overland across the plains with horse teams, driving the herd. The Indians were somewhat troublesome, stampeding the horses occasionally, but never getting any. Mr. Blodgett's sons assisting him in keeping guard. Three of his uncles were already established here, namely: Nelson Hubbard, Chauncey Hubbard, and Oscar Blodgett, who came by the Carson route in 1849, and settled first as miners at Hangtown. Going directly to Yolo county, Solomon Blodgett entered land on the Sacramento river, in Cache Creek valley, where he improved a farm, and was actively engaged in stock-raising during the remainder of his working life. His declining years he spent with his son Edwin, dying at the age of seventy-two years. His wife, whose maiden name was Sophronia Curtis, was born, reared and married in Ohio, and now, a bright and active woman of seventy-five years, resides with her son Edwin. She bore her husband ten children, seven of whom grew to years of maturity, namely: Edwin, the subject of this sketch; Oscar, of Santa Rosa; Wardie, living near Chico; Ernest, a resident of Washington; George, in business in Sacramento; Mrs. Mamie Donaldson, of Modesto; and Thedie, deceased. Both parents united with the United Brethren Church when young, and faithfully lived up to its teachings.

Coming across the plains with the family in 1864, Edwin Blodgett helped his brothers drive the horses, and during the trip of four months took his turn in standing guard. He subsequently remained at home until attaining his majority, assisting in the pioneer labor of clearing the parental homestead. Beginning life on his account at the age of twenty-one years, Mr. Blodgett entered one hundred and sixty acres of land on Cache creek, and in its improvement was successful. He afterwards bought adjoining land, increasing the size of his ranch to three hundred and twenty acres, and continued in business as a grain and stock raiser. He afterwards farmed in different places along the Sacramento river, being quite prosperous. Coming to San Joaquin county in 1879, Mr. Blodgett continued in his independent occupation on the farm which he now occupies, but later removed to Woodbridge, San Joaquin county, purchasing a ranch there in order that his children might have better educational advantages. In 1897 he returned to the farm on which he now resides, which is advantageously located on the Stanislaus river, and contains fifty-five acres of bottom land. Since his return to the farm Mr. Blodgett has carried on an extensive and remunerative business as a dairyman and stock-raiser, and in the cultivation of hay, grain and alfalfa. He has also other property of value, owning one hundred and sixty acres of good land in Fresno county, and receiving a good income from its rental.

Mr. Blodgett married, in Yolo county, Cal., Ellen McBride, a native of Ohio, and into their household six children have been born. Solomon, a graduate of Woodbridge College, is a bookkeeper in Sacramento; Elzana also attended Woodbridge College; Samuel is a graduate of Woodbridge grammar school; Edwin, who was graduated from the Oakdale grammar school, is interested with his father in the management of the home farm; Mina and Rosetta complete the family. Politically Mr. Blodgett is a steadfast adherent of the Republican party, and religiously he belongs to the United Brethren Church.

CHARLES P. COLE. A native-born citizen of California, and a worthy representative of an honored pioneer family of Stanislaus county, Charles P. Cole has been actively identified with the development and advancement of the agricultural resources of this part of the state, and now holds a position of prominence among the younger generation of practical and progressive farmers. Skillful, systematic and thorough in his methods, he is meeting with well merited success in his undertakings, and is held in high estimation throughout the community in which he resides. He was born December 16, 1876, in that part of Stanislaus county that is now included within the limits of the town of Claus.

Lum Cole, Mr. Cole's father, was born in Ohio, reared and educated in Missouri, and in 1849 crossed the plains to California, coming with ox-teams, which, as a boy, he assisted in driving. He was first employed in teaming in the mountains, and in the '50s visited his old home. Returning again to this state, he purchased land in Stanislaus county, becoming owner of ranches near Claus, and was there profitably engaged in farming for a number of years. Disposing of his land in that vicinity, he carried on farming in different places, being first located in Tulare county, then in Kings county, and being now a resident of Fresno county. He is highly respected as a man and a citizen, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity. His second wife, whose maiden name was Hattie Islip, was born in the east, and came with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Islip, to Stanislaus county when four years old. Mr. Islip, now a venerable man of four score years, resides with his aged wife in Modesto. By his first marriage, Lum Cole had seven children, and of his union with Miss Islip three children were born, Charles P. being the second child.

Brought up on a farm, Charles P. Cole attended school in different districts, living first in Stanislaus county, then in Tulare county, completing his education in Kings county. Obtaining a thorough knowledge of the science of agriculture while working with his father, he began farming for himself in 1901, on the old Joseph Trollinger ranch, where he still resides, operating a farm of ten hundred and forty acres, and raising gain and hay principally. He pays some attention to raising stock, making a specialty of breeding mules, for which he finds a ready market.

September 23, 1902, in Stockton, Cal., Mr. Cole married Marion Dolan, who was born in Stanislaus county, a daughter of Joseph Dolan. A native of Boston, Mass., Joseph Dolan grew to manhood in that city. Migrating to the Pacific coast in the '60s, he improved a farm at Montpellier, Stanislaus county, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his retirement from the activities of life, being a very successful farmer and stock-raiser. He was a noted breeder of thoroughbred horses, and raised some of the greatest winners and most famous race-horses in the county. After his retirement he lived in Modesto. His death occurred in Hollister October 8, 1893. He married Lucinda Jones, who was born in San Joaquin county, where her father, John Jones, was a pioneer settler, coming here from South Carolina and becoming one of the largest land owners of this part of California. She survived him, dying in 1896, in Oakland, Cal., leaving four children, namely: Marion, wife of Mr. Cole; Wilbur, living on the old Dolan ranch, in Montpellier; Alvar, of Oakland; and Basil, living with Mr. and Mrs. Cole. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have one child, a daughter whom they have named Dorothy. Politically Mr. Cole is a true-blue Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Escalon Lodge, M. W. A.

ADOLPHUS MITCHELL, a successful rancher of Tulare county, was born in Hawkins county, East Tennessee, May 28, 1829. His father, Lewis Mitchell, was a native of South Carolina, and the son of Solomon Mitchell, likewise a native of that state. Solomon Mitchell was a patriot and served in the Revolutionary war under General Pickens. After the close of hostilities he came as far west as Tennessee and located in Hawkins county as a farmer, making that section his home until his death. Lewis Mitchell followed the example of his father and in 1836 emigrated to the southwestern part of Missouri, locating in McDonald county, where he engaged in farming until his death in 1861.

He became a prominent man in that locality, as he had been in his home in Tennessee, in that state having served as justice of the peace and postmaster for fourteen years. His wife, formerly Mary Duff, of West Virginia, also died in McDonald county, Mo. Of their family of five sons and one daughter only two sons are now living, the two youngest, Adolphus and Ozro, who live together in their western home.

In the common schools of Missouri Adolphus Mitchell received his education, after which he engaged in working on his father's farm until 1855. On April 21 of that year, in company with his brother, he crossed the plains to California, arriving at the head waters of the Little Yuba river, Sierra county, August 5. For a time he worked for wages in that locality, in the same year going to Mariposa county, where he remained until 1857. In August of that year he came to Tulare county, where he first worked on the range as a cowboy, handling Spanish cattle. In 1860 he made his first purchase of land, buying eighty acres, which was the beginning of the property which to-day numbers twelve hundred and eighty acres, increased by both his own and the efforts of his brother. This property is eight miles southwest of Visalia, under irrigation from the Evans, Watson and Persian ditches, while they also own a foothill ranch of fifteen hundred acres about six miles north of Lemon cove. With his brother he is extensively engaged in the cultivation of wheat and the raising of horses and mules, in addition to which they run a dairy.

In Newton county, Mo., Mr. Mitchell married Susan Bogle, who was born in Bedford county, Tenn., where she spent the first fifteen years of her life. They are the parents of three children, namely: Walter Franklin and Arthur Gaden, at home; and Addie Belle, the wife of Edward C. Jones, who is located two miles south of Dinuba. Politically Mr. Mitchell adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. In all matters that have had for their object the advancement of Tulare county and California he has always given his hearty co-operation.

J. D. BRADLEY. The name of J. D. Bradley carries with it weight and influence, as manager of the Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Company's interests at Merced, extensive stock-raiser and land owner, and president of the Commercial Bank. Mr. Bradley comes of a family of which much is reasonably expected, and to whom the community looks for the maintenance of high standards of life and work. His grandfather, Lewis R. Bradley, was twice governor of Nevada, and probably was one of the most capable and widely advertised executives of the silver state. His life history is found in many periodicals of the west, and briefly told is that of a man who rose upon his own efforts and attained success through the homely attributes of integrity, perseverance and practical common sense. Born in Virginia in 1806, his first independent work was as superintendent of a southern farm at $80 a year, a position from which he was promoted to purchaser of mules and horses for his employer. From 1843 until 1852 he made his home in Missouri, crossing the plains with cattle during the summer of 1852, and succeeding so well that he returned the following year for a larger band of horses, mules, and cattle. In 1862 he settled in Lander county, Nev., and engaged in stock-raising, and in 1866 settled in Elko county with his son, John R., being pioneers of that then wild region. Always an enthusiastic politician, he served as treasurer and commissioner of Elko county. Elected governor of the territory in 1870, he succeeded himself, his administration being characterized by breadth of mind, intelligence and remarkable sagacity. His son, John R., the father of J. D. Bradley, was born in Virginia in 1835, and married in Missouri in 1857, Elizabeth Hitt, also a native of Virginia, and daughter of Jacob Hitt, a pioneer of Virginia. He became the largest stock-raiser of Elko county, Nev., and filled other important positions than those already mentioned. His death occurred in Reno, Nev., in February, 1902, he being survived by his wife, who still makes her home in Reno, and who is the mother of four daughters and two sons, three daughters being deceased. L. L. Bradley is a resident of Elko county, Nev.

Born on a farm near Stockton, Cal., May 31, 1861, J. D. Bradley was educated in the public schools of Nevada, and from earliest youth was reared to a knowledge of stock-raising. In time he became one of the chief incorporators and president of the Marys River Land & Cattle Company, of which his brother was manager and vice-president, and which was one of the largest concerns of the kind in the territory of Nevada. In 1891 he went to Utah as manager for the Promontory Ranch Company of Promontory, Boxelder county, and in 1894 came to Merced county as manager of the Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Company. The Crocker-Huffman Company owns many thousand acres of land in Merced county, and is one of the largest agencies in central California. Climate, soil and advantageous location conspire to make these possessions among the richest and most desirable in the state.

Two years ago Mr. Bradley began the colonization of a tract of his land, and the results thus achieved point to a future of unexampled prosperity. In addition to his other responsibilities Mr. Bradley is president of the Commercial Bank of Merced, which he assisted in organizing. He is prominent fraternally, being identified with Elko Lodge, F. & A. M., of Nevada; the Royal Arch Masons of Ogden; the commandery; and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of San Francisco. Mr. Bradley was married in San Francisco to Emma Donnels, a native of California, and has one daughter, Dita. Mr. Bradley is a man of energy, wise judgment, and practical knowledge of men and affairs, is affable and approachable, a generous contributor to worthy causes, and a friend upon whom his intimates may unerringly rely.

REV. WILLIAM NEWTON CUNNINGHAM. No name is more intimately connected with the early religious and ethical growth of Bakersfield than that of Rev. William Newton Cunningham, a life-long Christian worker, and a scholar and humanitarian, whose precept and example serve to strengthen one's faith in the goodness and possibility of human nature, and one's admiration of a self-sacrificing, disinterested and beautiful life. At present occupying twenty-four lots on the outskirts of the city, devoted to the cultivation of fruit, he has returned to the occupation to which he was reared as a child near Huntsville, Madison county, Ala., where he was born May 20, 1825.

From the southern plantation, with its pro-rebellion interests, Mr. Cunningham went to the Cumberland University, at Lebanon, Tenn., from which he was graduated in 1859, he having in the meantime accustomed himself to preaching as a licensed traveling evangelist. His services had become invaluable to the missionary board, and in 1860 he was selected and sent by it to Stockton, Cal., where he built the first Cumberland Presbyterian house of worship in the town. The church was already established in the state, and in connection there was a college in Sonoma county, which was in debt $7,500. Mr. Cunningham paid off this debt, and organized a new association, known as the Cumberland College Association. For twelve years he was the president and manager of the school, of which he was the largest stockholder, and for which he erected a large concrete building, capable of accommodating a large number of pupils. Education was conducted on a practical and helpful basis, and from the doors of the college many men now prominent in all walks of life in the state, stepped forth as graduates. The failure of the institution was a bitter disappointment to its zealous promoter, yet he managed to save something from the wreck, and to start forth anew with undiminished belief and as a factor for the uplifting of mankind.

From Stockton, Cal., Mr. Cunningham went to Merced, Merced county; erected a store, and managed the same in addition to following the ministry for ten years. About this time he erected a church at Plainsberg, and in 1882 arrived at Hanford, Kings county, when that town was in its infancy. After erecting a parsonage and preaching a year, he accepted a call to a church in Visalia, but that church was burned about eleven months later. He organized a church at Fresno and later found a field of activity in his present home in Bakersfield. The Cumberland Presbyterian Church was not completed and he later reorganized it and after preaching there for a year resigned from active ministerial work. His interest in the church has never diminished and he has been its sincerest friend and supporter, filling the pulpit in time of need, and donating his services to assist in paying off the indebtedness. Incidentally he has served as traveling salesman, but more recently has devoted his entire time to fruit raising.

The home life of Mr. Cunningham has been a particularly happy and harmonious one, for in his wife, to whom he was married in California in 1867, he has found that perfect sympathy which makes burdens light and sorrow a thing to be borne bravely. Mrs. Cunningham, formerly Ellen A. Abbott, a native of Vermont, was reared and educated near Montpelier. She was formerly a teacher, and also often contributed to periodicals for publication. It was the result of her pen that the free library was established in Bakersfield. She is versed in French, Greek, Spanish and Latin and follows the early training she received in her life as an educator. She is quiet and reserved and has always contributed her share to the upbuilding of the institutions that have advanced the educational and moral standards of the country. A son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, Lucian Abbott, now identified with the Standard Oil Company, operating in the oil fields near Bakersfield. He served as a soldier in the Spanish-American war, after which he served about two years in the Philippine Islands.

EDWARD H. MILES. Deservedly popular in the ranks of both business and educational men of Exeter, E. H. Miles occupies a position of prominence won by merit. He is widely known and esteemed as a merchant of good business ability, far-sighted judgment and unswerving integrity, ranking high in the commercial interests of Exeter, while in educational affairs he holds the position of president of the board of trustees of the Exeter schools. A native of the state where all his life has been spent, he was born near Healdsburg, Sonoma county, October 28, 1862, the fourth child in the parental family. His father, Burke Miles, was born in Indiana, from which state his father, William Miles, removed to Greene county, Ill., and became a farmer. William Miles crossed the plains in 1852, and subsequently six different times, one time crossing alone with his horse and pack animal. He became a farmer and horticulturist in Sonoma county, his death occurring in Portersville, Tulare county, at the age of seventy-six years. Burke Miles crossed the plains also in 1852 and upon his arrival in California engaged in mining in Mariposa county. Returning east he brought cattle across the plains, eventually making his third trip to the west and locating on Dry creek, Sonoma county, as a farmer. In 1867 he settled in Tulare county, one mile northwest of Farmersville, where he purchased land and engaged in its improvement and cultivation. He owned in that section two hundred and forty acres and also owned other property, upon which he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He died in 1888, at the age of sixty-two years. Fraternally he was a Knight Templar Mason and politically cast his ballot with the Republican party. He married Mrs. Catherine Murtha Fitzsimmons, a native of Ireland. While a resident of her native country she married Dr. Fitzsimmons, with whom she came to New York. He became a surgeon in the United States army, and in the early '50s came around the Horn and was stationed at Fort Steilacoom, Wash., where he died shortly afterward. His widow came to California and in Sonoma county married Mr. Miles. She died in 1900, at the age of seventy-three years. By her first marriage she had one son, Charles, who is now engaged in business with Edward H. Miles. The children of the second marriage are as follows: William B., who died on the home place at the age of thirty-six years; Hattie, the wife of D. L. Healy, of San Francisco; Alice, the wife of Philip H. Hering, of San Francisco; Edward H., of this review; and George, a barber in Farmersville.

Edward H. Miles was about five years old when he accompanied his parents to Tulare county, and here he was reared to young manhood on the paternal farm. He received his education in the district schools and at the same time was thoroughly drilled in the practical duties of a farmer's son. He also attended the Visalia Normal School, from which institution he was graduated in 1881 with honors. Following his graduation he engaged in teaching for five terms in this county, during which time he also farmed and clerked. In 1898 he withdrew from educational work and engaged in the mercantile business in Exeter, purchasing the interest of F. S. Montgomery, of the firm of Teague & Montgomery, the firm name thereafter being known as Teague & Miles. In 1902 Mr. Teague sold his interest to Charles Fitzsimmons, since which time the business has been conducted under the title of E. H. Miles & Co. They have purchased the brick building in which their business is located, adding to the original dimensions of 50x60 feet a storage building 24x50 feet. Mr. Miles also owns the old home place near Farmersville, consisting of one hundred and forty acres, all of which is under the People's Ditch, a concern of which his father was president for many years. This farm is now leased and is devoted to the cultivation of alfalfa, while there is also an orchard of twenty acres; he also owns a twenty-acre orange orchard two miles southeast of Exeter. Mr. Miles was largely instrumental in the organization of the California Tale & Soapstone Company, of which he acts as a director, and for the past twelve years has served as secretary of People's Ditch Company.

Mr. Miles was made a Mason in Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M., of which he served as master three terms; is also a member of Visalia chapter No. 44, R. A. M., of which he is past high priest; Visalia Commandery No. 26, K. T., of which he is past excellent commander; and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of San Francisco. He also belongs to Knights of Pythias, of Exeter, of which he is past chancellor, and Woodmen of the World. He is a member of Visalia Parlor No. 19, N. S. G. W. Politically he is a staunch Republican and is active in the councils of his party, being an ex-member of the county central committee.

JUDGE THORNBERRY BROOKS. Occupying a most picturesque and beautiful location seven miles north of Hanford, in the Kings river district, apart from the distracting influences of city life, stands the cozy home of Judge T. Brooks, who is one of the prominent pioneer ranchers of Kings county. His landed possessions comprise three hundred and twenty acres in Kings county, besides three hundred and twenty acres in Fresno county. He was born December 22, 1822, in Jackson county, Ga., a son of Isaac and Genesee (Fowler) Brooks, natives of Georgia and South Carolina, respectively. In 1833 the family removed to a farm near Columbus, Ga., and there the son passed his years until reaching young manhood. He then learned the butcher business, and later the carpenter's trade, following this until 1850. February 11 of that year he started for California, embarking at New Orleans with six hundred other passengers, and landing at San Francisco in the following April. After looking about the country for three weeks he became interested in the mines around Sonora, and for five years thereafter was engaged in mining with varying degrees of success. In 1852, in addition to looking after his claims, for two years he operated a sawmill on Hangtown creek, one of the oldest mills in the state, in which he had bought an interest. In 1855 he rented land on the Sacramento river, in Sacramento county, and engaged in ranching and also raised vegetables to some extent, but this in time became unprofitable on account of the high rents demanded, and in 1866 he came to Kings river, settling on what was thought to be government land, but after five years of hard labor spent in improving the tract a Spanish grant was floated over him and he was obliged to seek other quarters, being allowed only such improvements as were portable. Not discouraged by this experience, however, he crossed over to the other side of the river and purchased one hundred and sixty acres, upon which he established his home and began life anew as a stock-raiser. This was in the days before the adoption of the fence law, which was passed in 1873, and as a consequence Mr. Brooks lost one hundred head of horses, never being able to trace them in any way.

January 9, 1855, near what is now Placerville, Cal., Mr. Brooks was married to Frances A. Foster, who was born in Alabama. Her father, John C. Foster, came to California in 1849, and Mrs. Brooks came to the state in 1853. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks became the parents of eight children, as follows: Susan A., the widow of Jefferson Hames; Charles H., who assists his father with the duties on the ranch; Georgia, a teacher in the schools of Kings county; Edward L., also a rancher; Mary A., the wife of J. N. Bowhay; Amos B., William A. and Wesley W. Although well advanced in years, Mr. Brooks is hale and hearty, with every evidence of many years to his credit in which to enjoy his present happy surroundings. Politically he is a staunch Democrat, but always has refused official positions.

GREENBERRY CATRON is remembered throughout Tulare county as one of the substantial and enterprising agriculturists and stockmen of this section of the San Joaquin valley, the results accomplished by his energy and ambition visible in the home which he left to his widow as well as wide lands improved and cultivated in various parts of the community. He was born in Lafayette county, Mo., October 10, 1820, a son of Solomon and Elizabeth (Jennings) Catron, natives respectively of Tennessee and Virginia. Solomon Catron emigrated from his native state to Missouri, where he engaged in farming until his death. His wife also died in that state at the age of ninety-five years.

Greenberry Catron became a soldier in the Mexican war in 1846, leaving the peaceful farming pursuits which had occupied his attention from early boyhood. After the war he crossed the plains in 1849, the six months' trip being made with ox-teams. He was accompanied by two brothers, Christopher and Glenville, the latter of whom died in the mines, while the former returned east and is now residing in Holt county, Mo. Upon his safe arrival in California Mr. Catron engaged in mining on Feather and Yuba rivers, and also farmed some in Lake county. In 1864 he located in Tulare county, purchasing the farm of one hundred and sixty acres which now forms the home of the family. At that time it was nothing but a barren plain, but he immediately began improvements, putting up adequate buildings, erecting fences and setting out trees. To-day this place is famous throughout Tulare county for its immense cactus, of the lobe variety, which grows as large as trees. He also bought one hundred and sixty acres adjoining his property, and at his death owned the half section in one body, besides owning a mountain ranch of eight hundred and seventy-one acres at the foot of Blue Ridge, in the Yokohl valley, which was utilized exclusively for stock-raising purposes. On his home property he carried on general farming and stock-raising successfully, being numbered among the prominent agriculturists of Tulare county. He died in his home two and a half miles northwest of Exeter, May 11, 1901, in his seventy-second year. He was a member of the Baptist Church and politically was a staunch Democrat.

Mr. Catron's widow was formerly Mrs. Amanda Melvina (Maxon) Wolbert, to whom he was united in marriage June 2, 1881. She was born in Jefferson county, N. Y., a daughter of Erasmus D. Maxon, a native of the same place. His father, Paul C. Maxon, was born in Connecticut and settled in Jefferson county, N. Y., where he followed farming until his death. Erasmus D. Maxon was a farmer in occupation, and in young manhood removed to Jackson county, Wis. He there enlisted in the Fourteenth Wisconsin Cavalry, and served for three years in the Civil war, after which he returned to his farming operations in that state. In 1873 he came to California and settled near what is now Exeter, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres, which he improved and cultivated until his death in 1881, at the age of seventy-nine years. His wife, formerly Hannah Crouch, of New York state, a daughter of Joseph and Mary (Resigue) Crouch, died in Tulare county, at the age of sixty-one years. Of their ten children seven are now living, a son, Harrison, having served in the Civil war as a soldier in a Wisconsin regiment. Mrs. Catron was the third in order of birth and was reared to womanhood in Wisconsin, whither she accompanied her parents in 1849. In 1876 she came to California, and married Mr. Catron a few years later. She is the mother of the following children: Everett Wolbert, of Exeter, and Birdine, the wife of Sherman Pennebaker, of Exeter. Mr. Catron was a member of the Society of California Pioneers of San Francisco. Mrs. Catron is a woman of business ability and judgment and has conducted her affairs in a capable manner since the death of her husband.

F. M. COOK. It is universally conceded that the banner vineyard of Tulare county, and probably of San Joaquin valley, is that of F. M. Cook, who located at Orosi as one of the first horticulturists of this section. He purchased sixty acres of land in section 18, which was then nothing but a stubble field, set it to raisin grapes, all Muscat, and has since met with a success which has placed him prominently among the horticulturists of Tulare county. Born in Van Buren county, Iowa, November 10, 1852, he was the oldest in a family of six children, of whom four are now living. His father, James Cook, was a native of Ohio and the representative of a family prominent in that state. In young manhood he removed to Illinois and there married Elizabeth Killebrew, a native of that state, a descendant of sturdy Scotch ancestry. Mr. Cook finally took his family to Van Buren county, Iowa, and there engaged as a farmer until his removal to Illinois, thence in 1868 to California. Upon reaching this state he located first in Solano county, later in Colusa county, still later in Tehama county, his last residence being in Willows, where his death occurred. He is survived by his wife, who makes her home in Fresno.

Until he was three years old F. M. Cook remained in Iowa, his father at that time going to Illinois, and in that state he attended the district schools in Scott county. When sixteen years old he made the memorable trip to California, crossing the plains with mule teams and being four months on the journey. After locating in Solano county he attended the common school for a time, remaining at home until attaining his majority. He then engaged in grain-raising near Willows and also gave some time to the stock business. In 1884 he removed to Fresno county and near Malaga bought new land and set out a fifty-acre vineyard. This he conducted successfully for six years, when he came to Orosi, Tulare county. Purchasing sixty acres he set it out to grapes, and has realized each year for the last six years from sixty to sixty-two tons of fruit. In 1904 he realized sixty-seven tons from forty-four acres. Besides the Muscat he has set out the Thompson seedless and has met with a success in its cultivation. In addition to the sixty acres already mentioned he owns twenty acres across the road set out to Muscat and Thompson seedless; a twenty-acre vineyard of Zinfandel at Sultana; and twenty acres southeast of Sultana, making one hundred and twenty acres in all, all devoted to the cultivation of grapes. The ranch is finely developed and cared for, all being under irrigation.

In Willows, Cal., Mr. Cook was united in marriage with Sarah Elizabeth Cartwright, a native of Iowa, and they are the parents of three children, Francis Elmer, James Ernest and Virgil. Mr. Cook has been prominent in his community and has taken an active part in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare. For over twelve years he served as school trustee, and although a Democrat in national politics never allows his views to stand between him and a vote for a man whom he considers qualified to discharge public duties satisfactorily. He is a director and stockholder in the Bank of Dinuba, as well as a director in the Alta Irrigation Company, being elected to this latter in 1902. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, of Orosi, in which he officiates as trustee. Fraternally he was made an Odd Fellow in Fresno in 1886, and belongs also to Knights of Pythias of Orosi and Woodmen of the World, being past councillor commander. He is also identified with Women of Woodcraft. For some time he was associated with the Raisin Growers' Association and was exceedingly active in its work.

JOHN F. DAULTON. In what is now the county of Madera, but was then a portion of Fresno county, J. F. Daulton was born January 24, 1862, being a son of the late Henry Clay Daulton, one of the most influential stockmen in this part of the state. The family possessing ample means, he was given every advantage for obtaining an excellent education, and for a time studied in the Stockton Business College. From his father he inherited a fondness for stock and at an early age he selected stock-raising for his life work. At the age of twenty-two he started out for himself as a sheep-raiser in Madera county and from a small beginning accumulated a large flock in later years.

Upon the death of his father in 1893, J. F. Daulton took charge of the estate and has since maintained a close supervision of the ranch and the stock. To promote the interests of the family, in 1898 he incorporated the Daulton Ranch Company, of which he is president and manager. In the ranch there are seventeen thousand acres, all under fence, and supplied with water by means of flowing springs. Of the entire tract four thousand acres are under cultivation, mostly in grain, while the remainder of the land is utilized as a pasture for the stock. In sheep he makes a specialty of the Merino breed and at this writing has about eight thousand head on the ranch. In 1889 he moved from the ranch into Madera, where he has since made his home, but his residence in town has never interfered in any respect with the close supervision he maintains of the ranch and stock.

The marriage of Mr. Daulton, in San Jose, united him with Addie M. Raynor, who was born in Connecticut and came to California with her father, W. M. Raynor, a sheep-raiser, and the owner of twelve thousand acres in Merced, Mariposa and Madera counties. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Daulton comprises four children, namely: Hazel, Raynor McErlane, Henry Clay and Erma. Mrs. Daulton is a member of the Presbyterian Church and the family are attendants upon its services. From the time of attaining his majority Mr. Daulton has voted and worked with the Republicans. Formerly he was a member of the Republican county central committee. As the nominee of his party, in 1898 he was elected supervisor of the third district of Madera county for a term of four years, and during this time the court-house was planned and completed. His fraternal relations include membership in the Masonic Lodge No. 280, F. & A. M., of Madera; Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he is past grand of the local lodge; Ancient Order of United Workmen at Madera, and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Fresno.

GEORGE POWERS KELSEY has the distinction of being the second oldest native son of Merced county now living in the county, where he was born May 25, 1855, and is the owner of a ranch of eighty-six hundred acres, of which one hundred and sixty acres of bottom land are under alfalfa, and he has about two hundred and fifty head of stock. A number of tenants occupy the pasture lands, the owner occupying sufficient for his needs. His home is on an elevation overlooking the Merced river, half a mile from Merced Falls.

Mr. Kelsey is a graduate of the University of California, class of 1879, and by profession is a civil engineer. A justifiable pride of ancestry is a family characteristic, the earliest emigrant bearing the name having arrived on American shores from England in the early part of the eighteenth century. Connecticut is supposed to have been the destination of this remote sire, for the paternal great-grandfather was born in that state, moving, however, to New York state later in life, and there Erastus Kelsey, the father of George P., was born. On the maternal side Mr. Kelsey is of Revolutionary stock, his maternal grandfather, Powers, having served in the British army. His great-grand-uncle, Judge Stephen Powers, at one time served as United States minister to Switzerland. His mother, Malinda (Powers) Kelsey, was born in Wisconsin. She bore her husband six children, two of whom died in early childhood, and those living are: Charles, now living in Mariposa county; George P.; Horace G., of Merced county; and Dr. A. L. Kelsey, of Los Angeles. Erastus Kelsey went to Illinois from New York in 1842, and assisted in the laying of the first plank walk in what is now the city of Chicago. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California, mined along the American river in Placer county, and was so successful that he took a trip back to Illinois during the summer of 1851. In 1852 he located on the Merced river in the county of that name, entered and purchased land to the extent of eight thousand acres, which he sold to his son, George P., in 1881, and upon which he engaged in general farming, stock and grain raising. Mr. Kelsey later bought a section of land near Antioch, on an island in the San Joaquin river, which he still owns and occupies. Still active, he is the fortunate possessor of good health, cheerful spirits and many friends, and besides has an ample share of worldly goods. He is a Republican in politics, and has ever been regarded as a public-spirited, generous and broad-minded man.

From the public schools George P. Kelsey entered the University of California, his classmates including George C. Pardee, the present governor of California; Judge F. W. Henshaw, Judge C. W. Slack, Prof. E. O'Neil and Charles Butters, the mining expert. Shortly after his graduation, Mr. Kelsey learned civil engineering and surveying, which he has practiced to some extent ever since, and for which he has particular aptitude. He was a school teacher in Merced county for one year, and since buying his father's ranch in 1881 has practically devoted his energies to its cultivation. He has taken a commendable interest in Republican politics and was supervisor of the county four years. He married Frances Overstreet, who was born in San Francisco in 1866, a daughter of William F. Overstreet, a pioneer of Mariposa county, Cal. They are the parents of the following children: Eudora M., Grace L., Lillian, Lawrence DeW., Ruth N., George W., Francis O. and Ethel. Mr. Kelsey has a pleasing and interesting personality, and is a good conversationalist, well versed in the current topics of the day. He is held in high esteem by his many friends for his honorable and upright dealings and his public spirit.

JOHN J. DOYLE, an esteemed resident of Portersville, Tulare county, was born in Lafayette, Ind., April 19, 1844, a son of John Doyle. The latter was a native of Kentucky, who removed to Indiana in 1829, and there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1876. His father, William Doyle, came from Ireland when a lad, locating in Virginia and later in Kentucky, his death occurring in the latter state. John Doyle married Sarah Wilson, a native of Virginia, who in 1876 died in California, where she was brought by her son, John J., on his second trip to the coast. Mr. and Mrs. Doyle became the parents of sixteen children, nine sons and seven daughters, of whom John J. was next to the youngest.

Until attaining his majority the home of John J. Doyle remained under the parental roof in Lafayette, Ind., where he took a commercial course. In the meantime he had become much interested in California, and despite the wishes of his mother made the trip. He lacked the money to pay his passage, having only a Henry rifle, a brass watch and $2 in Missouri state currency, but managed to work his way across, trading the watch for a shotgun and afterward selling that for $15. He was three months en route, and after his arrival in the state worked in Sierra valley, Plumas county. He would have been satisfied to remain in the state, but learning of the death of two brothers and knowing the condition of his mother he at once returned to Indiana by way of Panama, having upon his arrival at home $18 in gold. In 1867 he brought his mother via Nicaragua to California and located in Sonoma county, engaging in farming on land purchased by his mother. Two years later he taught school in the old Santa Rosa district. In the fall of 1870 he came to the San Joaquin valley and located near the Cottonwoods, in Merced county, on the west side of the valley, and engaged in grain farming for two years. In 1871 he came to Tulare county on a business trip and while here took up the cause of the citizens against the Southern Pacific Railway Company, the case famous throughout the San Joaquin valley, which remained unsettled from 1874 to 1883. During this time Mr. Doyle made two trips to Washington to champion the citizens' cause, spending eight months trying to settle the matter, but finally had to admit defeat as the bill never came up. The matter was taken through the courts and was finally ended and five citizens of the Mussel Slough district trouble were sentenced to spend eight months in jail, though there was nothing actually proven against them, the court being owned by the railroad company.

Mr. Doyle afterward became a staunch friend of Mr. Huntington, of the Southern Pacific Railway Company, who had been kept in ignorance of the actual facts in the difficulty just mentioned. The two men remained firm friends until the death of Mr. Huntington. Subsequently Mr. Doyle located near Grangeville, Kings county, and farmed there until 1885, when he removed to the mountains of Tulare county, taking up a timber claim of one hundred and sixty acres and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, which he still owns. In February, 1893, he removed to Portersville, Tulare county, while he gives his attention to his mountain ranch. This property is famous for the fine apple orchard which is widely known, and for the fruit upon which Mr. Doyle has won several medals at the Agricultural Fair.

In Kings county, Cal., Mr. Doyle was united in marriage with Lillie Alice Holser, a native of Prairie City, Cal., and they have three children, Chester H., Ruby S. and Floreda Alice. Until 1876 Mr. Doyle was a Democrat but after that became a member of the Workingmen's Party, in 1879 being a delegate to the state convention. There he had a strong altercation with Dennis Kearney, and on account of the demonstration he left the convention and since that time has not been an active participant in political affairs. During his residence in Kings county he served two terms as justice of the peace of the Lemoore district. Mr. Doyle is a man of ability and has proven himself a helpful and practical citizen wherever he has made his home.

ALBERT LINCOLN HOBBS. The extent to which the people are interested in the raising of fruit has made the packing business one of the principal industries of Fresno county, and among the men who have given their time and attention to the occupation mention belongs to the subject of this narrative, who is the president, manager and principal proprietor of the A. L. Hobbs Company, of Fresno. Under his close personal oversight a large business has been established. A packing house and seeding plant has been erected of suitable dimensions (225x100 feet) for the business conducted, and with adequate facilities for shipment via the Southern Pacific Railroad. A specialty is made of the packing of figs and the seeding and packing of raisins, of which latter the output is about fifty tons per day. In addition to this plant, Mr. Hobbs purchased and now conducts a packing house at Selma. From these two houses shipments are made to all points of the compass.

The Hobbs family is of New England extraction. Daniel Hobbs, a native of Massachusetts and a soldier in the Revolutionary war, became a pioneer of Maine, where his son, Josiah, was born and reared, and followed farm pursuits. Charles Cyprian Hobbs, a son of Josiah, and likewise a native of Maine, became a farmer and lumberman of that state, where he held many local offices and was a leader among the Jacksonian Democrats of his vicinity. In religion he was of the Universalist faith. At the time of his death, in 1888, he was eighty-four years of age. In early manhood he married Isabella Henderson, who was born in Nova Scotia, being a daughter of John Henderson, also a native of that peninsula, of Scotch descent, and by occupation a farmer. When she died in 1899 she had reached the seventy-fifth year of her age. Of her five children, four are living, Albert Lincoln being the second of these and the only one to settle on the Pacific coast. He was born at Norway, Oxford county, Me., October 26, 1861. As a boy he learned many lessons of patient toil when striving to cultivate the homestead, which was one of the most sterile and rocky farms in all of Maine. There Nature gave reluctant response to the labors of man.

After having completed his studies in the public schools and Norway Academy, A. L. Hobbs began to teach school at twenty years of age and for two years he followed that occupation. Meanwhile he had resolved to seek a home in a region where the struggle to gain a livelihood might not be waged under such dire stress of stern climate and sterile soil. Attracted to California by what he had heard concerning the state, in the spring of 1883 he crossed the continent to San Francisco, from there going to Stanislaus county. Work was difficult to secure. For three weeks he chopped wood in return for his board, after which he worked as a farm hand for two years. At the expiration of that time he returned to Maine, where he engaged in the meat and produce business and the packing of apples. During 1888 he again came to California, this time settling at Santa Cruz, where he engaged in the dairy business. Since 1890 he has been identified with the business interests of Fresno, beginning as a retail dealer in produce and fruit on Fresno street, but a year later moving to larger quarters on I street between Fresno and Mariposa. As a member of the firm of Hobbs & Parsons, in 1892 he embarked in the wholesale trade on Tulare street, where even more than the anticipated success rewarded his efforts. In 1897 the Hobbs-Parsons Company was incorporated with himself as president and manager, but three years later the business was divided, his partner retaining the wholesale department, while he took charge of the packing interests and established the company of which he is now the chief member.

While in Santa Cruz Mr. Hobbs married Alice Steinmetz, who was born in this state, her parents having been pioneers of 1849. Of this union there is a son, Charles Steinmetz. Mr. Hobbs is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Sequoia Club and contributes to the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is a member. From the time of casting his first ballot he has been stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party, and his services in its behalf have been recognized in his appointment as a delegate to conventions; as a member of the county central committee for eight years, and also of the executive committee of the same. At one time he was a director of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce and his interest in this important organization has been continuous. As a business man he has proved himself possessed of exceptional ability, while personally his qualities of mind and heart are such as to win the friendship and confidence of associates.

JAMES MITCHELL CLARK. During his comparatively brief life James Mitchell Clark succeeded in his chosen vocation, that of farming and stock-raising, and from comparative poverty raised himself upon a good name, an honorable character, and well directed industry. His death January 21, 1899, removed from the pioneer ranks of Kings county one who had developed its resources intelligently and well, and who left an unincumbered section of land, replete with modern improvements, to tell the story of his struggles, unflinching application and practical business ability.

Of the early life of Mr. Clark little is recalled, save that he was of humble parentage, and in his youth had comparatively few educational advantages. The farm in Maine, where he was born August 17, 1849, held out little inducements to an able-bodied and progressive young man, and in 1871 he came to California and found work by the month on a ranch in the vicinity of Merced. Later on he ran a threshing-machine in that neighborhood, and at the same time rented land and raised grain. In 1875 he removed to what is now Kings county, and with his brother, A. W. Clark, purchased the section of land now owned by his wife and children, eight and one-half miles northeast of Hanford. As yet no white man had turned up the sod to the sun, or set his mind to speculating as to its value as a productive agency. For the balance of his life his work went hand in hand with that of his brother, and they entered upon large stock-raising enterprises, and farmed extensively in grain. Time brought the need of additional land, and they purchased tracts in Tulare county, overseeing its disposition with a regard for its improvement. Mr. Clark was progressive and a man of great energy, and he took much pride in the comfortable things of life with which he was able to surround himself and family.

When starting out on his successful career Mr. Clark wisely concluded that a sympathetic and intelligent wife would materially advance his interests, and was united in marriage with Amanda Woodcock, a native of Arkansas, May 11, 1879, who arrived in what is now Kings county with her parents in 1875. Mrs. Clark has proved worthy of the name of pioneer, and has not only assisted her husband, within and outside of the house, but has reared a family of eight children, two others having died in infancy. With the exception of Arthur W., the oldest son, who is a farmer and fruit-raiser near Portersville, Tulare county, the children are all at home, and are active in their effort to improve the farm and add to the pleasure of those who gather around their fireside. The children are: Ida, Ada, Hannah, James, Augustus Rea, D. Mitchell and Rose. The older daughters are especially successful as managers of the property since the departure from home of the eldest son. Mr. Clark was never active in politics although he had well defined ideas of both parties, and experienced a change of heart from the Democratic to Republican party after the first administration of Grover Cleveland. He was a man whose word was as good as his bond, and who was conceded to be of a generous, kindly and home loving nature, and his death in the prime of usefulness in 1899, deprived his home of a good husband and father, and the community of a valued and respected citizen.

J. W. SCHMITZ. One of the foremost agriculturists of the San Joaquin valley, and a citizen of much prominence, J. W. Schmitz is worthy of more than passing mention in this volume. Associated with Miller & Lux, he is manager of the Poso district, which includes the Helen, Poso, Central, Temple and River Camp, Corn Camp and Colony ranches, and of the east side division, in which are New Ranch, and the New and Old Columbia ranches. He is also manager of large grain ranches in the Madera Berendo country. A man of unbending energy, great enterprise, and strong force of character, he has been influential in the development of the resources of this section of Fresno, Madera and Merced counties and the prime factor in making irrigation successful, having been the first to make and utilize permanent head gates. Possessing a thorough knowledge of the occupation to which he is giving his best efforts, and the sound judgment and wisdom that renders his decisions quick and accurate, he has attained a place of eminence among the keen, progressive and business-like farmers of the community in which he resides. A native of Germany, he was born April 14, 1846, a son of F. P. Schmitz.

A man of great mechanical ability and talent, F. P. Schmitz learned the trade of a gunsmith in Germany, and for a number of years was a commissioned officer in the German army, serving as gunsmith to Emperor Frederick William. Immigrating with his family to America in 1854, he resided in Detroit, Mich., until his death, which occurred in 1857. His wife, whose maiden name was Isabella Birk, was born in Germany, and died in Detroit, Mich. Of the seven children born of their union, J. W. is the only survivor.

Completing his early education in the city schools of Detroit, J. W. Schmitz left Michigan in 1862, his venturesome spirit deciding him to try the hazard of new fortunes. Going to Atchison, Kans., he joined a freighting outfit as train clerk, but later drove six yoke of oxen across the plains to Salt Lake City, being three months en route, and afterwards resuming his former position as train clerk. Desirous of extending his travels, he next became train clerk for Forbes Brothers, and with them went to the East Bannock mines, now Montana, driving an ox-team on the way, and arriving in the fall of 1862. Following close in the footsteps of the on-rushers, Mr. Schmitz continued his journey to Virginia City, Mont., where he was employed in mining for four years and ten months, prospecting and opening up different claims. Starting for California in 1867, he journeyed on horseback to Walla Walla, thence by steamer down the Columbia river to Portland, Ore., and from there to San Francisco by water. Going at once to Calaveras county, Mr. Schmitz was for ten months engaged in quartz mining near West Point. Not particularly successful, he proceeded to Santa Clara county, where he made an entire change of occupation, becoming bridge builder for the old San Francisco and San Jose Railroad Company, on the line now known as the Coast Line. When the road was completed as far as Gilroy, he continued with the same company as a carpenter in the bridge department, remaining thus employed until the old company sold out to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, when he settled as a carpenter in San Jose.

In April, 1871, Mr. Schmitz entered the employ of Miller & Lux, coming to the west side of the San Joaquin valley as fence builder on the Santa Rita ranch. Proving himself capable and faithful, he was given the entire charge of fence building on that ranch, and held the position from July, 1871, until the summer of 1873, when he was made superintendent of Santa Rita ranch. He at once began needed improvements on the place, and during that year the canal was built through that estate, and the S. J. & K. R. C. & I. Co.'s canal was begun. Giving up the management of the ranch in 1874, he worked as a fence maker for his former employers a few years, building fences on the east and west sides of the valley, and in Santa Clara and Monterey counties, and also superintended the building of the Chowchilla canal. In 1877 Mr. Schmitz built a head gate that proved successful, answering all requirements, and marking a revolution in farming. During the ensuing two years he was very active in developing irrigation on both sides of the valley, and at Los Banos began raising alfalfa as an experiment. From year to year he made improvements of a marked character, developing the country included between Los Banos and Firebaugh, in which previously there had been no water, by his efforts making it one of the most fertile productive regions of central California. He has had charge of the Chowchilla canal since its completion, and superintended also the improvement of the east side, and a part of Dos Palos ranch, of which he had charge in 1870. In 1884 Mr. Schmitz began working in a systematic and scientific manner at the Poso ranch, and as mentioned above is manager of the entire Poso district, and of the east side division. He raises large quantities of alfalfa on each of the ranches, and likewise breeds and raises stock of all kinds. He is also advisory manager of the Santa Rita ranch, and has the supervision of the grain farms in Madera county.

Mr. Schmitz is personally interested in farming and stock raising in Madera county, being owner of the old Chapman ranch, and of the Howard and Wilson ranches, the three farms containing five thousand acres of land. This vast estate he devotes to the raising of grain, alfalfa and fruit. He has there a fine orchard of thirty-five acres; a vineyard of twenty-five acres; four hundred acres of alfalfa; four and one-half sections of grain; and two sections of grass land. His property is finely improved, and yields bountiful harvests each year, bringing him in a princely income.

February 11, 1886, in Detroit, Mich., Mr. Schmitz married Mary Van Leyen, who was born in that city, a daughter of John Van Leyen, who was born in Dusseldorf, Germany, and now makes his home in Detroit. By his marriage with Hendrina Look there were five children born, of whom Mrs. Schmitz is the only one in California. The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Schmitz, John Look, served as a commissioned officer in Napoleon's army at Moscow. He subsequently came to America, locating at Detroit, Mich., where he engaged in farming, living there until his death, at the advanced age of ninety-three years. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Schmitz, J. Walter Schmitz, is attending Santa Clara College. Politically Mr. Schmitz is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Merced, and now belongs to Madera Lodge, F. & A. M., of which he is a charter member.

ANDREW MATTEI. From obscurity and comparative poverty on a small Swiss farm, to the ownership of one of the largest vineyards and wine manufactories in Fresno county, are the extremes which have met in the life of Andrew Mattei, than whom no more successful man is representing his picturesque country in this part of the state. Perseverance and good judgment are noticeable characteristics of Mr. Mattei, and are, mainly accountable for the fact that a man less than fifty years old governs so large a responsibility with apparent ease. His identification with the county began in 1887, when he purchased the William Wilkinson ranch of half a section, the same being part of his present home, and in 1890 he took possession of what was then a waving wheat field. He commenced setting out grape vines from the first, and soon after purchased an additional one hundred and ten acres, which also was placed under vines. In 1900 he bought another section of land, and at present his ranch, consisting of ten hundred and seventy acres, is all under vines. He grows about two thousand tons of grapes a year, although many of the vines are not yet bearing, and has his own winery and distillery, employing from thirty to sixty men, according to the season. He also purchases large quantities of grapes. In 1902 he manufactured three hundred thousand gallons of wine and one hundred thousand gallons of proof brandy, all of which is sold in carload lots. One section of his immense vineyard is watered by a thirty-two horse-power gasoline engine, which pumps water twenty feet, and the rest is irrigated by the Fresno Canal Company. This is one of the finest and largest vineyards in this splendidly productive section, and Mr. Mattei has the satisfaction of knowing that every vine, every building, fence, and appliance, is the result of his ability to direct his energy into channels for which he is eminently fitted, and toward which he has had the courage to labor unceasingly and wisely. His home of two stories is located on slightly elevated ground, is well furnished, and noted for its genuine hospitality and good cheer. His family consists of his wife, whom he married in Los Angeles in 1886, and who was formerly Eleanor J. Joughin, a native of Rockford, Ill., but who came to California with her parents in 1860, locating in Los Angeles in 1866; and three children, Andrew, Jr., Anne Joughin, and Eleanor Theadolinda.

Mr. Mattei's early life was spent on a farm in Switzerland, where he was born August 9, 1855, and from where he came to the United States in 1874. He was a strong and rugged youth, used to hard work and simple living, and his work in the timberlands of Nevada proved less arduous than it would to many. After two years in Nevada he went to San Francisco, and thence to Modesto, where he worked in a dairy for about six months. For the following year and a half he was employed in a dairy in San Jose, after which he returned to San Francisco for eight months. Returning to San Jose he engaged in dairying for three years, and January 1, 1882, removed to Los Angeles and manufactured cream of tartar for six months. Dairying occupied his attention for the next two years on a rented farm in Los Angeles county, at the end of which time he purchased the farm outright and continued its management until 1890, when he came to his present home. Mr. Mattei's success and character have made an impression on his fellow residents of the Malaga district, and he is honored for his enterprise, thoroughness, and substantiality, no less than for his development of a California resource destined to assume enormous proportions, and gain world-wide fame.

JOHN H. OGLE. To John H. Ogle belongs the distinction of having bought the second lot sold in the town of Le Grand, Merced county, Cal., and he has been successfully engaged in business here ever since the town was started. A good mechanic and an expert blacksmith and wagon-maker, he has had broad experience in this line of work and is now the owner and proprietor of a fully equipped blacksmith and wagon-shop where he does general repair work of all kinds. He was born in Cumberland county, Pa., July 26, 1862, a son of J. H. and Minnie (Buckingham) Ogle, the former a brick mason by occupation. Soon after the birth of John H., the father enlisted in the Union army and served three years and six months as a private in the Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. In 1863 his wife died when John H. was but six months old.

Some time after the close of the war, the Ogle family moved to Missouri. John H., of this review, left home in 1880, at which time he traveled over various parts of Mexico, Colorado, Arizona and Texas, and on May 21, 1881, he touched California soil. Spending six weeks in Los Angeles, he went from place to place, and the following year found him in Merced county, engaged as a journeyman blacksmith at Plainsberg. He was subsequently located in Selma for one year, and at one time owned a blacksmith shop in Raymond, Madera county, where he carried on a good business for four years, prior to locating at Le Grand in business for himself. He married Mrs. Lou A. (Kelley) Footman, and they have two children, J. Kirk and Lillie A. Politically Mr. Ogle is a staunch Republican, and fraternally is allied with the Woodmen of the World and Modern Woodmen of America. As a business man he is methodical, thorough, successful, and as a citizen he is a highly esteemed factor in the history of Le Grand.

PETER JORGENSEN. The Oakdale soda works is an enterprise which commends itself to the purchasing public by the excellence of its products and the high character of the man controlling and directing its operations. As a feature of the business activity which is contributing to the prestige of the town it is without a rival, in equipment, if not in size, equalling any concern of the kind in Stanislaus county. All kinds of carbonated beverages are manufactured in their greatest purity, such as lemon soda, sarsaparilla, ginger ale, champagne and orange cider, cream soda, birch beer, etc., and find a ready market not only throughout this, but the surrounding counties. Mr. Jorgensen has given his business a great deal of study, and, added to several years of practical experience in catering to the exclusive demands of his customers, has perfected himself as nearly as possible in his line of business, which is assuming larger and more important proportions each year.

Mr. Jorgensen owed early allegiance to Prussian rule, for though born on the island of Alsen, off the coast of Schleswig-Holstein, his ancestors were Danes, who had fought and lost to Germany their independence shortly before his birth, October 24, 1868. His parents, Jacob P. and Anna D. (Schmidt) Jorgensen, were born while the Danish kings still ruled what is now Schleswig-Holstein, and owned a farm of some size on Alsen, an island of great fertility, about twenty miles long and about eight miles wide. He was reared on this farm until coming to the United States in 1885, at the time being a strong, ambitious boy of sixteen, looking hopefully out upon life and its manifold responsibilities. His inclination naturally turned to the occupation of his forefathers, and in time he was employed on the farm of Eben Wood in the San Joaquin valley, on which farm he worked for eight years. This experience not only introduced him to western farming methods, but enabled him to exchange his Danish for the American language, an accomplishment which he acquired with comparative ease. True to the national characteristic, he was both thrifty and saving, and in 1893 bought a half interest in the Modesto soda works, operating the same under the firm name of Jacobsen & Jorgensen. In the fall of 1896 he came to Oakdale and established a branch of the Modesto manufactory, operated the same until 1901, and then started in business for himself by purchasing his partner's interest. He is agent also for Shasta and Cooks mineral waters.

On the corner of Second avenue and I streets Mr. Jorgensen has erected a fine residence, furnished it throughout in modern style, and supplied for his family the comforts and luxuries of life to the best of his ability. He was married April 14, 1903, to Miss Emifa C. Vaccaro, born at Snelling, Merced county, Cal., and a representative of an early pioneer family of this state. Mr. Jorgensen is independent in politics, and is fraternally connected with the Artisans and the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor. He is also a member of the Dania Society of Modesto. He is honored for his unswerving integrity, his progressiveness and adaptability to western conditions, and for his generosity in contributing to worthy community causes.

ROBERT BOOT. Few if any organizations have proved more beneficial to fruit specialists of California than the Raisin Growers Association, which since its inception afforded valuable assistance in the development of one of the most important industries in the state, and has also been the means of bringing into fraternal relations the men and women who are devoting themselves to this occupation. On the occasion of the first meeting of this body Mr. Boot, who had been an enthusiastic promoter of the movement, was chosen a director and was re-elected to the office each succeeding year. During the first three years of the association's history he filled the office of secretary, after which he served as general inspector for a year and then, in the spring of 1902, was elected its president, which responsible position he filled till 1904.

By birth and ancestry Mr. Boot is an Englishman. His parents, Isaac and Rebecca (Sutton) Boot, spent their entire lives in Nottinghamshire, where the former engaged in the manufacture and sale of merchandise, his specialty being laces. In their family were two daughters and a son, the latter, the subject of this narrative, having been the second in order of birth. He was born in Nottingham January 10, 1839, and received his education principally in the Ackworth high school. After leaving school he entered a counting-house in his native city, where he was employed for two years. During the ensuing four years he served an apprenticeship to the dry-goods business in Hempstead. During 1859 he came to America for the first time and for a year acted as manager of the Manchester department of a wholesale dry-goods house in Toronto. Coming from Canada to the United States, he engaged in farming in Baltimore county, Md. In 1863 he returned to England and sailed from London on the Tibernia, which rounded the Cape of Good Hope and after a voyage of ninety-four days anchored at Auckland, New Zealand. Settling in that growing city, he turned his attention to the manufacture and export of Kauri pine lumber and spar timber.

Coming from New Zealand to California in 1880, Mr. Boot settled in Fresno county, where he has since made his home. He was among the first to purchase property in the Oleander district, where he bought a tract of new land, leveled and prepared it for irrigation, then set it to a vineyard and orchard. The original tract he still owns, but has also purchased other land, having acquired eighty acres altogether, of which he improved forty acres himself. While giving close attention to his fruit interests, at the same time he did much to promote and secure the organization of the Oleander Packing Company, of which he acted as secretary and manager until he resigned to associate himself with the organization of which he is now the chief executive. In 1899 he came to Fresno, where he now has his residence. He is a member of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce, the Congregational Church of this city, and the California State Horticultural Society. Since becoming a citizen of the United States he has affiliated with the Republican party. His marriage was solemnized while he was in New Zealand and united him with Gertrude Hurndall, a native of Somerset, England. By this union he has nine children, all of whom are residents of Fresno county. Personally Mr. Boot is a man of many admirable qualities. His travels in many lands have made him a cosmopolitan in his views and given him an education not possible to be acquired in any other way. Though he has seen many lands and become familiar with many climates, he believes California to be the peer of all in offering to settlers those attractions which enhance the joys of existence.

TULLIUS MARCUS MALESANI has acquired for himself a prominent position in the business interests of Madera county, Cal., and since 1900 has been closely identified with the commercial life of the city and its vicinity, as the superintendent of the Madera Winery, which, it is claimed, has one of the largest fermenting plants in the world and whose products are well known. The plant is owned by the Italian-Swiss colony, and comprises five thousand acres. The railroad spur was built one year before Mr. Malesani's management began. The plant itself is of mammoth size, its various buildings covering twenty acres. Here is to be found the best and most improved machinery for crushing grapes, and the various branches of wines and brandies put upon the market by this company are among the finest-flavored in the world. A number of port, sherry and other sweet wines are also manufactured. The total cooerage of this winery is three million gallons and five hundred tons of grapes are handled in one day, almost twenty thousand in one season.

The water system is perfect, the tower holding fifteen thousand gallons, and the machinery is operated by powerful engines, which aggregate three hundred and fifty horse power, and all the repair work is done in the blacksmith shops, wagon shops, etc., in proximity to the plant and the property of the company. The season commences early and twenty-six plows are usually running by March 15, and from one hundred to two hundred men are employed constantly. Each department is under competent foremen, who in turn report regularly to the superintendent. The two distilleries have a capacity of forty thousand gallons a day, and the plant is in the 1st district of California, No. 183. For storage purposes, the plant has fifty twenty-five thousand gallon tanks for one kind, ten twenty-five thousand gallon tanks for another kind, twelve forty thousand gallon tanks for another, and in addition they have eight sherry tanks of fifteen thousand gallons each, and twelve other tanks with a capacity of five hundred thousand gallons for still another quality. The magnitude of this industry can hardly be over-estimated, and the same may be said of its importance in the community.

Mr. Malesani descended from a prominent family and is himself a native of Verona, Italy, October 1, 1873, marking the date of his birth. His common-school education was supplemented by a university course in his native land, and as a result he possesses superior intellectual attainments. In 1896 he came to the United States and for the two years following he was identified with the Sunnyside Company, at Sunnyside, Ark. He subsequently returned for a time to Italy in the interest of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad company, and in 1900 came to California and assumed the duties of his present position, succeeding at that time A. C. Palladini as superintendent of the Madera Winery.

Mr. Malesani was united in marriage with Miss Mary Lunghi, who was born in St. Louis, Mo., and they have two children, Yolanda and Santina. The father of Mr. Malesani, G. B. Malesani, is still living in Italy, being now more than seventy years old. Although for a number of years past he has been living retired, he was for many years a prominent member of his community, a civil engineer by profession and a writer of some note. For years he served as school inspector and he is highly esteemed in his community. He is also decorated with the title of Chevalier of the Italian Royal Crown, as a reward for his great interest and ability in popularizing the scientific progress of modern agriculture.

CLARENCE A. DUNN. The Madera County Hospital, located one and one-half miles from the city of Madera, is most ably and carefully managed by Clarence A. Dunn, who has served as superintendent of this institution for the past four years. A man of fine physical and mental development, energetic and public-spirited, ever mindful of the public weal, he is performing the arduous duties connected with his position with commendable zeal and fidelity, and is well worthy of the confidence and trust reposed in him by his fellow-men. A son of Samuel Dunn, he was born August 10, 1858, in Atchison county, Kans.

The lineal descendant of an old and prominent Virginian family, Samuel Dunn was born in Virginia, but was brought up and educated in Ohio. He there learned the trade of carpenter, and also became familiar with the various branches of agriculture. From Ohio he moved with his family to Iowa, living there for four years, from 1851 until 1855. Removing then to Kansas, he carried on general farming and carpentering until his death. In Washington county, Ohio, he married Lucy Ellis, who was born in Ohio, and died on the home farm, in Kansas, in 1876.

At the age of twenty-one years, in 1879, Clarence A. Dunn left his native state, going first to Iowa, and then to Omaha, Neb., where he remained two years. Returning to Kansas, he continued work in that state for about ten years. Wishing, however, to improve his financial prospects, and to enjoy the beautiful climate of California, he came to this state in 1891, locating in Madera, where he secured a position in a sash and door factory, and also worked at the carpenter's trade. In 1900 he was made superintendent of the Madera County Hospital, and has since served in this capacity in a manner worthy of notice. The main building of the Hospital, erected in 1895, is a two-story frame building, fitted out with five wards, in which there are accommodations for fifty or more patients.

Connected with this institution is a small farm, which is likewise under the management of Mr. Dunn, who raises all the poultry, eggs and vegetables needed for use on the place. This is a great help to the county, as on January 1, 1904, there were forty-nine men and one woman being cared for on the farm.

While living in Iowa Mr. Dunn married Carrie Lloyd. Politically Mr. Dunn is an ardent supporter of the principles promulgated by the Republican party, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and to the Woodmen of the World.

J. N. ABBAY. The Southern Pacific Railway Company has always been especially fortunate in the selection of its employes, upon each of whom great responsibility is placed, be he section hand, roadmaster, fireman, engineer or general superintendent of the road. Prominent among the oldest in point of service, and the most trustworthy of these employes, is J. N. Abbay, of Merced, well known to the patrons of the Oakdale branch of the road as engineer of a passenger train running between Merced and Stockton, the round trip covering a distance of one hundred and forty-four miles. An experienced railroad man, with a thorough knowledge of the mechanical construction and management of a locomotive, he is especially fitted for his position, and well deserving of the high estimation and regard in which he is held by his employers, and by the traveling public. A son of the late William Abbay, he was born December 13, 1847, in Maquoketa, Jackson county, Iowa.

A native of Missouri, William Abbay learned the trade of blacksmith when young, and subsequently settled in Maquoketa, Iowa, where he built up a good business. Crossing the plains to California in 1852, he was first employed in agricultural pursuits in Bodega, Sonoma county. Subsequently buying land near Geyserville, he improved a ranch, and there spent his remaining days. He was interested to some extent in fraternal societies, and belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In Anamosa, Iowa, he married Martha Lamson, who was born in New York state, and is now a resident of Fresno. Of their six children, one daughter has passed to the life beyond, and one daughter and four sons are living, namely: J. N., the subject of this sketch; Mary, residing in Idaho; George, an engineer on the Southern Pacific Railway, residing in Nevada; John, a merchant in Missouri; and William, of Oakland, this state.

Living in Iowa until about nine years old, J. N. Abbay came with friends to California in 1856, coming via the Isthmus of Panama. Joining his father in Sonoma county, he attended the short sessions of the district school for a few years, in the meantime working for his father, or for neighboring ranchmen. Beginning life for himself when a boy of fifteen years, he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad company, working in the Sacramento shops before the road had been completed to the Summit. In 1866 he was made fireman, a position in which he continued two years. In 1868 he was promoted to the position of engineer, as such running an engine in Nevada before the driving of the golden spike. Continuing in Nevada for fourteen years, he ran from different cities, including Carlin, Winnemucca and Wadsworth. Returning to California in 1882, Mr. Abbay was first located in Oakland, becoming an engineer on the western division of the above railroad, with which he has been actively identified as an engineer for the past twenty-two years, having charge of a passenger engine for seventeen years, but for the past five years holding his present position of responsibility. During this time, Mr. Abbay has had one serious accident. In June, 1891, near Port Costa, in a head-end collision, his train was telescoped, and he was badly burned and scalded, his escape from death being almost miraculous, and his complete recovery from his injuries a surprise.

In Truckee, this state, Mr. Abbay married Mary Henry, who was born in Tuolumne county, where her father, John Henry, was an early pioneer. Mr. and Mrs. Abbay have one child, William H., who was graduated from the San Francisco Dental College with the degree of D. D. S., and is a successful dentist in Oakland. Mr. Abbay is identified with the Republican party in politics, and belongs to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Oakland.

JAMES T. EASTIN. One of the most prosperous and respected members of the farming population of Madera county is James T. Eastin, whose well-kept homestead lies about six and one-half miles south of the city of Madera. For many years he has been actively identified with the agricultural interests of this section of the state as a grain raiser and stock grower, and in the pursuit of his chosen vocation still finds his greatest pleasure. Coming from substantial Kentucky stock, he was born in 1830, in Kentucky, which was likewise the birthplace of his parents, James and Docie (South) Eastin, who moved to Pike county, Mo., in 1834, purchasing a farm, on which they spent their remaining days.

But four years old when he went with his parents to Missouri, James T. Eastin was reared on the home farm, and educated in the pioneer district school. In 1850, following in the footsteps of his brother, the late Brutus Eastin, who had come to California with the gold-seekers of 1849, he crossed the plains to the Pacific coast with an ox-team train. Proceeding directly to Weaver Creek, Mr. Eastin was there engaged in mining for ten years. He met with excellent success, accumulating considerable money, which, like many other miners, he lost by investing in mines. Locating in Tuolumne county in 1860, he embarked in grain raising in the San Joaquin valley, where he lived ten years. Moving thence to Fresno county, he was there engaged in the stock business for several years, making a specialty of raising sheep. Disposing of that property, he went east, married, and soon after returned to California, where he resumed his agricultural labors. About 1894 Mr. Eastin bought his present ranch, which contained eleven hundred acres, and by dint of persevering industry and superior management has improved a valuable farm, which in its appointments and equipments compares favorably with any in the county. He carries on general farming with marked success, raising large quantities of grain and stock.

Mr. Eastin married, in 1872, Susan L. Fortune, who was born in Missouri and died October 30, 1904. They had one child, Pulaski C. This son married Katie C. Skaggs, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Mary and Arthusa. Politically Mr. Eastin is an earnest supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, which he thinks is sure to advance the best interests of the country, if given the controlling power. He is a man of deep religious convictions, and is a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES T. McCANN. As a vinyardist and fruit grower of Fresno county, James T. McCann is securing the best results from the cultivation of forty acres of land in the Malaga district, eighteen acres being devoted to grapes, ten to orchard and the remainder to alfalfa. Born in Marion county, Mo., July 26, 1853, he is the son of Thomas J. McCann, whose birth occurred in Hardin county, Ky., in 1818. He was a farmer all his life and after his marriage with Sarah Jane Haycraft, born in Bourbon county, Ky., in 1819, he removed to the state of Illinois, and afterward to Missouri, where his death occurred in 1884.

Reared to manhood in Lewis county, Mo., James T. McCann there engaged in farming for himself on attaining years of maturity. In 1882 he married Margaret Haycraft, a daughter of S. M. Haycraft, after which he removed to Kansas and remained until his father's death.

He then returned to Missouri and assumed charge of the home farm until 1888, when he came to California and located in Madera county, where with his brother Robert he engaged in farming on a ranch of one hundred and twenty acres. After a residence of ten years in that location he removed to Fresno county, following farming in the vicinity of Selma for three years. In 1902 he purchased forty acres of land in the Malaga district and here he has since made his home.

To Mr. and Mrs. McCann have been born two daughters, Bernice, deceased, and Marjorie. In his religious convictions Mr. McCann subscribes to the doctrines of the Baptist Church. Politically he casts his ballot with the Democratic party, and through the influence of those of like convictions he has been chosen to act as school trustee in the Malaga district. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World.

GEORGE W. YOAKUM. Living retired in Merced, Cal., George W. Yoakum is enjoying a well-earned rest from an active business career of forty years. He was born in Ray county, Mo., May 17, 1842. In 1852 the family came to California, where the father sought to better his condition. For one year he conducted a hotel in Gold Hill, Placer county. In 1853 the family moved to Alameda county and there George W. grew to manhood on his father's ranch. In 1862 he left home and went to Contra Costa county, where he attended school for a time, and then returned home and assisted his father for one year. Returning to Contra Costa county in 1863 he was married, October 26, to Rebecca A. Johnston. Immediately after his marriage he returned to his father's ranch in Alameda county and worked it on shares for a year, and for the same length of time farmed in Pacheco valley, Contra Costa county. From there he went to Green valley, Solano county, and carried on farm pursuits for one year. Returning once more to Contra Costa county he made his first purchase of land and remained there two years, after which he moved to East Oakland, purchasing a home there, and for four years carried on a butcher business. In 1871 he removed to his ranch and conducted a butcher business in Walnut Creek. In the fall of 1883 he removed his family to Mariposa county, where he had been interested in the stock business since 1880. While still continuing his business in the latter county, he had, in 1884, started a meat market in Merced, to which city his family came in 1885, he himself coming in 1887. The year following he sold his market. Having been elected to the office of city marshal, he served in this capacity for two years and as constable for four years, but since retiring from office has lived practically retired.

Mrs. Yoakum was born in Green county, Mo., February 6, 1845, a daughter of Thomas M. Johnston, who was a native of Kentucky and an early settler of Missouri. Mr. Johnston brought his family to California in 1850, living first in Sonoma, and later in Contra Costa county, in time settling in Stockton, but a few months later he moved to Napa, where his death occurred July 22, 1877. His wife, Eleanor (Steele) Johnston, was born in Tennessee and died in Napa. To Mr. and Mrs. Yoakum six children have been born, of whom Emma E. is the wife of E. C. Cribb, of Los Angeles; Ann Jeanette is the wife of Thomas Mack, of Merced; Mary C. is the wife of Charles M. French; and the others are: George Franklin; Alvis Thomas; and Nellie C., the wife of F. V. Rountt, of San Jose. Fraternally Mr. Yoakum is a Mason, and in politics is a Democrat.

CORNELIUS CURTIN. At the time he came to Madera in 1880 Mr. Curtin found a small hamlet, with meager business facilities and little promise for the future. However, with keen discernment he detected favorable indications and resolved to identify himself with the town, a decision which he has had no occasion to regret. On the other hand, the competency which he now enjoys has been accumulated entirely since he came to his present location and represents the results of his investments and business enterprises here. While his interests have been varied, his name is especially associated with the livery business which he conducts and with the raising of stock on his stock farm.

Of eastern birth and Irish parentage, Cornelius Curtin was born in Franklin county, N. Y., December 22, 1860, and was third among seven children, all but one of whom are still living. Two of his brothers, Matthew and Daniel, own and operate farms in Tulare county, the former, who was an early settler of California, having been for some time a resident of Yolo county. The father, John Curtin, came to the United States from Ireland and settled upon a farm in New York, where he remained until his death. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Spillings, was born in Ireland and died in February, 1904, on the home farm in New York at eighty-four years of age. The boyhood years of Cornelius Curtin were uneventfully passed in assisting on the home farm and attending the public schools of the district. He was sixteen when he started out to earn his own way in the world. Ambitious to settle in the west, he came to California. Almost all of his money had been spent in railroad fare and he had but $5 left when he reached Sacramento. Starting out to seek work, he was met by the tax collector, who made him pay a poll tax of $2. This beginning did not seem auspicious, but to a young man of energy and good health the lack of money is not a discouraging fact.

On his second day in California Mr. Curtin secured work on a hay press and continued at the same place for two months. He then went to Merced county, where he worked as a farm hand by the month for two and one-half years. Next he secured employment on a farm in Tulare county and from there in the spring of 1880 came to Madera. For two years he drove a stage from Madera to Yosemite. In 1882 he started a livery business on the block where he still remains, buying the corner where he has since conducted business. His first building, a frame stable, was destroyed by fire in 1886, but he rebuilt the same year and now has a two-story stable, 100x150 feet in dimensions, and with sheds besides, the total capacity being over two hundred head of horses. The livery is the largest in the county. A full assortment of vehicles is kept, suitable for any purpose desired. In addition to the barn Mr. Curtin owns three hundred acres of irrigable land adjoining the city on the south and under cultivation to alfalfa and grain, besides which he owns a stock ranch in the foothills.

The family residence, erected by Mr. Curtin, stands on Yosemite street. After coming to Madera he married Etta Martin, who was born in Kansas and died in this city, leaving a son, William, a graduate in the June class of 1904, Santa Clara College. In religion Mr. Curtin is a Roman Catholic and a contributor to the various charities of his church. He co-operates in all movements for the benefit of Madera, including the Board of Trade, which has been a helpful agent in the growth of the town. His political allegiance is given to the Democratic party, in which he has been a prominent local worker, having been for some time a member of the county central committee and its chairman for one term.

ROBERT D. HAYCROFT. More than the allotted number of years have passed over the head of Robert D. Haycroft, and yet he is interested in the busy activities which have marked his entire life. He is located upon his ranch of twelve acres in the vicinity of Malaga, Fresno county, and is devoting his time to the culture of vines and fruit. In addition to this property he also owns twenty acres between Malaga and Fowler, and thirty acres in Madera county. Born in Morgan county, Ill., February 11, 1831, he is the descendant of an English family, the first American emigrant being his great-grandfather, a sailor lad who escaped from his ship and settled in the Old Dominion. Later he removed to Maryland, and in that state Samuel Haycroft was born. In manhood he served in the Revolutionary war. His home eventually was located in Hardin county, Ky., where Presley N. Haycroft was born. He became a Baptist minister and married Elizabeth Kennedy, a native of Virginia, whose father, Samuel Kennedy, was also a native of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Haycroft removed from their home in Kentucky to Illinois and later to Lewis county, Mo., where his last days were spent as a preacher and farmer, his death occurring at the age of ninety-two years.

Reared to manhood in the state of Missouri, Robert D. Haycroft was trained in the practical duties of farm life. At the age of twenty-two years he engaged in the cattle business in company with a brother, carrying on the work in the states of Missouri, Texas and Arkansas, for twenty years. He decided then to try life among the pleasant scenes of California, and accordingly came west in 1885, purchasing in the fall of the following year his present place of twelve acres, upon which he has since made his home. In Malaga he built a grain warehouse which he operated for several years, but the building has since been converted into a packing house. In Kentucky he married Elizabeth Miller, now deceased, and by whom he had one child, Lee Wallace. He afterward married Hattie Prentiss. In his political convictions, although a staunch Democrat, he cast his first vote for Zachary Taylor, the hero of the Mexican war. Mr. Haycroft is widely known and respected for the many admirable qualities which distinguish his character.

WALTER H. BRISCOE. A prominent and successful vineyardist of Fresno county, Walter H. Briscoe is located upon his ranch of forty acres in the neighborhood of Malaga, and seven miles from the city of Fresno. His land is devoted to the cultivation of various fruits and alfalfa, twenty-six acres given over to the raisin grape, five acres to general orchard, and a part of the remainder to alfalfa. A native of Lewis county, Mo., Mr. Briscoe was born in 1837, a son of Walter Briscoe, of Kentucky, and the grandson of a Virginian whose ancestors came from Germany to the United States in an early day. Walter Briscoe was married in Kentucky to Eliza Wagner, and soon afterward removed to Missouri and located in Lewis county, where he farmed until his death at the age of fifty-two years, while his wife passed away at the age of sixty.

Reared on his father's farm, Mr. Briscoe was early trained in the practical duties which insure the success of an agriculturist. In manhood he purchased a farm for himself in Missouri, but in 1888 decided to change his location, coming to California, where he located in Fresno county and purchased the forty acres which has since remained his home, and where he is now devoting his energies toward the upbuilding of the agricultural interests of the community. In Missouri, in 1861, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Wallace, a native of Kentucky, born in 1841, and they are the parents of four children, namely: James, who is engaged in the oil business at Bakersfield, Kern county; Robert A., who is a vineyardist of Fresno county; Eliza; and Gertrude. Though not at present a Mason Mr. Briscoe was connected with this order for forty years, and politically he is a Democrat. He is a member of the Malaga Baptist Church, in which he officiates as deacon.

HUBERT U. CARVER. A very successful ranchman and much-esteemed and respected citizen, Hubert U. Carver is numbered among the prominent vineyardists of the Malaga district, Fresno county, where he has made his home since 1885. A native of Canada, he was born in Ontario May 9, 1854, a son of Samuel J. Carver, whose birthplace was England, being reared and educated in London, where he studied law. In 1828, when twenty-six years old he came to America and located in Ontario, there marrying Jane Montgomery, a native of Ireland. Besides engaging as a farmer throughout the greater part of his life in Canada Mr. Carver acted as postmaster at Petersborough where his death occurred at the advanced age of ninety years.

Reared upon the paternal farm Hubert U. Carver remained at home until 1881, when he went to Winnipeg, Manitoba, and following his early training engaged in farming for four years. He then came to California and located in Fresno county, purchasing the farm of forty acres upon which he has since made his home. Later he also bought forty acres in the Lone Star district, devoting the entire number of acres there to the cultivation of peaches, while thirty acres of his home ranch are given over to the raisin grape. He has met with every success in his work and has acquired a competence in his western home. Fraternally Mr. Carver is a member of Fowler Lodge No. 71, K. P.

FRANK HENRY BRITTAN. A citizen of much worth and character, Mr. Brittan is widely esteemed by all who know him. Although comparatively a recent acquisition to the business and social life of Visalia he has yet made his influence felt in the upbuilding of the best interests of the place and the progress and development of resources, and has already won a position of prominence among the representative citizens of the community. Born in New York City February 11, 1834, he is the son of Francis Brittan, a native of London, England, who came to the United States in 1828 and located in New York City as a merchant. In 1844 he removed to Lafayette, Ind., and followed the same business for five years; then located near Mineral Point, Wis., there engaging as a farmer. After nine years he returned to his former employment, locating in Burlington, Kans., removing thence to Missouri in 1860, where, in Liberty, he followed a mercantile pursuit. For a time he was located in Monmouth, Ill., later in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and finally in Adams county, Iowa, where he was accidentally drowned at the age of eighty-five years. His wife, formerly Louisa Gates, was a native of Bath, England, and she died in Riverton, Iowa, at the age of sixty-five years. She left a family of thirteen children, nine sons and four daughters, of whom Frank Henry Brittan was the second in order of birth.

Frank Henry Brittan obtained his education in the common schools of Wisconsin and Indiana and also attended a seminary in Platteville. He engaged in surveying and civil engineering in Wisconsin and Kansas for some years, and in 1858 went to Pike's Peak, being among the first to arrive on the scene of excitement. He followed the precarious fortunes of a miner for a time, when he went to New Mexico, shortly afterward returning to Pike's Peak, where he did some prospecting. Returning to the middle west he located in Kansas City and worked at the carpenter's trade until failing health impelled him to locate in Mineral Point, Wis., where he again followed surveying and civil engineering. After following the carpenter's trade in Burlington, Iowa, for a time he went to Perry, Kans., following wagonmaking and surveying until 1872, when he removed to a farm in Adams county, Iowa, making his home there for seven years. Removing then to Denver, Colo., he engaged in contracting and building until 1887, when he came to California and located in Visalia, which city has since remained his home. He has here followed contracting and building and has built a large number of fine residences here. In 1899 he bought a ranch of seventeen acres located two miles southwest of Visalia and in 1904 located upon it, having erected a modern and comfortable cottage. He is now practically retired from active duties and is enjoying the competence which his years of industry have brought him.

The marriage of Mr. Brittan, solemnized in Monmouth, Ill., on February 6, 1863, united him with Margaret Jennie McBride, who was born in Monmouth, Ill., in 1842. She is the daughter of Stephen Thomas McBride, a native of Ohio, who came to Illinois in 1832 and located in Monmouth, where he engaged as a contractor and builder. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company H, Eighty-third Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and died of pneumonia in 1863, at Fort Donelson. His wife, formerly Minerva Tracy, was born in New York. She married a second time, her husband being Rev. Josiah Terrell, who was a minister in the United Brethren Church. He located in Kansas about 1854 and took an active part in the border warfare as an anti-slavery man. He became a prominent man in Kansas and was active in the establishment of Lane University at LeCompton, Kans. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Terrell made their home in Perry, Kans., where he engaged in the drug business and where his death occurred. Mrs. Terrell died in California in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Brittan. To Mr. and Mrs. Brittan were born five children, namely: Arthur J., of Fresno; Guy Clifford, deceased; Sadie Grace, at home; Ralph W., at home; and Francis, of Stockton, Cal. Fraternally Mr. Brittan is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in his religious convictions is an active member of the Christian Church. Politically he is a Democrat.

JOHN LEMASTERS. The postmaster of Kern, Kern county, Cal., was born in Shelby county, Ind., February 14, 1846, and lived in the Hoosier state until coming to California in 1890. His father, Henry Lemasters, was born in Ohio, and during his busy career illustrated the typical ambitious and successful middle west farmer. Left an orphan at an early age, he was taken to Indiana when six years old, and there was reared on a farm and educated in the early subscription schools. Embarking on an independent career, he gained in lands and influence, finally owning five hundred and forty acres of land, valued at $200 an acre. He lived to be seventy-two years old.

The breaking out of the Civil war found John Lemasters busily engaged on his father's farm, but he did not enlist until 1864, when he became a soldier in Company E, One Hundred and Thirty-second Indiana Infantry. He saw little of actual warfare, however, for he was mustered out at the end of four months, and returned to the occupation for which he had a natural liking. At the age of twenty-one, in 1867, he married Belle Endecott, who was born in Kentucky and removed to Indiana with her parents when five years old. Settling on a farm of his own in Shelby county, he continued to farm and raise stock successfully, and upon arriving in California in the fall of 1890, purchased two acres of land in Rosedale, Kern county, and soon afterward became identified with the Kern County Land Company as a fence-building contractor. After four years with the company he moved to Bakersfield and lived there for two years, coming then to Kern, where he speculated in mines until his appointment to the postmastership in March, 1898. Since then he has conscientiously and satisfactorily discharged the affairs of the office at this point, and has taken his place as a progressive and liberal-minded citizen. He has voted the Republican ticket since attaining his majority, and is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Lemaster's son, Roy, is a clerk in the postoffice, and his daughter, Mary, is the wife of John F. Parish, of Ogden, Utah. Mr. Lemasters is popular and genial, a well-informed and generous man.

WILLIAM H. HOLLIWAY. To recuperate from a discouraging business reverse in his native state of Missouri, William H. Holliday came to Oakdale in 1886, and has since been an integral and increasingly useful adjunct to the trade life of the city. Possessing marked mechanical ingenuity, and a complete mastery of the blacksmith and machinist trades, he has not only conducted a shop here for fifteen years, but has brought honor upon the community by inventing, and patenting in this country and Canada, the Holliday adjusting axle nut, already of proved practicability, and now being extensively placed on the market. Furthermore, he is known as the owner and manager of a large livery enterprise, connected with a feed and sales stable, and which has for years netted him a substantial income. Mr. Holliday bought his blacksmith shop soon after arriving here, but later rented it and put up the shop which he conducted until 1901, and then rented that to the man to whom he sold his business.

To the hundreds who have profited by his skill in Oakdale Mr. Holliday is recognized as a remarkably painstaking and competent business man. He laid the foundation for his industry in Osage county, Mo., where he was born May 28, 1845, and where he acquired muscle and sane views of life on the farm of his parents, William Harrison and Elizabeth (Goodman) Holliday, natives of Tennessee and Virginia respectively, and the latter of whom was a daughter of Robert Goodman, son of a veteran of the Revolutionary war, and an early settler in Osage county, Mo. William Harrison Holliday, Sr., removed to Osage county as a young man with few prospects and little money, purchasing a farm on time, and gradually working his way to prominence in the agricultural community. Twelve children were born into his family, eight of whom attained maturity, and only one of whom came to California. William Harrison

Holliday, Jr., was not particularly impressed with farm work as a youth, and, the property yielding slight chances for so many children, he took his departure at the age of sixteen and carried mail on horseback from Linn to Vienna, Mo., until the close of the war. His experiences during that troublesome time were numerous and sometimes thrilling, but in spite of the slight regard for human life, and the tendency to rob and molest, he pursued his mail carrying with singular freedom, abandoning it at the age of nineteen but little the worse for his adventures. Long before this, he had evidenced mechanical tendencies, and he applied himself to learning the blacksmith trade in Osage county, thereafter running a small shop in Linn, the same county, later still removing to Vichy, Maries county, Mo., where he built a shop and operated it for six years. He was firmly established and confident of a bright future in 1886, when a cyclone carried away his shop, and practically destroyed his prospects for a livelihood without the expenditure of more money than he felt inclined to make. What remained of his possessions netted sufficient to bring him to California, where opportunity awaited the capable and industrious, to which class of workers he assuredly belonged.

While in Linn, Osage county, Mo., Mr. Holliday married Lucy Jane Glover, a native of that section, and to whom has been born six children, four of whom are living. Of these, William Chester is a business man of San Francisco; Mary is now Mrs. Smith, of Modesto; Kate is Mrs. Rodda, of Sacramento; and Grace is living with her parents. Mr. Holliday is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In religion he finds a home in the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which, as to other institutions for the uplifting of the race, he contributes with a generosity befitting his broad sympathies and substantial means. He has not only won the esteem of the business element in the town, but is sincerely liked by a large circle of friends and associates for his fine and strong traits of character, and for the dignity with which he has invested his useful and always dependable calling.

ALTON D. SIVLEY. Beginning in the humble capacity of clerk, Alton D. Sivley has mastered every department of the grocery business, and at present enjoys enviable business prominence and financial stability as a member of the firm of Sivley Brothers. He is one of the most industrious and promising of the younger generation of merchants in Oakdale, and has profited by a liberal common school education, and such experience of a general nature as comes into the life of the average native son of California. Born in Woodbridge, San Joaquin county, Cal., March 12, 1878, he comes of a family otherwise represented in the business life of the community, and which is further referred to in the sketch of his brother, W. J. Sivley, a prominent meat merchant. The second oldest of four children, he was reared in Oakdale, where his father was engaged in building and contracting, and in 1898 graduated from the high school, which had accounted him one of its brightest and most intelligent scholars. Soon after he entered upon his self-supporting career as a clerk in a store in Oakdale, and in 1902 entered into his present business with his brother, Charles H., dealing in groceries of all kinds, queensware, and paints. His business is conducted on broad and progressive lines, and with due regard for the times, tastes and inclinations of his many patrons. The store is neat and orderly in appearance, and indicates in its arrangement and disposition the methodical and time-saving nature of its chiefs. While there may be stores as complete and well managed in the county, none are larger or better appreciated, nor do any give promise of a brighter future.

Mr. Sivley has other claims upon the consideration of his fellow citizens than that presented by his excellent business record. He is a talented musician, understanding both the theory and execution of music, and contributing to the success of the Oakdale band by his performance on the trombone. He is past chancellor of the Oakdale Lodge No. 120, K. of P., and an ex-member of the Oakdale Native Sons of the Golden West. In politics he is a Democrat, but in local affairs votes for the best man for the office. He is liberal-minded, generous, and public-spirited, and to an unusual extent is valued for his fine social and business qualities.

JAY SCOTT. Through his identification with public affairs of Fresno county Jay Scott is widely known, the two terms which he served as sheriff, from 1892 to 1898, and the effective service he gave while in office making him a popular citizen. Born in Will county, Ill., January 13, 1850, he was the son of J. H. Scott, a native of New York state. When still young J. H. Scott accompanied his parents to Illinois, being reared to manhood on the farm which his father took up in the vicinity of Chicago. On attaining years of maturity he married Anna Chamberlain, a native of Canada, and at once engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own account. He remained a resident of Illinois until 1852, when he brought his family to California, crossing the plains with ox-teams. He located in the Sacramento valley and farmed there until a few years before his death, which occurred in Fresno in 1894, when seventy-six years of age.

But two years old when he came to the state, Mr. Scott is practically a Californian. He was reared in the Sacramento valley and received his education in the schools of the community in which he made his home. In 1880 he located in Fresno, where he engaged in business until 1900, when he located upon his present ranch in the Lone Star district, eight miles southeast of Fresno on North avenue. His home ranch consists of one hundred and twenty acres, devoted to raisin grapes, various fruits and general farming, while he has another ranch of forty acres located one mile north of this, devoted to fruit and vines.

In Tulare county Mr. Scott was married to Ida Burch, and to them were born the following children: Oliver C., Myrtle and Philip. In his political convictions Mr. Scott is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and through this influence was elected to the office of sheriff. Fraternally he is identified with the Odd Fellows and the Elks.

FRANK S. BAGLEY. A thoroughly successful man and one who occupies a prominent place in his community is Frank S. Bagley, for many years a merchant in Malaga, where he opened the first store, and where he served as postmaster for fourteen years. In the neighborhood of Malaga he is located upon a ranch of eighty acres devoted entirely to the cultivation of grapes, the average annual yield being about sixty tons. He also owns property in Los Angeles. Born in New York City, November 18, 1855, he is the son of James Bagley, also a native of that state. The family is of Irish extraction, the grandfather having come to the United States when a young man. He engaged in the prosecution of his trade of stone mason, and among other well-known buildings upon which he worked was that of the old city hall of New York City. James Bagley rose to prominence in a comparatively brief life of forty-five years, as a Republican of considerable influence receiving appointment to the position of deputy United States marshal of Eastern District of the state of New York. He was also identified with important movements in Williamsburg, conducting the first street car in that city. He married Sarah A. Silkwith, a native of England.

But two years old when his mother died, and eleven at the time of his father's death, Frank S. Bagley has been more or less thrown upon his own resources from his earliest remembrance. When only a lad in years he went to Illinois, where he engaged in farm work, remaining in that state for seventeen years, and through the exercise of his native qualities—industry, energy, and perseverance—acquired thirty acres of land which he farmed until 1888. Coming to California that year he established the first store in the town of Malaga, Fresno county, and conducted a successful business for fourteen years, while, as previously mentioned, he also acted as postmaster. Disposing of his mercantile interests in 1902 to R. R. Porter, he purchased his present valuable property, upon which he has since made his home.

In Illinois Mr. Bagley was united in marriage with Jennie S. Witt, who is now deceased. They became the parents of three children: Anna, Clifford and John. Following the early precepts of his father, Mr. Bagley adheres to the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Masonic order.

ADAM ADELSBACH. The success which numbers Adam Adelsbach among the prosperous ranchmen and vineyardists of Fresno county has been entirely the result of his own efforts, for he came empty-handed from Germany, where he was born August 1, 1848, and with the energy and perseverance characteristic of the natives of Germany has gained a competence in the face of many difficulties. He is the son of Peter and Catherine (Tusnich) Adelsbach, his father being a cooper by occupation. The latter died at the age of sixty-eight years, when his son Adam was in his youth.

In young manhood Adam Adelsbach learned the trade of locksmith, and when twenty-four years old, realizing the superior opportunities which existed in America, he came to the United States and located in Chicago, Ill., where he worked at the trade of carpenter, made so profitable by the great fire of 1871. In the same year he went to Wisconsin and engaged in the lumber business with his brother Peter, and while there married Anna Leonard, a native of that state. From Wisconsin he removed to Michigan, and was there employed as fireman on the railroad and also worked in the mines. He remained in that state until 1876, when he came to Merced county, Cal., and found employment with the firm of Miller & Lux, of Los Banos, with whom he continued for five years. In 1883 the fruits of his industry and economy were invested in his present farm of twenty acres in Fresno county, this being located on Fresno avenue between Walnut and Elm avenues, two and a half miles from the city of Fresno. The land is devoted principally to the cultivation of grapes and alfalfa.

To Mr. and Mrs. Adelsbach have been born the following children: Percy F., of Hanford; Frank, deceased; George L., of Fresno county; Mamie, wife of John Griggs; Adolph, deceased; Anna, Harry, Myrtle and Clarence, at home.

WILLIAM J. SIVLEY. In William J. Sivley Oakdale has an honorable and progressive business man, one who thoroughly understands the conducting of the meat business, and dignifies his association with the public with fairness, consideration and a never failing desire to please. He is a native son of California, and was born in Lodi, September 27, 1875, his parents being Garland and Catherine (Bardo) Sivley, both of whom are living. Garland Sivley resides in Groveland, Tuolumne county, and is engaged in mining. The establishment of the family on the coast is due to the ambitious tendencies of Garland Sivley, who was born near Havana, Ill., and whose father was an early settler of that state. Garland left the farm with little reluctance and crossed the plains with ox teams in 1851 or 1852, and after indifferent success in the mines in the northern part of the state, followed the millwright's trade in Woodbridge and Oakdale. In the latter city he met and married Catherine Bardo, a native of Michigan, and daughter of William Bardo, born in Pennsylvania and an early settler of Michigan. Mr. Bardo was a builder and contractor by occupation, and in order to increase his prospects of success came to California during the '60s, settling in Oakdale and working at his trade for the balance of his life. Mr. Sivley moved to Groveland some years ago, and has since contracted and built as well as mined. He has the satisfaction of knowing that his four children are well established in homes of their own, his second oldest son, A. D., being a merchant of Oakdale; his daughter, Ivy M., being the wife of A. N. Burch, of Oakdale, and his youngest son, Charles H., being also a merchant of Oakdale.

The genial meat merchant of Oakdale received his education in the public schools, attending the high school until the senior year. It then became necessary for him to embark in business on his own account, and he entered the shop of Mr. Meyer with whom he remained and learned the trade from 1894 until 1901. He then bought the Bald Eagle market, enlarged it to twice its former capacity, and has since made many additions to its equipment and capacity. His cold storage plant is run by electricity, and his refrigerators and machinery are of the latest and most approved designs. He has ample facilities for catering to a large and exacting trade, and runs two wagons the year round, supplying customers living in outlying districts as well as in town. His stock consists of fresh and manufactured meats of all kinds and he aims to supply the best possible in his line at the most reasonable prices. The standing of Mr. Sivley in the community is emphasized by his prominence in fraternal circles, he being a member of Lodge No. 120, Knights of Pythias, of Oakdale, and of the Woodmen of the World. He is also a member of the Oakdale Parlor No. 142, N. S. G. W. In political affiliation he is a Republican. Mr. Sivley is public-spirited and generous, responding to just appeals to his heart and purse, and taking a keen interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the community.

EBEN SANBORN. When Eben Sanborn came to his present ranch four miles northwest of Hanford, Kings county, in 1876, he found it a veritable desert, with little to encourage him to locate here. The introduction of irrigation, however, about that time, brought new life and inspiration to the settlers, and with zest they went to work to convert into a garden spot that which a short time before had been a vast expanse of waste land. Mr. Sanborn paid $1,200 for a claim of one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land on the line of the Blowers ditch, which proved a remarkably good investment, owing to the opening of the ditch soon afterward, and he at once began to reap good crops. To Mr. Sanborn is due the credit for setting out the first orchard and vineyard in his immediate section. This venture proved a success. He enlarged the scope of his horticultural operations from time to time until he now has, on the home place, eighty-three acres in peaches and apricots, thirty-eight acres in vineyard, and is now setting out nine acres more to peaches. The balance of his land is devoted to the raising of alfalfa and to dairy purposes. The raising of peaches may be said to be a specialty with Mr. Sanborn. To prepare his fruit for the market he has supplied his ranch with a modern and well-equipped dryer. He also owns three hundred and twenty acres of land six miles southwest of Hanford, near the Lone Oak slough, eighty acres two and a half miles south of Armona, which is set out to the various fruits and to the vine, besides eighty acres southwest of Armona, which is in wild feed and alfalfa.

Mr. Sanborn's grandfather, Capt. Eben Sanborn, was descended from English ancestors. Throughout his life he was a tanner and farmer. He probably lived in New Hampshire, as it was there that his son, Caleb M. Sanborn, was born and spent his life, following farming and shoemaking. The latter died at the age of eighty-two years. He married Ann Quimby, a native of New Hampshire, who was descended from Scotch ancestors. She attained the age of nearly eighty-three years, and reared a family of ten children, six dying in infancy.

Born in New Hampton, N. H., February 17, 1837, Eben Sanborn was the fifth child in the family. Until the fall of 1857 he made his home with his parents, attending the common and high schools, and also assisting his father in the management of the farm. In the fall of 1857 he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and for one year was employed upon a ranch in Napa county. From the fall of 1859 until 1875 he rented a farm in Napa county. In the latter year he removed to Fresno county, renting a farm there for one year, and in the fall of 1876 came to Kings county, which has since been the field of his operations.

October 11, 1877, Mr. Sanborn was united in marriage with Missouri Morris, who was born in Jackson county, Mo., August 2, 1848. Her father, John Morris, who was born in Kentucky, at the age of nineteen years, removed to Missouri, then a new and untried country, and engaged in stock raising, also working at his trade of cabinet-making to some extent. In 1852 he made the overland trip to California, coming hither in search of health rather than for the betterment of his financial condition. The following year he returned to his old home by way of the Panama route, but in 1857 again came to California, this time for the purpose of making it his residence. He brought a band of cattle across the country, maintained them for three years upon the range, and then conducted a ranch in the Suisun valley, in Solano county, Cal. He died there at the age of seventy-three years, having been successful in all his undertakings. He was a member of an old southern family who were of Scotch descent. His wife, who was formerly Martha Draper, was born in Tennessee, and in later life lived in Missouri. The British military commander, Lord Cornwallis, was her grandmother's uncle, and performed the ceremony which united her in marriage with her husband. Her maiden name was Hill, and her husband was named Lane. Both were prominent old families of the east, and were represented in America in the Colonial period.

Mr. and Mrs. Sanborn became the parents of five children, of whom the eldest died in infancy. The next in order of birth, Mary, died at the age of twenty years. Lois was united in marriage May 4, 1904, with Ernest Pickerill, bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Hanford. John Eben is a student in a business college in San Francisco. Ethel Draper is a student in Irving Institute, where she is taking private instruction in music and drawing.

In politics Mr. Sanborn is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party. He has become widely known throughout Kings and surrounding counties as an honorable, progressive and public-spirited citizen. During the years of his residence in Kings county he has been recognized as one of the most influential leaders in the promotion of those movements which have been calculated to advance the best interests of the entire community, and especially of those affairs which will prove of lasting benefit to the agricultural and horticultural interest of the county. No history of California would be complete were mention of his career omitted, for he is entitled to a prominent place in the annals of the county and state.

JABEZ H. LA RUE. The name which heads this review is a familiar one to the citizens of Fresno county, for it is borne by one who, though he has been a resident of California but a comparatively brief period, has still made his influence felt in both the agricultural and social life of the community. In the neighborhood are located also three sons, all of whom are prosperously engaged in agricultural pursuits, adding by virtue of their successes to the prestige of the county as well as by their quiet yet effective citizenship.

The La Rue family came originally from France, where they were Huguenots in religious faith. Three brothers, William, Isaac and Jacob, came to America at an early day, the direct ancestor of Mr. La Rue being Jacob. The family became residents of Kentucky, and it is said that Abraham Lincoln was born near a mill that belonged to William La Rue, the grandfather of our subject. Jacob H., his son, was born in Hodgenville, La Rue county, in 1799, and in manhood married Mrs. Sarah McElroy Park, who was born and died near Springfield, Ky. Mr. La Rue moved his family to Lewis county, Mo., in 1838, and there engaged in farming until 1884, when he came to California, and died in Sacramento at the advanced age of eighty-five years. Like his father he had also followed the trade of blacksmith.

Born in Elizabeth, Ky., February 16, 1833, Jabez H. La Rue was but a little more than five years old when his home was changed from the southern scenes of his native state to those of Missouri. He was reared upon his father's farm and received his education among the primitive conditions of the middle west. At the age of twenty-one years he began farming for himself, and while a resident of Missouri he married Margaret Haycraft, a native of Kentucky. He came to California in 1886 and the year following he was deprived by death of the companionship of his wife. Upon his arrival in California

Mr. La Rue located upon his present property, purchasing forty acres which he devotes entirely to the cultivation of grapes. He has since added to his landed interests until he now owns one hundred and twenty acres, thirty-two acres being devoted to the cultivation of raisin grapes and the remainder to general farming. The second marriage of Mr. La Rue occurred in 1891 in Missouri and united him with Helen H. Christie, a native of Winchester, Va. In his political convictions Mr. La Rue is a staunch Democrat, and fraternally is prominent in the Masonic order, being a member of the Blue Lodge and Royal Arch Chapter. He is a member of the Baptist Church, while his wife belongs to the Christian Church.

The children born to Mr. La Rue by his first marriage are as follows: Hugh William, Edwin H. and Samuel R. Hugh W. La Rue was born in Lewis county, Mo., December 1, 1851, and came to California in 1873, locating first in Yolo county, where he remained until 1885. He then came to Fresno county and purchased his present farm of one hundred and ten acres in the Malaga district. Edwin H. has a sixty-acre vineyard near that of his father. Samuel R., born in Lewis county, Mo., July 25, 1857, married Belle Bradshaw and came to California in 1885, and the following year located on his ranch of one hundred and ten acres near Malaga.

WILLIAM HARRISON MARDEN. The title of general given to William Harrison Marden, a successful and highly esteemed farmer of Yolo county, recalls to many of the old pioneers of the state the early days in the history of the west, for it was as the commander of an emigrating party that crossed the plains in 1850 that he was first known as such. In the inevitable march of progress the years have carried on many of the reminders of the past, have changed the unimproved, uncultivated land into fields rich with harvest yields and orchards laden with fruit, and have changed the thriving hamlets into cities teeming with the busy activities of a prosperous life. As a pioneer of that early day General Marden has witnessed the gradual growth and change and has himself been a constant contributor toward the development of the natural resources of California.

Born in Coos county, N. H., March 4, 1824, General Marden is a son of William Marden, also a native of that state. The elder man, a farmer by occupation, removed to New York state when this son was but seven years of age, locating in Chenango county. His wife, who before her marriage was known as Polly Stokes, was a native of New Hampshire, and died in New York about the year 1855. When about twenty-four years of age General Marden left his New England home, and coming as far west as Wisconsin, located in Waukesha county, March 24, 1848. Induced to undertake the trip across the plains for the sake of the advantages and opportunities which awaited there the man of pluck as well as ability, he assumed command of a company in 1850, and on the 6th of March of that year they set out for the west. May 8 they crossed the Missouri river at St. Joseph, and after a journey filled with the adventures and hardships incident to life on the plains they arrived at Placerville, September 8, 1850. For the first year General Marden was occupied in mining pursuits, but in the fall of 1851 he came to Yolo county and engaged in the less hazardous if less exciting life of a farmer. He purchased the farm of five hundred and twenty-eight acres upon which he now lives, located four miles southeast of Davisville. In 1869 he moved to Davisville and established a butcher business, the first of the kind in that town, and later branched into the hardware and hotel business, making a success of each. About 1880, however, he sold his interests in Davisville and returning to his farm has made it his home ever since.

In Yolo county General Marden was united in marriage with Marian Leigh, who was born in New York state and died April 16, 1899, at the age of sixty-eight years, one month and sixteen days. She had also been numbered among the pioneers of the state, for she had come from her home in Illinois in 1854 to join her father who was then in Sacramento.

WILLIAM E. MARDEN. The one-hundred-and-sixty-acre fruit ranch of William E. Marden justifies his reputation as one of the painstaking and practical horticulturists of the Fowler district. He was born on a ranch near Davisville, Yolo county, July 5, 1857, and represents one of the pioneer and energetic families of Yolo county. His father, William H. Marden, is still one of the most substantial ranchers of Yolo county. William E. Marden started out in life with a better education than many of the horticulturists of the west, receiving not only a grammar and high school training at Sacramento, but profiting by a course in a business college, from which he was graduated in 1876. Returning to Yolo county, he worked in a warehouse for a short time, and was then manager of his father's ranch until 1885, the elder man attending to the hotel and butcher business in Davisville. October 26, 1885, he came to Fresno county, settling on nine hundred and sixty acres of land previously purchased, and of which he still retains one hundred and sixty acres. It was then a wheat field, but it has since been transformed into a vineyard, and set out with two thousand fruit trees. Mr. Marden has given much study to scientific horticulture, and understands both its possibilities and limitations. He is public spirited and liberal minded, a staunch Republican, and a member of the Woodmen of the World. His wife, to whom he was married in January, 1895, was formerly Kathryn Smith, daughter of C. C. Smith, of Alameda county.

WILLIAM S. HALL. A keen, wideawake representative of the thriving agriculturists of San Joaquin county, William S. Hall resides about three and one-half miles east of Escalon, where he owns and occupies a choice, well improved ranch, which is furnished with a good house, barn and outbuildings and everything pertaining to a first-class estate. Industrious, far-sighted and thrifty, he has met with marked success in his agricultural labors, long years ago establishing himself in the confidence of his neighbors and friends, and has won for himself an honored record as an honest man and a valuable member of the community. He is a native and to the manner born, his birth having occurred, June 8, 1867, in San Joaquin county, near Burneyville. His father, John Hall, whose sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume, was born in Missouri, came to California in 1863, and is now successfully engaged in farming in San Joaquin county.

Brought up in Stanislaus and San Joaquin counties, William S. Hall acquired a practical education in the district schools, and in his boyhood became familiar with the different branches of farming. At the age of eleven years, he began driving a four-horse team, and the next year was given eight-horse and ten-horse teams to drive. Remaining with his parents, he assisted in the management of the home ranch until 1893, when he rented six hundred and forty acres of land in this county, and carried it on for two years. Renting a larger ranch, one of thirteen hundred acres, in 1895, Mr. Hall was engaged in raising grain, the staple crop of this region, for five years. Purchasing land, then in Stanislaus county, near Riverbank, he embarked in stock growing and grain raising on his three hundred and twenty acres of land, from which he harvested two large crops. Selling out that property in 1903, Mr. Hall bought his present farm of two hundred and forty acres, lying on the Burneyville road, about eight miles from Oakdale, and has here continued his operations as a grain-raiser, meeting with most satisfactory pecuniary results, his success in this line of industry being due to his energetic activity, good judgment and wise management.

In Stockton, Mr. Hall married Annie E. Myer, a daughter of Jacob Myer, who was born in Seneca county, Ohio, and into their pleasant household four children have been born, namely: Bessie M., William Granville, Charles Otto, and Elmer Roy. In his political affiliations, Mr. Hall is a Republican, straight and strong, and while in Stanislaus county served as school trustee. Fraternally he belongs to Oakdale Lodge No. 275, F. & A. M. Although not connected by membership with any religious denomination he contributes generously toward the support of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which his family attends.

JOHN W. JACKSON. The Jackson family, represented in Fresno county by John W. Jackson, a vinedyardist and orchardist, came to the United States from England during the eighteenth century, a part of the company who followed John Wesley into the western wilderness. The first of the name on American soil are supposed to have settled in the southern states, as it is there that the first ancestral records are traced. John W. Jackson was born in Calhoun county, Ala., June 12, 1847, a son of John W., a native of Georgia, who was likewise the son of another John W. John W. Jackson of Georgia married Lydia Clements of South Carolina and engaged in farming until his death at the age of seventy-seven years.

When seven years old Mr. Jackson accompanied his parents to a new home in the state of Arkansas, where the family remained for seven years. They then located in Texas, where he grew to manhood, and following his early training, engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1893. In that year he came to California and located in Fresno county on a ranch of twenty acres seven and a half miles southeast of the city of Fresno and two and a half northwest of Fowler. This property he has since devoted to the cultivation of various fruits, much of his attention being given to a vineyard. While a resident of Texas, in January, 1870, he married Nancy H. Millemon, a native of that state, and to them were born the following children: Ida M., now the wife of W. W. Varnell, located on a ranch about a mile from Mr. Jackson's home; Nolan S., who married Cassie Rice, a native of Canada; and Eunice, the wife of Dr. Frank Wolf, of Fresno. Mr. Jackson is a Democrat politically, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

C. E. BARNETT. Located seven and a half miles southeast of Fresno, and two and a half miles from Fowler, is the farm which belongs to the Barnett family. It consists of seventy acres, fifty of which are devoted to the cultivation of grapes and fifteen to orchard. For almost a score of years this property has belonged to William Barnett, having passed into his ownership in 1887, when he came to California with his family and located in Fresno county, and since that time many improvements have been made, among them a comfortable two-story house. The interests of the ranch are looked after and conducted by C. E. Barnett, the subject of this review, whose birth occurred in Mississippi, April 23, 1866.

William Barnett is a native of Alabama, born February 19, 1838, a son of M. P. and Jane (Wallace) Barnett, both natives of Virginia. They had removed to Alabama in an early day, afterward located in Mississippi, and still later moved to Texas, where the death of the grandfather occurred at the age of eighty-six years. William Barnett accompanied his parents to Mississippi, where he was reared to manhood on the paternal farm, marrying Nancy Benson, also of Alabama. They became the parents of eight children, namely: C. E., of this review; Eva A., deceased; Carrie; Alonzo; Emma; Mattie, deceased; Lillian; and George. In 1869 William Barnett left Mississippi and went to Texas, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1887, in which year he came to California and has since made this state his home. During the years in which he conducted the interests of the ranch he became well known as a successful and progressive farmer, and his son has followed his early training and has built up for himself a position of prominence among the farmers of this section. The elder man is a Mason, while the younger is an Odd Fellow, and also identified with the Encampment. In politics he is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and is a member of the Christian Church.

CHRIS OTT. If an honored name, a large and growing blacksmithing and manufacturing business, and the esteem of a host of friends and general associates may be taken as an indication of success, Chris Ott has cause for congratulation, and is entitled to rank among the substantial and leading German-American citizens of Oakdale and Stanislaus county. A young man as yet, having been born near Berlin, Germany, January 24, 1873, he has worked his way up without money or influence, and has richly profited by his opportunities since coming to California with his parents in 1880. His father, William, and his mother, Carrie (Keyser) Ott, were both born in Germany, and possessed the typical traits which have made the Teuton a welcome and reliable addition to American affairs. He is the fourth oldest in a family of seven, and this county is also profiting by the energy and resource of his brothers, who are large grain and stock ranchers. The elder Ott settled on a farm near Knights Ferry, owning a hundred and sixty acres of land, which he cultivated until his death in 1898, and which is still occupied by his widow.

While on the home farm near Knights Ferry Mr. Ott attended the district schools, and in 1890 apprenticed to Nightingale & Stearns for three years, afterward finding employment with Stearns & Harray for several years, or until buying out Holliday's old blacksmith shop in 1901. The little shop proved altogether inadequate for the business which he intended conducting, so he greatly enlarged it, put in new machinery including a ten-horse-power engine, planes, saws, hammers, and all kinds of fine tools, and started in to manufacture wagons, plows, harrows, and other farm machinery, and to do all manner of repairing. While making a specialty of horse-shoeing, he has worked up a large general repair and manufacturing trade and has won the entire confidence of a public, which appreciates and demands high-grade work. His shop is now 50x75 feet in dimensions, and is one of the most complete in Stanislaus county. Mr. Ott is a natural mechanic, and his success rests chiefly upon the foundation of a genuine liking for his work, and upon indefatigable industry in pursuing the best in his line. Since coming to Oakdale he married Alice Burns, and has a pleasant home for his wife, who is a native of Tulare county, this state. Mr. Ott subscribes to the principles of the Democratic party, and as a fraternalist is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is well known for his uprightness, sincerity and obligingness, and for an optimistic nature which sees the best side of nature, the world and his friends.

DANIEL KINDLE ZUMWALT. The life and early work of Daniel K. Zumwalt are indissolubly woven with the pioneer history of California, belonging especially to that of Tulare county, where he made his home for many years. Born near Joliet, Will county, Ill., January 24, 1845, he was the descendant of an old Virginia family, whose first ancestor, George or Adam Zumwalt, was an emigrant from Germany in the eighteenth century. George or Adam Zumwalt later located in Ohio, then on the border of civilization, becoming a pioneer and rearing a family amid the deprivations and hardships that marked life in the middle west. His son, Jacob, a native of that state, in which he spent the greater part of his life, removed in January, 1830, from Adams county, Ohio, to Hancock county, Ind., where his death occurred in December, 1833. His son, also called Jacob, was born in Adams county, Ohio, September 15, 1807, and there grew to manhood. June 24, 1830, he was united in marriage with Susanna Kindle Smith, who was born in Adams county, Ohio, June 12, 1811. In company with his father and father's family, besides himself consisting of three sons and five daughters, he removed to Hancock county, Ind., in 1830, as a farmer making his home in that locality for four years. He then removed to Will county, Ill., in 1834, locating ten miles from Joliet. Twenty years later, in March, 1854, he crossed the plains with ox teams, and until 1872 followed farming in Sacramento county. In that year he located in Tulare county and engaged in farming in the vicinity of Visalia until his death, which occurred May 31, 1878. He is buried in Sacramento, in which city his wife died November 20, 1896. In religion he was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a supporter of all movements calculated to advance the general welfare. To Mr. and Mrs. Zumwalt were born the following children: Nancy Ann, who became the wife of Rockwell Hunt and died in Sacramento in 1904; Sarah M., the wife of James Shoemaker, of Santa Clara; Joseph, born April 30, 1836, and who died in Kern county, Cal., April 1, 1878; John H., located in College Park, Cal.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Hawk, of Sacramento; and Daniel Kindle, the subject of this review.

Daniel K. Zumwalt was nine years old when the memorable trip across the plains was made, his duty being to ride horseback and drive the cattle. With the exception of standing guard at night every duty that fell to the lot of the grown members of the party likewise fell to him. Upon his father's location in Sacramento he attended the public schools and later the high school, graduating from the latter in 1865. Intent upon securing a good education, he afterward entered the University of the Pacific, from which he graduated with the degree of A. B. and later received the degree of A. M. Securing a first grade state teacher's certificate he taught school for one year in Yolo, Cal., after which, in 1869, he came to Tulare county, which was his home up to the time of his death. He improved and developed lands of his own, the estate now owning a large farm between Visalia and Tulare, which is devoted to dairying and to the raising of Short-horn cattle. For twenty-three years Mr. Zumwalt acted as land agent and attorney for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, his territory extending over Tulare, Kern, Fresno and what is now Kings county, and during this time he sold more land than any other man in the section. His ability and management were made manifest at the time of the Mussel slough difficulties. Shrewd and far-sighted, Mr.

Zumwalt perceived that the proper development and upbuilding of the county must come through irrigation, and bent every effort to bring about a satisfactory system. He was one of the organizers and promoters of the 76 Land and Water Company, the principal capital being obtained through his efforts, as well as the men best qualified to carry the plan to successful issue. Of the original incorporators only one is now living, I. H. Jacobs, of the firm of Simon, Jacobs & Co. Mr. Zumwalt secured the co-operation of Dr. H. P. Merritt, Francis E. Bullard, Charles Traver and Thomas Fowler, who was one of the suggesters of the scheme, and P. Y. Baker, who was Mr. Zumwalt's partner, securing the co-operation of C. F. J. Kitchener. As a first step in the formation of the 76 Land and Water Company Mr. Zumwalt purchased the water rights from Risley & Cameron and others, and secured options on large tracts of land for the benefit of the company, and as secretary of the company gave to the project his co-operation and support up to the time of the removal of the principal place of business from Visalia to Traver. He was also associated with the building of numerous other canals, being a prime mover in the Kaweah Canal & Irrigation Company, in which he was a heavy stockholder, and was deeply interested in legislation to bring about some means whereby the water could not be diverted from the use of the settlers. In the improvement and equipment of his own property he established a creamery on his ranch and assisted materially in the building of one in Visalia.

Perhaps one of the most far-reaching and memorable achievements of Mr. Zumwalt was securing the preservation of a greater part of the redwoods. He with others was indefatigable in presenting proofs to the Interior department of the value and nature of many of the lands in the Sierra Nevada mountains, and the necessity of preserving the forests for future generations. In the fall of 1890, while in Washington, D. C., he enlisted the co-operation of General Vandever, congressman from California, and within two or three days of the adjournment of congress secured the passage of a measure to set aside General Grant Park, which insures the preservation of those monsters of the forest, which here stand more compact than in any other part of the Sierras. Progressive, liberal and enterprising, the results of his efforts have not yet been measured, but shall go down the years which shall bring continued prosperity to Tulare county and shall continue to add honor to the name which he made lustrous with good and great deeds. His death occurred November 2, 1904, his last resting place being in the city of Visalia, the scene of his labors for so many years.

In Tulare May 20, 1890, Mr. Zumwalt was united in marriage with Emma F. Blackwedel, who was born in Taycheedah, near Fond du Lac, Wis. Her father, J. Henry Blackwedel, was a native of Hemsling, Hanover, Germany, from which country her grandfather, John Blackwedel, came to America with his family in November, 1847. The month following he settled on a farm in Wisconsin, later moving to Jo Daviess county, Ill. J. H. Blackwedel was first a farmer in Wisconsin, and later engaged in mercantile pursuits in Sauk City, Wis., Galena, Ill., and Dubuque, Iowa, in which latter place his death occurred November 29, 1863. A man of considerable ability and superior education, the Blackwedel home, both in Wisconsin and Illinois, was the rendezvous of lecturers and those of literary tastes whenever they came to his home town. Mr. Blackwedel was well and favorably known throughout the state of Wisconsin, where he was one of the sponsors of the Republican party. His wife, formerly Anna Meta Holterman, was also a native of Germany, and the daughter of H. C. Holterman, who died in Germany. Mrs. Blackwedel died in Dubuque in 1872. There were four children in the Blackwedel household who grew to maturity, of whom two sons, Henry Herman and John Frederick, died while serving in Company I, Seventeenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry. A daughter, Minnie I., became the wife of Francis I. Pillsbury, and came to California, her death occurring in Riverside, January 30, 1887. Next to the youngest, Mrs. Zumwalt was reared in Dubuque, where she attended both public and private schools. In 1886 she came to Riverside with her sister, Mrs. Pillsbury, and the following year came to Tulare county. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is identified with Visalia Lodge No. 48, I. O. G. T., of which Mr. Zumwalt was also a member and which he organized November 18, 1870. He was foremost in incorporating the Good Templar's Hall Association, and in building Good Templar's Hall in Visalia, and put such safeguards around it that it has never been perverted from its original use or passed out of the hands of the society. He was past grand counsellor of the order and up to the time of his death was its most staunch supporter. He was also a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Visalia, and for many years was superintendent of the Sunday-school which he organized in 1869-70. Politically he was a Republican in early life, but for many years was a strong party Prohibitionist, and his ideas upon the liquor question are also held by Mrs. Zumwalt, who is not only a pronounced Prohibitionist, but is a strong woman suffragist. In addition to the many interests already mentioned Mr. Zumwalt carried on an abstract and land business, patented a process for photographing and preserving records, and was also engaged in stock-raising and dairying. While in Sacramento, from 1861 to 1865, Mr. Zumwalt joined Company H, Fourth Regiment, Fourth Brigade California State Militia, serving as first lieutenant of the company and first lieutenant and quartermaster of his regiment.

In recording the events in the life of Mr. Zumwalt it is but just to state that Mrs. Zumwalt has been a most potent factor in his success, standing beside him in all trials and encouraging him with her love and devotion. Their union was an unusually happy and congenial one, and whether at home, in church or in lodge work, their interests were mutual.

PHILIP THOMAS DORLAND. Numbered among the extensive and successful grain-raisers and stock-growers of San Joaquin county is Philip Thomas Dorland, a man of decided energy, great enterprise and excellent ability. Conducting his agricultural labors with skill and good judgment, he has been amply rewarded for his years of toil, winning the esteem and respect of his fellow-men and acquiring considerable wealth. On the paternal side, he is of German extraction, the Dorland family, whose name was formerly spelled Dorlandt having originated in Germany. This family was first represented on American soil by two brothers of that name, who immigrated to Massachusetts in early colonial times, becoming settlers of Plymouth colony. Mr. Dorland was born July 19, 1865, in Adolphustown, Lennox county, Ontario, which was also the birthplace of his father, Philip Dorland, and of his grandfather, John Dorland. His great-grandfather, Captain Dorland, an officer in the British army, refused to settle in the United States after the Revolutionary war, and, with his battalion, migrated to Canada, locating permanently in Adolphustown, Ontario.

Successing to the free and independent occupation in which he was reared, Philip Dorland became a tiller of the soil, and spent his fifty-one years of earthly life as a farmer in his native town. He married Charlotte Trumppour, a native of Adolphustown, and a daughter of Samuel Trumppour, a life-long farmer of that place. Her great-grandfather, Col. John Trumppour, immigrated to the United States from Germany, and after serving as an officer in the English army during the Revolution settled in Ontario. She survived her husband, and is now living, a bright and well-preserved woman of eighty-three years. Of their twelve children, eleven grew to years of maturity, and ten survive, Philip Thomas, the special subject of this sketch, being the youngest son.

Acquiring a thorough knowledge of the common branches of study in the public schools, Philip Thomas Dorland remained at home until fifteen years old, when he went to Chatham, Ontario, where he served an apprenticeship of three years at the upholsterer's trade. From there Mr. Dorland went to Brantford, Ontario, and in 1884 made his first trip to California, remaining here seven months. Returning to Brantford, he worked as a journeyman two years, and then started in business for himself as an upholsterer and furniture dealer, being first located in Galt, and afterward in Toronto. In 1890 Mr. Dorland came again to the Pacific coast, and for four years worked for his brothers at farming. Renting land, in 1894 he began grain raising on his own account and met with good success in his efforts. Removing to his present place of residence, in San Joaquin county, about seven miles from Oakdale, he has since been profitably employed in agricultural pursuits. He rents the old Boland ranch of one thousand and eighty acres, and also a farm of two hundred and forty acres near Lonetree, and is extensively engaged in raising grain and stock. He has all of the necessary machinery and implements for carrying on his work, and with his combined harvester cuts not only his own grain, but much of that raised by his neighbors. Fraternally Mr. Dorland belongs to Oakdale Lodge No. 275, F. & A. M., and politically he is identified with the Republican party.

LANGSTON ANDREW JOHNSON. An esteemed pioneer citizen of Visalia is Langston Andrew Johnson, since 1879 the proprietor of the Visalia hotel, which he is still conducting. A native of St. Louis county, Mo., where he was born June 16, 1837, he was a son of John Johnson. The latter was born in Tennessee, reared in Kentucky, and in an early day removed to St. Louis county, Mo., where he married and engaged as a farmer. During the Civil war he was shot by the Home Guards. His wife was in maidenhood Mary Bacon, a native of Missouri, who died when her son, Langston A., was born. He was the youngest of five children, the others being as follows: William, located in Missouri; Nathaniel, located in Napa county, this state; Bettie and James, deceased.

The education of Langston A. Johnson was received in the common schools of his native state, after which he followed his father's occupation of farmer. He became a large slave owner in Missouri, where he made his home until 1864, in that year crossing the plains to California by mule teams. He located in Los Angeles and engaged as foreman for Mr. Nadeau, collecting and paying off on the freighting business, which was conducted by mule teams. He followed this occupation for two years, when he went to Arizona and engaged in mining at Cerbat, Mohave county. A year and a half of this work resulted in financial reverses, after which he returned to Los Angeles, sold out his interests and, locating in Kern county, engaged in the sheep business. He met with fair success for the ensuing two years. In 1876 he located in Visalia and began at the foot of the ladder again as a hod-carrier, later opening a boarding house, which was successfully conducted for some time. For three or four years he engaged in the general merchandise business with marked success, after which he purchased the Visalia hotel. The years have brought to him added success, and as his financial ability has increased he has bought both town and country property until he owns considerable of the former and one hundred and sixty acres of the latter. He is justly accounted one of the successful men of the community, and as an enterprising citizen is held in high regard by all who know him.

In Missouri Mr. Johnson married Mary A. Howell, a native of that state. They are the parents of the following children: Mrs. Eviza V. Baker, Mrs. Mattie Wilber, and John S., the last named being represented elsewhere in this work. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In his political affiliations he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, in the interests of which he has served for one term as a member of the city council.

GEORGE W. WIGLEY. A typical representative of the self-made men of our times, George W. Wigley has paddled his own canoe to some purpose, and now in the prime of a vigorous manhood is enjoying the reward of his earlier years of toil, having by his own efforts risen to a place of influence and affluence. Energetic, ambitious and far-seeing, he has met with excellent success as an agriculturist, being now one of the leading dairymen and farmers of San Joaquin county, his farm, with its valuable improvements, being finely located on the Stanislaus river, three-fourths of a mile from Huntley, and but four miles from Escalon. A native of Georgia, he was born April 4, 1854, in Resaca, Gordon county, where his father, Richard Wigley, was a planter. His grandfather, Joseph Wigley, also a planter by occupation, was a native of England, and settled in Virginia.

Brought up on his father's plantation, Richard Wigley chose the independent vocation of a farmer, and began his active career in his native state. Subsequently removing to Gordon county, Georgia, he farmed there till he removed to Franklin county, Ark., where he bought land on the Arkansas river, and was there employed in raising cotton until his death, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years, in 1901. His wife, whose maiden name was Minerva McKay, was born in North Carolina, and died in Arkansas at the age of seventy-five years. She bore him a large family of children, of whom nine grew to years of maturity, and six survive. Two sons served in the Civil war, and one son, Richard J. Wigley, resides in Tulare county, Cal., owning a wheat ranch near Portersville.

Living in Georgia until 1868, George W. Wigley obtained the rudiments of his education in his native county, but completed his studies in the district schools of Franklin county, Ark. His ambition on attaining his majority was to seek his fortune in some newer country, and he thought strongly of going to Texas, but was dissuaded by his brother Hiram and induced to come with said brother to California instead. Arriving in San Joaquin county in March, 1874, Mr. Wigley soon found that he knew but little of agricultural methods as pursued on the coast. Determined, however, to become familiar with them, he worked out as a farm hand for two years. In 1876, with a partner, he rented a ranch of two hundred and fifty acres, and, notwithstanding that it was a dry season, he raised a good crop of wheat, which he disposed of at the rate of $2.45 per hundred, clearing $2,850 in the operation. Encouraged by his success, Mr. Wigley then purchased a farm of three hundred and five acres, and for several years carried on general farming and grain-raising with good results, and still owns a portion of his original purchase. He has since bought adjoining land, and now owns five hundred acres on the Stanislaus river, on which he has made improvements of exceptional value and worth. In 1898 Mr. Wigley embarked in the dairy business, and has now the largest and best-equipped private creamery in the San Joaquin valley, having a two-horse-power steam engine, and all the modern appliances for manufacturing butter, the output of his creamery averaging four hundred pounds per week. His farm contains one hundred and fifty acres of bottom-land, on which he raises large crops of alfalfa, and in his dairy he keeps about one hundred head of milking cows.

Fraternally Mr. Wigley is a member of Oakdale Lodge No. 275, F. & A. M.

CHARLES ROHLOFF. The Arroyo Vineyard, of which Charles Rohloff is the owner and proprietor, is one of the deservedly popular mediums of procuring pure California wines and vinegar in Tulare county. Located inside the city limits, at 812 Watson avenue, the vineyard covers sixteen acres, its equipment including a wine cellar of two thousand gallons capacity and a distillery where grape brandy is manufactured. The trade of the vineyard is confined almost exclusively to Visalia and vicinity, and the excellent quality of the commodities insures a steady and increasing patronage. The genial and successful owner has had many years of experience, and his winery is conducted along modern and progressive lines, with due regard for his personal and business reputation.

Mr. Rohloff was born in Prussia, Germany, July 27, 1853; his parents were natives of the same country. His mother dying when he was a child, himself and brother attended the public schools, and when their strength permitted, assisted their father in the work around the farm. Mr. Rohloff early appreciated the limitations by which he was surrounded, and in 1880 came to the United States, traveling over Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Montana, reaching California in the spring of 1884. Settling in Visalia, he found employment under George Mauer in the Arroyo Vineyard, in time learning every department of the business and becoming manager of the vineyard and winery. Going to Livermore, he worked in a winery there for two years, and then worked on a ranch in Fresno county until 1899. In September of that year he purchased the Arroyo Vineyard and Winery and has since conducted it on a paying basis. Mr. Rohloff is a quiet, unassuming man, with no inclination for political office, although he has been a staunch Republican ever since landing on American shores. He is public-spirited and generous, was quick to adopt the language and ways of his adopted country, and is now an earnest enthusiast of the state in which his lot is permanently cast. In San Francisco he married Marie Hoelsing, a native of Hamburg, Germany, and they have one son, Dewey. Respected by his fellow townsmen, and having a business which reflects credit upon his growing community, Mr. Rohloff may well regard the future as promising and the past as full of work well done.

JOHN S. HARP, of the firm of Harp Brothers, proprietors of the Kaweah stables, is named among the most enterprising and ambitious young men of Visalia, and a future of success is predicted for him by all his friends who best appreciate his many sterling traits of character. He was born in Georgia, near Middleton, August 2, 1876, the youngest in a family of nine children, seven of whom attained maturity and five of whom are now living. His father, George Harp, removed to Arkansas, where he is located as a farmer. The mother of the family died when John S. was but two years old, the greater part of the care and training which fell to his lot being given by his brother, William, who is now his partner in his present business. He was reared on a farm in Arkansas occupied by his brother, who was extensively interested in agricultural pursuits. He attended the public schools in pursuit of an education. In 1892 he came to California with William Harp and located in Tulare county, his brother returning to Arkansas after six years' residence, while he remained here. He found employment on various ranches until February, 1904, when, having accumulated sufficient capital, he purchased the livery stable of J. B. McKinley, known as the Kaweah stables. He has successfully conducted the business since, having the best equipped as well as the most extensive livery and feed stable in the city, his building having a fifty-foot front which extends from Main to Center street, located on East Main street.

In Visalia Mr. Harp married Bertha Roberts, a native of this city, and daughter of Newton Roberts, a pioneer settler of this section. Fraternaly Mr. Harp is identified with the Woodmen of the World and Fraternal Brotherhood. Politically he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

EDWARD T. COX. Among the farmers and land owners who have gained a wide experience in other lines of business in California, mention is due Edward T. Cox, owner of five hundred and sixty acres of land in Tulare county, and one of the popular, progressive and public-spirited men of his neighborhood. Born in St. Clair county, Ill., May 1, 1852, he is a son of Elijah and Elizabeth (Nimerick) Cox, also natives of Illinois, and farmers by occupation. The family moved from St. Clair to Hancock county, the same state, at an early day, and here Elijah Cox passed the balance of his life, being survived by his wife, who still makes her home in Illinois. Eight sturdy sons were reared to manhood in this humble home, were educated in the public schools, and started upon their respective self-supporting careers with assets consisting chiefly of common sense and a willingness to embrace whatever opportunity might come their way.

During his eighteenth year Edward T. Cox attended school for the last time, and, leaving the home place behind him, started out to see the world and earn his own living. From Illinois he went to Minneapolis, Minn., engaged in business there during 1879-80, realizing a considerable profit in both groceries and real estate, and in various kinds of speculation. Coming to California in 1883 on a visit, he was delighted with the country and engaged in a real estate business in Monterey, in conjunction with the San Francisco Bureau of Immigration. In this capacity he helped to settle Monterey county, a difficult task at best, as at every step progress was balked by the efforts of the stockmen, who resented the dividing up of the lands. In 1886 he removed to Los Angeles, profiting by the boom of that time, and remained there for about three years. During the winter of 1888 he shouldered a gun and hunted all through San Luis Obispo county, in the spring coming to the San Joaquin valley, the richness of which appealed to his judgment and hopes for the future. Visalia seemed to him a promising center, and near this town he found employment on the farm of a Mr. Evans, whose widow he later married. This was the beginning of his substantial success, and he began to buy land, in time accumulating his present farm, and having the oversight of the ranch owned by his wife, which is one hundred and forty acres in extent. The Cox property is highly improved and yields a substantial yearly income.

In 1894 Mr. Cox married Mrs. Ellen Evans, a native of New York state, who came across the plains with ox teams at an early day. One child, Edward, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cox. Mr. Cox has found recreation with the Odd Fellows and Masons for many years, and in the latter organization is a member of Lodge, Chapter, Commandery, and of the Scottish Rite. In politics he is a Republican, and is esteemed for his many strong and reliable traits of character, his support of charitable and social institutions and his moderate and temperate life.

JOHN MERWICK HARRAY. Of the workers along practical and time-honored lines in Oakdale none have better command of their occupation, or dignify it with greater thoroughness and reliability than John Merwick Harray, junior member of the firm of Stearns & Harray, blacksmiths, carriage manufacturers, and machinists. A parallel is found in the work of Mr. Harray and his rugged Scottish ancestry. He has the perseverance, determination and steadiness of his race, traits doubly appreciated in the place to which nature and his good genius have assigned him. His family were well known for centuries in the Orkney Islands, where he was born September 20, 1864, and which also was the birthplace of his parents, John and Jane (Merwick) Harray. He was reared near Kirkwall, on the mainland, and as a boy realized some of the disadvantages of being one in a large family, dependent upon the income derived from an average farm. Moderation and industry were encouraged and required in the modest home, and that they were important factors is realized in the life of his father, who, at the age of eighty-four years, is still hale and hearty, and able to enjoy the leisure denied him in earlier years. His mother, long since deceased, came of one of the very old families on the islands. She is recalled as a good disciplinarian, a friend and comrade of her children, and an earnest worker in the Presbyterian Church. All of her nine children are living, and five are in America, John Merwick being the fourth oldest.

Mr. Harray is not indebted for his success in life to early educational advantages, for the necessity of beginning to work early cut short his school days, and threw him upon the resources of later years. When thirteen he served an apprenticeship to a blacksmith, and upon the completion of his trade at the end of three years, came to America in 1881, and lived a short time in Philadelphia. From July, 1881, until March, 1882, he worked at his trade in Bay City, Mich., and then transferred his field of activity to Chicago, Ill., where he remained three and a half years. The farther west he got the better he liked it, and the larger seemed the opportunities for a young and ambitious man. Becoming interested in California, he came to Stockton in the fall of 1886, remaining there and working at his trade until the spring of 1887. In April, 1887, he located at Point Arena, Mendocino county, securing a position with the Central California Lumber Company as master blacksmith for two years. Returning to Stockton, he lived there a few months, and in October, 1889, entered the employ of Nightingale & Stearns as master horseshoer. In the meantime he had lived always within his income, had saved considerable money, and in March, 1894, bought out Mr. Nightingale, and the firm name was changed to Stearns & Harray. Since then Mr. Harray has had charge principally of the blacksmithing and carriage manufacturing, the partners working together amicably and with excellent financial results. The firm have an enviable reputation among people appreciating fine workmanship and reliability, and their standing is not excelled by any similarly employed in the county.

Mr. Harray is a staunch Republican, but not an office seeker. Fraternally he is identified with the Oakdale Lodge, No. 228, I. O. O. F., of which he was noble grand two terms, and the Woodmen of the World. His religious convictions are strong and humane, and for years he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church, acting in the capacities of ruling elder and trustee. He is a man who thinks for himself, and has well defined opinions on the leading questions of the day. The high ideals which have accompanied him on his life journey thus far are never allowed to sink into the background, and all who know him feel that he is guided in all his walks by a high and noble mind. He is devoted to his friends, his family and the interests which represent his life work, and especially does he observe the golden rule in his business and social undertakings. Mr. Harray married in Modesto, Cora Boyd, a native of Nevada. Of this union three children have been born, Earl Merwick, Irvin William and Stanley John.

JOHN C. HOXIE. Although not a native Californian the earliest recollections of John C. Hoxie are associated with the scenes of his adopted state, in which all but the first ten years of his life have been spent. The family is of English ancestry and for many generations residents of Massachusetts where the first emigrant is supposed to have settled. The paternal grandfather died in Massachusetts, leaving a family, among whom was a son called Clark Hoxie. He was born in Sandwich, Barnstable county, and in young manhood became a contractor and builder. In 1852, following the westward trend of civilization, he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama and located in Tuttle town, Tuolumne county, erecting the first quartz mill ever built in that vicinity. He also engaged in mining for some time. In 1856 he located on the Indian Reservation where he was employed to teach carpenter work, but before 1858 he located in Millerton, and conducted a blacksmith and wagon shop. He became an influential man in that community and took a prominent part in local affairs, serving as a member of the first board of supervisors and also acted as justice of the peace. Returning to Massachusetts in 1866 by way of the Isthmus, he died in Sandwich which had been the home of the family for so many years. His wife, formerly Susan Fessenden, was born in Sandwich, a daughter of Capt. Sewall Fessenden, who was a sea captain and hotel man there. During the Revolutionary war he gave valiant service as captain of the state militia.

Born March 15, 1848, in Sandwich, Mass., John C. Hoxie was but ten years old when he came to California. The journey was made by way of the Isthmus of Panama, on the Golden Age to San Francisco, by boat to Stockton, thence by stage to Millerton. There were no schools in that locality at that time and Mr. Hoxie received all his instructions from his mother, a woman of many accomplishments and rare intellect. The first school in Millerton was a private affair and was opened and conducted in 1859 by Mrs. Hoxie, at the same time in which she served as postmistress. With the courage and self-reliance characteristic of the pioneer lad of the early days, he engaged in the stock business at the age of fifteen years and has continued successfully in that work up to the present time. In time he located on a ranch which he purchased at Millerton, engaging in sheep and cattle raising and farming there for many years, and in time becoming the owner of several thousand acres. In 1874 he removed to Fresno and bought a block and built the residence now occupied by F. H. Short, and later bought one block from his original purchase and built a residence at the corner of L and Stanislaus streets. He engaged as a grain merchant for many years, and also became interested in mining properties about twenty years ago. In conjunction with W. H. McKenzie and T. G. Hart, he purchased the Mud Springs mine and operated and developed the same, which is conceded to be one of the finest mining properties in this part of the country. He has since acted as superintendent of the property and by his skill and management has done much to further the best interests of the company. He is also largely interested in mines in Fresno, Madera, Inyo and Mono counties, and is numbered among the men who have met with success in this line of work.

In Fort Miller, December 18, 1873, Mr. Hoxie married Mary J. McKenzie, who was born in that location. For more complete details concerning her family refer to the sketch of William H. McKenzie, which appears elsewhere in this volume. In his political convictions Mr. Hoxie is a Democrat.

FRANK REMBRANDT KELLENBERG. Twelve years as a retail shoe dealer have resulted in a steady increase of the business of Frank Rembrandt Kellenberg, one of the substantial and painstaking merchants of Visalia. Mr. Kellenberg was born at Alton, Madison county, Ill., June 11, 1854. His father, Francis Jerome Kellenberg, was born in Georgetown, D. C., and at an early age displayed marked talent for drawing, an inclination which was fostered and developed, resulting in a life devotion to art. He became both a landscape and portrait painter, having a studio in Georgetown and one in Alton, Ill., where he settled about 1846. In 1860 he became interested in the far west, moved his family to California by way of Panama, and established his home in Visalia, where his death occurred in 1876, at about seventy-six years of age. Latterly he devoted himself to artistic sign painting, but left a large collection of pictures, among them copies and original productions, many of them of great value. His most prized effort was a copy of the Court of Death, upon which he worked at odd times for twelve years; a copy of the portrait of the Duke of Athens; of Ebenezer rising from the tomb; and an original picture called the Dance of the Four Seasons. Mr. Kellenberg had no thought of worldly fame as he mixed his colors on his palette and applied them with steady hand; painting to him was a congenial occupation, and the study of color had a fascinating charm. His wife, formerly Mary Hillery, died ere he allied his fortunes with the west, leaving two sons and five daughters, of whom Frank Rembrandt, named for the great Dutch artist of that name, is the second youngest.

Educated in the public schools of California, Mr. Kellenberg gained his first business experience in the mercantile store of Richard E. Hyde, one of the early pioneers of Tulare county, and president of the Bank of Visalia for thirty years. A year and a half later he became a clerk for Douglas & Co., continuing with the firm after they split out to Stevens & Co., and eleven and a half years from the time of entering their employ he purchased a quarter interest in the business. However, in 1881 he disposed of his interest, and in 1882 started his present shoe store, which is now one of the best in this line in the city. Mr. Kellenberg is a broad-minded and public-spirited gentleman, a staunch Republican, and a valued member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In Visalia, in 1885, he married Minnie Rebecca Kelsey, who was born in Iowa and came with her parents to California. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kellenberg, Frank Guido and Louise.

ZACHARY T. BLANKENSHIP. A native son of California and born in San Joaquin county December 11, 1854, Zachary T. Blankenship has spent his entire life on the frontier, and has been an interested and intelligent spectator of the rise from obscurity of the west. On both sides of his family he is of southern ancestry, his father, William Moore Blankenship, having been born in Virginia, and his mother, Rebecca Williams, in South Carolina. William M. Blankenship removed to Iowa from Virginia in early life, married there and made Iowa his home until making his first trip across the plains during the summer of 1850. He brought a band of stock with him, sold the same in the mining camps and engaged in mining at Mokelumne Hill until 1852. Returning to Iowa by way of the Isthmus, he again brought a herd of cattle across the plains during the summer of 1853. In 1855 he made another journey to Iowa by water, and crossed the plains for the third time with cattle in 1858. On these expeditions for securing stock for the ranch which he had purchased near Stockton, Mr. Blankenship took his family with him on his three trips to the east, and had his own crew of men for his prairie schooners and stock, and at times encountered the Indians under terribly dangerous circumstances. In the fall of 1859 he came to Tulare county and bought a half-section of land, of which his son, Zachary T., still owns one hundred and fifty-six acres, added to it as occasion required, and at the time of his death, in the fall of 1883, owned, besides his farm of five hundred and sixty acres, a large amount of other property. Notwithstanding his large land ownership, Mr. Blankenship died comparatively poor, for his enterprises were conducted on a large scale, and with more or less loss on account of changes in climate. He died aged eighty-four years, and his wife died aged seventy-four. Of his children, one son and one daughter are deceased, leaving four sons to perpetuate his name and excellent qualities of mind and heart.

Although his educational opportunities were extremely limited, Zachary T. Blankenship had no cause to complain of his agricultural or stock training, for at a very early age he was taught to appreciate a good horse, cow or sheep, and in 1878 took a band of horses to eastern Oregon, engaging in the stock business there until 1884. Returning to his father's farm, he continued to raise stock, and at the present time devotes his energies to dairying, sheep, hogs and cattle raising. The Blankenship ranch presents an aspect of thrift and neatness, evidencing pronounced regard on the part of the owner for the niceties and comforts as well as profits of country life. Mr. Blankenship long voted the Democratic ticket, but owing to the attitude of his party toward the silver question, changed to the other side. He married into one of the pioneer families of the state, his wife being Hattie, daughter of John Bond, the latter a native of Louisiana and a miner of 1849. Mr. Bond was living in Nevada when his daughter was born there, and after years spent in mining he became a farmer near Modesto, this state, where his death occurred at an advanced age. In the household of Mr. and Mrs. Blankenship are two children, Helen and Bond, both attending the Visalia school. Mr. Blankenship is a remarkably well informed man, being a constant reader and having an exceptional memory. He is highly respected by both his old and new friends, and is a man whom it is pleasant and profitable to meet.

RICHARD M. BURCHELL. The name of Burchell is well known to the citizens of Merced county and is synonymous with prosperity, thrift, honesty and integrity. As a worthy scion of this distinguished family, Richard M. Burchell is filling out a life of usefulness on his fine farm of six hundred and forty acres, about two miles from Le Grand, which is a part of the old homestead. He was born October 22, 1853, in

S. J. Gilliam

Elizabeth L. Gilliam

Buchanan county, Mo., the fifth child born to Richard M., Sr., and Martha M. (Hill) Burchell, the latter a native of Kentucky.

His father, for many years a prominent rancher of Merced county, Cal., was born in County Cork, Ireland, and came to the United States when a young man. A tailor by trade, he followed that occupation for a livelihood in Maryland, and subsequently in Kentucky, where his marriage took place. In 1864 he came to California with a party of fifty persons, the trip across the plains being made with mule teams, and consuming five months' time. Upon his arrival in California, he located near Healdsburg, Sonoma county, and for three years he there gave his attention to farming. The four years following he was engaged in similar work in Napa and Monterey counties.

In 1872 Mr. Burchell purchased a large tract of land in Merced county, now known as the Burchell estate, where the remainder of his life was passed; he lived to the advanced age of seventy-two years. His ranch contained twenty-eight hundred acres, devoted to the raising of grain and stock, and is now owned and operated by his children, namely: William G., of Gilroy; James W.; Milton C.; Robert C.; Richard M., and Mary E., the wife of J. T. Rucker, of Mountainview, each of whom received a fine farm as his portion of the home place. The four sons are farming the old home place. Upon this ranch Richard M., Jr., spent his youth and early manhood and has since made his home. He was joined in matrimony with Grace Richards, who was born in Illinois, and they have two children, Leroy and Leola. Politically a Democrat, Mr. Burchell is not an active politician. He affiliates with the Fraternal Aid Society.

REV. SAMUEL T. GILLIAM. A pioneer minister of California, the Rev. S. T. Gilliam has given his best efforts toward the moral and spiritual welfare of the various communities in which his labors have lain. He was born in Clay county, Mo., February 21, 1828, the only one now surviving of a family of twelve children, all of whom attained maturity. He and a brother, Robert, came to California, while various members of the family located in Oregon. The family is of southern origin, the name flourishing in North Carolina for generations. There, in 1790, Epaphroditus Gilliam was born, becoming a farmer in manhood. Following the example of one of his ancestors he became a pioneer of Missouri, locating in the state at a time when it was necessary for the settlers to build forts for protection from the Indians. His death occurred in Platte county, Mo., after a life of usefulness and practical citizenship. One of his sons, Cornelius, became famous as General Gilliam, the hero of the Cayuse Indian war, who was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun in a wagon, after a battle won after thirty-six hours of steady fighting. Another son, Jesse, a native of North Carolina, became a farmer in Clay county, Mo., where he participated in the Mormon warfare, which resulted in the expulsion of the Mormons from that territory and their settlement at Nauvoo, Ill. In young manhood he married Jeanette McDowell, a native of South Carolina, whose father served in the Revolutionary war, dying soon afterward. Mrs. Gilliam died in Andrew county, Mo., where the death of Mr. Gilliam also occurred, at the age of seventy-six years. He made the trip across the plains in '49 with his son, teamed for several years, then returned to his farm and the peaceful pursuits of an agricultural life. In young manhood he had become a minister in the Methodist Church and was active in his efforts to advance the spiritual welfare of those about him.

Samuel T. Gilliam was reared in Clay, Platte and Andrew counties, in his native state, receiving his education in the subscription schools of that day. When scarcely large enough to reach the plow handles he was set to work to assist in the cultivation of the home farm. With ox-teams, in 1849, he crossed the plains with his father, leaving Missouri June 1, over the trail on the South Pass, Green river, Ft. Hall, then the Carson and Humboldt rivers to California. They had a pleasant and safe trip, which lasted one hundred and four days, reaching their destination ahead of the mule teams which started out with them. In Hangtown (now Placerville) S. T. Gilliam followed mining, and struck a ledge rich in quartz, but as nothing was known about that kind of mining and there were no quartz mills it meant practically nothing to him. Later he was located on the north fork of the American river, after which he went to Oregon and located on the Luckiamute, Polk county, where he took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres. He there engaged in farming until 1858, and while there began the ministry as a licentiate in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Returning to California in 1858, he located in San Ramon valley, Contra Costa county, and was there ordained as a minister. Subsequently he was located in Stockton and vicinity following the ministry. In 1860 he located in Tulare county and since that time has preached throughout Tulare, Fresno, Kings and Kern counties, organizing congregations and building churches. For thirty-four years he preached from three to five sermons a week, and at the same time did a man's work on the farm, making his living by the raising of produce rather than accept the money taken often from the poorest men of a community, giving his services gratis practically for the entire time. It is said that during his ministry he married and buried more people than any other two ministers in central California. About 1884 he retired from active work in the ministry and has since devoted his efforts to the cultivation and improvement of his property. The ranch he now owns was bought in 1867, and consists of one hundred and sixty acres, ninety acres of which he devotes to the cultivation of alfalfa. This land is under irrigation from the Gilliam & Cummings ditch, an ample supply of water being furnished. He now rents the farm, having retired from practical duties.

Near Dallas, Ore., December 27, 1852, Mr. Gilliam was united in marriage with Elizabeth Lewis, a native of Overton county, Tenn. Her father, Rev. William P. Lewis, was a native of Virginia, who, after his settlement in Tennessee, became a pioneer of Platte county, Mo. In 1852 he crossed the plains to Oregon, locating near Dallas, Polk county, where he engaged as a farmer and merchant until his death, at the age of sixty-four years. He was one of the pioneer ministers in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. His wife, formerly Jane Saddler, of Tennessee, also died in that state. Four children blessed this union, of whom Mrs. Gilliam is the only one surviving. Mr. Lewis married a second time, by his second wife having four children, all of whom are living in Oregon. Mrs. Gilliam also crossed the plains in 1852, and in Oregon met again her childhood's friend, with whom she had attended school in Platte county, Mo. Born to Mr. Gilliam and his wife are the following children: Samuel Miles, a farmer near Visalia; Alexander Sweeney, also a farmer near Visalia; Ewell Ashby, of Visalia; Emma J., the wife of Arthur Crowley, of Visalia; Adelia J., the wife of Charles Morgan, of Los Angeles; and Alice, with her brother Samuel M., located near Visalia. Mr. Gilliam was made a Mason in Dallas, Ore., in 1851, and is a charter member of Portersville Lodge 303, F. & A. M., of which he has served as chaplain since its organization. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and though offered public office he has uniformly refused. As long as he was active in the ministry of the church Mr. Gilliam served either as moderator or clerk of the Presbytery.

ARTHUR WILLIAM MATHEWSON. The Mathewson family, which had a representative in California in the person of Arthur William Mathewson, a pioneer of 1856, is of English ancestry, the first emigrant from his native shores settling in Rhode Island. There the family flourished for many generations, the first to remove from the state being Charles Mathewson, who located in Wheelock, Caledonia county, Vt. His wife was in maidenhood Sarah Williams, a native of Rhode Island and a direct descendant of Roger Williams, and a relative of Governor Sprague, of that state, where members of her family are cotton manufacturers. Charles Mathewson came to California about 1849 and for some time engaged as a miner, after which he located near Visalia, Tulare county, and made this community his home until his death.

The birth of Arthur William Mathewson occurred in Wheelock, Caledonia county, Vt., November 14, 1834, he being the sixth in order of birth in a family of ten children. Reared on his father's farm he was trained to the practical duties which fell to his lot. His early education in the public school near his home was followed by attendance at the academy at Lyndon, Vt. At sixteen years of age he started out for himself, but after working in a tannery for two years he returned to the home farm, and three years later, in 1856, came to California as a pioneer. Like the majority who thronged to the west at that time he began as a miner, and for two years was engaged in Placer county. Locating in San Jose in 1859 he bought a farm and followed general agricultural pursuits for five years, or until he lost his land, as it was found that it belonged to a Spanish grant. Coming to Tulare county he engaged in the sheep business, gradually increasing his herds until he had over four thousand head. He continued to purchase land from time to time, disposing of it as he could make a profit, but retained his home on the Farmersville road, five miles southeast of Visalia. He spent one year in Nebraska, located at Omaha, engaging in buying and selling sheep. He engaged in general farming until his death, which occurred August 17, 1896, and which removed from the community a man respected for his honorable record of years, and a citizen whose best efforts had ever been given to promote the general welfare of the community. He was especially prominent in connection with the irrigating movement in Tulare county, for seven years prior to his death being president of the People's Ditch Company.

The marriage of Mr. Mathewson united him with Lucinda Tinkham in 1861. She was a native of Ohio and the daughter of Nathaniel Tinkham, the greater part of whose life was spent in Ohio and Iowa, his death occurring in the latter state. Mrs. Mathewson came to California with her mother, Clarissa Lamper, whose death occurred in this state. Mrs. Mathewson survives her husband and is the manager of the home place of two hundred and sixty acres. Of her children, Charles is deceased; Pearl is the wife of Robert K. Ogden, who is located near the home place; Levi is also in the vicinity; Edith is the wife of William Mosher, of Visalia; Earl and James A. are at home; and Maud is deceased. One child died in infancy. Mrs. Mathewson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Mathewson was a staunch Republican in his political convictions and was an active participant in the affairs of his party. He served on the state central committee on the People's party ticket at one time, was a frequent attendant of state conventions, and was candidate for supervisor from the second district. Fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Foresters of America, and also belonged to the Tulare Grange and Patrons of Husbandry. He was an active and enterprising citizen and took a most helpful interest in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare.

WILLIAM JACOB MARTIN. The present clerk of Stanislaus county, elected to the office November 4, 1902, is a man of many sterling qualities which have won for him the material appreciation of those with whom he has come in business or social contact. A native son of the state, William Jacob Martin was born near Waterford, Stanislaus county, March 23, 1868. His father, William Harvey Martin, a native of Michigan, crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1850, upon his arrival in California engaging first in freighting to the Mariposa mines, after which he located on Dry creek, this county, and for many years conducted an inn or hotel, which was well known in the early days. Later in life he engaged in stock-raising and continued so occupied until his death June 1, 1874, on the ranch, when in his sixty-third year. His wife, formerly Adeline Gardenhire, a native of Arkansas, died October 14, 1897, also aged sixty-two years.

Of the seven children born to his parents, five sons and two daughters, three attained maturity, of whom William Jacob Martin was the oldest son and the second child. He was reared to the practical duties incident to the life of a farmer, during his boyhood years acquiring a common-school education in the school in the vicinity of their home. He was but six years old at the time of his father's death, and upon attaining manhood he engaged with his brother in farming pursuits upon the old homestead. This work remained his principal employment until his election to the office of county clerk, the duties of which office he is discharging to the satisfaction of all concerned.

In Stockton Mr. Martin was married to Laura Jane Welch, a native of Stanislaus county, and they are the parents of two children, William Erwin and Lilah Bernice. In his political convictions Mr. Martin is a Democrat, and has always been interested in the promotion of the principles which he indorses, having served at various times on the county central committee. Fraternally he is a member of Oakdale Lodge, I. O. O. F., and is also identified with the Woodmen of the World.

JOHN A. MARTIN, JR. Enterprising and successful, John A. Martin, Jr., is named among the representative men of Fresno county, where he has been located since the year 1888. His ranch, comprising one hundred and ten acres, forty-eight acres of which are given over to vines, twelve to orchard, and the balance in pasture, is located three miles north of Selma, and while these affairs occupy considerable of his time he is also interested in oil stock, being a director of the Echo Oil Company, incorporated with a capital of $200,000. Born in Preston county, W. Va., August 22, 1849, Mr. Martin is the son of John A. Martin, Sr., a native of Bavaria, Germany.

The elder Mr. Martin was brought to the United States in the care of an uncle when only two years old, and was reared to manhood in the states of Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia, in the last named making his home until 1854. In that year he became a pioneer of the state of Missouri, locating in Audrain county, where he farmed and worked at his trade of carpenter until his death. He married Margaret E. Wootring, who was a native of Preston county, W. Va. Of the four sons and three daughters born to his parents John A. Martin, Jr., was the fourth in order of birth, and was but five years old when he removed with his parents to Missouri. In the primitive schools of that state he received a limited education, after the completion of which he followed his early training and became a farmer, remaining so employed in Missouri until the spring of 1882. Coming then to California, he spent a year in the west, when he returned and again took up life in Missouri. In 1888 he located permanently in this state, purchasing in that year the first forty acres of his present ranch. Success has accompanied his efforts, and he is now the owner of the one hundred and ten acres before mentioned in the home ranch, as well as one hundred and sixty acres of pine timber located on Pine Ridge. In 1894 he built a pleasant and comfortable home.

In Missouri Mr. Martin was united in marriage with Margaret Emma Leach, a native of Ohio, and to them were born the following children: Lena F., wife of S. L. Heisinger, located near Selma; Nellie Lee, wife of M. G. Gallagher, of Woodsfield, Ohio; Luther C., a student in the schools of Berkeley; John A. and Mary Myrtle, attending the high school. Mr. Martin is a Good Templar and a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he officiates as an elder. Politically he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and has always been active in his support of its measures. In the educational interests of the community he served at one time as school director.

LEWIS HENRY. Occupying a substantial position among the active and successful agriculturists of Tulare county is Lewis Henry, whose highly-improved and well-kept ranch lies three miles west of Visalia. Pleasant, liberal and progressive, he is an important member of the community in which he resides, and is contributing his full share toward the maintenance of good order, high principles and all of those things that insure the welfare and prosperity of town and country. A native of Killycurragh, County Tyrone, Ireland, he was born March 19, 1860, in Wayne county, a son of John Henry. His father, a farmer by occupation, came from New York to California in 1886, and now resides here, making his home with a daughter. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Ferguson, died in this state. Of the children born of their union, eight grew to years of maturity, and six are now living, Lewis being the fourth child.

Remaining beneath the parental roof until twenty-one years of age, Lewis Henry acquired his early education in the district school, and while assisting his father became familiar with the various branches of agriculture as carried on in the east. Choosing the independent occupation to which he was reared, he was there engaged in farming on his own account for a number of years. Coming to the Pacific coast in 1889, Mr. Henry located in Visalia, and was here employed as a farmer and orchardist for some time. In 1903 he bought his present home ranch, which is pleasantly situated about three miles west of Visalia. It contains eighty acres of land, all under the ditch, being irrigated by the Modoc Ditch Company's ditch, in which Mr. Henry is financially interested, being a part owner. He devotes about one-half of his land to alfalfa, raising grain on the remainder, and in his operations is meeting with well-merited success. He has made improvements of an excellent character, in 1904 having erected a fine residence, which greatly enhances the attractiveness and the value of the estate.

January 14, 1885, in Savannah, Wayne county, N. Y., Mr. Henry married Miss Addie

Agnes Snyder, who was born in Conquest, Cayuga county, N. Y., which was also the birth-place of her father, Samuel Snyder. Her grandfather, William Snyder, was a lifelong farmer of Cayuga county. She comes of old Holland-Dutch stock, her paternal great-grandfather, a pioneer of Cayuga county, N. Y., having cleared from the wilderness a farm which is still in the family, being now owned and occupied by one of his descendants of the fourth generation. In 1885 Samuel Snyder removed from the ancestral home to Austinburg, Ohio, and in May, 1901, came with his family to California, and now owns and manages a farm near Visalia. He married Martha Benning, who was born in Wayne county, N. Y., a daughter of William Benning, who was of English birth and breeding, and they became the parents of three children, of whom Mrs. Henry is the second child. Mr. and Mrs. Henry have five children, namely: Bertha Marion, Myrtle May, Walter Lewis, Howard Leon and Elmer Homer. In his political views Mr. Henry affiliates with the Democratic party. A piece of good fortune fell to Mrs. Henry in the shape of the first prize offered by the San Francisco Weekly Examiner, she having subscribed to that paper April 6, 1903. The drawing took place June 3, and the check was received the next day, a telegram of congratulation announcing its arrival. This event furnished the main topic of conversation in Visalia and vicinity for many weeks afterward. Good use was made of the money, as the valuable investment proves.

GEORGE BROWN. Among the active and thriving farmers of Madera county who are aiding in every possible way its agricultural growth and development is George Brown, who, with his brother and partner, William A. Brown, is prosperously engaged in farming and stock raising near Borden. Both of these brothers are well known as men of sterling character and ability throughout the community in which they reside, and both are highly esteemed for their integrity and general worth. They are natives of the province of Quebec, Canada, William A. having been born in June, 1854, and George in August, 1858. Their father, James Brown, was born in the north of Ireland about 1819. In 1832 he immigrated to America, locating in Canada as a farmer, and is still living there, being now eighty-five years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Annie E. Armstrong, has spent her entire life in Canada.

Leaving Canada in 1875 George Brown went to New Hampshire, and in 1878 came to California with a view of making this state his permanent home, and until 1881 lived in Stockton.

John S. Swan

The ensuing three years he worked in Amador and Calaveras counties, going from the latter place to Stanislaus county in the spring of 1884, and remaining there three years. During all of these years he had worked as a wage-earner, and by prudent thrift had accumulated a goodly sum of money. In 1887 he came to Madera county, and the following year, forming a partnership with his brother, William A. Brown, was engaged in wheat raising until 1900, when the brothers bought a ranch near Borden, and have since been profitably engaged in farming pursuits. The ranch contains three hundred and twenty acres of good land, which these brothers have devoted to the raising of alfalfa, cattle and hogs, and dairying, keeping forty cows of a fine grade. Energetic and willing to labor, they also rent sixteen hundred acres, which they sow to wheat, raising excellent crops of this staple grain. The Brown brothers are typical representatives of the self-made men of Madera county, and by their own efforts have climbed the ladder of success, acquiring prominence and wealth. Both are Republicans in politics, and both are members of the Masonic fraternity and past masters of the lodge to which they belong.

George Brown, the particular subject of this sketch, married Maud H. Cunningham, a native of California, and they have three children: Marie, Gertrude and William.

JOHN SANDERSON SWAN. When the family represented by the sheriff of Merced county crossed the ocean from Wales to America they became established in New England, and several successive generations lived and labored in Oxford county, Me. There were born Capt. Thomas Swan and his father, Dudley, the latter of whom was killed by a falling tree when he was clearing a tract of timber land. The former, in addition to following the occupation of a farmer, engaged at the stone-mason's trade and made a specialty of contracting for bridge work. The title by which he was familiarly known came to him as the result of his service at the head of a company of state militia. Maine continued to be his home throughout all of his life, and he died there about 1896. In that state his wife, Eliza Sanderson, also spent her entire life; she was a daughter of John Sanderson, who was born in Maine, of Scotch descent, and engaged in farming and lumbering. The children of Capt. Thomas Swan are as follows: Mrs. Mary Caswell, of Maine; Charles, a practicing physician in Des Moines, Iowa; Thomas B., an attorney at Atlantic, Iowa, and John Sanderson, the only member of the family on the Pacific coast. The last-named was born at Waterford, Oxford county, Me., September 30, 1849, and passed the years of childhood in the town which was the home of Artemus Ward. After completing the studies of common schools he entered North Bridgton Academy in Cumberland county, where he continued for a time as a student.

Starting out to earn his livelihood at eighteen years of age Mr. Swan traveled for a year in Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois and Minnesota, and on his return to the east engaged in the sale of fruit trees in Maine, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Two years were spent in that occupation and he then became foreman for J. B. Dacy & Co., railroad contractors, with whom he continued for seven years. For the greater part of that period his work kept him in Massachusetts and Connecticut. Next he became road master for the town of Concord, Mass. He dates his residence in California and in Merced county from the year 1882, when he came to the coast region and took up farm pursuits. During the years that have since elapsed he has made a specialty of raising wheat and rye. At first he had twenty-three hundred acres in wheat. Year by year this amount increased until he was cultivating fifty-five hundred acres at the time of his election to the sheriff's office. In the care of the land the most modern machinery was utilized. To prepare the land he had six ten-inch or eight-inch plows, while the work of harvesting was done with a machine cutting a swath of thirty-two feet, the first of its size to be brought to the county. The ranch is situated four and one-half miles from Atwater, midway between the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroads, with a shipping point at each side, thus facilitating the prompt transportation of the crops. Upon being elected sheriff he disposed of his harvesting outfit.

The Democratic party, of which he has been a staunch supporter, elected Mr. Swan to the office of sheriff in 1902, and it is worthy of note that he received a majority of two hundred and ten votes over C. H. Warfield, who had held the office for fourteen years. He entered upon his duties in January, 1903, for a term of four years, and has since made his home in Merced, devoting his entire time to the proper management of his office. The jail under his charge is one of the most substantial and modern structures of its kind in the valley. In its building due regard was paid to sanitary conditions as well as to solidity of construction. The records of the office are kept neatly and systematically in modern books, adapted to their various purposes, and the entire work shows the oversight of a man of careful business methods. Being a man of remarkable memory, the sheriff finds few occasions personally to refer to the records, but keeps them properly filed for the convenience of his co-workers and also for his successors in office. He is a member of the California Association of Sheriffs and at one time took an active part in the work of the Democratic county central committee. While in Maine he served as selectman of Waterford for five years. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His marriage was solemnized in his native county November 20, 1870, and united him with Miss Saran Swan, who was born in Denmark, Me., being the daughter of Joseph Greeley Swan, a farmer of Oxford county.

JAMES F. PECK. In less than a decade James F. Peck has acquired a professional practice of financial and legal significance, embracing association with many of the most important civic and corporate complications in Merced and San Francisco. The fact that his business has increased in greater degree in the larger city is perhaps proof of his capacity for managing large affairs. In Merced Mr. Peck is appreciated as a man who has added to the prestige of the town, and as one to whose family the community owes a pioneer debt of gratitude. His father, Charles S. Peck, watched the city rise from the desert, was its most prominent builder and contractor for many years, and materially assisted in its general development.

Reared at Snelling, Merced county, James F. Peck came with his parents to Merced in 1874, and after finishing his education in the public schools entered the University of California, from which he was graduated from the law department in 1885, with the degree of LL.B. His preliminary practice was inaugurated in Merced in partnership with J. W. Breckenridge, and continued until 1892, two years before the death of the eminent lawyer. Since then Mr. Peck has conducted an independent practice, and in 1896 became attorney for the Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Company. For years he was the attorney for the Commercial Bank, and also was attorney for the Mitchell and Turner estates, and the Potter estate of San Francisco. His work in the latter city assuming such large proportions, he established an office there in the Mills Building in 1902.

In San Francisco, in 1883, Mr. Peck married Emma Spring, a daughter of one of the pioneer families of Nevada county, Cal. Three children have been born of this union, Charles Melnotte, Jesse Lydell and James Forester. Mr. Peck is independent in politics. He is a member of the State Bar Association, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Knights of Pythias. His wife is a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Peck has a profound understanding of the theory and practice of law, and his splendid health and physical endurance give promise of a career of exceptional prominence and usefulness.

JAMES MONROE ROSE. To James M. Rose belongs the distinction of having been one of the early settlers in Fresno county, Cal., for in 1878, when the county was new and undeveloped, he took up a half-section of government land about five miles southeast of the present site of Sanger, and upon this land he followed farming for sixteen consecutive years. Selling out he resided in Fresno for a few years, but for some time past he has been living retired at the home of his granddaughter, Mrs. W. A. Poole, who resides on a fruit ranch one and one-half miles east of Fowler. An Ohioan by birth, Mr. Rose was born July 1, 1823, and is a son of John and Sarah (Baker) Rose, the former born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Virginia.

The history of his ancestors chronicles the fact that both the Rose and Baker families were active participants in America's war for freedom. The paternal grandfather of James M. Rose was of German nationality, and upon coming to America took up his residence in Pennsylvania. The father of James M. Rose went to Illinois in 1825, locating in Green county, and for a number of years he followed farming and contracting in that section. He died in that state at the age of sixty-five years. James M. Rose remained at home assisting his parents until his marriage in 1848, at which time he was united with Eliza Jane Lakin, who was born in Illinois in May, 1827. After many years of happy wedded life she died in March, 1898, leaving eight children.

In 1852 Mr. Rose removed with his family to Texas, where he resided for about nine years, during which time he was engaged in farm pursuits, and in addition, devoted some attention to contracting and building. Crossing the plains to California in 1861 he spent the following winter in San Bernardino county, and the next spring (1862), he went to Sonoma county and located on a farm. He followed farming uninterruptedly for fourteen years and in the fall of 1876 was induced to go to Tulare county. It was a couple of years later that Mr. Rose took up land in Fresno county, since which time he has been identified with its progress and development. His eldest son, John S., born 1851, resides in the vicinity of Sanger, owning a forty-acre tract adjoining that of James A. Another son, Matthew S., who was for a time supervisor of Fresno county, died January 28, 1903. The third son, Lewis A., is a resident of Modesto. A daughter, Martha, became the wife of Samuel Johnson, and resides in San Mateo county. For many years Mr. Rose has been an active member of the Methodist Church. In national affairs he votes the Republican ticket.

JAMES A. ROSE was born February 14, 1864, in Sonoma county, Cal., and in the same vicinity his early boyhood days were spent. He accompanied his father to Tulare county and later to Fresno county and to Fresno. In the latter place he was profitably engaged as a paper hanger, and for a period of five years he was horticultural commissioner of Fresno county, a position which placed him for the time prominently before the public. He was united in marriage with Maggie Blunt and their home is brightened by the presence of four children, Albert, Elsie, Letis, and an infant not named. Purchasing, in 1901, the forty-acre fruit farm upon which he resides, he now devotes his time and attention to the cultivation of grapes and other fruits. He is a staunch Republican in his political convictions, and fraternally affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOHN STEPHEN HAMMOND. An extensive and well-to-do agriculturist of San Joaquin county John Stephen Hammond is prosperously engaged in his free and independent occupation on one of the pleasantest and most desirable homesteads to be found in this part of the valley. It has a fine location on the Stanislaus river, and contains three hundred and eighty-eight acres of land, one hundred acres being on the bottom, and is especially rich and fertile. With its comfortable and convenient set of buildings, and their neat and tasteful surroundings, his estate invariably attracts the attention of the passer-by, eliciting words of praise and commendation. A son of William C. Hammond, he was born October 27, 1859, in Pulaski county, Ky., which was also the birthplace of his father. His grandfather Hammond, an early settler of Kentucky, served in the war of 1812.

Bred and educated in Kentucky, William C. Hammond became a farmer from choice. Removing with his family to Missouri in 1863, he located near Savannah, where he lived two years. Intending then to go to Central America, he sold his property there, but, changing his plans, came by the Nicaragua route to California, settling in Napa county, where he was engaged in farming four years. Coming then to Stanislaus county, he took up government land on the west side, near Grayson, and there improved a ranch, on which he resided until his death, in 1894. He married Nancy Hale, who was born on a farm in Kentucky, the daughter of Stephen Hale, and she still occupies the old homestead near Grayson. Of the five boys and five girls born of their union, four boys and four girls survive, all of whom, with the exception of John Stephen, the subject of this sketch, are residents of Stanislaus county.

Obtaining the rudiments of his education in the district schools of Kentucky, John Stephen Hammond subsequently attended school in Missouri for two years, completing his studies in the public schools of Napa county, Cal. He was subsequently employed at various kinds of work, among other things working in a butcher shop in Napa, and in the quicksilver mines at Oakville. Embarking in farming on his own account, Mr. Hammond assumed charge of a ranch of one thousand acres on the west side of Stanislaus county, and in his agricultural operations met with satisfactory results, accumulating considerable money. Locating in San Joaquin county in 1897, he purchased the old Copeland ranch of three hundred and eighty-eight acres, lying on the Stanislaus river, on the Berneyville road, and is here carrying on general farming and dairying with success, raising hay, alfalfa and grain, and keeping a great deal of stock, his special breed being Durhams.

In Stockton Mr. Hammond married Mary Hettie Kingsley, who was born in Placer county, the daughter of a pioneer settler, and the niece of Joseph Hanchett, a well-known resident of San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are the parents of five children, namely: Frank, Clarence, Jesse, Elmer and Amy. In his political views Mr. Hammond sustains the principles of the Democratic party, but he is not at all radical in his opinions or judgments.

WILLIAM W. HOUSTON. A comparative-ly recent addition to professional circles of Tulare county is William W. Houston, who was admitted to the bar in 1898, and since 1900 has conducted a growing practice in the city of Visalia. Mr. Houston is of southern ancestry, and was born in Randolph county, Ark., May 26, 1854. His father, James, was born near Shelbyville, Tenn., and as a young man settled near Pochahontas, Randolph county, Ark., where he participated in the early Indian and other troubles incident to border life. During the Sabine disturbances of 1837 he enlisted in the United States army, becoming a lieutenant of the mounted gun militia of Arkansas. Before his discharge in the latter part of 1837 he had been brevetted major, emerging from the troublesome times with an enviable reputation for bravery and efficient service. He married Frances Black, a native of Virginia and an early arrival in Arkansas, and in 1859 brought his family across the plains with ox teams, spending his first winter in the west in the mining community of Hangtown, now Placerville. In the spring of 1860 he located in Visalia, purchased land near the town and lived there until his death in 1902, at the age of ninety-three years. He was permitted to enjoy the companionship of his devoted wife until the end of his life journey, she surviving him two years, her death occurring in April, 1904, at the age of eighty-four. Mr. Houston remained loyal to the spirit of the south, never regretted or saw aught reprehensible in his upholding of slavery, and stood out strongly for the Democracy as the ideal condition of government.

William W. Houston is the second oldest son and seventh oldest child in a family of eleven children, eight of whom are living. His early educational opportunities were limited, and his youth knew more of hard work on the farm than of diversion or chance for personal improvement. Through his own ability to labor and save he was enabled to begin the study of law with E. O. Larkins of Visalia, and in 1879 he journeyed to Arizona and New Mexico, where he engaged in the stock business until 1881. He then located in Visalia and continued the study of law, and after being admitted to the bar in 1898 went to Sonora, Mexico, and engaged in mining for a couple of years. Mr. Houston is a bachelor and lives with his sister Thalia in the old Houston home on Houston avenue, at the edge of the town. Like his father he also is an active Democrat, and has attended many state and county conventions, being at present a member of the county central committee. Fraternalism is identified with the Blue Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M., and Perfection Lodge of Scottish Rites.

ERNEST D. KAHL. Occupying a position of prominence among the ranchers of Merced county, Ernest D. Kahl is engaged in the cultivation of his three hundred and twenty acres, which ranch is located one mile northwest of Plainsberg, and devoted to grain and stock raising. In addition to these interests he is also farming the old Kahl ranch in conjunction with his brother, and is meeting with success in the agricultural line. A native of California, he was born in Monterey county, March 27, 1860, a son of Adam Kahl, a pioneer of the state, and an early settler of Merced county. For more complete details concerning the life of the elder man refer to his biographical sketch which appears on another page of this work. Ernest D. Kahl was brought to this county in December, 1860, and has never known any other home. Reared to young manhood upon the paternal farm, he alternated an attendance of the common schools with the practical duties to which he was early trained, and in maturity engaged in agricultural pursuits. He married Margaret Baxter, who was born in Nova Scotia, a daughter of J. C. Baxter, a prominent rancher of Merced county, where she was reared. Of this union were born two children, namely: Leslie A., and James A. In his political convictions Mr. Kahl is a Prohibitionist, and fraternally he is associated with Yosemite Parlor, N. S. G. W., Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to the Encampment, and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JOHN GILBERT EDWARDS. The people of Madera are justly proud of the character and enterprise of their business men and claim that no city of the same size in the entire state can boast of a larger number of progressive, capable and resourceful men of affairs. Whether as merchants, mechanics or tradesmen, whether as professional men or men of commerce, they have been, with few exceptions, men of the highest principles of honor and unwavering integrity of character. As an example of this class of citizens mention should be made of John Gilbert Edwards, who, with his brothers, David Franklin and James H. Edwards, has long been a factor in the business progress of the city. Mention of his ancestry and the record of his parents will be found elsewhere in this volume, in the sketch of his brother, David F., and from it the reader will see that the family is numbered among the pioneer settlers of California, having come west during the period of the great gold excitement. From that time to this the various members have contributed to the progress of the communities where they have resided.

While the family were living in Tuolumne county, this state, John Gilbert Edwards was born August 31, 1852. Primarily educated in grammar schools, he has added to the information thus acquired by subsequent habits of reading and observation, so that he is now a well-informed man. Upon starting out to earn his own way in the world he went to Borden and took up the trade of wagon-maker. After a year as an apprentice, in 1875 he started a shop of his own in that place, engaging in work especially as a repairer of wagons and carriages, but also manufacturing certain parts of the vehicles. During 1882 he operated not only this shop but a blacksmith's shop as well. Since he came to Madera in 1889 he has been engaged in the management of his wagon and carriage shop. Through his skilled workmanship he has gained a large share of the trade of Madera and the surrounding country. Among his patrons he is known as a reliable workman and an honest and honorable man. Many of them have retained his services ever since he came to the city, having been so well pleased with his work that they have never desired to look elsewhere for such labor. While he has never been prominent in political affairs nor has it been his wish to become an office holder, yet he is a pronounced upholder of the Republican party and at every election, whether local or general, votes for the men and measures of the party. In addition to his property in town, he is the owner of a grain farm in Madera county, situated near Borden, and comprising one hundred and sixty acres.

HENRY HUNSAKER. One of the oldest of the settlers in Tulare county, Henry Hunsaker is held in the highest esteem for the many qualities which have distinguished his long residence in this part of the state. A native of Adams county, Ill., he was born seven miles from Quincy November 13, 1835. His father, Isaac Hunsaker, was a native of Kentucky, and the descendant of an old Kentucky family whose first American ancestors came originally from Germany. Isaac Hunsaker engaged in farming in Adams county until 1837, in which year he removed to Platte county, Mo. That location remained his home until 1846, when he became a resident of Fremont county, Iowa. Daniel Hunsaker, a brother, was a participant in the Black Hawk war and became a pioneer of California in 1848, crossing the plains and locating in Contra Costa county, first at Benicia, Solano county, and afterward at Martinez. He died at Woodville, Tulare county, in June, 1897. Isaac Hunsaker crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1850, locating first in Taylor valley, near Martinez, Contra Costa county, where he engaged in farming for about eight years. In 1858 he came to Tulare county and bought lands on the Tule river and Elk bayou, making his home five miles north of Woodville until his death in 1885, at the age of seventy-eight years. In early life he had been a member of the Baptist Church, but was later associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, formerly Sarah King, a native of Kentucky, died in Fremont county, Iowa, leaving a family of four sons and one daughter, of whom three sons are now living, as follows: Henry, of this review; George, a dentist in San Luis Obispo; and William, located on the Tule river. Of his second marriage, to Mary Walker, three children are living: Clara E., Elizabeth, wife of James Daley, of Contra Costa county, living on the old homestead, and Dr. H. W. Hunsaker, of San Francisco.

Henry Hunsaker was eleven years old when he was left motherless. He was reared in Missouri and Iowa, attending the public schools of each state in the vicinity of his home. With his father he crossed the plains in 1850, driving loose stock. The journey was made by way of Sublett's Cut-off, and Humboldt and Carson route, and the party arrived in Hangtown September 1, and September 29 of the same year, arrived in Martinez. For a time Henry remained on his father's farm in Contra Costa county, attending the public schools, and shortly afterward became a student in McMinnville Baptist College, in McMinnville, Ore., where he remained two years. Returning to California, he began stock-raising. In 1862 he located in Tulare county and engaged in stock-raising on the Tule river until 1873, when the railroad was put through the county and the town of Tulare was established. He then entered into agricultural pursuits, farming from one thousand to five thousand acres of land on the Tule river and the Terra Bella country, using in his work thirteen eight-horse teams. He continued in this extensive farming until 1902, when he sold his homestead of about ten hundred and fifty-eight acres five miles north of Woodville, retaining three hundred and twenty acres twelve miles south of Portersville. At present his family is located in Tulare and he is engaged in farming about eight hundred acres.

Mr. Hunsaker has been twice married, the first ceremony being performed in San Rafael and uniting him with Mary F. Shuey, a native of Illinois, and daughter of Samuel D. Shuey, who came to California in 1852. Her death occurred September 7, 1880. She left a family of six children, namely: Carrie, the wife of Henry Roth, of Visalia; Charles H., on the home ranch; Harry, the manager of Travelers' Insurance Company of San Francisco; Kittie, the wife of W. H. Williams, of Los Angeles county; Mattie Jewell, who died in infancy; and Walter S., representing the Travelers' Insurance Company in Tulare. Mrs. Mary F. Hunsaker and her daughter Mattie Jewell lie buried in the Tulare Cemetery, where a monument to their memory towers above their graves. By his second marriage Mr. Hunsaker was united with Mrs. Frances C. (Hunsaker) Hastings, a native of Marion county, Mo., and the daughter of Enoch Hunsaker, of Kentucky. Enoch Hunsaker crossed the plains in 1850 and located first in Sacramento county, and later in Contra Costa county. Subsequently he removed to Tulare county and in 1864 engaged as a stockman, his death occurring in this locality in 1878. His wife, Emily Hunsaker, died in Sacramento in 1852. Mrs. Hunsaker was first married in Martinez to Lyman H. Hastings, a native of Ohio, who in 1849 came across the plains to California. He first conducted a meat market in Martinez, in 1870 removing to Tulare county, where he engaged in stock-raising until his death in 1874.

Mr. and Mrs. Hastings were the parents of six children, namely: Warren W., a farmer at Terra Bella; Leslie L., who died February 7, 1880, at nineteen years of age; Lyman F., of Modesto, a civil engineer and superintendent of the Turlock Irrigation District; Ulysses G., in Fairbanks, Alaska, engaged in mining; Ada, the wife of R. F. Roth, of Visalia; and Herbert J., representing the Remington Typewriter Company in San Francisco. To Mr. and Mrs. Hunsaker was born one child, Gyneth.

In his political affiliations Mr. Hunsaker is a staunch Democrat and is now a member of the county central committee, and is on the executive board. He has served one term as supervisor of the Fifth district. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Martinez and in 1864 was demitted to the Visalia Lodge, where he is still a member. He is a member of the Tulare County Pioneer Society, of which he served for three years as commander, holding office until September, 1904, when he refused longer service. He is a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Woodville, which he helped materially to build. He serves as trustee and steward of the same, and for many years acted as superintendent of the Sunday-school.

HENRY BREM. Many of the most thrifty and successful agriculturists of Stanislaus county were born and bred on the European continent, and to the little republic of Switzerland, especially, is California indebted for some of her most enterprising and prosperous citizens. Prominent among this number is Henry Brem, who has resided on his home farm, not far from Oakdale, for a quarter of a century, during which time he has established for himself an excellent reputation as a thoroughly honest and worthy man. A native of Switzerland, he was born, in December, 1841, in Schlieren, canton of Zurich, which was also the birthplace of his father, Jacob Brem, Jr. and his grandfather Jacob Brem, Sr.

The son of a farmer, Jacob Brem, Jr., was bred to agricultural pursuits, which he followed in his earlier life. He subsequently became railroad agent in his native town, and was there employed as a ticket seller until his death, at the age of sixty-three years. He married Susanna Poshart, who was born in Ambrach, canton of Zurich, where her father, Conrad Poshart, spent his entire life, being a prosperous farmer and wine manufacturer. She died at the age of seventy-one years. Of the five children born of their union, one daughter, Caroline, died when young, and four are living, Henry, the firstborn, and the subject of this sketch being the only one in America. The other three are still residents of Schlier-en, namely: John, in the employ of a railway company; Hans H., a farmer and forester; and Mrs. Louisa Humble.

Until twelve years old, Henry Brem lived on a farm in Schlieren, and attended the grammar school. Beginning life then as a wage-earner, he worked as a farm laborer until 1860, when he immigrated to this country, hoping in this land of plenty to soon acquire riches. Locating in Seneca county, Ohio, he remained there a year, and then, in the spring of 1870, came westward to the Pacific coast, and for six months thereafter was employed on a dairy farm in San Joaquin county. Accepting a position on the ranch of J. K. Meyer in the fall of 1870, he remained with him, near Stockton, until 1877, in the meantime acquiring a practical knowledge of the modern methods of farming, and accumulating considerable money. Removing to Stanislaus county in 1878, Mr. Brem purchased his present ranch of one hundred and eighty-six acres, lying five miles from Oakdale, on the river road, and has since been busily and profitably engaged in general farming, including grain and stock raising. He also devotes a part of his time to the culture of fruit, having a fine orchard, and raises much poultry. In his labors, Mr. Brem has met with signal success, his finely-appointed and well-cultivated farm, with its substantial residence and outbuildings, bearing evidence of his thrift, skill, ability and excellent management.

In Elkhart, Ind., Mr. Brem married Barbara E. Hoenstein, a native of Indiana, and they have one child, namely: William T., living at home. Politically Mr. Brem is identified with the Republican party, and religiously he is a valued member of the Evangelist Reformed Church.

HARRIS W. PATTERSON. Conspicuous among the energetic and enterprising agriculturists of Madera county is Harris W. Patterson, whose ability, industry and business tact have won for him a position of note among the prominent husbandmen of this section of the state, and have made him a fine representative of its industrial interests. Located about six miles south of the city of Madera, he has a well-improved ranch, which he is managing with characteristic success, devoting it largely to general farming and dairying. A son of the late Hiram S. Patterson, he was born August 12, 1861, in Tennessee, where the earlier years of his life were spent.

A native of Tennessee, H. S. Patterson owned a good farm in that state, and was also engaged in business in Smith county, as a merchant for a number of years, and identified with the lumber interests of his native place as the owner and manager of a sawmill. In 1870 he emigrated with his family to California, and in 1873 settled in Fresno (now Madera) county, near Borden. Taking up government land, he cleared and improved a ranch, on which he resided until his death, at the age of sixty-seven years. His wife, whose maiden name was Lydia Aminett, was born and bred in Tennessee.

Coming with his parents to the Pacific coast in 1870, Harris W. Patterson has spent the larger part of his life in Madera county, where he assisted his father in the improvement of the old home ranch. He now owns a valuable farm of two hundred and forty acres, ninety-five acres of which he sows to alfalfa, devoting the remainder of it largely to grain raising. He is also interested to some extent in dairying, keeping about twenty-five cows. Progressive in his views, and a man of great activity and enterprise, Mr. Patterson carries on a very extensive business during harvest time, as proprietor of a threshing-machine, being owner of one of the two steam threshing-machines in Madera county. He has been employed in this business for twenty-eight years, and in operating his steam thresher employs twenty-one men, paying them $55 per day wages, during the season. With his machine, for which he paid $6,000, he threshes out about sixty-five thousand bags, or one hundred and thirty-five thousand bushels, of grain a season.

Mr. Patterson married Minnie Lillian Lester, who was born in Iowa, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Ward A., Frederick L., James B. and Merritt P.

ADAM KAHL. The late Adam Kahl will be gratefully remembered by many of the old residents of Merced county as one of the foremost men of his day in that section of the country, having located in 1860 on the place known as the Kahl ranch, which is in the vicinity of Plainsberg, along Mariposa creek. From the date of purchasing this land Mr. Kahl was active in all organizations for the benefit of the farmers, and took a fitting interest in every movement calculated to benefit his fellow-citizens and to advance the interests of his county and state. His ranch contained two thousand acres, upon which he spent both time and money in bringing it to a high state of cultivation and building thereon many substantial buildings. Among the improvements were a splendid brick residence, which alone represented a big outlay of capital, large barns and granaries, good fences, wells, windmills, etc. In addition, his farm was well stocked with none but the best breed of cattle, horses, hogs and poultry. During his many years of labor he thoroughly tested the capabilities of the soil, and his success, confidence and expenditures, not only inspired the doubting ones with confidence, but induced many others to settle in Merced county.

In tracing the ancestry of Mr. Kahl, we find him to be a son of Jacob and Catherine Kahl. He was born September 6, 1825, in Franklin county, Pa., and in that vicinity spent his boyhood days on his father's farm. He afterward went to Richland county, Ohio, and later to Carroll county, Ind., and while in the latter place conceived the idea of coming to California. He did not hesitate long, but making hasty preparations, left home and proceeded to the vicinity of Delphi, in that county, from which point he followed the course of the Wabash river and soon afterward was enabled to take passage down the Mississippi river to New Orleans. At the latter place he embarked on a sailing vessel, landing at Chagres on the Isthmus of Panama. Crossing the latter, the journey to San Francisco was completed on the barque Alyoma, and he arrived in that city June 20, 1850, having made the journey from Panama in eighty-one days.

Upon his arrival in California, he engaged in mining with fair success for four years, in Butte Flat and in the Mokelumne Hill and River districts. He returned home for a visit in 1855 and spent the winter with his father in the east. He subsequently went to Iowa, and a season or two later found him located in Pettis county, Mo. There on the fourth day of July, 1858, he wedded Lydia A. Spangenberg, a native of Luzerne county, Pa., and a year later proceeded to California. This time the trip was made across the continent behind ox teams by the northern route through Utah and Carson City, over the summit of the mountains to Calaveras county as far as Bigtrees. Mr. Kahl arrived in Snelling, Merced county, October, 1859, but afterward moved to Pajaro valley in Monterey county, where he lived until December, 1860, purchasing at that time the ranch near Plainsberg, now owned by his widow and sons. The former resides on the old homestead, being seventy-six years old, and the latter are among the most prosperous and influential ranchers in Merced county. The Kahl ranch of two thousand acres was purchased by Mr. Kahl for from $1.25 to $35 per acre. At the time of his death, January 11, 1889, Merced county lost one of her most progressive and active citizens. His fine estate was divided between his widow and children, each child receiving three hundred and twenty acres; the ranch as owned by the members of the family now contains sixteen hundred and eighty acres. His children, five in number, are as follows: Ernest D.; Alice M., wife of John Dickinson, of Mariposa county; George A.;

Charles W., a successful physician in San Francisco, and Arthur S., of San Luis Obispo county. To such men as Mr. Kahl Merced county owes much of her prosperity.

HON. WILLIAM M. CONLEY. Ever since the organization of Madera county, with which he was intimately identified, Judge Conley has been a Democratic leader in the county and one of the most influential citizens of the city of Madera. His entire life has been passed in central California. Born in Mariposa county July 17, 1866, he is a son of Matthew and Margaret (Ryan) Conley, natives respectively of Ireland and Maine. When a very small child Matthew Conley was left an orphan and at the age of seven crossed the ocean to New York with older members of the family. Few advantages came to his boyhood years, for he was obliged to earn his livelihood at an age when most boys are in school; yet, by thoughtful reading and self-culture, he gained a breadth of knowledge not always possessed by college graduates. From New York he went to Chicago and later purchased from Colonel Beaubien the old Fort Dearborn hotel which he sold in 1862. During that year he came to California and took up mining in Mariposa county, but in 1870 removed to Snelling, Merced county, where he continued to reside until his death in 1871. His wife, who now makes her home with Judge Conley, is a daughter of John Ryan, who moved from Maine to Chicago and in 1849 crossed the plains to California with ox-teams, settling in Coulterville, Mariposa county, where he engaged in mining from the time of his arrival until his death in 1890. In the family of Matthew Conley there were only three children, William M., C. C. and J. T. The latter since 1894 has served as the official reporter of the superior court of Madera and Mariposa counties.

After having completed the course of study in the Merced public schools and graduated from the Stockton Business College, William M. Conley taught school for four years in Merced and Butte counties. In 1889 he became chief deputy assessor of Merced county and continued in that capacity until the expiration of the term of the incumbent, M. D. Wood, whereupon, in October, 1890, he took up the study of law. On successfully passing the required examination, January 13, 1891, he was admitted to the supreme court. His initial experience as a practitioner was gained at Bakersfield, but ill health led him to return to Merced. In 1892, as the Democratic nominee for district attorney, he was defeated by F. G. Ostrander by ninety majority. December 4, 1892, he came to Madera, his object in so doing being to assist the county in the county division struggle then being fiercely waged. To promote the cause, he spent a considerable part of the winter of 1892-93 in the state legislature, endeavoring to interest assemblymen. In a large measure it was due to his efforts that victory was won. At the first county election, May 16, 1893, he was candidate for superior judge, and received fifty-one plurality over the three independent candidates. May 20, 1893, he was elevated to the bench and took the oath of office, being the youngest superior judge that had up to that time been elected in the state. At the general election of 1894, as the Democratic nominee, he was elected for a term of six years, receiving a plurality of four hundred over the Republican and Populist candidates.

During the session of the Democratic state convention at Sacramento in 1898 Judge Conley was nominated for associate justice of the supreme court, over Judge James V. Coffey, Judge J. W. Hughes, Joe Hamilton (ex-attorney-general), L. D. McKisseck, ex-Chief Justice of Tennessee, and five others. The contest was one of the most exciting in the history of the Democratic party of California. By the aid of the Santa Clara delegation he was nominated on the fourth ballot. In addition, he was the nominee of the People's party and the silver wing of the Republican party. However, in the general election the entire Democratic ticket suffered defeat. It was a source of gratification to his ardent supporters that he ran sixteen thousand votes ahead of his ticket, being defeated by some three thousand votes, while the candidate for governor lost by nearly twenty thousand. At the biennial session of the state legislature in 1899 he received the unanimous vote of the Democratic senators and assemblymen for the United States senate. In 1900 the Democratic county convention placed him in nomination for superior judge over two competitors. His election was bitterly opposed and the campaign was one that called for arduous labor. When election day came the county went Republican for the first time in its history, President McKinley receiving a majority of twenty-seven. Notwithstanding this, he was elected judge by a majority of one hundred and forty-eight, a fact which furnishes added proof of his popularity. In January, 1901, he entered upon the administration of his duties for a term of six years.

One of the most remarkable facts in connection with Judge Conley's experience on the bench is summed up in the statement that he has tried over thirteen hundred cases in the various counties of the state and in the appealed cases only four have been reversed, two of these four having been tried by jurors. Such a record is unsurpassed in the state. While he is a staunch Democrat, politics does not enter into his service upon the bench, nor are personal reasons ever allowed to influence his decisions. Calmness and impartiality characterize his mental deliberations. With a comprehensive sweep of mind, he reviews the disputed points in a case, weighs up the evidence logically and reaches a decision promptly. Indeed, his attributes of mind are such as qualify him admirably for judicial labors.

The marriage of Judge Conley was solemnized in Merced and united him with Emma Bedesen, who was born in Gallatin, Mo., and in 1875 accompanied her father, Philip Bedesen, to California, settling in Merced. Judge Conley has two sons, Philip and Matthew. In fraternal connections he is associated with Fresno Lodge, B. P. O. E.; Madera Lodge No. 130, K. of P., in which he is past chancellor; Yosemite Parlor No. 24, N. S. G. W., of which he is past president; Madera Parlor No. 134, N. S. G. W., in which he has likewise held the highest office, being further honored by election as grand president of the order, Native Sons of the Golden West, in 1898-99. Few men in California are as well known throughout the state as he and none has accomplished more in promoting the welfare of his city and county through the distinguished character of his public services.

WILLIAM W. COLLINS. The sheriff of Tulare county is a member of an eastern family and a son of Albert O. Collins, a veteran of the Civil war, who for more than thirty years has been identified with the citizenship of California. Born in Ohio, he was a young man when the war began between north and south, and, fired with enthusiasm in behalf of the Union, he offered his services to his country. During April of 1862 he became a soldier in the Eighty-fifth Illinois Infantry, and for three years remained in the service, holding rank as captain of Company C. On the expiration of the war he returned to Coshocton, Ohio, where he had previously established his family and where for a time he taught school. In the spring of 1866 he removed to Missouri and settled on a farm in Putnam county, where also he engaged in teaching school. Coming to California in May of 1873, he first settled at Bakersfield, Kern county, where he followed the butcher's trade and later conducted a large ranch. From there in 1887 he went to Inyo county, where he still follows the stock business, occupying a large ranch near Bishop. In young manhood he married Sarah J. Cochoran, a native of Ohio. They are the parents of three sons and two daughters, namely, Charles A., sheriff of Inyo county, to which office he was elected on the Democratic ticket; William W., who was elected sheriff of Tulare county on the Republican ticket; John L., who has stock interests with his father on the ranch in Inyo county; Minnie, wife of W. L. Blythe, of Chico, Butte county; and Leora, who married Bertrand Rhine and lives at Bishop, this state.

On the home farm near Coshocton, Ohio, William W. Collins was born June 23, 1865. On completing the studies of the common schools he became a pupil of the Visalia normal school, where he remained during the terms of 1882-83, and then entered the California state normal school at Los Angeles. His education completed, he turned his attention to the active duties of life. For a time he assisted his father in the cattle business. Leaving home in 1880 he came to Tulare county and embarked in wheat raising, in addition to which he conducted a livery business. During 1805 he engaged in buying wheat in Tulare and Kern counties for the Farmers' Union Milling Company of Stockton, and in 1806 accepted a position with J. Goldman & Co., of Tulare, as foreman of their lands, orchards and stock.

Ever since attaining the age of twenty-one years Mr. Collins has been an active factor in local politics, and has been a frequent participant in the workings of the county central committees of the Republican party. In view of his activity in the party, as well as by reason of the possession of characteristics qualifying him for the office, he was selected by his party in the county convention of 1902 as their candidate for the position of sheriff, and was duly elected for a term of four years. Not only has his service thus far been satisfactory to the party electing him, but also the general public has recognized in him an official determined to preserve law and order; impartial, fearless and just, one whom the law-abiding element could look to with the fullest faith in the painstaking discharge of his duties. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World, Fraternal Aid, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and Lodge and Encampment of Odd Fellows, in which he has been an officeholder. Sharing with him in the esteem of the people of Visalia is his wife, formerly Louise Clarke, who was born and reared in Inyo county, and by whom he has three daughters, Hazel, Vera and Blanche.

WILLIAM J. HARDWICK. Although San Francisco has profited by the citizenship of William J. Hardwick since 1883, Merced county gains by the possession of his business interests, centered in a grain ranch of two thousand acres, upon which he has expended the best years of his active life. Mr. Hardwick is a southerner by birth, Alabama being his native state, and his natal day May 23, 1834. His father, Thomas Hardwick, was born in Georgia, and his mother, Anna (McFarland) Hardwick, was born in Tennessee in 1812. This devoted mother, who reared her children with so much care, is still living in Merced county, and is ninety-two years of age, being perhaps the oldest living resident of this county. Longevity is not noticed to so great an extent in the paternal family, for Thomas Hardwick died at a comparatively early age in 1873, on the ranch in Merced county upon which he settled in 1859. About 1846 he removed from Georgia to Missouri with his family, and there became interested in farming, in which he achieved a fair measure of success. He was a Democrat in politics, but too much of a home-loving man to desire or be willing to accept positions of official trust.

William J. Hardwick was fourteen when his family settled in Missouri, and twenty years old when he came to Merced county. At once he became interested in the cattle business, at which he continued until 1864, when he turned his attention to sheep raising. He added to his original purchase until he owned two thousand acres, fifteen hundred of which are now under barley and wheat. Since 1883 Mr. Hardwick has made his headquarters at 1719 Oak street, San Francisco, but the disagreeable weather during the summer drives him to the country, and his ranch continues from year to year to be a source of pleasure, recreation and profit to him. Mr. Hardwick married Anna Miller, a native of New York, now deceased. He is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is identified with the Lodge and Royal Arch in Masonry, having been made a Mason in 1861. It may be said of Mr. Hardwick that he thoroughly understood and appreciated the advantages by which he was surrounded in the west, and turned them to the best possible account. In consequence he is one of the prominent and financially substantial men of Merced county. His neighboring ranchers speak of him in highest terms, praising his character and great good sense, and regret that he is not permanently located in the county which has profited by his example of industry, thrift and progressive spirit.

JOHN HALL. For twenty-five years John Hall has owned and occupied his present ranch of three hundred and thirty-seven acres on the Stanislaus river, twenty-five miles southeast of Stockton, twelve miles northwest of Oakdale, and three miles from Escalon. He is one of the early settlers of California, having lived in the state since his seventeenth year, arriving in 1857 with his father, William, and the rest of the family. Mr. Hall was born in Alton, Ill., April 20, 1840. William Hall was born in the state of Georgia, coming from an old southern family of Scotch-Irish extraction.

In early manhood William Hall married Nancy Eubank, and for some years combined his trade of carpentering with the management of his farm in Georgia. He became a very early settler of Alton, Ill., and when his son John was three years old removed to what was then Greene county, Mo., where he took up government land and farmed until coming to California in 1857. Crossing the plains with ox-teams and prairie schooner, he completed the distance from Missouri to Farmington, Cal., in five months, remaining in Farmington until 1864. For the following two years he lived in Oregon, but not liking the northern state so well as California, returned in 1866, living near Escalon until his death at the age of eighty-four years. His wife, who survived him two years, was over eighty at the time of her death, and but three of her children are living, namely: John, the special subject of this sketch; George W., a rancher in Stanislaus county; and Richard G., residing in Arizona.

John Hall was an industrious lad, and became a painstaking, conscientious farmer. While yet on the home place he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, and shortly after his marriage in 1866, at the age of twenty-six to Stella J. Huntley, daughter of L. L. and Matilda (Brown) Huntley and a native of Illinois and California pioneer of 1852, he settled on his farm and lived there five years. He then removed to Stanislaus county and rented three hundred and twenty acres for four years, and about twenty-five years ago came to his present farm, which is under barley and oats, and which has besides a home orchard, and a dairy of fifteen cows. Mr. Hall is essentially a self-made man, never having depended on any assistance from his family, as he desired to be the architect of his own fortune. He has sometimes felt the pinch of hard times, but has always profited by his experiences, and has laid a solid foundation of industry and integrity under his steady, well directed life. With the assistance of his frugal wife he has gained steadily each year, and now has a competence which places those near and dear to him beyond the possibility of want. His children have been trained to look out for themselves, and long since his two oldest sons, William S. and Harlow have left the family roof and are ranching on their own responsibility, the former in San Joaquin, and the latter in Stanislaus county. His eldest daughter, Ida, is married and has a home of her own, as has also his second oldest daughter, Desisie. Frank, Reuben Roy and Erma Matilda, the three youngest children, are still on the home place. All of the children save Ida were born in San Joaquin county, she being born in Stanislaus county. Mr. Hall takes a lively interest in political and other undertakings of his county, but is essentially a home man, finding his greatest consolation at his own fireside, so that offices or public honors of any kind have never appealed to him. He is a rugged and honest son of the soil; a plain, unpretentious man, having a just scorn for falsehood and pretense, and a wholesome admiration for what is upright and noble.

JOHN H. OWEN. Although purchasing his present ranch as recently as November, 1902, John H. Owen needs no introduction to the people of a county whose best interests he has served as farmer and stock raiser for his entire business life. He is one of the wealthy and substantial men of the vicinity of Escalon, San Joaquin county, owning not only his home farm of four hundred and eleven acres, but having besides a farm of one hundred and sixty acres near Cometa Station. Probably no farmer in the county is more comfortably situated than Mr. Owen, his place having every improvement known to modern agricultural science. Ninety acres of his land are under alfalfa, a number of acres under barley, and he has a home vineyard of forty acres under the ditch. The place is located on the French Camp road, twenty miles southeast of Stockton, and eight and a half miles northwest of Oakdale. His other farm is under grain entirely, netting him a handsome yearly income.

Mr. Owen was born in Meigs county, Tenn., October 15, 1862, a son of James R. and Catherine (Hunt) Owen, both natives of Meigs county. The paternal grandfather, George P. Owen, was a native of Kentucky, where he owned a large plantation previous to removing to Tennessee. The maternal family of Hunt came originally from Virginia, and were early settlers of Meigs county. James R. Owen brought his family to California in 1860, settling in San Joaquin county, this side of Stockton, on the French Camp road, upon what was known as the Turner ranch. A year later he removed to near Waterloo, and rented a farm for a year, then farmed near Farmington for thirty years. He gained an enviable reputation as a business man and agriculturist, having a capacity for large interests, and much managerial ability. Near Farmington he rented four sections of grain land, paying for the same $110,000 during the time he rented it, but notwithstanding this enormous rental made money rapidly. At the present time he is living retired at Linden, this county. He is a Democrat in politics, and for many years has been a Mason.

Until 1885 John H. Owen remained at home with his father, then left the farm to engage in the mercantile business in Farmington under the firm name of Long & Owen. During the five years in which he prospered as a merchant he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, eventually locating thereon, and engaging in farming and stock-raising. Later he rented four hundred acres more, and in 1892 rented fourteen hundred and forty acres of grain land, in 1896-97 having as many as twenty-seven hundred and twenty acres under grain, the greater part of it comprising the old Leach ranch. He next came to his present farm, which has proved of great fertility and adaptability, rendering possible a variety of products.

Mr. Owen married Sarah E. Griffin, of Stanislaus county, and daughter of Mitchell Griffin, a deceased pioneer of 1849. The children in the Owen household are Alva, Lizzie, Arthur and Hazel. Mr. Owen is an enthusiastic fraternalist, being a member of the Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, and Woodmen of the World. He is highly respected for his industry, good judgment, success and integrity, and for his interest in all that pertains to the upbuilding of San Joaquin county.

DAVID FREELAND. An important factor in the development of the industrial resources of Madera county, David Freeland occupies an honored position among the progressive and skillful farmers of this section of California. His ranch, pleasantly located near the town of Madera, is a well-appointed and well-kept estate, his stock and machinery being of first-class description, his buildings ample and commodious, everything about the premises indicating to the passer-by the thrift, industry and keen judgment of the owners. Like many others of our most prosperous and valued citizens, he is of foreign birth and breeding, being a native of Scotland, where he was born March 20, 1862. His father, William Freeland, a native of Scotland, was a farmer by occupation, and married Jean Sillars, also of Scotch birth and parentage.

Reared to agricultural pursuits, David Freeland remained with his parents until twenty years of age, working on the home farm as a boy, and afterward learning the trade of stone-cutter, which he followed four years. Immigrating to Nova Scotia, he spent a year and a half in Halifax, and then migrated to the States, coming to California in search of a favorable location. Settling first near Selma, Fresno county, he began life in this state as a farmer, purchasing a ranch five miles south of Selma. Coming to Madera in 1900, Mr. Freeland, with I. L. Borden, purchased the present ranch of six hundred acres, and has since been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits as manager of the business. He raises grain and stock, and is also interested in the culture of fruit, having an orchard of thirty acres and a vineyard equally as large. In addition to this he devotes two hundred and fifty acres of this ranch to alfalfa, on the remainder raising grain. As a stock grower and dairyman, he has acquired a good reputation, his dairy of one hundred cows being one of the best in this part of the county. He uses a separator in his dairy, and on the ranch are four wells, one hundred and twenty feet deep, from which the water is drawn by a twenty-five-horse power engine.

March 19, 1889, Mr. Freeland was married to Jean Rice, who was born in California, and into their household three children have been born, namely: Margaret W., Jean S. and David, Jr. During his residence in California, Mr. Freeland has always enjoyed the respect and confidence of his neighbors and friends, and has well performed his part as a faithful citizen. Politically he is identified with the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

FIELDING A. COMBS, M. D., of Visalia, has proved himself worthy of his heritage, and in following his chosen profession has added luster to the name which had for several generations been prominent in the medical calendars of the southern and central states. During his many years of practice in Tulare county he has won the confidence and esteem of the people to a noteworthy extent, his skill and ability being widely known and highly appreciated. Although now practically retired, he does a little office work for some of his old friends. A son of Dr. Ennis Combs, he was born in Mount Sterling, Montgomery county, Ky., August 10, 1825, coming from substantial Scotch-Irish ancestry. His grandfather, Cuthbert Combs, removed from his native state, Virginia, to Kentucky, locating there in pioneer days, and by industry and good management improving a large farm.

Born in Virginia, Ennis Combs received good educational advantages, and in 1815 was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania with the degree of M. D. Going to Kentucky, he commenced his medical career at Mount Sterling, where he was for many years the leading physician. Settling in Independence, Mo., in 1842, he continued in practice there until his death, in 1849. He married Mary Hinde, who was born in Winchester, Clark county, Ky., a daughter of Dr. John W. Hinde, a native of Virginia, who was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania with the degree of M. D. in 1795, and was afterward successfully engaged in the practice of his profession in Virginia and Kentucky. His father, Dr. John W. Hinde, Sr., served as a surgeon in the English navy during the French and Indian war. During the Revolutionary war he was a surgeon in Washington's army, and after the close of the war, settled in Winchester, Ky., where he practiced medicine until his death, at the advanced age of ninety-six years. Of the union of Dr. Ennis and Mary (Hinde) Combs, twelve children were born, of whom six sons and four daughters grew to years of maturity, Dr. F. A., of this review, being the oldest child now living. The mother died in 1836.

Having laid a substantial foundation for his future education in his youthful days, F. A. Combs completed the literary course at Transylvania University, in Lexington, Ky., when but eighteen years old. Entering then the medical department of the same institution, he was graduated from there with the degree of M. D. in 1847. Thus prepared to follow in the footsteps of his father, his maternal grandfather and great-grandfather, Dr. Combs began the practice of his profession in Missouri, being first located at Independence. He subsequently took a full course in the medical department of the University of Missouri, after which, in 1849, he located in Marshall, then a mere hamlet, containing but fifteen inhabitants. As the town grew his practice increased, becoming very large and remunerative, his professional knowledge and skill being recognized throughout that part of the state. During the Mexican war, Dr. Combs served under General Kearney, in Doniphan's Regiment of Mounted Infantry. After the close of the war he returned to Marshall, where he remained as a physician and surgeon until 1877.

Coming from Missouri to the Pacific coast in 1877, Dr. Combs resided in Lake county two years. In 1879 he located in Visalia as a physician and surgeon, and for a quarter of a century was the foremost practitioner in Tulare county. He won an extensive patronage among the best people of this vicinity, and is now practically retired from active professional duties, a respected and honored citizen, held in high regard by old and young. He is still county and city health officer, ably filling the position which he has held the past ten years. In Saline county, Mo., Dr. Combs married Elizabeth Carthrae, who was born in Missouri, of Scotch parents. She died in Missouri in 1877, leaving six children, namely: Howard Matthew, a graduate of the St. Louis Dental College, now practicing his profession in Visalia; Mary, of Los Angeles; Sydnor, at home; Nannie Letcher, a resident of Visalia; Sarah, an educator in Visalia; and James, who was graduated from the Nashville

Mrs. John McBriar

John M. Briar

Seminary with the degree of D. D. S., now practicing dentistry in Visalia. The doctor is a valued member of the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society. He takes great interest in the welfare of city and county, and in his political affiliations is a strong Democrat, and an ex-member of the county central committee. He has the distinction of being the oldest Mason in the valley, having united with the Masonic Order at Independence, Mo., in 1846. He is now a member of Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M., and Marshall Chapter, R. A. M., of Marshall, Mo. In 1849 the doctor joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, but is not now affiliated with the order.

JOHN MCBRIAR. Noteworthy among the leading citizens and business men of Tulare county is John McBriar, a man of more than average intelligence and ability, whose large and well-improved ranch lies midway between Reedley and Dinuba, being three and one-half miles from either place. Energetic and enterprising, in the prime of a vigorous manhood, he is respected and esteemed by a large circle of friends, neighbors and acquaintances, and is enjoying, as he well deserves, a generous portion of this world's goods. Like many other of our most prosperous and worthy residents, he was born and bred in a foreign country, his birth having occurred November 12, 1861, near Belfast, Ireland. His father, John McBriar, Sr., was born there also, and with the exception of a brief visit to Nova Scotia spent his life in that vicinity, being employed as a stockman. He was of Scotch descent, as was his wife, Mary Jamison, who was born in County Down, Ireland, and spent her entire life in her native isle. They became the parents of six children, five of whom are living, only two of them being in America, namely: John, the subject of this sketch; and James, a member of the firm, and the manager of the Morton Baking Company, Detroit, Mich.

The oldest child of the parental household, John McBriar was brought up on the home farm, receiving his early education in the national school. Leaving his native land when sixteen years old, he immigrated to Ontario, locating in Ottawa in 1878, and there being employed for a time in the Ironside mines. Going thence to the upper part of Michigan, he worked in the Calumet and Hecla copper mines for a while, and was afterwards similarly engaged in the phosphate mines on the Lievre river, Lower Canada. Successful in his operations, Mr. McBriar went to Arizona in 1885, prospected in the silver regions of Tombstone for a few months, from there going to Guaymas, Mexico, and thence to La Paz, Lower California. Finding the peninsula rich in mineral resources, he remained there five years, three years of the time being foreman in the Trinbo mines. While thus employed, in 1886, Mr. McBriar spent one of his vacations in San Francisco. In 1889 he took an extended vacation, visiting San Francisco and Detroit, Mich., going from there back to his old home in Belfast, Ireland. After spending a week with his boyhood friends and companions he was ready to return to America, but continued his visit for four weeks, when he sailed for Quebec on one of the line steamers. From that city he journeyed by the Central Pacific Railroad to Vancouver, thence by boat to San Francisco, returning the same year to Lower California. Resuming his former position with his employers, Mr. McBriar continued as foreman in the mines until January, 1891, when he resigned on account of ill health, being afflicted with miner's consumption.

Coming directly to Lake county, Cal., Mr. McBriar spent four months at Bartlett Springs, where he recovered his former vigor. While there he formed the acquaintance of D. T. Curtis, of Reedley, who had large interests in the San Joaquin valley, and with him came here on a prospecting trip. Pleased with the looks of the country, Mr. McBriar purchased sixty acres of his present home ranch, and immediately began the work of converting the raw stubblefield into a productive estate. He set out twenty acres of Sultanas, planted a twelve-acre orchard, sowing the remainder to alfalfa. He erected a small dwelling, and this he has since enlarged, having now a substantial residence. Succeeding beyond his expectations as an agriculturist and horticulturist, Mr. McBriar bought forty acres more in 1897, and two years later purchased eighty acres of adjoining land, and all of this he has checked and irrigated and sowed to alfalfa. In 1902 he invested in more land, buying one hundred and twenty acres, which he devotes to alfalfa, and also purchased eighty acres of improved land in section 15, but this he afterwards sold. He also has an unexpired contract of two years with D. T. Curtis for improving a ninety-acre vineyard, lying on the same section as his home ranch.

Mr. McBriar married, near Dinuba, Mary A. Johnson, who was born in Ontario, a daughter of Thomas Johnson, of Dinuba, and they have two children, Agnes and Raymond. Mr. McBriar is one of the directors of the Alta Irrigation District, and is a trustee of the Windsor School District. Politically he is a straightforward Republican. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Reedley, and is a member and past grand of Reedley Lodge, I. O. O. F. He is also a member and past grand of the Reedley Lodge of Rebekahs, to which his wife likewise belongs. Mrs. McBriar is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is much esteemed for her many fine qualities of heart and mind.

WILLIAM H. MCKENZIE. A liberal and enterprising citizen, and an upbuilder of the best interests of county and state, William H. McKenzie is one of the most widely known and honored men of Fresno county. The son of a pioneer and himself born among the primitive conditions of an early civilization, his efforts have lain along the lines of the beginning of a statehood, the development of natural resources, the promotion of enterprises calculated to advance the growth of the community's interests. A business man of unusual executive ability, unerring judgment, conservative yet progressive ideas, he has made a personal success, and in addition to the position accorded him as a factor in pioneer enterprises he also holds the esteem of his fellow-citizens for these qualities which distinguish his character.

The McKenzie family is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, County Sligo, Ireland, being their home for several generations. Alexander McKenzie, the grandfather of William H., was a large land owner in that locality, a gentleman of means and education, who gave to his family every possible advantage. A son, James McKenzie, who was born in County Sligo, came to New York about 1848, in young manhood, and in 1853 he joined the United States army. The regiment was ordered to the Pacific coast to subdue the Indians in 1854, traveling by steamer to Aspinwall, thence across the Isthmus on mule back, thence by steamer to San Francisco, then to Benicia, and by land to Fort Miller. Mr. McKenzie became sergeant in the company which was commanded by Captain Lozier, remaining at Fort Miller until they were ordered north to Oregon to serve in the Indian wars. At the end of his enlistment, in 1858, he was honorably discharged, when as a citizen of California he began the sheep and cattle business on a ranch located just above Fort Miller. He remained in that location and occupation until his death, which occurred January 1, 1864, at the early age of thirty-three years. He was married in New York City, in 1854, to Ann Brenman, who was born in County Sligo, Ireland, November 7, 1826. She came to the United States in 1848 to visit a sister. Her wedding journey was a trip to the far west, like her husband, riding astride a mule across the Isthmus and passing through many experiences incident to pioneer life. She made her home at the fort up to the time of her husband's discharge, owning their quarters there until 1861, when they sold out and located upon the ranch. She afterward became the wife of Judge Charles A. Hart, a pioneer of California and the first judge of Fresno county. (For more complete details concerning Judge Hart refer to the sketch of his life, which appears on another page of this work.)

Of the three children born to his parents, William H. McKenzie and Mary, now the wife of John C. Hoxie, of Fresno, are the only survivors; E. P. was a merchant and died at Pollasky, Fresno county, in 1888, at the age of twenty-five years, leaving one daughter. The birth of William H. McKenzie occurred at Fort Miller, in what was then known as Mariposa county but now constitutes a part of Fresno, March 10, 1857. He was reared to manhood upon the old farm just above the fort and which is still in the possession of the family. This ranch comprises three thousand acres on the San Joaquin river and on the place is located the old fort and town of Millerton, and the old courthouse of Fresno county. A part of the old fort is standing and is in a fairly good state of preservation. It is an adobe building covered with redwood shingles put on over fifty years ago, the broad veranda which surrounds the house being built of hewed timber. For many years this formed the residence of the McKenzie family. The old court house was built of brick and granite in 1866, the granite being obtained on the ranch a quarter of a mile from the location, while the brick was burned upon the ranch, as was the adobe. At the time of the erection of the old fort everything in the way of provisions, etc., had to be hauled from Stockton.

Mr. McKenzie received his education in the public schools at Fort Miller, after which he attended and graduated from Heald's Business College at San Francisco in 1873. The following year he returned to Fort Miller and in the same year was appointed deputy sheriff of the county under J. S. Ashman, serving in that capacity for some time, after which he acted as deputy clerk, deputy assessor, and deputy tax collector. In 1879 he was nominated and elected to the position of county assessor and the adoption of the constitution extended the term nearly three years. In 1882 he became interested in the abstract business which was finally incorporated as the Fresno County Abstract Company, with himself as a director, which position he has continued to hold up to the present time, being the largest stockholder of the company. At the same time that he has engaged in farming the old home place on the San Joaquin river he has been extensively interested in mining and oil wells, meeting with a success in both lines. With Mr. Griffith he was prominent in the building of the electric railway. After the building of the railway the company bought, in August, of the same year, the old road and formed the Fresno Electric Railway Company, of which Mr. McKenzie was director and manager. Following this the company built many more miles of railway and equipped it for business, putting in new electric machinery for power, and in every way adding to the facilities for transportation. They had twelve miles completed and in operation when they sold out in May, 1903. In his mining interests Mr. McKenzie has been very active, developing several mines, among them being the Mudspring mine in Madera county, and also gold mines in Fresno, Tulare and other counties. He was one of the early men to develop the resources of Kern county, in the Kern River Oil Company being manager and vice-president, in both Bakersfield and McKittrick sinking wells, which were the first drilled in this most productive field. He was also largely interested in the Four Oil Company adjoining the Kern river property, and two others of equal note, disposing of his interests in the various concerns when affairs were in the most satisfactory shape. He was also interested in the meantime in the Coalingo oil fields, their location on section 28 being the most celebrated oil-producing land in this country.

In Healdsburg, Cal., Mr. McKenzie was united in marriage with Carrie E. Hoxie, who was born in Millerton, a daughter of Clark Hoxie, a pioneer farmer of that place and a citizen prominent in early local affairs, being one of the first supervisors of the county. (For more complete details concerning his life refer to the sketch of his son, John C. Hoxie, which appears elsewhere in this work.) To Mr. and Mrs. McKenzie were born five children, namely: Alfred H., of San Francisco, and William T., Richard, Donald and Truman. Mr. McKenzie has served as city treasurer for about twelve years in the interests of the Democratic party, of whose principles he is a staunch adherent and in whose councils he has always been a potent factor. He is ex-chairman of the county and city Democratic committees. He is a member of the board of fire and police commissioners and of the chamber of commerce. Fraternally he is a member and past officer of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Fresno.

WILLIAM HELM. Noteworthy among the pioneer settlers of Fresno county is William Helm, a respected and valued citizen of Fresno. A keen, progressive business man, he is gifted with quick perceptions and a resolute spirit, and is well endowed with that peculiar vein of grit and determination that invariably leads onward to success. A perusal of the principal events of his career will prove what a man can do for himself by persistent application, if he have faith in the future of his community, and will also show what a prominent part he has taken in the development and improvement of the San Joaquin valley. A son of George Helm, he was born March 9, 1837, in Ontario, Canada, about forty miles above Montreal, on the St. Lawrence river.

George Helm was born and bred in Scotland, living there until early manhood. Immigrating then to America, he settled in Galt, Ontario, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, at a ripe old age. He married Mary Oliver, who was born in Scotland, but was of English parentage on the paternal side. After the death of her husband she removed from Galt, Ontario, to California, and died in San Francisco, aged eighty-two years. Of the nine children which she bore her husband, three are living, namely: William, the subject of this sketch; George, of Phoenix, Ariz.; and Ellen B., of Alameda, this state.

Brought up on the home farm, William Helm acquired a practical education in the district schools, and a thorough knowledge of the various branches of agriculture under his father's instruction. Leaving home in 1856, he went to Wisconsin, and for three years thereafter was engaged in lumbering on the Chippewa river, also in operating a sawmill. Sailing from New York City in 1859, he came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco, Cal. Going to Placer county, he began searching for gold, but did not find it in such quantities as he had anticipated. Learning the butcher's business, he followed it for three years, first in Foresthill, and then in Todds Valley. Going from the latter place to Bear river, Placer county, Mr. Helm embarked in the sheep business, having a good range there. In 1865 he brought his sheep to Fresno county, which was then a vast space of open land, with no improvements, and not a mile of railway. At Dry Creek, on section four, six miles northeast of what is now the city of Fresno, Mr. Helm bought two thousand six hundred and forty acres of land of Mr. Chapman, paying a dollar an acre. Continuing business as a sheep raiser and dealer, he subsequently bought adjoining land, and established a winter camp for his sheep on the present site of the Fresno court house. His herd increased rapidly, at one time containing twenty-two thousand head of sheep, which browsed on the mountains during the summer seasons.

Mr. Helm was the largest individual sheep grower in that section of the state, and in carrying his wool to market at Stockton he used three wagons, each drawn by ten mules, and spent twelve days in making the trip. He subsequently bought additional land, having sixteen thousand acres in one body. Establishing his residence in Fresno, he continued his business from here, and in addition to stock raising began the improvement of his land, as soon as practicable, building a ditch from Kings river for the purpose of irrigating. He was afterward one of a stock company that built the Gould ditch, from which he had branch ditches running through his own land. When, in course of time, there came a demand for land in this section of the country, Mr. Helm began selling his at an advantageous price, and has now but three thousand acres left, this being entirely valley land, and all well improved. He raises large crops of wheat, barley and alfalfa, and in his large vineyard of four hundred acres, one of the most extensive in the county, he makes a specialty of raising wine grapes. His sheep ranch is located two miles west of Fresno, where he keeps about three thousand Merinos. This ranch is in what is called a swamp country, but he has improved the land, converting a part of it into a large alfalfa field. Mr. Helm also owns valuable city property, having erected Helm block, at the corner of Mariposa and Fresno streets, a block at the corner of J and Fresno streets, and built up other property here. He is likewise interested in the Farmers' National Bank of Central California.

In Placer county, Mr. Helm married Fannie S. Newman, who was born in England, but was brought up and educated in New York state. Of their union seven children have been born, namely: Mrs. Jessie Cox, of San Francisco; George, a vineyardist, in Fresno county; Frank, a resident of Fresno, also a vineyardist; Mrs. Fannie Walrond, of Fresno; Mary, wife of Dr. J. L. Maupin, of Fresno; Agnes, wife of Dr. Montgomery Thomas, of Fresno; and Maude, living at home. In politics Mr. Helm invariably supports the Republican ticket. He is a member of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce, which is composed of the most able business men of the place. Mrs. Helm is a member of the Episcopal Church.

It is impossible to overestimate the beneficent effect upon the growth and prosperity of the San Joaquin Valley which the work of William Helm has had. Not only has he been an eye witness to practically every step in the great scheme of development of the agricultural and horticultural resources of the valley, but he has borne a most conspicuous and valued part in the vast undertaking which has made that region one of the richest in the world. Throughout his entire career in the state he has not been unmindful of the rights and privileges of others, but has earnestly co-operated with his fellow-citizens in all well-considered efforts to advance the material welfare of the community, viewing the future with an unselfish eye. The remarkable success which has rewarded his labors is due to his indefatigable industry, his energy and his progressive spirit, as much as to his sagacity and discernment in studying the opportunities which California has offered in the past, and still extends with a lavish hand. Personally Mr. Helm belongs to that strong type of pioneer citizen who survive despite the obstacles which constantly presented themselves in the earlier days of the state. His life has been closely interwoven with the history of the San Joaquin valley, and this brief record of it will prove of increasing interest to the younger generation and students of history as the years pass.

DANIEL BRENNAN will be remembered as a man of high literary attainments and one deeply interested in educational affairs, having been instrumental in establishing a number of schools in California after taking up his abode in this section. He was an able instructor, but upon first locating in the far west he followed book-keeping in San Francisco for a few years, prior to going into the ranching business in connection with educational work. Born in County Galway, Ireland, he left his native land for a home in America, and upon immigrating to this country went first to New York City, but afterward pursued his way to the Pacific slope, going by way of the Isthmus of Panama. In addition to his other qualifications Mr. Brennan was a surveyor and did a great deal of surveying and locating of claims. In the early days of his life in California he was frequently called upon to write up deeds, conveyances, etc.

Some time after going to San Francisco, in partnership with a friend, Mr. Brennan bought a farm in San Joaquin county, near Escalon, containing three hundred and twenty acres, and together they followed ranching pursuits for awhile. At length, by mutual consent, a division of the land was made, each receiving one hundred and sixty acres, and Mr. Brennan then engaged in conducting his part alone, renting land adjoining, until he farmed six hundred acres in all. He was successful in his ranching pursuits, which he followed in that vicinity until his death, May 23, 1881. He was forty-nine years old at the time of his death. By his marriage in Stockton October 7, 1868, he was united with Hannah Collins, a native of County Cork, Ireland, and a daughter of John and Mary (McCarthy) Collins, the latter having passed away in Stockton at the advanced age of seventy years. She and her husband reared a family of five children, among them Cornelius, who resides with his sister near Escalon. Mrs. Brennan accompanied this brother from the old home in Ireland to New York, and for years lived in that city. About 1863 they left New York for Aspinwall, thence pursuing their way to San Francisco.

After the death of Mr. Brennan, Mrs. Brennan rented the ranch till her sons were old enough to take charge of affairs, from which time they have conducted the farm. Seven children were born to them and they are as follows: Margaret, Mary, Anne, John, Catherine, Thomas and Eldora. The sons are farmers and the daughters, with the exception of Margaret and Catherine, are school teachers and are doing their part toward raising and maintaining the standard of education in California. The family occupy a high standing socially, and they worship at St. Patrick's Church, of which parish they are devout members.

JOSIAH OTIS LOVEJOY. The sturdy traits characteristic of the Scotch race, were transplanted to New England soil made of the Lovejoy family leaders in religious affairs and patriots of the highest type. Prior to the first war with Great Britain, Ebenezer Lovejoy left his native Scotland and accompanied by his wife, a lady of English birth, settled in Massachusetts, where for forty-seven years he was a deacon in the Congregational Church at West Andover. At the outbreak of the Revolution he left his plow and entered the army, where he served as a non-commissioned officer through the entire period of the struggle. As an inheritance to his son, Josiah Ballard Lovejoy, he left the endowment of an honorable name, an unspotted character and a loyal devotion to his country and his God; and the son, following in his footsteps, officiated as a deacon in the Congregational Church until his death in 1847 and manifested, throughout his career as a shoe and leather merchant in Boston, the upright and manly traits which had been his heritage. By the marriage of Josiah Ballard Lovejoy and Martha Stickney, who was born at Duxbury, Mass., and died at West Andover, seven children were born, of whom three sons and three daughters lived to maturity. Of the daughters Phoebe M. is a resident of Philadelphia, Pa., Annie is deceased, and Addie makes her home at West Newton, Mass. Of the sons, Josiah Otis, the eldest, is a pioneer and influential citizen of Tulare, Cal. George Walter, who served in a Massachusetts regiment during the Civil war, is a machinist by trade and lives in Tehachapi, Kern county, Cal.; while in the army, where he served from the first battle of Bull Run until the close of the war, he lost two fingers by a wound received in the engagement in front of Richmond. The youngest son, Wisner, served as an engineer in the United States navy throughout all of the Civil war; after receiving an honorable discharge he took a position as engineer on a vessel bound for China, but when off Cape Hatteras the vessel was wrecked and all on board perished.

At the family home in Duxbury, only a short distance from the famous Plymouth Rock in Massachusetts, Josiah Otis Lovejoy was born March 29, 1833. As a boy he lived in Boston and attended the schools of that city. When still a mere child, in 1845, his uncle took him to sea on a trading vessel, bound for Honolulu. In 1847 he rounded the Horn to the Sandwich Islands, the trip there and back consuming one year. On his return he shipped on the Minstrel to East India via the Cape of Good Hope, Calcutta, Singapore and Shanghai, and remained with his uncle in the Indies until December, 1851, when he returned to Boston. Two months later he started for California on his uncle's ship, Roe-buck, which cast anchor at San Francisco on the 4th of July, 1852, after a voyage of one hundred and fifty days from Boston. On disembarking from the ship he proceeded to San Jose and Mission San Jose, thence to Santa Clara, where he worked with a saw-milling firm for two years, and in October, 1854, began to mine at Mariposa. The following year he bought a sawmill on Snow creek and took the contract to build the county jail at Mariposa, which work he successfully carried out. For twelve years he ran the mill, and meanwhile was elected justice of the peace, which office he held for many years. From 1867 until 1871 he served as county judge of Mariposa county.

During May, 1871, Mr. Lovejoy removed to Tulare county, and in July established his home at Tulare, where his family joined him in December. The town was just started; the roof was being put on the depot when he reached the town, and other buildings were conspicuous only by their absence. For two years he conducted the hotel, but after the great fire he discontinued the business. For sixteen years he acted as justice of the peace, also as notary public, and meanwhile engaged in the real estate and insurance business, also bought land and conducted dairy and fruit farms for several years. By the erection of a residence at a cost of $10,000 he furnished a valuable improvement to the town and encouraged other citizens in the building of substantial homes. He still owns his country residence. From the organization of the Kaweah Canal Company he served as its secretary until the stock was sold to the Tulare irrigation district. Besides other valuable interests he has been a pioneer in the oil fields. During 1864 he located the Buena Vista claims in township 30, range 21, and township 30, range 22. The importance of drilling and the use of drilling machinery were not understood then as now, and it was his plan to utilize the surface flow in the manufacture of illuminating oil by the aid of a small refinery. During 1887 he was one of the locators of the Sunset claims, township 11, range 23, and township 11, range 24, and since then he has served as secretary of the Sunset Oil Company, with office at Tulare.

While living at Mariposa, on Christmas day of 1857, Mr. Lovejoy married Miss Emma Green, who was born in Washington, D. C., and in 1855 came to California by way of Panama, accompanying her father, Gardner Green, who for some years followed mercantile pursuits in Mariposa county, but later engaged in the manufacture of lumber. Thirteen children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lovejoy, and the following are now living: Otis Hart, a stockman in Glenn county; Guard, an engineer on the Southern Pacific Railroad, with headquarters at Portland; Wisner, who formerly held the office of district attorney at Weiser, Idaho; Mrs. Emma Erwin, of Santa Rosa; Mrs. Mary J. Warren, a resident of Belvedere, Marin county, Cal.; Mrs. Grace Canelo, of San Francisco; and Mrs. Jessie Garrison, of Tulare. Mrs. Lovejoy is identified with the Congregational Church and reared her sons and daughters in that faith. In politics Mr. Lovejoy is a staunch Democrat and at one time served as chairman of the county central committee. Local movements of a progressive character receive his co-operation and support. From the first inception of the public schools in Tulare, he has been an ardent supporter of education, and by constant application with others succeeded in bringing the schools to their present high standing. As a member of the Tulare Board of Trade Mr. Lovejoy's efforts have been especially noteworthy, and as president of the board of trustees of the free public library he has rendered valuable assistance. From the first he was a friend of the movement to start a library and when the movement was launched he was chosen one of the trustees, serving as a member of the board for years, and later being honored with the office of president. In fraternal affairs he is connected with the Knights of Pythias, is a past officer in the lodge and encampment of Odd Fellows, and a past officer, also for sixteen years a trustee of the grand lodge, Ancient Order of United Workmen.

ROBERT DAVIS. Occupying a prominent position among the well-to-do agriculturists of Stanislaus county is Robert Davis, whose well-improved and productive ranch is finely located on Orestimba creek, about seven and one-half miles west of Newman. A man of unquestioned ability and integrity, he is held in high respect throughout the community in which he lives, his sterling qualities of heart and mind being recognized. A son of Andrew Jackson Davis, he was born January 9, 1848, in Pike county, Mo.

Born and bred in Wythe county, Va., Andrew

J. Davis removed to Missouri in 1835, becoming a pioneer of Pike county, where he improved a good farm from a tract of timbered land, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Grazella Staley, was born in Tennessee, and died in Pike county, Mo. Nine sons and three daughters were born of their marriage, Robert, the special subject of this sketch, being the sixth child in succession of birth.

Receiving but meager educational advantages in the pioneer schools of his native county, Robert Davis began the battle of life on his own account when seventeen years of age. Starting for the Pacific coast in 1865, he crossed the plains with mule teams, coming by way of the Platte river route, and being four months in making the journey. Locating near Stockton, Cal., he was employed as a farm laborer for three years. Removing to the San Joaquin valley in 1868, he lived near Hills Ferry for four years, and then, in 1872, took possession of his present ranch, which he rented for a year. In 1873 Mr. Davis homesteaded a claim of one hundred and sixty acres on Orestimba creek, and engaged in general farming, including grain and stock-raising, in which he has been eminently successful. He has bought adjacent land, having now one thousand and fifty acres in his home farm, and one hundred and sixty acres on the opposite side of the creek, just across the stream from his main ranch. From 1888 until 1900, Mr. Davis resided on the east side of the San Joaquin river, at Hickman, where he was in the hotel business.

Mr. Davis married, near Hickman, Nellie Sophia McAlpine, who was born in New Hampshire, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Harvey V., manager of the home ranch, Arthur, Ethel and Stella. Politically Mr. Davis is a Socialist.

GEORGE W. JONES. Among the younger generation of men who are rapidly coming to the front in Madera county mention is made of George W. Jones, who, as manager of the Borden farm, has shown rare business ability. This ranch, which contains two thousand two hundred and forty acres, is well located about four and three-quarters miles west of Madera and upon it is to be found the well-known Richland vineyard which alone contains two hundred acres, devoted solely to the culture of the raisin grape. Two sections of this farm are devoted to grain-raising, and dairy farming is also carried on to some extent, about one hundred fine milch cows being kept constantly upon the place. From ten to thirty men are employed upon the farm, as occasion demands; the largest barn in Madera county is located there, the dimensions being 250x100 feet.

George W. Jones, a descendant of a prominent Kentucky family, was born in Santa Clara county in 1877. His father, Hugh S. Jones, was a native of Kentucky, and crossed the plains to California in the early days of the gold excitement. Entering the mines in 1849, he was one of the few who were successful in their mining operations and became one of the wealthy men in California during the early pioneer days. He was among the most active politicians of his section, a Democrat by his political preference, at one time he was state controller of the currency. He was a thirty-second degree Mason. At the time of his death, in 1893, California lost one of her most public-spirited citizens. By his marriage, he was united with Henrietta Bye.

G. W. Jones grew to manhood in Santa Clara county and had the advantage of a liberal education. His common school education was supplemented by a complete scientific course in the Garden City College, and he was graduated from that institution in the class of 1897. He subsequently took a business course in Santa Clara College, and after leaving school, took up the occupation of bookkeeping, which occupied his attention for four years, in San Francisco, Oakland and San Jose, where he was chosen manager of the Borden farm in Madera county, a position he still holds and for which he has shown much aptitude. He was united in marriage with Jeanet La Montagne, who was born in Santa Clara county and is a graduate of San Jose high school, class of 1897, and to them have been born three children, Gillon Hugh, Marjorie J. and Margaret S. Mr. Jones and family occupy a high place in social circles. He is a member of Madera Lodge No. 280, F. & A. M., and of the Woodmen of the World.

JOHN HENRY OBERT. Among the prosperous, substantial and progressive horticulturists of Fresno county there is no one that stands higher in the estimation of the people than John Henry Obert, a well-known vineyardist and orchardist of Selma. Enterprising and farsighted, he has made wise investments, paid strict attention to the details of his business, and in his career has been successful. Of German parentage, he was born February 20, 1832, in Cumberland county, Pa. His father, Peter Obert, a native of Baden, Germany, came with his bride to this country in 1830, being then twenty-one years of age. The following four years he lived in Cumberland county, Pa. Going to Missouri as a pioneer in 1834, he opened a shoemaker's shop in St. Louis, and a few years later bought forty acres of land in Florissant valley, about twenty miles north-northwest of St. Louis. Continuing his work as a shoemaker, he also worked his land, being a farmer and gardener, and was successful in his occupations until his death, which was caused by smallpox, when he was sixty-three years of age. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Glazier, was born in Germany, and died, in 1834, in Pennsylvania. Of their three children, two boys and one girl, John Henry was the youngest.

After completing his education in a subscription school, the sessions being held in a small log cabin, John Henry Obert remained home with his father until after attaining his majority, assisting in the care of the shop and the farm. Enlisting in Company E, Eighty-fifth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, in 1864, he served for three months under Col. E. M. M. Smith, guarding St. Louis against an expected attack by Price and his followers. Going to Illinois in 1865, Mr. Obert purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land in Madison county, and was there prosperously engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. Disposing of his farm in 1899, he came to California, selecting Fresno county as a place of location, and soon after bought the twenty-acre ranch which he now occupies. Sparing neither time nor money in its improvement, Mr. Obert has here a finely bearing orchard and vineyard, and an alfalfa field, all yielding him a good income. He likewise owns a vineyard of twenty acres in the Patterson colony, and supervises the work on both estates. He has also other financial interests, having money loaned in the east.

Mr. Obert has been twice married, and by his first wife had four children, namely: Jacob John, living near Selma; Frank S., of Selma; Mrs. Emma Wentz, of Selma; and Rebecca, at home. In St. Louis, Mo., in 1875, Mr. Obert married for his second wife Mrs. Mary (Heisener) Turner, and they have one child, namely: John M., a telegraph operator and train dispatcher for the Virginia & Truckee Railway Company. Politically Mr. Obert is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and while living in Illinois took an active part in local affairs, serving as school director for twenty years, as highway commissioner and township trustee, and filling many other public offices.

MANNING F. LUNDY. One of the successful and thriving agriculturists of Stanislaus county is Manning F. Lundy, who lives about two miles north of Newman, where he owns and occupies a well-kept homestead. A man of good ability and judgment, possessing to a marked degree those sterling qualities that everywhere constitute an honest and good citizen, he is well deserving of especial mention in this biographical work. A son of Isaac Lundy, he was born May 29, 1842, in Sussex county, N. J. His father, who was a blacksmith and ax manufacturer by trade, died in 1847, while yet in the prime of life, in New Jersey. His widow, whose maiden name was Rebecca Schoonover, settled on a farm in Bradford county, Pa., in 1852, and there spent her remaining years.

The eighth child in a family consisting of six boys and four girls, Manning F. Lundy was left fatherless when but five years of age, and from his early boyhood had to be in a measure self-supporting. After receiving a limited education in the common schools of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, he worked out as a farm laborer for several years. Thinking to find better opportunities for increasing his finances in the Prairie state, he migrated to Lee county, Ill., when a young man, and there continued in his chosen employment for a while. Coming across the continent to California in 1875, Mr. Lundy entered the employ of the San Joaquin Canal Company, and helped build the long canal in the valley, for three years of the time that he was thus engaged being foreman of a gang of men, and being located in one place. During the seven years that he was with the company he accumulated considerable money, and made judicious investments. In 1879 he purchased his present ranch, and in 1882 moved on to it, and has since devoted his attention to its care and improvement. He has seventy acres of good land, and is successfully engaged in raising alfalfa, and in dairying, keeping twenty-one cows. He has also other interests, being a director in the Rochdale store at Newman.

In Merced county, Mr. Lundy married Annie Bibby, a native of Napa county, and into their household thus established three children have been born, namely: Mary, Ida May and Hettie. Mr. Lundy is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and is a faithful member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM E. KEWIN. In the business which he conducts, that of liveryman and dealer in feed, Mr. Kewin has made himself a commercial factor of Modesto, to which city he came in 1892. During the comparatively brief period which has since elapsed he has established a large trade, now owning twenty-five vehicles and twenty-five head of horses, and also handling grain and hay in large quantities. An interest which has netted him considerable money has been the buying and selling of horses, this having proved of much profit during the Boer war. Mr. Kewin also owns forty acres of alfalfa in the Modesto irrigation district. A native of Illinois, he was born at Gardner, Grundy county, December 24, 1865, the son of William Kewin.

William Kewin was born on the Isle of Man, and upon attaining manhood he came to the United States, locating first in Wisconsin, from which state he later removed to Grundy county, Ill., locating in the latter state in 1861, where he remained as a farmer until his death. He married Elizabeth James, of Wisconsin, in which state her death occurred in 1884. Of the four sons and two daughters born to them three sons attained maturity.

William E. Kewin received his education in the common schools of Illinois, where he made his home until he was twenty years old. Deciding then to seek a home in the west, he came to California, and located in Salida, Stanislaus county, where he worked for a period of five years. In 1860 he rented land and engaged as a farmer on his own resources, acquiring sufficient means to enable him to enter in 1892 upon his present lucrative business. Energy, perseverance and undoubted ability have been the foundation upon which Mr. Kewin has reared his financial success, and the esteem of all who know him is given him for the evidence of the many qualities which distinguish his character. In this city he was united in marriage with Annie M. Cocking, a native of Michigan, and they have now a pleasant home. Fraternally Mr. Kewin is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and the Masons, being a member of the Blue Lodge. Politically he is a staunch Republican, and is active in his support of the principles which he indorses. Recognized as a citizen of ability he has been called upon to serve as a member of the city council for one year.

OSCAR H. EASTIN. The family with which Oscar H. Eastin is connected is one prominent in the agricultural life of California, his father, Octavius C. Eastin, having been for many years an extensive grain raiser. At one time owning in Madera county eighteen hundred acres of wheat land, at the present time he has in his possession seven hundred and fifty acres which he has rented. A native of Madison county, Ky., he is the son of James Eastin, who was in turn the son of Reuben, all of whom were farmers. Octavius C. Eastin married Lucy J. Hope, also a native of Kentucky, and in 1833 removed to Missouri, making their home in that state until 1854, when he, with his family, crossed the plains for California. Locating first in Calaveras county he engaged in mining, and later met with considerable success in the dairy and sheep business. In 1879 he removed to Madera county and farmed south of Madera, cultivating his property of eighteen hundred acres. Now in his seventy-third year he has retired from the active cares of life and is making his home with his son, Oscar H., of this review. An influential man in the community where he has made his home for so many years, he enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who have known him in the past. An honor paid him was the naming of the Eastin school district for him.

A native son of the state, Oscar H. Eastin was born in Calaveras county, February 26, 1865, but was reared to manhood upon the paternal ranch in Madera county. In September, 1903, he located on his present property, which consists of eleven and a half acres of land just west of Merced, while he also cultivates thirty acres which he rents, this entire amount being devoted to alfalfa, fruits, especially berries, and a dairy. In addition to this property he also owns other land in Madera county. He married Rissa Moffett, a native of Sonoma county, and the daughter of Henry Moffett, of Tennessee, who came to this state among the early pioneers. Mr. and Mrs. Eastin are the parents of three children, namely: Ralph, Ethel and Naomi. In his political preferment Mr. Eastin is like his father, a Democrat, and is prominent in local affairs. He was one of the five commissioners appointed by Governor Markham to act as officers of Madera county when it was separated from Fresno county. A man of intelligence and great personal worth, Mr. Eastin is recognized as one of the substantial citizens of the community.

JOHN P. MURRY. The name of John P. Murry bears with it remembrance of a citizen who held a high place in the affairs of Portersville and Tulare county, having been one of the earliest settlers upon the Tule river. He was born in Louisiana and passed the first eighteen years of his life upon the paternal farm, where he was trained to the practical duties which made his success in later life. Becoming dependent upon his own resources in his nineteenth year, he decided to cast in his lot with the California pioneers, and accordingly he crossed the plains in 1852, being employed by John Montgomery, of Independence, Mo., to assist in driving a band of six hundred cattle to the coast. They brought the cattle successfully through and turned them out on the range in Merced county. Mr. Murry soon afterward returned to Missouri by water, with Mr. Montgomery, and the following year (1853) brought out seven hundred head of cattle. Mr. Murry remained with Mr. Montgomery until 1855, when he became associated with a Mr. Johnson, who was later called "Tule River" Johnson. Together they purchased stock in Los Angeles and wintered them on the Tule river, and the following spring they were driven to the mines and sold. The successful issue of this venture induced Mr. Murry to continue in the business, and following this he became one of the most prominent stockmen of the San Joaquin valley. In 1874, in partnership with Henry Mentz, owning twelve thousand head. The dry year of 1877 proved disastrous to many of the stockmen, among whom was Mr. Murry, who lost about five thousand from starvation, and on account of poor range sold the balance for $10 a head. For several years following this misfortune Mr. Murry was out of the business, being employed in 1883 to go to New Mexico to purchase cattle and stock ranches for Haggin & Hearst, in the four years that he was so occupied purchasing over eight thousand head of cattle. Returning to Portersville in 1887, Mr. Murry engaged in stock speculations until his death, owning a range of about fourteen hundred acres lying near the Tule river. In 1888 he laid out Murry's addition to the town of Portersville, and subdivided eighteen acres for building purposes. For a time, from 1865 to 1868, Mr. Murry was located in Visalia, where he was engaged with J. E. Denny, of that city, in the livery business, and has also speculated somewhat in mines, although his principal business has remained throughout his entire residence in the west in the buying, selling and raising of live stock. His death occurred August 25, 1899, removing from the community a man who enjoyed to an unusual degree the esteem and confidence of all who knew him, holding a high place by reason of his personal worth as well as business ability.

In Visalia, in 1858, Mr. Murry was united in marriage with Martha Keeney, a native of Ohio, and they became the parents of five children, of whom Theodore R. and George G. were the only ones who reached maturity. In his fraternal relations Mr. Murry was a member of Portersville Lodge No. 199, A. O. U. W.

JOHN H. SHEDD. One of the leading citizens of Borden, John H. Shedd has been successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits in Madera county for the past thirty years, and in the prosecution of his calling has gained an excellent reputation as a man of ability and worth. Beginning life for himself in boyhood in a small New England village, he has been in truth the architect of his own fortunes, and has worked himself up from a condition of comparative poverty to a place of affluence and influence. He comes of old colonial stock, the emigrant ancestor of the Shedd family having settled in New England. A son of Alvin Shedd, he was born April 11, 1836, in Orleans county, Vt. His father was a farmer and tanner, and was born and reared in New Hampshire, living there until after his marriage with Laurinda Smith, also a native of that state, then moving to Vermont.

Born and bred on a Green Mountain farm, John H. Shedd began the battle of life for himself at the age of sixteen years, learning the shoemaker's trade, at which he served an apprenticeship of four years. In 1857, needing a change of climate on account of ill health, he came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California, and for three years thereafter was engaged in mining in Tuolumne county. Recovering his former physical vigor, he settled as a farmer in San Joaquin county, near Stockton, where he remained two years. Removing to Owens river valley in Tulare county in 1863, he took up land, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until after the memorable earthquake of 1872. From August, 1872, until April, 1873, Mr. Shedd was a resident of Stanislaus county. Removing from there to Fresno (now Madera) county that spring, he bought his present ranch, which now contains sixteen hundred acres of land, and has since carried on a very extensive and profitable business as a grain and stock raiser.

In 1869, in San Joaquin county, Mr. Shedd married Elizabeth M. Salmon, a native of Wisconsin, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Albert E., George M., Lelia A., John F. and Dee Truman (now dead). Taking a keen interest in local affairs, Mr. Shedd has been identified with the public welfare of town, county and state since coming to the coast. He has served as supervisor of Inyo county, and for four years filled the same office in Madera county.

MRS. VIRGINIA SHERMAN. An accomplished and enterprising business woman, Mrs. Virginia Sherman is devoting her time and energies to the management of her well-improved ranch, which is pleasantly located near Newman, being about a mile east of the town. Of thrifty and substantial German stock, she was born and brought up in Clark county, Mo., a daughter of Daniel Byers.

A native of Germany, Daniel Byers came with his parents to the United States when a child, and lived for a short time in Pennsylvania. At the age of nine years he was taken to Virginia, where he attended the common schools for a few years, and afterwards learned the potter's trade. Migrating to Missouri in 1852, he settled as a pioneer in Clark county, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. Mr. Byers married Emma Little, a native of Fairfax county, Va., and they became the parents of eleven children, of whom four sons and three daughters grew to years of maturity. In 1879 Mrs. Byers came to California, and from that time until her death lived in Colusa county, making her home with one of her sons.

The youngest child of the parental household, Virginia Byers received a good common school education in her native town. In 1876, in Clark county, Mo., she married Hiram F. Sherman. Mrs. Sherman is a clear-headed, active woman, possessing excellent judgment and great executive ability, and since assuming her position as manager of the home estate has met with marked success and but few discouragements. She has quite a dairy, keeping many cows, and has eighty acres of her land devoted to the raising of alfalfa, which is her principal crop. Mrs. Sherman has had four children, namely: Milton R.; Cecil B., deceased; Leo D.; and William Rey. Throughout the community in which she resides, Mrs. Sherman has the respect and esteem of her friends and neighbors, who have ever found her a kind, helpful and genial companion.

THOMAS DRAKE EASTIN. Conspicuous among the many enterprising and progressive agriculturists who bring to their calling good business methods and excellent judgment is Thomas Drake Eastin, a thriving and prosperous farmer, living about six and one-half miles west of Newman, in Stanislaus county. A son of the late Brutus Eastin, he was born July 27, 1870, in Pike county, Mo.

A native of Kentucky, Brutus Eastin was born in Madison county. In early boyhood he removed with his parents, James and Theodocia (South) Eastin, natives of Virginia, of Scotch-English descent, to Missouri. When the wonderful stories of the rich discovery of gold in California reached his ears, Brutus Eastin crossed the plains with an ox team train, and for nine years cast his luck with the miners, in his labors meeting with average success. Returning to Missouri in 1858, he married, and lived there for twenty years, when, in 1878, he came with his family to Stanislaus county. He located first at Crow's Landing, and then on the farm now occupied by his son, Thomas Drake Eastin, at Orestimba, which he purchased in the spring of 1887, and where he resided until his death, in 1899, aged seventy-three years. He married Emeline South, who was born in Missouri, and died in Stockton, Cal.

She bore him four sons and four daughters, Thomas Drake, the special subject of this sketch, being the second child. Two of the sons are now deceased.

Coming with his parents to Stanislaus county, in 1878, Thomas Drake Eastin was educated in the public schools at Crow's Landing. In 1887 he came with the family to the farm on which he now lives, at Orestimba, and since the death of his father has had its management, renting the place from the remaining heirs. The ranch comprises three hundred and sixty-eight acres of land, one-sixth of which is his by inheritance. As a general farmer he is meeting with success, and in addition to raising the staple crops of this section of the state, Mr. Eastin pays some attention to stock raising, and also has a chicken ranch, from which he receives a good income.

In San Luis Obispo, Cal., Mr. Eastin married Miss Louisa Vernon, a native of Monterey county, and they have two children, namely: Thomas Drake, Jr., and Inez Dorothy. Politically Mr. Eastin is an earnest supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and religiously he is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS FRANK KERR. A wide-awake energetic and progressive man, Thomas F. Kerr has been actively associated with the development and promotion of the industrial growth and prosperity of the San Joaquin valley, and is recognized as one of its leading dairymen. His ranch, lying about seven miles south of Newman, is well irrigated, and is especially adapted for dairy purposes. He has a good residence and convenient farm buildings, everything about the premises indicating the care and supervision of an excellent manager and a thorough-going farmer. A son of John James Kerr, he was born March 27, 1849, in Jasper county, Mo.

Born and reared on a farm in Pike county, Mo., John James Kerr was there employed as a tiller of the soil during his earlier life. In 1864, in search of wealth, he came with his family to the Golden State, crossing the plains with ox and mule teams, the journey taking four months to accomplish. Settling in Contra Costa county, he was engaged in farming and stock raising near Danville. Removing then to Oregon, he bought land near Eugene, and there continued his agricultural operations from 1877 until 1882. Subsequently returning to California, he has since resided in Fresno county, and now, at the age of seventy-seven years, is living retired, making his home with one of his sons. He married Margaret A. Braley, who was born in Missouri, and now lives in Fresno county. Of their union ten children were born, five boys and five girls, Thomas F., the subject of this sketch, being the first-born.

Having obtained a practical education in the public schools of his native state, Thomas F. Kerr came with his parents to California in 1864, settling in Contra Costa county. Selecting farming as the means of getting a livelihood, he has since devoted his time and attention to this branch of industry, and has been favored in every respect. He began his career as a farmer and stock raiser in the vicinity in which he first located, going from there to Kern county, where he engaged in raising sheep and farming, and afterward removed to Merced county, in 1877, where he continued to farm. Removing to Santa Clara county in 1890, Mr. Kerr was engaged in fruit raising near Campbell until the fall of 1903, when he removed to San Jose, having previously secured his present ranch, which contains six hundred and forty acres of land, and is irrigated by water from the ditch. Here Mr. Kerr is successfully pursuing his pleasant occupation, raising a small amount of grain, and having three hundred and fifty acres of alfalfa. He pays especial attention to his dairy, keeping one hundred and eighty cows, and selling and shipping his dairy products daily to the San Francisco market.

While living in Contra Costa county, Mr. Kerr married Susie C. Chrisman, a native of California, and they are the parents of seven children. In politics Mr. Kerr is identified with the Prohibition party. He takes keen interest in local and national affairs, and for one term was supervisor of Kern county. WILLIAM STODDARD SCOTT, who has been identified with the business interests of Fresno since the age of nineteen years, has spent his entire life in California. He is a native of Woodland, Yolo county, where he received a public-school education. He learned the bricklayer's trade under his father, the late C. C. Scott, whose sketch appears on another page in this work. When sixteen years old he began to do journeyman work, being thus engaged in Selma and later in San Francisco. On coming to Fresno he took charge of C. J. Craycroft's brick buildings as foreman and continued in the same position for five years. Since 1895 he has engaged in contracting for himself and in the interval has erected, among other structures, the Santa Fe round house and depot, the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Baptist Church, Sanitarium, Kinspiel building, O'Neill, Carnegie, Werner, Rosser, Cooper and Porteous buildings, Episcopal Church, Risley building (now the Union hotel), Forsythe building, and numerous residences in Fresno, besides being foreman in the construction of both wings of the court house. Out of the city his contracts have taken him to Sanger, Reedley, Madera, Clovis, Selma, Merced and other towns where building enterprises are being pushed with energy and success.

An active worker in the Republican party, Mr. Scott was its candidate for county clerk in 1902, but was defeated by one hundred and eighty-four votes. The Fresno Chamber of Commerce numbers him among its members. His fraternal relations include membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of the Maccabees, Knights of Pythias (in which he has officiated as captain of the Uniform Rank), Foresters of America, Modern Woodmen of America, Fraternal Brotherhood, Rebekahs, Degree of Honor, Ancient Order of United Workmen and Native Sons of the Golden West. Afterward he renewed his membership in Company C, Sixth National Guard, and held a commission as first lieutenant of his company. He is connected with the Spanish-American War Veterans. During the progress of the war he acted as a correspondent for the Fresno Republican, to which, as to other local papers, he has also been a contributor on other topics. On the organization of the Bricklayers & Masons International Union No. 1, at Fresno, he became a charter member, was elected its first secretary, and has continued to fill that office up to the present time. He also holds office as vice-president of the state union of the same organization and is further connected with the Building and Trades Council of Fresno as its secretary.

ADOLPH H. SALAU. Four and a half miles southwest of Los Banos is located the dairy farm of Adolph H. Salau, one of the representatives of a family established in the state in 1858, a son of H. F. F. Salau, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. Soon after the birth of his son, Adolph H., on his farm in Santa Clara county, August 24, 1869, he settled on the west side of Merced county and engaged in the sheep business on Badger Flats for a year, afterward engaging in the same business in the foothills along the Los Banos creek. Five years later he moved to his present place, a farm of two hundred and eighty acres, of which two hundred acres are under alfalfa. Besides Adolph H., he had four other children, of whom Mrs. Mathias Becker lives in the vicinity of Los Banos; and Mary A., Louis H., and Doretta C., live on the old place.

Adolph H. has always been industrious and appreciative of the many advantages of country existence. He received a practical education in the public schools and continued to live on the home place until his twenty-first year, when he located on the farm which has since been his home. He has turned his attention principally to raising grain, and at times has farmed six hundred and forty acres. He now has thirty acres under alfalfa and raises about two hundred tons a year. He is a progressive farmer, appreciating the comforts and luxuries of life, and bringing many of the advantages of the city within the borders of his property.

Mr. Salau has served his township well as a staunch Republican, and has taken a prominent part in the local deliberations of his party, representing his district in state and county conventions. Fraternally he is a member of Los Banos Lodge No. 312, F. & A. M.; the Woodmen of the World, and the Order Eastern Star. Mr. Salau married in Marshfield, Ore., Lulu C. Miller, a native of San Francisco. He is a prominent rancher, and respected for his many sterling traits of character.

HENRY G. BOLLMAN is a successful ranchman of Contra Costa county, located in the Mount Diablo valley on a ranch of six hundred acres, which is now devoted to the cultivation of hay and raising of stock. Previous to the last ten years he raised grain principally, in which cultivation, by wise and judicious management, he met with success and accumulated a competency which enabled him to become the owner of his present prosperous ranch. Mr. Bollman is a strictly self-made man, having been thrown upon his own resources at an early age, and with nothing but his own energy and courage to buoy him up, has steadily advanced to his present position of influence and affluence.

Born in Santa Clara county, Cal., August 3, 1855, Mr. Bollman was a son of Dedrick and Henrietta (Ringstruff) Bollman. The elder man brought his family to California in 1853 or '54, locating at San Jose, Santa Clara county, where he followed farming until his death in 1858, at the early age of forty-five years. His widow married a second time, becoming the wife of Andrew Gehringer, who afterward settled in Contra Costa county, where her death occurred in May, 1903, in her eighty-second year. Henry G. Bollman grew to manhood and sought to earn his living by hiring out to neighboring farmers. By industry and economy he managed to accumulate sufficient money to admit of the purchase of one hundred and fifteen acres of his step-father's ranch, and began general farming and stock raising. With the passing years his accumulated wealth was invested in adjoining land until today he owns six hundred acres. He has continued to add improvements in the way of buildings, fences, etc., and has set out a small fruit orchard, which is only intended to supply his family with needed fruits. In addition to his farming interests he conducts a dairy of thirty-five cows, having his own creamery upon the ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Bollman in 1887 united him with Mattie Smith, a daughter of George Smith, who spent his last years in Contra Costa county. Mrs. Bollman was born in Iowa, but was reared and educated in California. Born of this union were six children, namely: Harold, Henrietta, Ralph, Winnie, Catherine and Marion.

GEORGE C. HENDERSON. In the struggle of life which results in the survival of the fittest, George C. Henderson had only those qualities with which nature had endowed him to depend upon, and the story of his life is the story of what a man can do if his energies are directed along the channel where his interest lies. For when a man pursues a calling for which nature has peculiarly fitted him and which possesses a never-ceasing interest for him, success will crown his individual efforts in almost every instance. It is so in the case of Mr. Henderson, one of the early pioneers of California, which has been his home for more than half a century, and for more than thirty years he has followed ranching pursuits in Merced county, of which he is now a retired and honored citizen. In observing this well-known, keen-looking gentleman, it will be seen at a glance that his seventy-five years sit lightly upon him and his activity would shame many a younger man.

Of Scotch-English ancestry, born March 10, 1829, in the town of Chester, Warren county, N. Y., Mr. Henderson is a son of Carlton and Lovina (Smith) Henderson, both of whom were also natives of the Empire state, the father being of Scotch extraction and the mother of English. When but eight years old George C. was deprived of his father by death. He continued to live in New York and during his boyhood and early manhood, receiving his education in the local schools. In 1852, in his twenty-third year, he sailed for California, coming by way of the Nicaragua route, and shortly after landing at San Francisco went to the mines of Yuba county, near Marysville, but paid very little attention to mining. He ditched one hundred and sixty acres in that county, working for wages, and subsequently assisted in threshing wheat the same fall in the vicinity of San Jose, and the following four months were spent by him in the Redwood district, in San Mateo county. He was located next in the Santa Clara valley, where he worked for a year and a half, then went to Stockton and for ten years he followed teaming from that city to Sonora and Columbia.

In 1864 Mr. Henderson went back to Warren county and September 10 was married to Emma Brusie, and, accompanied by his wife, he returned to California. Purchasing land in the vicinity of Modesto, Stanislaus county, he followed farming until 1874. During that year he came to Merced county and four years later he purchased the place where he now resides and which has since been his home. His original purchase contained one hundred and eighty-five acres and is located four miles west of Merced. He has raised principally grain and hay, paying some attention, however, to fruit and alfalfa. Being very productive, the place has yielded him an income above the ordinary and has placed him in comfortable circumstances, in addition to having enabled him to rear and educate his family of five children: Cora became the wife of A. E. Burnside of Merced county and has one child; Ruby, who married S. T. Baker, lives in Oregon and has two children, Lora Belle and an infant unnamed; Charles is an engineer living in Everett, Wash.; Henri Herbert, a surveyor, lives in Merced; and Fred, an electrician, lives in Redlands, Cal.

Politically Mr. Henderson was a Whig in the early days, but afterwards, upon the organization of the Republican party, joined its ranks. He is a prominent character in the history of Merced county, of which he is one of the early settlers and one who is held in highest esteem by all who know him for his generosity and public spirit.

H. C. CROWDER, M. D. During that period of American history when Kentucky was still a frontier settlement in the midst of hostile savages, John Crowder left his native South Carolina and established a home in the blue-grass country. The next generation was represented by Reuben Crowder, a native of Kentucky, who as early as 1824 removed to Sangamon county, Ill., and settled on raw land in Gardner township. The present capital city of Springfield was at that time a hamlet containing only six houses, and those of the crudest construction. At the time of removing to Illinois, the son, Thomas M., who was born in Kentucky in 1818, was a child of six years, and from that time forward he was identified with farm pursuits in Illinois, where he remained until his death. In early manhood he married Mary J. Dally, who was born in Pennsylvania and removed to Illinois at an early age with her father, Milton Dally, likewise of Pennsylvania birth.

The family of Thomas M. and Mary J. Crowder consisted of ten children, all but three of whom attained mature years. Of these, H. C. Crowder was second in order of birth, and was born near Springfield, Ill., June 19, 1844. As a boy, he attended the Springfield schools. Early in life he formed an aspiration to become a physician, but the outbreak of the war delayed him in taking up the necessary studies. He enlisted in Company G, Tenth Illinois Cavalry, mustered into service at Springfield in 1862 and assigned to the army of the Mississippi under Generals Steele and Canby. In that department he served until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged in New Orleans June 8, 1865, pursuant upon the general order for the disbandment of the army. On his return to Illinois he assisted his father on the home farm for four years and during his leisure hours studied medicine under Dr. J. M. West, then of Springfield, and now of Red Bluff, Cal. In order to avail himself of the advantages offered by one of the most thorough institutions in the country he matriculated in Rush Medical College in Chicago in 1870, and received the degree of M. D. from that college in 1874 on the completion of the regular course.

Upon establishing an office for practice, Dr. Crowder located first at San Jose, Mason county, Ill. In 1876 he came to California, locating at Santa Rosa, but in 1879 transferring his office to Williams, Colusa county, where he built up an important patronage in the ten ensuing years. During the period of his residence at Williams he served as coroner and public administrator for one term, and under appointment by Governor Stoneman was for four years a member of the state board of health. In 1880 he returned to his former home in Santa Rosa, where in addition to his private practice he held the position of surgeon to the Southern Pacific Railroad. For two terms he was a member of the board of trustees of the public library. In 1896 he became a practicing physician of Sutter Creek, Amador county, and from there, in March, 1903, came to Tracy, San Joaquin county, where he now carries on a general practice and also acts as district surgeon for the Southern Pacific Railroad. The Pacific Coast Association of Railroad Surgeons numbers him among its members, and he is also actively interested in the San Joaquin County, California State and American Medical Associations, besides being a thoughtful reader of current medical literature. It is his ambition to keep abreast with every development made in the science of medicine. With this object in view he has ever been a student of therapeutics, and no discovery is made of possible value to the fraternity of physicians that fails to receive his thorough investigation and study.

The marriage of Dr. Crowder was solemnized in Santa Rosa, February 15, 1878, and united him with Bertha Letold, who was born in Grass Lake, Mich., and came to California in company with her parents in 1875. The doctor and his wife are associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church of Tracy, in which he serves as chairman of the board of trustees. Though not a radical partisan, he is nevertheless a staunch Democrat and in local and national elections gives his support to the party of his choice. In Masonry he became connected with the Blue Lodge at Bloomfield, where he was initiated in Vitruvius Lodge No. 76, and later was chosen master of the Williams Lodge, also rose to the chapter degree at Colusa. While residing at Santa Rosa he was honored with the office of commander of Ellsworth Post No. 20, and also officiated as medical director of the department of California, with the rank of colonel.

FRANKLIN P. BAKER is a citizen whose interests have always been identified with those of Brentwood, Contra Costa county, Cal., and who has given no little of a busy life to its progress and upbuilding. He was born in Contra Costa county, December 23, 1856, a son of John Baker, a well-known and highly honored pioneer resident of this section.

John Baker was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., July 4, 1819, a son of Richard Baker, who settled in Stark county, Ohio, in 1822. He was there reared to manhood and learned the trade of carpenter, engaging in its prosecution as well as having farming interests in both that state and Michigan, locating in Cass county of the latter state in 1845. In 1853 he joined the tide of emigration setting toward the west and crossed the plains to California. On his arrival he located in Contra Costa county, where he purchased a Spanish land grant near Walnut creek. This property, consisting of one hundred and eighty acres, he devoted principally to the cultivation of grain, raising some stock and also putting out a family orchard of apples, pears and grapes, fruits which he found best adapted to the soil and climate. He was a successful man and attained a prominent place among the ranchmen of the county. Fraternally he affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belonged to the Grange. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died December 9, 1901, at the age of eighty-two years, leaving a widow, formerly Martha Ann Glass, who was born in Harrison, Ohio, a daughter of William and Priscilla (Wiley) Glass, and to whom he was married June 4, 1848. They were the parents of four children, namely: Almira J., deceased; Franklin P.; John C.; and Mary P. With the exception of Franklin P. Baker, all are at home.

Franklin P. Baker was reared and educated in the county, and after completing the course of the common schools he entered the University of the Pacific at San Jose, and later McClure's Military School, of Oakland. Well equipped to conduct a commercial or agricultural enterprise, he then returned to the country and engaged in the work to which he had early been trained. His first purchase of land was made of Mr. Bannister, and consisted of one hundred and sixty acres located in Contra Costa county in the southeastern part of section 3, 1 south, 2 east, and this he proceeded to cultivate to grain. He then bought two hundred and forty acres on the northwest, section 12, 1 north, 2 east, and north quarter-section, southwest section 12. This property he devotes entirely to stock raising. He makes his home in Brentwood. A Republican in politics he has always been a staunch supporter of his party's principles. For the past ten years he has acted as deputy assessor and now holds the office of deputy registrar for supervisors, district No. 5. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also belongs to the Rebekahs.

EDWIN GOWER. As the first commercial manufacturer of olive oil in the San Joaquin valley, Mr. Gower is associated with the establishment and building up of an enterprise of no small importance to the people of this part of California. It was during 1899 that he started a small olive oil plant on his ranch in Fresno county, where, with George C. Roeding as partner, he manufactured olive oil upon a small scale. When the need of a city environment and more adequate accommodations became imperative the plant was moved to Fresno, where a factory was built on the Southern Pacific Railroad, and in 1903 a new company was organized under the title of Roeding Olive Company. The building of the plant was superintended by Mr. Gower. With a capacity of twenty-five thousand gallons per year, pure olive oil is manufactured in large quantities, for sale both in this country and abroad. The high reputation acquired by the product is abundant evidence of its purity, and more and more it is coming into popularity for medicinal and other purposes where a pure oil is absolutely imperative.

The west has been the lifelong home of Mr.

Gower, who was born at Gold Hill, Nev., September 14, 1860, being a son of Sewall and Cornelia (DeVoe) Gower, natives respectively of Maine and New York. His grandfather, Robert Gower, a native of Maine, became a pioneer farmer in Cedar county, Iowa, and for years ran a ferry across the Cedar river at a point that came to be known as Gower's Ferry. His death occurred in Iowa. At an early age Sewall Gower crossed the plains with mule teams and engaged in mining at Gold Hill, Nev., but later removed to San Joaquin county, Cal., and engaged in raising grain on a farm near Stockton. He and his wife now make their home in Santa Cruz. Of their seven children four are living, Edwin being the only son. As a boy he aided in the cultivation of the San Joaquin farm and attended local schools, but during youth he was sent to Iowa, where he attended an old Quaker academy at Springdale, Cedar county. While there he met and married Miss Cora C. Perkins, a native of that county and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Accompanied by his wife Mr. Gower returned to California and for a year resided in San Joaquin county. In 1887 he came to Fresno county and purchased three hundred and twenty acres of raw land near Fowler, where he set out one-half of the acreage in orchard of various fruits and put the balance largely under alfalfa. This property lies three and one-half miles northeast of Fowler and under his capable supervision has greatly increased in value. In the organization of the Armstrong Fruit Company at Fowler he took an active part and has since held the office of secretary and treasurer of the concern, although, as before stated, since 1899 much of his time has been devoted to the manufacture of commercial olive oil. He is a member of the Fresno Chamber of Commerce. Possessing a progressive spirit, he is always to be relied upon to assist in developing enterprises for the benefit of this community. When once convinced of the merits of a new movement, his co-operation is always generously given to its progress. His own interests, though important and extensive, are never allowed to exclude participation in plans for the public welfare. In every respect he has proved himself a public-spirited citizen of his adopted town.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Gower comprises nine children, all of whom are at home except the eldest, Cornelia, who is married and lives in Fresno county. The others are Emma, Viola, Rosamond, Mellicent, Sewall, Edwin, Gertrude and Cora. At no time has Mr. Gower desired to occupy positions of official importance, for his tastes are commercial, rather than political; however, his interest in educational affairs led him to accept the position of member of the board of high school trustees during his residence in Fowler, and this position he filled with a fidelity characteristic of him in every relation of life. In politics he gives his support to Democratic candidates. Through his membership in the California Raisin Growers' Association he is connected with an organization of the greatest aid in the development of an important industry. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Fowler, where he is past noble grand; and the Order of Foresters, in which he has held important official positions.

C. J. GIDDINGS. Representative of the best type of American citizenship, C. J. Giddings occupies a prominent place among the business men of Visalia. Since October, 1880, he has held the position of cashier in the Bank of Visalia, of which he is also a director, and for eighteen years has acted as president of the Building and Loan Association, which he helped to organize. In addition to these absorbing interests he has as well been variously connected with many movements important in the development and up-building of the city and county, and has thus come to be recognized as a citizen upon whom public honor and responsibility may safely rest.

Mr. Giddings is the descendant of an old New England family located in Ipswich, Mass., in 1635, by George Giddings, a native of Herefordshire, England. The line of descent is from his son, John, whose son, Thomas, had a son, Joshua, whose son of the same name was the great-grandfather of C. J. Giddings. He was born in Lyme, Conn., whence he came west to Athens, Pa., then located in Canandaigua, N. Y., and in 1806 settled in Ashtabula county, Ohio. He was numbered among the patriotic citizens who gave their services at the time of the Revolutionary war, being in service with Arnold on Lake Champlain. He married Submit Jones and both himself and wife died in the state which they had helped to develop into statehood. His son, Elisha, a native of Connecticut, became a farmer in Ashtabula county, Ohio, marrying Philotheta Fish, daughter of Colonel Fish, of Vermont, who was also a pioneer of the Western Reserve, hewing a farm from the wilderness. His death occurred in Ohio. Sidney Giddings, a son of Elisha, was born in Ashtabula county, Ohio, where he died at the age of thirty-five years, having spent his life in agricultural pursuits. His wife was in maidenhood Polly Sackett, who was born in Geauga county, Ohio, a daughter of Ephraim Sackett, who emigrated from his native state, Massachusetts, and became a pioneer of Geauga county. Mrs. Giddings also died at the age of thirty-five years, leaving a family of two children, C. J., of this review, and Mrs. Welsh, of Rivera, Los Angeles county.

Born in Ashtabula county, Ohio, December 29, 1843, C. J. Giddings was but eight years old when his father died and only fifteen when he also lost his mother. Shortly after this last sad event he went to Geauga county and spent a year or more, when (being then seventeen years old), he went to Cleveland and engaged in clerical work in the employ of the Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad. This position he retained until 1862, when he enlisted in the Eighty-fourth Ohio Regiment, as a member of Company C, for service in the Civil war. He was mustered in for three months, after which he went to Cumberland, serving four months, when he received an honorable discharge. Going then to Iowa Falls, Iowa, he engaged in farming and stock raising for a time, after which he returned to Ohio and entered the employ of the Atlantic & Great Western Railway, in the clerical department. With the exception of a short time spent at Oberlin College, he remained in that capacity for two years, when he went to Cleveland and engaged as bookkeeper with a hardware firm. Deciding to follow the example of his early ancestors, he came to California in 1869, spending his first four years in Woodland. His first position in that locality was as deputy county clerk, after which he became a searcher of records, when he made a full set of abstract books, the first of the kind in that city. In the fall of 1873 he came to Tulare county and located on government land near Graugeville, improving and cultivating a farm, upon which he made his home for three years. At the end of that period he removed to Visalia, entering the employ of D. K. Zumwalt in an abstract office, with whom he remained six months, when he established a new set of abstract books and engaged in the business independently until the fall of 1880. In October of that year he was elected to his present position of cashier of the Bank of Visalia, maintaining with increasing credit the responsibilities for nearly twenty-five years.

In Kent, Portage county, Ohio, November 10, 1869, Mr. Giddings was united in marriage with Minnie R. Holcomb. She was born in Ravenna, Ohio, a daughter of Samuel Holcomb. He was a native of Westfield, Mass., and son of Roswell Holcomb, who died in that state. The family was established in America by Thomas Holcomb, who came to this country in the ship Mary and John in 1630. He located in Massachusetts and became the founder of Dorchester, the meaning of which name is woody valley. Samuel Holcomb removed to Ohio in an early day and settled near Ravenna, where he engaged as a stonemason, in the building of bridges principally. He located in Mount Pleasant, Iowa, for four years, when he returned to Ravenna, and took charge of the building of bridges for the Atlantic & Great Western Railway until 1872. In the last named year he came to California and the following year located in Tulare, where he was one of the first merchants, carrying on the first grocery business of the place. He was burned out twice and finally quit the business and retired. His death occurred in Tulare county in 1894 at the age of eighty-one years. In his political preference he was a staunch Republican, and fraternally was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, formerly Lucina Stough, was a native of Ravenna, Ohio, and the daughter of Simon Stough, born in Connecticut of Dutch descent and a pioneer of Portage county, Ohio. He was a soldier in the war of 1812 and an earnest and upright citizen. Mrs. Holcomb died in 1892, leaving two children, namely: Mattie, who became the wife of A. W. Wheeler of Tulare; and Minnie R., the wife of C. J. Giddings. To Mr. and Mrs. Giddings was born one daughter, Blanche. She was educated at Mills College and Fields Seminary, Oakland, this state, and married J. O. Hickman, cashier of the First National Bank of Hanford.

J. N. Wright

Mr. Giddings is a staunch Republican politically and for several years served as city treasurer. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being a member and past grand of Four Creeks Lodge; a member of Knights of Pythias, being past chancellor for several terms; and also associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Fresno.

ISAAC N. WRIGHT. Prominent among the venerable and highly respected citizens of Tulare county is I. N. Wright, who has the distinction of being one of the oldest settlers in the county in point of years. During his long residence here he has taken an active interest in everything tending toward advancement and has been an important factor in helping forward its industrial and agricultural prosperity. A man of industry, thrift and sound judgment, he has been successful as an agriculturist, improving a good farm, and acquiring a fair share of this world's goods. A native of Ohio, he was born, October 13, 1823, in Knox county, about five miles from Mount Vernon, of English ancestry.

William Wright, his father, was born in England, and was there brought up and educated. Immigrating to America, he located in Ohio, becoming one of the earliest pioneers of Knox county. Taking up land that was in its original wildness, he erected a log cabin in an opening, and having reclaimed a farm was engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. Removing to Iowa in the later years of his life, he resided in that state until his death. He married Elizabeth Newton, who was born in England, and died in Omaha, Neb. She bore him eleven children, four of whom are still living. One son, George, came to California in 1850, and died in Tuolumne county. Another son, James, came to the coast with his brother, Isaac N., in 1851, and died in San Diego.

Reared on the home farm, I. N. Wright received his elementary instruction from his mother, a woman of refinement and education. At the age of sixteen years he assisted in building a log school house in his district, and being very clever with an axe was allowed to cut the saddles and notches for one corner. In this building he completed his school life, attending five years. After attaining his majority he served an apprenticeship at the miller's trade, after which he leased a flour and saw mill at Mount Vernon, Ohio, on Owl creek, and managed it for two years. Deciding to come to California in search of fortune, Mr. Wright sailed from New York on the Georgia in November, 1851, for Aspinwall, from there going by rail to Gorgona, thence by small steamer to the head of navigation, completing the remaining distance, about twenty-five miles, across the Isthmus on foot. Taking passage on the steamer Northerner at Panama, he landed in San Francisco in December, 1851. Going directly to Jamestown, Tuolumne county, he, with his brothers, was engaged in placer mining for two years, meeting with reasonable success. In 1854, with his brother George, Mr. Wright leased a sawmill, which he operated for four years. Returning then by way of Panama to New York, he went to Ohio for his family, arriving there in February, 1856. The following April he again started for California by the Isthmus route, having with him his wife and child, and was in Panama on April 15, when the memorable riots took place. Fortunately he had his family safely ensconced in the American hotel, near the Plaza, but he himself took part in the outbreak, being armed with an old United States flint-lock musket. When order was restored Mr. Wright came with his family to San Francisco on the steamer John L. Stevens, having a good passage. Settling in Sonora, he engaged in quartz mining and milling, carrying on a prosperous business for a number of years. In 1869 he located his family in San Jose and made a prospecting tour through the coast counties and into the San Joaquin valley, his intention being to embark in the stock business, but found the season too dry for that.

Very soon afterward, in 1870, Mr. Wright purchased one hundred and sixty acres of the land now included within the limits of the city of Tulare, and in 1872 he traded this tract to the railroad company for his present homestead and at once located on it. He subsequently improved the land, placing it under irrigation, and gradually drifted into the stock business, at the same time becoming one of the successful farmers of his locality. Of the four hundred and nine acres of land which Mr. Wright owns he has one hundred acres in alfalfa, and is putting in more each season. He has a large dairy, and pays much attention to the raising of cattle and hogs, keeping a good grade of each. In the upbuilding of Tulare Mr. Wright has taken a keen interest, gladly lending his aid and influence to the establishment of all beneficial enterprises. He was one of the promoters of the Kaweah Canal and Irrigating Company, of which he was a director from the first, and which he subsequently served as president. For ten years he was school trustee, and superintended the building of the brick school house in Tulare. In national politics Mr. Wright is a straight Republican, but in local affairs he votes with the courage of his convictions, regardless of party restrictions.

January 14, 1851, in Mount Vernon, Ohio, Mr. Wright married Charlotte A. Phillips, and they are the parents of four children. Victoria is the wife of A. D. Neff, of Oakland, Cal.; George W., residing in Tuolumne, was born in Tuolumne county; he is a railway engineer, and in that capacity brought the first passenger train into Sonora; Alice L. is at home; and Hattie M. is the wife of W. J. Higdon, of Tulare. Mrs. Wright was born November 20, 1830, near Mount Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, a daughter of Charles and Addie (Foster) Phillips, the latter of whom was born and reared in England. She is the fourth child in order of birth in a family of six children, two of whom are living, she being the only one on the Pacific coast.

MRS. AGNES E. McDONALD. Among the institutions which are maintaining the reputation of Fresno county as a humane and generous community is the Orphanage, located on the old Judge Nourse place, two miles east of Fresno, on Ventura avenue. This institution was founded in Fresno in January, 1895, with eighteen children to profit by its practical home atmosphere, and in June, 1897, it was removed from Fresno to its present home, purchased by the county and consisting of ten acres, improved in trees and lawns and affording ample opportunity for the out-of-doors development of its fortunate little charges. A committee of twenty-five ladies of Fresno direct the affairs of the institution and appropriations for its maintenance are made by the board of county supervisors. Children without home connections are maintained at the Orphanage until their fourteenth year, and when they depart take with them a common school education up to and including the ninth grade. The greatest number of children accommodated at one time has been sixty-three, and during the past five years four hundred and ten homeless ones have passed through the hospitable doors, remaining for various lengths of time in its Christian and helpful atmosphere.

Inseparably connected with the Orphanage is the name of its much-loved matron, Mrs. Agnes E. McDonald, who has been elected to her present position for nine consecutive years. She became identified with the Orphanage at its organization in 1895, and has since proved herself a good genius to the waifs unfortunately thrown upon a none too charitable world. She is a woman of education and progressive views, loyal to trusts imposed and remarkable in her appreciation of child character and aspirations.

W. W. RAMSEY, D. D. S. Although but in the beginning of his professional career, Dr. Ramsey has already established a reputation for broad and accurate knowledge of the science of dentistry and has an assured position among the professional men of Madera county. When he came to the city of Madera in the summer of 1901 he succeeded to the practice of Dr. A. T. Lockwood. Since then, through his skillful handling of the work given him, he has gained the confidence of the people and enjoys an increasing practice together with a growing reputation for professional skill. In his office are all the equipments necessary to modern dentistry, and such inventions as he believes to be helpful he utilizes in his work.

In his lineage Dr. Ramsey is of old Virginian stock. His parents, Joseph and Jennie (Sharp) Ramsey, were natives of the Old Dominion, but settled in Texas after their marriage, the father embarking in the cattle business near Dallas. Dr. Ramsey, who was an only child, was born in Dallas, May 8, 1875, and was but one year old when his father died. Afterward the widowed mother returned to Virginia and settled among relatives in Abingdon, Washington county, where he was sent to the public schools. The education there acquired was supplemented by attendance at Liberty Hall Academy and Glade Spring Military Academy. When in his junior year he left the latter institution and removed to Kewanee, Ill., after which he traveled for a Chicago house for about four years, his territory covering the middle west.

Coming to California in 1895 Dr. Ramsey has since made this state his home, and his mother also lives here, having her home in Redlands. After he had spent two years in Southern California he took up dental work with a cousin, Dr. Sharp, in Lodi, and soon decided to make the profession his life-work. With that object in view he matriculated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in San Francisco, department of dental surgery, from which he was graduated June 23, 1901, receiving the degree of D. D. S. After his graduation he came to Madera, where he has since given his attention to professional duties. Along the line of his profession he is identified with the State Dental Association, also with the Alumni Association of his alma mater. With his wife, formerly Cora Tooker, a native of Iowa, he holds a high position socially and is welcomed in the best circles of Madera. Although born in the south and reared in the east, he is loyal to the state of his adoption, has been a careful and thoughtful student of California's early history, and believes in her ultimate destiny as one of the greatest commonwealths in our nation, offering to her citizens beauties of climate and commercial opportunities unsurpassed by any state. To a gentleman of his genial temperament, association with fraternal organizations provides a desirable form of recreation, and since coming to Madera he has affiliated with Lodge No. 280, F. & A. M., in which he was made a Mason, also the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World and Modern Woodmen of America.

JOHN PEACE CLARK. In the material development of California perhaps no subject has been of more vital importance than that of irrigation, for it has brought into the greatest productivity vast areas which otherwise could not be profitably cultivated. Nowhere in the state is the value of an excellent water supply more appreciated than in the San Joaquin valley, and therefore the men who have given their time and thought to the question are necessarily leaders in the community. Of the organizations established to secure waterways for the land, none is better known than the Consolidated Canal Company, which embraces the Centerville & Kingsburg, Fowler Switch and Emigrant canals, together with their several branches. Through his long and intimate connection with a canal which was merged into the present association, Mr. Clark was admirably qualified to fill the responsible post of president and manager of the consolidated concern, to which he was elected, in addition to being chosen one of the board of directors.

When Mr. Clark came to California in 1887 he engaged as a clerk at Kingsburg, Fresno county, but a year later he became secretary of the Centerville & Kingsburg Canal Company, and has since given his attention wholly to matters pertaining to irrigation. In the discharge of his duties as secretary he spent considerable time at Kingsburg and Selma, and after 1898 acted as manager of the canal. In 1901 this was merged into the Consolidated Canal Company, of which he is the chief executive and which has its offices in Fresno. It is a matter of no small pride with him that he has witnessed the growth of the plant from a small ditch to one of the largest canal systems in California, and much of its growth is attributed to his wise management by those in a position to estimate forces bringing about certain results.

The management of this company, important as it is and varied as are its duties, does not represent the limit of Mr. Clark's activities. Upon the organization of the Central Canal & Irrigation Company he was chosen its first president and still holds the position. The company has its offices in San Francisco and obtains from the Sacramento river the supply of water necessary to operate its canal system in Glenn and Colusa counties. The work of building has not been completed, and it is the sanguine expectation of its projectors that the system will eventually become the largest in the entire state. Another enterprise of similar nature which receives the benefit of Mr. Clark's wide experience is the Butte County Canal Company, of which he is a director, and the building and completion of which will be consummated under his management. In addition he holds the position of assistant manager of the Fresno Canal Company.

Mr. Clark is a member of an old Kentucky family and was born near Manchester, that state, January 26, 1860, being a son of Capt. D. W. and Mary (Peace) Clark, who lived upon a farm near Manchester for many years. The paternal grandfather, Anderson Clark, was a farmer in Kentucky, and the same occupation was followed by the maternal grandfather, John Peace, who was a native of Scotland and an earnest worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Captain Clark was an officer in the Union army during the Civil war, his company being attached to the Forty-seventh Kentucky Infantry, in which he served until the close of the struggle. At the time of his death, in 1903, he was sixty-six years of age. His wife was born near Williamsburg, Ky., and died near Manchester about 1876. Of their seven children, two sons and two daughters are living. Three are in California, namely: John Peace, of Fresno; T. J., a farmer at Selma; and Mrs. Bishop, of Kingsburg. The eldest of these, John Peace Clark, passed the first eighteen years of his life on the home farm, whence in 1878 he went to Missouri, clerking in a drug store at Marionville and attending the academy of that town, also engaging for a time in teaching school. In 1882 he went to Berryville, Ark., where he attended the academy and also taught school. From there he came to California, which state has since been his home and the scene of his activities. Before leaving Arkansas he married Miss Donie Gibson, a native of that state, and by her he has one daughter, Mina. Fraternally he is connected with the Foresters, in politics advocates Republican principles, and socially holds membership in the Sequoia Club of Fresno. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and a thorough believer in and supporter of all movements for the advancement of Fresno, among whose citizens none is more loyal than he. Through his identification with water systems he has done much to promote the prosperity of the San Joaquin valley. His interest in the water question led him to accept the position of delegate to the National Irrigation Congress at Ogden, Utah, in 1903, where he was an interested participant in a convention having the one purpose only, viz.: the securing to the western portion of our continent such irrigation facilities as will protect this region from the effects of drought. This problem to a large degree has been solved in California by the enterprise of such citizens as Mr. Clark, but there still remain vast tracts on the western plains from which Nature has withheld the needed moisture and which will remain unproductive until the wise judgment and enterprise of man has introduced a satisfactory system of irrigation.

DR. WILLIAM JETER PRATHER. This pioneer of 1849 is a descendant of southern ancestors that came to this country from England. His paternal great-grandfather, John Smith Prather, of Maryland, lived to be ninety-four years of age. The grandfather, Rev. Leonard Deacons Prather, a native of Maryland, entered the ministry of the Presbyterian denomination, and filled a number of pastorates in North Carolina, where he married Miss Frances Williamson. A number of members of the Williamson family participated in the war of the Revolution and one of that name served as a delegate to the continental congress and was a signer of the constitution.

In the family of Rev. Leonard D. Prather was a son, Robert R., who was born in Caswell county, N. C., February 26, 1800, and became a minister in the Christian Church. His wife, Frances, was born in Guilford county, N. C., and was a daughter of Josiah Lambeth, a native of North Carolina and by occupation a farmer. The founder of the Lambeth family in America was the great-grandfather, an Englishman, and owner of large estates in his native land, which, however, he lost through immigrating to the United States and failing to claim his property. Several of his sons were participants in the war with England. Fourteen children comprised the family of Rev. Robert R. Prather, and all but one of these attained mature years. One of the sons, Robert, is a minister in the Cumberland Presbyterian denomination in Arkansas. Another son, L. L., who served in the Civil war and was wounded at Sharpsburg, engaged in the practice of medicine until his death, which occurred in Arkansas. The father died March 4, 1881.

The oldest member of this large family was William J. Prather, who was born in Guilford county, N. C., May 11, 1827, and grew to manhood on a farm in that state. In early boyhood he attended subscription schools. One of his most distinct recollections is concerning the establishment of the first free schools in North Carolina. His father was a member of the first board of teachers' examiners in their county. In 1847 he went to Florida, where he was employed as overseer of a plantation. In 1848 he went to Tennessee and operated a sawmill near Memphis. On learning of the discovery of gold in California he at once determined to seek the remote west. March 10, 1849, he started upon the eventful journey through an unknown wilderness. Going to Fort Smith, Ark., he joined a large train of mule teams bound for Santa Fe. There the wagons were traded for pack mules, with which the party traveled via Taos, N. M., toward Pueblo, crossing the Platte at old Fort St. Vrain and Green river above the gorge. At Salt Lake City they bought wheat and had it ground, secured other necessary supplies, and started onward, fording Bear river, traveling through Thousand Spring valley, then along the Lawson cut-off, and across the mountains, finally crossing Pitt and Feather rivers, and reaching the Sacramento river September 22, 1849.

Gaining some experience as a miner in the mines, on Yuba river, Mr. Prather remained there until December, and then went to Nye's ranch, now Marysville, with an uncle, A. T. Farish, with whom he crossed the plains. He was also engaged in the general mercantile business with his uncle. In the spring of 1850 he returned to the mines on Feather river, from there went to Downieville, later to Cañon creek and Sears' Diggings, and was one of the discoverers of the Harris Gulch, where he remained until July and then returned to Marysville with $1,000 in gold dust. Soon he returned to the Yuba and bought a claim for which he paid $1,100, but after a month left discouraged, with only fifty cents in gold. With his uncle he started for Park's Bar and there met with encouraging success. His next venture was as proprietor of a general store at Wyandotte Diggings, but after several unsuccessful months he took the goods to Bidwell's Bar and sold them at auction. After another brief experience in the Yuba mines he started a hotel at Owsley's Bar. In July of 1852 he went into the mountains to saw lumber, returning the next year to Sacramento, where he married Miss Margaret Lawson, who was born in Missouri and died in 1879 in California. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Yolo county, four miles from Woodland, where he brought under cultivation a tract of wild land. At first he met with success, but the dry years of 1858 and 1859 forced him to sell out at a loss. Afterward he studied dentistry in Sacramento and for twenty years followed that profession in Woodland.

During February of 1877 Dr. Prather came to Fresno county. Two years before he had located a tract of raw land at Wildflower, where he had one hundred and sixty acres under timber, and engaged in farming and stock-raising. This property he sold in 1886, but three years before had moved from the farm into Fresno, where he has since practiced dentistry. On East avenue, in the Fresno colony, he bought forty acres about 1886 and set out the land in raisin grapes and fruit trees, building the residence where he has since made his home. He is a member of the Raisin Growers' Association, and is also identified with the California State Dental Association, which he assisted in organizing. Politically a Democrat, he was elected justice of the peace on that ticket while making his home in Yolo county. The California Pioneers of San Francisco number him among their active members. In religion he is a believer in the doctrines of the Christian Church and was formerly connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Of his first marriage nine children were born, of whom the following survive: Mrs. Mary McGuire, of Fresno; Mrs. Sonora A. Heilbron, also of Fresno; Mrs. Belle Clute, who resides in San Francisco; William Robert, owner of Adams Springs in Lake county, Cal.; Mrs. Emma Marshall, of Fresno; and Frank M., who is connected with the electric railway in Lake county, this state. The second marriage of Dr. Prather occurred in Fresno and united him with Miss Mary Healey, who was born in Wisconsin and grew to womanhood in Minnesota. The two children of this union, Alma and George Virgil Jeter, are with their parents in the Fresno home, on East avenue, two and one-half miles south of the city.

In closing this brief memoir of this venerable pioneer of California, it is but due him to emphasize the fact that throughout the fifty-five years of his residence in this state he has been recognized as one of its most useful, high-minded and public-spirited citizens. It has lain within his power to accomplish much good, and he has not failed to embrace every opportunity to promote the well-being of his fellow-men. No project for the advancement of the welfare of the people has failed to receive his support, and he has been actuated by motives of a high and unselfish nature in all his transactions. The careers of such men as Dr. Prather always leave an indelible impress upon the community in which they are spent. Now, in the twilight of his long and well-spent life, he is able to take a retrospective view of his career without regret over its most conspicuous features; and the record here preserved should prove a source of inspiration to the young men of the present generation, as well as of gratification and pride to his descendants, all of whom are residents of California and who, as the years pass, will exhibit a keener interest in the history of the state.

CHARLES CROSS NELSON is a worthy representative of that class of enterprising citizens who has made the prosperity of California a possibility. He has been closely identified with the interests of Merced county, in the vicinity of Plainsberg, since 1856, and is now living retired in this place, enjoying the fruits of his well-directed life.

Mr. Nelson was born in Tompkins county, N. Y., November 7, 1832, the youngest son of Robert and Margaret (Cross) Nelson, both of whom were natives of Orange county, that state. Robert Nelson was a farmer and it was upon the home farm that Charles C. spent his boyhood days and attended the district school. Leaving school at the age of fourteen years, he assisted his father with the work upon the home farm until he had reached manhood's estate, at which time he embarked upon an independent career. In December, 1853, he took passage on the vessel Star of the West, from New York for California, by way of the Isthmus of Panama. From Greytown to Virgin Bay he traveled in a small boat, and on horseback from the latter place to San Juan, where he secured passage on a Pacific vessel for San Francisco, arriving there twenty-eight days after leaving New York. He went to the mines after he had spent two months on a ranch, believing he could better his financial condition more rapidly. After spending two years in the mines of Mariposa county with varied success, he again turned his attention to the calling he had followed from boyhood, having great faith in the future of California as an agricultural state.

In partnership with E. T. Givens he engaged in farming in the vicinity of Plainsberg for a few years, meeting with gratifying success. He then sold his interests in the co-partnership and embarked in a general farming enterprise independently. So successful was he that he made purchases of land from time to time until he had acquired fourteen hundred and forty acres, which he improved, giving his undivided attention to its cultivation until about 1890, when he disposed of his holdings and has since lived a retired life, free from the cares of business which had engrossed his attention since 1854, the year of his arrival in this state.

A Democrat in politics, Mr. Nelson has taken an intelligent interest in the workings of that party and acceptably served as supervisor of Merced county from his district from 1888 to 1896, during which time he was instrumental in doing much good for his section of the county. He also served as postmaster of Plainsberg for several years. A man of high moral principles, of broad mind and public spirit, he has ever been a champion of all worthy causes that had for their object the advancement of the educational and moral status of the county or state, and he is highly esteemed by all who know him.

CARROLL CARROLLTON SCOTT. The life which this narrative sketches began at Holliday's Cove, Brooke county, W. Va., November 28, 1836, and closed at Fresno, Cal., May 25, 1903. Peter Scott, a native of Pennsylvania, lived for some years upon a farm in Brooke county, then a part of Virginia. From there in 1844 he removed to the vicinity of Sandusky, Ohio, where he and his wife, Susanna Spielman, a native of Maryland, passed the closing years of their lives. One of their sons, D. S. Scott, is a resident of Woodland, Cal.; another, O. L., is a lumber manufacturer at Pinos Altos, N. M., and a daughter, Mrs. P. S. Ginn, makes her home in Los Angeles. Among their other children was a son, Carroll Carrollton, who was twelve when the family settled in Ohio. After graduating from Antioch College in 1856 he engaged in teaching school for three years and then crossed the plains to California, arriving at Grass Valley in the fall of 1859. In early days he participated in two Indian campaigns in Inyo and Mono counties, and was also a participant in the stormy scenes incident to the Civil war. In Mono county he served as superintendent of schools and as county supervisor. From there he moved to Woodland, Yolo county, where he followed the brickmason's trade and built up a large contracting business. In 1887 he moved to Selma, where he had the contract for most of the masonry work in the town. From 1895 until his death he made Fresno his home, and here was a charter member of the first international bricklayers' union organized in the state. While living in Woodland he was an active worker in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. While residing in Grass Valley he joined the first company of state militia. In religion he was connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The marriage of C. C. Scott was solemnized at Woodland, January 5, 1868, and united him with

Mrs. Myra A. (Stoddard) Burton, who was born at Millersburg, Holmes county, Ohio, being a daughter of Thomas Adams and Jane (Cochran) Stoddard, natives respectively of Connecticut and Rockland, N. Y. Among fourteen children, nine of whom came to California, six daughters and one son are still living, Mrs. Scott being the eldest surviving daughter. Her father, who was a cousin of John Q. Adams, was reared principally in Boston until thirteen years of age and was orphaned when only nine. After his marriage in New York he removed to Pennsylvania, where two sons and two daughters were born. His next home was at Millersburg, Ohio, where he followed farm pursuits in addition to stone cutting. Later he became a pioneer at Lafayette Grove, Ogle county, Ill., and next settled in Oregon, Ill. During July of 1853 he drove to Iowa with ox-teams and spent the winter at Newton, Jasper county, where his two daughters were married. In April of 1854 he started across the plains for Oregon, but while en route changed his plans and came to California, arriving in Yuba county September 10, 1854. For some years he followed the business of stone-cutter and contractor, and finally retired from active pursuits to Woodland, Yolo county, remaining there until his death, at the age of seventy-seven years. During much of his active life he was an exhorter in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he was a Republican and fraternally held membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, who was a daughter of Rev. William Cochran, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, died in Shasta county, Cal., January 4, 1870, after having been an invalid for thirty-three years.

Born in April, 1836, Mrs. Scott was only a few months old when her parents removed to Illinois in January of 1837. Her first marriage was solemnized in Newton, Iowa, March 23, 1854, and united her with Andrew H. Springer, a native of Indiana and a cousin of Hon. John G. Springer, of Illinois. While the family were traveling to the west Mr. Springer died on the 4th of July, 1854, of mountain fever, and was buried at Ham's Fork, of Bear river. In December, 1855, Mrs. Springer became the wife of Rev. J. W. Burton, who was born in Broome county, N. Y., February 26, 1823, and at ten years of age removed to Pennsylvania. At sixteen he was converted, at twenty licensed to preach and a year later admitted to the Wisconsin conference. In 1847 he was transferred to the Rock river conference in Illinois. After coming to California in 1850 he worked at mining for a time, but in September, 1856, was admitted to the California conference and afterward labored in the conference of northern California, his last pastorate being at Woodland, where he died March 17, 1864.

He was a consecrated man, a devoted pastor and loyal to the cause of Christianity. Of his marriage to Mrs. Springer four children were born, namely: Thomas H. Burton, a brick contractor, and vice-president of the Bricklayers' Union at Fresno; Frank A., also a brick contractor; Retta J., who died at Woodland; and Lida E., Mrs. Weeks, a resident of Fresno. By her first marriage Mrs. Scott has a daughter, Mary Alice, who is the widow of George Banks, of San Francisco. Her union with Mr. Scott resulted in the birth of seven children, namely: Edwin Carrollton, who died at nineteen months; William Stoddard, of Fresno; Eddith Parthenia, wife of G. M. Crawford, of Fresno; Fred Carroll, an attorney of Fresno; Chancellor Hollis, a brick contractor with his brother, William S.; Elmer Leslie, who died at five months; and Della Gertrude, who resides with her mother.

MISS ESTELLA BAGNELLE. In no field of activity has the influence of woman been more uplifting and permanent than in educational affairs. Legion are the names of those women who, in large cities or remote hamlets, have contributed to the development of the public school system and the advancement of our standard of education. To a large extent they have labored directly in the schoolroom, but a few have been chosen to the even greater responsibility of acting as county superintendent of schools, and have thus carried the burden of the success or failure of each individual worker. In every position to which Miss Bagnelle has been chosen, whether that of teacher, principal of schools, member of the board of education or county superintendent of schools, she has impressed her individuality upon her associates, and by originality of ideas, breadth of knowledge and success in discipline she has won the esteem of the members of her profession and the patrons of the public schools.

Many of the qualities that have contributed to Miss Bagnelle's success in educational work come to her from a worthy ancestry. Her father, J. D. Bagnelle, was born in Mississippi, of an old southern family descended from French progenitors and identified with the early history of Virginia. During his early manhood he moved to Illinois and engaged in the mercantile business at Litchfield, Montgomery county, until his early death. He married Amanda Slaughter, who was born in Tennessee and survived him many years, passing away December 28, 1901. The lineage of the Slaughter family is traced back to 1608 in Scotland, and three brothers coming from that country founded the family in America. Mrs. Bagnelle's father, Capt. L. R. Slaughter, a native of Tennessee and a pioneer cabinet-maker, builder and lumberman of Hillsboro, Ill., served during the Civil war as captain of Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Infantry. After the war he engaged in merchandising in Litchfield, Ill. From there he came to California in 1881 and settled in San Jose, where he planted an orchard and became interested in horticulture. In 1887 he removed to a ranch near Madera. His death occurred in Madera, January, 1903, when he had attained eighty-four years of age. On the twenty-first anniversary of his birth he was made a Mason and for more than sixty years continued a disciple of the high principles of the order. Politically he voted the Democratic ticket at local and general elections. His wife, who was Mary Stultz, a native of Tennessee, died in 1802. Both were identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church and liberal in their contributions to religious movements.

Miss Bagnelle was one of three children, the others being Ray L., of Madera, and George, who resides in San Francisco. Her education, begun in Litchfield, Ill., her native town, was completed in the state normal school of San Jose, from which she was graduated in 1885. After teaching for a year in San Jose, in 1887 she began to teach in the district schools of Madera county, and afterward was for eight years connected with the Madera schools. During the first six years of this time she held the position of vice-principal and then for two years served as principal. In 1898 she was nominated for county superintendent of schools on the Democratic ticket and received a majority of one hundred and forty, taking the oath of office in January, 1899, for a term of four years. At the expiration of that time, in 1902, she was re-elected without opposition, a fact which furnishes abundant testimony as to the efficiency of her services. Her successful experience as an educator especially qualifies her for the office she now fills. Having been a teacher, she understands thoroughly the many difficulties that teachers have to contend with and the many impediments that interfere with their fullest success. There are four improvements for which she has labored indefatigably, namely: uniformity of text books; higher standard of teachers; better salaries; more interest among trustees. To the securing of these results she has given time, thought and attention, and whatever improvements in these directions future years may bring they may be attributed in large degree to her efforts during the years of her connection with the schools. Aside from her duties as superintendent she acts as secretary of the San Joaquin Teachers' Association, is warmly interested in the National Educational Association, and has the deepest sympathy with all movements for the benefit of the profession. May, 1893, she was chosen a member of the county board of education, at the time of the organization of Madera county, and since 1899 she has officiated as secretary of the board.

GEORGE McCANN. From the pioneer days of hardships and privations to the present prosperity of California, George McCann has given his best efforts toward the development of resources and the upbuilding and growth of the community in which he has made his home. The experiences which have made up his life for the past half century have been such as to bring out the strongest characteristics of manhood, under which a weaker nature would have sunk to insignificance, while his rose superior to the trials and adversities which surrounded him. To-day he is justly entitled to the honored position which he holds among the representative citizens of Tulare county, which has been the scene of his labors since September 15, 1859, when he located on Cross creek, Tulare (now Kings) county, and entered upon his work of stock raising.

Born in County Dublin, Ireland, August 15, 1826, he is the only son living in a family of eight sons and two daughters, of whom all but one daughter attained maturity. He was the youngest child of his parents, George and Mary (McKeon) McCann, the latter a native of the same locality. The father was a farmer in Ireland, who died when his youngest son was only six years old. The mother came to America and joined her children in Illinois, where her death occurred near Redbud. George McCann was reared on the home farm in Ireland until he was twenty years old, and on his birthday, in August, 1846, starting for America on the sailer Letitia Haynes. Five weeks and three days were spent in the passage from Liverpool to New York City. He remained in New York state until the fall of that year, when he went to New Orleans and spent the winter. In the spring of 1847 he came north to Redbud, Ill., thence to the lead mines at Benton, Wis. He engaged in that occupation until 1850, when, in company with three others, he crossed the plains with ox teams. The party outfitted at St. Joseph, Mo., which city they left May 12, 1850, and after a journey of three months and three days arrived in Hangtown (Placerville), Cal., the day of his arrival there being signalized by the fact that it was also his birthday. From Hangtown he went to Calaveras county and for seven years following made Murphys Camp his headquarters, engaged for the greater part of the time in placer mining. He discovered some very rich quartz, but was unable to make a success in mining it, although he was very successful in his other mining ventures. In 1857 he went to southern California and bought cattle, bringing them to Monterey county, where he engaged in this work for two years. September 15, 1859, he located on Cross creek, in what was then Tulare county, but is now in Kings county, and continued his stock business. He had fine headquarters, running water, and his stock ranged over thousands of acres of land. He finally became the owner of nine thousand acres up and down Cross creek for a distance of seven miles, and this is all fenced, and a large part irrigated. Of this vast property four hundred and sixty acres is in Tulare county and the balance in Kings county. He was one of the first farmers of his vicinity to put in alfalfa, after which he engaged in both the stock business and the raising of grain, while for a time he also conducted a dairy with much profit.

In Visalia, in 1870, Mr. McCann married Mary L. Corcoran, also a native of Ireland, and they became the parents of six children, namely: Letitia, Mary, Thomas, George, Clara and Katie. The saddest reverse in the lives of these worthy pioneers was the death of all of these children in 1886. Four, Letitia, George, Clara and Katie, died from diphtheria, which the eldest daughter contracted at school; Mary died in Santa Cruz while at school, and Thomas died in infancy. Mr. McCann and his wife traveled considerable after these sad bereavements, and finally, in 1889, located in Visalia, where they have a comfortable and pleasant residence, rounding out the years of a well-spent life in quiet enjoyment of the prosperity which the years have brought to them and to the country at large. Politically Mr. McCann is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. Incidents which remain strong in the memory of Mr. McCann are often recounted by him, one of which is the many times that he has found his way home at night when there were no roads nor landmarks of any kind, aided only by the light of a star.

MARSHALL ALEXANDER GILREATH, M. D. As one who has attained a fair degree of success during the eight years of his residence in Selma, Fresno county, we mention Dr. Marshall Alexander Gilreath, who has been a resident of California since 1892. Dr. Gilreath is a worthy representative of a distinguished southern family, and in tracing his ancestral history it is found that his paternal grandfather, George H. Gilreath, was born in South Carolina, and not only was he prosperous as a farmer and planter, but he was also successful as a minister of the Gospel, in the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. While laboring in the latter capacity, he took his family to

Burton Swanson

Georgia in 1830, locating in Bartow county. It was in this county that his death took place, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. His son, Jabez, the father of Dr. Gilreath, was also a South Carolinian, and during his life followed the double occupation of farmer and tanner. He was united in marriage with Elza E. Weakfield, who was born in Greenville, S. C., and eleven children were born to them, four sons and seven daughters. The mother of these children spent her last years at Atlanta, Ga., where she died in 1903, her husband having passed away in 1896.

The recipient of but a limited education in the common schools of Georgia, Dr. Gilreath, after leaving school and having made a choice of his life-work, set about securing the necessary training. Entering Emory College at Oxford, Ga., in 1887, he also attended lectures in Atlanta, and subsequently finished his medical education in the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tenn., graduating from that institution in 1891, with the degree of M. D. It remained now to make the proper application of the knowledge gained during his years of study, and during his first year's practice at Cartersville, Ga., he learned many valuable lessons in the school of experience. The following year Dr. Gilreath came to California, locating in Bakersfield in January of that year, but after a two months' stay there, a more desirable location was found in Kingsburg, and during his four years' residence in that place he was successful in building up a good practice. In 1896 he removed to a broader field of labor at Selma, where he has since remained. He is well posted and keeps abreast of the times, and takes a fitting interest in the moral, religious and social development of his section. A Democrat in his political views, Dr. Gilreath is not an active partisan. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His marriage took place in Kingsburg, this state, when he was united with Emily B. Garret, formerly of Philadelphia. They have two children, Elza E. and Walker G. The religious inclinations of the family are for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and they occupy a high position socially in Selma.

BURTON SWANSON. Owing and occupying the old homestead on which he was born, Burton Swanson holds an assured position among the successful farmers of Tulare county. Actively engaged in the cultivation of the soil, he has spent a busy and useful life, his farm, lying about six miles east of Visalia, bearing evidence to the observer of his skill and ability as an agriculturist. The son of John Swanson, an honored pioneer of this section of California, his birth occurred March 25, 1858, in the old log house that was built during the Indian war, and which is still standing on the farm.

Born in Indiana in 1812, John Swanson lived in his native state until after attaining his majority. Migrating westward, he spent a few years in Illinois, but on hearing the exciting reports of the discovery of gold in California he came by boat to this state in 1849. Meeting with fair success as a miner, he went back to Illinois in 1850 for his family, with whom he returned, crossing the plains in 1851 with an emigrant train drawn by ox-teams. Locating at Mud Springs, Eldorado county, he engaged in mining, and also established a trading post, which he conducted for a year. Coming to Tulare county in 1852, he took up land six miles east of Visalia, and partly improved it. Subsequently removing to Lemon Cove, he bought land, and there engaged in farming and stock raising until 1862, when his house was washed away by the floods, and his crops destroyed. He then returned to his original homestead, the possession of which he had retained, and here resided until his death, August 12, 1863. He married Hannah Sherman, who was born in Ohio, near Zanesville, and died, May 5, 1877, on the home farm, in Tulare county. She came of distinguished stock, her father, William Sherman, having been an uncle of William Tecumseh Sherman, one of the generals of the Civil war. Of their union twelve children were born, seven sons and five daughters. In his political affiliations, John Swanson was a true blue Republican. During the Indian troubles that occurred soon after his settling in Tulare county, he took an active part, and as captain of the Home Guards was buried with military honors.

The eleventh child in order of birth of the parental household, Burton Swanson received a limited education in the pioneer district school, and from the age of twelve years assisted in the care of the home farm, on which he now lives. He has forty acres of land, which he devotes to alfalfa, hay, grain and stock and also rents forty acres lying near. Here he successfully pursues his pleasant and independent occupation, and his ranch, with its many substantial improvements, is one of the most desirable pieces of property for its size of any in the neighborhood.

Mr. Swanson has been twice married. He married first, in Tulare county, Elizabeth Ewing, who was born in Illinois, and died on the home farm, leaving two children, namely: Elmer, at home; and Stella, wife of R. H. Arnett, Jr., of Visalia. Mr. Swanson's second marriage took place in this county, and united him with Christiana R. Anderson, a native of Denmark, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Clara I., Hannah C., and John Henry. Politically Mr.

Swanson is a staunch Republican, and belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood, of Exeter, Tulare county. Mr. Swanson is a man of striking personality, being well proportioned, standing six feet six inches in his stocking feet, and weighing two hundred pounds. He is strong and healthy, with a clear, dark complexion, neither drinking liquors nor using tobacco in any form.

HENRY F. BLISS. An influential position among the pioneer residents of Visalia was held by the Bliss family, nor has their prestige been diminished by the passing of the years. The first of the name to settle in this part of California was H. F. Bliss, Sr., a native of New York state and the son of a Presbyterian minister, whom he accompanied to Michigan and grew to manhood amid frontier conditions in Allegan county. During 1850 he crossed the plains with ox-teams and followed the calling of a miner after his arrival in California, soon, however, returning east by way of Panama. It was not his intention to remain permanently in Michigan and as soon as arrangements could be brought about he crossed the plains a second time, settling in Tulare county and buying a tract of land six miles south of Visalia. Later he sold that property and bought a farm one mile or more to the south of town, where he conducted large stock-raising interests. His death occurred in Visalia when he was fifty-seven years of age. After coming to the west he married Roxey Jordan, who was born in Texas and accompanied her father, Frank, to the coast region. One of her brothers, John F. Jordan, is an influential citizen of Visalia. From girlhood her home was in this locality, and her death occurred in the home of her son, Henry F., when she was fifty-three years of age. Of her children William died in Visalia; Henry F. was second in order of birth and is now a prominent stock-dealer of Visalia; Charles E. resides in Fresno and engages in mining in this state; George is a real estate agent at Hanford; Irving conducts a dairy business at Bakersfield, where J. H., the sixth son, carries on an abstract business; Mary, the eldest daughter, died in Visalia; Cora is engaged in the abstract business in this city; Rose is a school teacher at Hanford; and Maggie and Earl are twins; Maggie is now attending the State Normal School at San Jose, and Earl follows the abstract business in Hanford.

In Visalia, where he was born December 7, 1861, Henry F. Bliss acquired a fair education in the public schools. From boyhood his tastes have led him into agriculture, both in the departments of general farming and stock-raising. At one time he operated twelve hundred acres near Exeter, but in 1901 he disposed of these interests and settled on the old Bliss homestead in the suburbs of Visalia. Here he has since engaged in the live-stock business, buying and selling horses, cattle and hogs, and dealing in poultry of all kinds. Under his supervision are seventy acres, of which the larger part is under alfalfa. In his work he has the co-operation and counsel of his wife, whom he married in San Francisco, and who was formerly Mrs. Florence M. Raisch, a native of Logan county, Ark. In religious belief Mrs. Bliss is identified with the Congregational Church and Mr. Bliss is interested in the work of the same, though not a member. Included in his fraternal relations may be mentioned membership in the Knights of Pythias, Uniform Rank, and the Fraternal Brotherhood, both of which organizations have the benefit of his active interest and constant support. Tulare county has been his lifelong home and its interests he has made his own. No citizen is more interested in its material development than he and none has been more solicitous to aid in its progress. Movements for the benefit of his home city or county receive his staunch support and he is always relied upon to champion public-spirited projects. Politically he is a Democrat.

JULIUS LONEY. Among the native-born citizens of California conspicuous for their ability and worth is Julius Loney, one of the most thrifty and prosperous of the successful agriculturists of Stanislaus county. His well-cultivated and well-improved ranch, lying three miles east of Oakdale, is one of the best in its appointments of any in this section of the state, reflecting credit on his sound judgment and wise management. A son of the late James Loney, he was born May 27, 1864, in Tuolumne county. His father was of Scotch ancestry and his mother of Swedish.

A native of Scotland, James Loney was born December 24, 1818. Shipping as a cabin-boy when eleven years old, he was engaged in sea-faring pursuits for nearly a score of years, all of the latter part of the time serving as first mate of his vessel. After visiting many of the more important ports of the globe, he located in California in Tuolumne county, in 1848, and was there successfully employed in mining for twelve years. Purchasing a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres in 1862, he carried on general farming and stock raising with great success, in course of time becoming an extensive landholder, at one time owning several thousand acres of land in that county. Inheriting the physical strength and vigor of his hardy Scotch progenitors, he lived to a good old age, passing away June 1, 1904. His wife, whose maiden name was Kate Jones, is now living on the home ranch, being a bright and active woman of seventy-six years. He was a consistent Democrat in his political affiliations, and fraternally was an Odd Fellow. Of the children born to him, six grew to years of maturity, namely: John H.; Mrs. Jane A. Clavey; James W.; Joseph V.; Julius, the subject of this sketch; and Jefferson; one son, Jerome, is dead.

Brought up on the home farm, and obtaining a limited education in the district schools, Julius Loney early acquired a good knowledge of the various branches of agriculture, and at the age of thirteen years began working for wages. Prudent, thrifty and economical, he accumulated considerable money, and in 1885 located on his present farm, three miles east of Oakdale, on what is known as the Clavey ranch. He has seventeen hundred acres of valuable land, the larger part of which he devotes to the raising of grain, harvesting large crops each season, therefrom realizing a handsome annual income.

Mr. Loney married Nancy E. Box, who was born in Calaveras county, a daughter of Stephen and Melissa (Abbott) Box, who came across the plains to this state in 1852. They had three children, namely: Jessie A., Elmer S. and Eliza B. Mrs. Loney died October 21, 1899. Politically Mr. Loney cordially indorses the principles of the Republican party, of which he is a devoted adherent, but, his time being fully taken up with agricultural pursuits, he has never sought any public office.

HON. ELBRIDGE NELSON RECTOR.

Upon being transplanted from Germany to Scotland the Richter family became known by their present appellation of Rector. At an early period in the settlement of America they established themselves in Virginia, and several generations were identified with the growth of that commonwealth. At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war Charles Rector, a large and prosperous planter, was engaged in the cultivation of his land, which occupied a portion of the present site of Lexington, Va. In his family there were eleven sons, most of whom accompanied him when he entered the service of the colonies to fight for independence. When the war ended he resumed the peaceful pursuits of a planter in the Old Dominion. During his latter years he traveled by horseback across the mountains to Kentucky and thence to Tennessee, where he remained until his death. Among the sons who served with him in the war with England was Benjamin, a native of Virginia, for some years a resident of Kentucky, later a planter in Sevier county, Tenn., and from 1840 until his death a resident of Texas.

Next in line of descent was Kemner Avery

Rector, a native of Virginia, who enlisted in the war of 1812, took part in the battle of New Orleans, and gained a reputation of being the best shot in General Jackson's army. His marriage to Elizabeth Randall, a native of Tennessee, allied him with an influential old Virginia family, who were connected with the Spencers, Clacks, and other prominent families of the Old Dominion. Among the five children of Kemner Avery Rector the eldest, Elbridge Gerry, was born in Sevier county, Tenn., February 19, 1816, and during 1835 went to Texas, where the following year he joined the Texan army. In the battle of San Jacinto he was twice severely wounded, from the effects of which he never entirely recovered. Later he was on the frontier in the Indian war as a Texas ranger under Col. Jack Hayes and Captain Bird. In 1847 he took part in the Mexican war, remaining at the front until peace was declared. During 1849, with pack mules, he made the long journey via El Paso, Tucson and Yuma to Los Angeles and thence up the coast and across to San Joaquin county, and from there to Mariposa county, where he landed on the September memorable in state history as the date of the election of the members of the California constitutional convention. For a time he engaged in mining and then carried on a hotel at the Green Valley ranch. In 1853 he removed to what is now Merced county and engaged in farming and stock-raising on the Merced river. One of his first public efforts was the circulation of a petition for the setting off of Merced from Mariposa county, which was successfully accomplished in 1855, and he was elected the first county clerk. After he had filled that position for seven years he was elected county sheriff, and served from 1864 to 1866.

Removing from Merced to Stanislaus county in 1868, Elbridge G. Rector engaged in farming and stock-raising opposite the present site of Modesto. In 1870 he transferred his residence to Mariposa county, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising near Coulterville. His next removal, in 1877, took him to Texas, where he embarked in the stock business in San Saba county, remaining there until November, 1882, and then returning to Merced county, Cal. From January, 1880, to January, 1891, he filled the office of county treasurer. For years he was the leader of the Democratic party in Merced county. Possessing to a remarkable degree the faculty of winning and retaining friends, few men have been more popular or prominent than he, and it furnishes an evidence of his noble character to state that, though he led one party, he was respected by members of the opposition. Indeed, on every hand there came tributes of regard and respect. Without doubt he worked more to secure the interests of his town and county than his own financial affairs, for he was one of the most unselfish of men. Governor Latham always gave him the credit for his election to the gubernatorial chair and assured him any favors requested would be granted, yet Mr. Rector asked for nothing. His work was done from a sense of duty and patriotic pride, not with the expectation of pecuniary reward or official holdings. He was a charter member of La Grange Lodge, F. & A. M., in which he was past master, and in addition he held membership with the Royal Arch Masons. From 1883 until his death, October 19, 1903, he continued to make Merced his home.

The marriage of Elbridge G. Rector occurred in Merced county in 1860 and united him with Amanda M. McFarlane, who was born in Jackson county, Ala., and now resides in Merced. Her parents, Robert and Elizabeth (Hobbs) McFarlane, were natives of Virginia and settled in Tennessee at an early day, thence removing to a farm in Alabama. The McFarlane family came from Scotland and established themselves on a plantation in Virginia during the colonial period. The Hobbs family originated in England and also had representatives in the Revolutionary war from Virginia. In the family of Elbridge G. Rector there were five children. The eldest son, William Fielding, was born at Snelling, Merced county, Cal., April 8, 1861, and is a journalist and literary writer residing at Merced. The second son, Thomas Blackston, is a farmer and stock-raiser of Mariposa county. The daughters, Mary E. and Laura A., are the youngest of the family; the former resides with her mother and the latter is engaged in teaching school at Santa Ana.

The birth of Elbridge Nelson Rector occurred at Snelling, Merced county, Cal., January 6, 1865. After completing the district school studies he entered the Pacific Methodist College, at Santa Rosa, from which he was graduated in 1889 with the degree of A. B. The next year was spent in Hastings College of Law, after which he taught school for two years at Atwater. With the means thus secured he was enabled to complete his law course. In 1895 he was graduated from Hastings with the degree of LL. B., after which he engaged in the practice of the law in San Francisco for a year, and in 1896 returned to Merced to begin professional work in this city. For the next two years he served as secretary of the county central committee of the Democratic party. At a special election in 1900, to fill the vacancy in the unexpired term of Judge J. K. Law, he was nominated by the Democrats for the office of superior judge of Merced county and received a fair majority over Judge Ostrander, entering upon his judicial duties in December of that year. In 1902 he was nominated by a large majority, against opposition in the Democratic party. In the Republican convention no nomination was made for the office and he was therefore elected without opposition to serve until January, 1909. The qualities of mind which he possesses pre-eminently qualify him for successful service in the office of judge. Of an impartial, cool and calm temperament, he avoids the impetuosity of hastily formed decisions, but gives to each case the dignified and unbiased deliberation which it merits. In his well rounded character religion mingles harmoniously with other lofty attributes of mind. For years he has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he officiates as a trustee. In fraternal relations he is connected with the Woodmen of the World. The State Bar Association has his name enrolled among its members and other movements for the benefit of professional men receive his co-operation. While he is a leader in politics and one of the most influential Democrats of the San Joaquin valley, in official relations politics are made subservient to public duty. Neither personal nor political matters are allowed to bias his judgment in the decisions of the courtroom, hence he gives to the bench the dignity and elevation that should be its foremost attributes.

JESSE E. FRAME. During the early history of Wisconsin and while that state was still considered a frontier region, Jeremiah Frame left his eastern home and settled among the pioneers of Lafayette county. After a considerable experience in lead mining he turned his attention to farming. Eventually he removed to Nebraska, where he died in Brown county. In his family was a son, Elias, who was born near Argyle, Lafayette county, Wis., and from there went to the front during the Civil war as a member of a regiment of infantry. After his marriage he left Wisconsin and settled in Seward county, Neb., where he improved a tract of wild land and also engaged in missionary work for the Methodist Episcopal denomination. After his removal to Brown county, Neb., in 1880, he homesteaded a claim and built him a house of logs, where his family lived for about twelve years. During 1892 he came to California and began to raise oranges at Portersville. Afterward he returned to Wisconsin to renew the associations of boyhood and died while visiting at Martintown, Green county. His widow, who was born at Monroe, Wis., now resides near Portersville. Of her marriage there are seven children, all living, as follows: H. A., who is engaged in the commission business at Portersville; Rozella, wife of William A. Henry, of Tulare; Mrs. Clara Doty, who lives near Portersville; Jesse E., of Tulare; Mrs. Ida Withrow, William E., and Mrs. Mabel Weisenberger, all residing at Portersville.

During the residence of the family on their homestead near Seward, Neb., J. E. Frame was born February 29, 1876. In the country schools of Nebraska he received a fair education, which has been supplemented by habits of close observation. At sixteen years of age he accompanied the family to California and soon acquired a knowledge of the care of trees and raising of fruit. In 1897 he set out a grove of oranges covering ten acres and there carried on a citrus nursery business for three years. Since 1900 he has been a business man of Tulare, where, as a partner of J. N. Larson, he started the soda works and later bought the ice business. The firm makes a specialty of soda and mineral waters and carbonated drinks, also has the agency for Weiland and Fredericksburg beers in Visalia, and represents the Union, National and San Joaquin ice companies in Tulare. Besides the business at Tulare the partners own a one-half interest in the Visalia soda and bottling works. Through energy and industry they have built up a growing trade in the line of their specialties and have gained a position among the rising young business men of the city.

In Portersville Mr. Frame married Miss Madge Harris, who was born in San Francisco, and of their union two children were born, Howard and Carl. In his fraternal relations he holds membership in a number of local organizations, including the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Woodmen of the World, Independent Order of Foresters and Knights of the Royal Arch.

DR. W. F. CARTMILL. When an investigation of conditions led Dr. Cartmill to purchase property in Tulare county in 1861, the city of Tulare, where he now resides, had not been founded and few attempts had been made to improve any portion of the country. The possibilities of the soil were unknown and the healthful climate unappreciated. With keen discernment he decided that success awaited the man of perseverance and energy and industry. Looking about him for a location, he soon bought a quarter section ten miles southwest of Visalia, and to this original homestead he added from year to year until his landed possessions aggregated twelve hundred acres, all under ditch. During the early years of his residence in the county he made a specialty of the cattle business, but with the advent of many settlers and the dividing up of farm lands cattle could no longer be raised with profit. For this reason he changed his efforts to the raising of sheep, of which he had as many as six thousand head at one time, but about 1894 he sold his flock and retired from the business. For about fifteen years he conducted an apiary, but in 1904 disposed of all of his bees and discontinued the work. At this writing he owns two hundred and forty acres situated six miles northwest of Tulare, a large part of which is under alfalfa, the remainder in orchard and vineyard, while the balance of his extensive property he has given over to his son. With the building of the railroad to Tulare, in 1872 Dr. Cartmill removed here and started a house in town, which was among the first residences to be built, and he still makes his home in this old homestead on West Tulare street.

W. F. Cartmill was born January 5, 1822, in Franklin county, Ohio, but was reared in Madison county, and was next to the youngest among seven children, and is the sole survivor of the family. His father, William, was born in Virginia and settled in Kentucky, where he married Isabelle Ferguson, a native of Old Virginia. After his marriage he removed to Franklin county and later to Madison county, Ohio, and cleared a farm on Darby creek. There he continued to make his home for many years and until his life came to an end just three years before rounding out a full century. When a boy W. F. Cartmill was a pupil in a subscription school held in a log building wholly destitute of comforts. After leaving school he studied medicine under Dr. Thomas, of London, Ohio, in which city he practiced from 1846 to 1848, and then started to California. However, after he had traveled as far as Missouri he was persuaded to stop near Columbia and there he engaged in practice two years.

During the spring of 1850 Dr. Cartmill crossed the plains with horses, following the overland trail up the Platte, on to Salt Lake (where he remained one week), thence down the Humboldt river and by the Carson route. One hundred days after crossing the Missouri state line he landed in California and at once began mining at Rancheria near Volcano, Amador county, where he also practiced his profession. During 1854 he returned via Panama to Ohio and from there went to Missouri, where, near Columbia, March 27, 1855, he married Miss Sophia Barnes, a native of that locality. Her parents, Rev. James and Elizabeth (Burkhart) Barnes, were born respectively in Kentucky and Missouri, and the father, after settling in Randolph county, Mo., became a pioneer farmer and Baptist preacher, also served in the Indian wars of early days. Both he and his wife died in Missouri. They were the parents of fifteen children, all but two of whom attained mature years, and four are now living, Mrs. Cartmill being tenth in order of birth and the only member of the family to settle on the Pacific coast.

After their marriage Dr. and Mrs. Cartmill came to California by the Nicaragua route and settled in Amador county, where he resumed the work in which he had been interested previously. From there he came to Tulare county in 1861 and now resides in the city of Tulare, where he is an honored and influential citizen. The deepest bereavement that has befallen himself and wife in their otherwise happy married life was the loss, by diphtheria, within ten days, of their three daughters, Flora, Eva and Mary, leaving a son, Wooster Beach, who was born in 1857, in Amador county, as the sole survivor of their five children. The youngest child, Selmon, died at the age of two years. Besides this family of three daughters and two sons Dr. and Mrs. Cartmill have reared to womanhood a girl, Amelia Jessie, who is the wife of R. F. Guerin, a dairyman, living in the vicinity of Tulare. Politically Dr. Cartmill believes in Republican principles and votes the party ticket, but has never been active in partisan affairs. By virtue of his long identification with this part of the state he has been admitted as a member of the San Joaquin Valley Pioneers Society, in which he maintains a warm interest. During all the period of his residence in the county he has supported movements for the benefit of the people and has been unwearied in his efforts to promote the common good.

WILLIAM BROUGH. To the long list of men responsible for the agricultural upbuilding of Stanislaus county belongs the name of William Brough, the improver of several country properties, and for years as practical and influential a farmer as now lives in retirement in Newman. Not yet an old man as life is viewed today, Mr. Brough still has the fire of youth in his heart, and the enthusiasm of a vigorous constitution in his manner of thought. He has been one of the plain, matter-of-fact men around whom centers the strength and stability of communities, and his coming and going has always been according to method and rule, unmixed with speculative ventures, or desires which neither his training or abilities entitled him to realize. Born in Chenango county, N. Y., September 13, 1837, his ancestors resided peacefully in England until the ambitious tendencies of his father, George, caused his immigration to the United States from Devonshire, England, in the early part of the nineteenth century, after which he devoted his energies to farming in New York state until his removal to La Porte county, Ind., in 1840. William, the youngest of the four sons and four daughters in his father's family, was three years old at the time of this overland journey, and today is the sole survivor of a home where prudence, industry, and humanity ruled supreme. Five years later, in 1845, the father laid aside his earthly cares and joined the silent majority, and later still, his wife died, whose girlhood name was Ann Young, and who accompanied him from England.

The youth of William Brough knew more of labor than leisure, and his education was at best irregularly gained, and consisted rather of observation and experience than application to book learning. As an unmarried man he came across the plains in 1853, driving a horse team, and locating in Eldorado county, in the vicinity of Placerville. At first he met with indifferent success in the mines, but finally had cause for encouragement, and continued to search the camps for gold for several years, seven of which were spent in Eldorado county. Coming to the San Joaquin valley in 1862, he settled eight miles east of Stockton, and in connection with farming engaged in freighting to the various mines in the vicinity. When the business fell off owing to greater increase of facilities and population he removed to Merced county, and near the town of that name purchased land which he cultivated until 1873. He then removed to the west side of the county, near Los Banos, and tilled a farm until settling three and a half miles south of Newman, Stanislaus county, in 1884. This latter purchase, consisting of forty acres of alfalfa land, he owns at the present time, and with it farmed large areas near by, at the time being considered one of the largest farmers in the neighborhood. Having earned a competence at farming, and feeling justified in handing over the reins of management to younger and stronger hands, he moved into Newman May 1, 1904, and is now living a retired life, surrounded by the comforts and diversions which his years of industry have taught him to appreciate at their true value.

Notwithstanding his exceedingly busy life, Mr. Brough has taken a keen interest in general county matters, has encouraged schools and charitable institutions, and has responded liberally whenever call was made upon his financial or other assistance. He has stock in the New Era Creamery, an enterprise which has done much for the welfare of the dairymen of the county, and he is popular fraternally as a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. For many years Mr. Brough has exerted an influence in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is steward at the present time, and he has assisted materially in the moral and financial upbuilding of the church. Politically he espouses the Republican cause, but aside from holding the office of school trustee has never aspired to the uncertainties and worries of official life. In San Joaquin county, this state, he married Margaret Madora Soper, a native of Pennsylvania, and who has borne him eight children, four sons and four daughters, of whom three sons are deceased. In the order of their birth the children are: Mary Annetta, Mrs. Hiram Hoskins; Emily N., now Mrs. Albert Knebes; Charles, deceased; William, living near Newman; Mrs. Harriett Madora Hollister; Orvilla, deceased; Bertha Ray, residing at home, and her twin brother Orville, who died in infancy. The life of Mr. Brough has been such as to command the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact, and his efforts have reflected unchanging credit upon a county which is vastly indebted to the men who have created its past.

R. HUGH JOHNSON. A resident of California since a lad of three years, R. Hugh Johnson can well be ranked with the brave pioneers, his life history, in its principal facts, being a record of the lives of the earlier settlers of this great and glorious commonwealth. When he came to Tulare county large lakes and ponds stocked with fish of all kinds were much in evidence, occupying the land that has since been converted by the industry of the people into magnificent vineyards and orchards burdened with luscious fruits. Indians were troublesome in those days, and the wild antelope galloped over the plains, traveling so swiftly that it required an expert to lasso them. The pioneers were then obliged to avail themselves of every possible advantage in order to provide themselves with the necessities of life and proceed with the improvements on their homesteads. In common with his neighbors, Mr. Johnson's father toiled with diligence and energy, and in the course of time success smiled upon his energetic and persevering labors. A son of J. H. Johnson, the subject of this sketch was born October 27, 1846, in Yamhill county, Ore., on the Willamette river. His paternal grandfather moved with his family to Arkansas at an early period of its settlement, locating in the western part, where he became a citizen of so much prominence and influence that the county in which he resided was named Johnson county in his honor.

A native of Johnson county, Ark., J. H. Johnson succeeded to the occupation in which he was reared, living at home until after becoming of age. In 1845, with an ox team train, he crossed the plains to Oregon, and for three years lived in Yamhill county. Migrating to California in 1849, he built the first hotel in Napa City, but it burned to the ground on the opening day.

Going then to Sausalito, Marin county, he was employed as lumberman for a while. Not satisfied, however, he removed to Oakland, bought land on the San Pablo creek, where for three years he was a butcher and stock raiser. He then settled on a farm in French Camp, at the same time owning a ranch on the San Joaquin river in San Joaquin county. In 1858 he took up his residence in Tulare, on Cross creek, near Tulare lake, but shortly after removed to Visalia. Three years later he bought land nine miles east of Visalia, and as a general farmer met with distinguished success. He became one of the most extensive landholders of this section, having a stock ranch of four thousand seven hundred acres on the Kaweah river, and owning other farming property. Selling out to the Crocker estate in 1897 for $115,000, he rented the land until 1902, but made his residence in Visalia. In 1902 he removed to San Francisco, where he is now living. He married Mary Ann Murray, who was born in Tennessee, the daughter of Parson Murray, a pioneer minister of the Christian Church, who removed from Pennsylvania, his native state, to Tennessee, and then to Arkansas. Of the ten children born of their union, four are living, namely: James L., a farmer in Orosi; R. Hugh; T. D.; and Mrs. Alice Crew of Fresno county.

Spending the larger part of his youthful days in Tulare county, R. Hugh Johnson obtained his early education principally in the public schools of Visalia. Beginning life for himself at the age of twenty-one years, he had charge of a part of the old homestead for a year, and was afterwards engaged in sheep raising for several seasons. Buying the old Drum valley farm of four hundred and forty acres in 1872, Mr. Johnson began its improvement, and for many years was successfully employed in stock growing and breeding, making a specialty of raising hogs, and of breeding, raising and breaking horses. He also carried on a good business as a freighter, teaming to Visalia and Cross Creek Switch. As he made money, he wisely invested it in adjoining land, and now owns nearly the whole of Drum valley, having title to nearly seventeen hundred acres, all of which is fenced. He has been for many years an extensive stock raiser, also raising grain and hay for winter feed. He erected a fine residence and substantial barns and outbuildings, rendering the place one of the best and most convenient in its appointments of any in the vicinity. In 1903 Mr. Johnson bought the forty-acre ranch on which he now resides, it being a part of the old Camp place. It is located two miles south of Sultana, and is sixteen miles from his home ranch in the Drum valley, where his son Charles is now manager, thirty-three miles from Visalia, which was the nearest market when he began farming and the place to which he used to haul grain and lumber.

In Tulare county Mr. Johnson married Sarah E. Crowley, a native of Missouri and a daughter of G. B. Crowley, who brought his family across the plains with ox teams in pioneer days, and is now a resident of Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are the parents of ten children, namely: Mrs. Alice Rosaline Davis of Farmersville; Mrs. Mary Ann Stokes, living near Dinuba; Charles, on the Drum valley ranch; Mrs. Laura Leggett, living near Sultana; Frank, a farmer; Mrs. Emma Ogen of Drum Valley; and R. B., Walter, Ray and Letha, at home. Politically Mr. Johnson is a steadfast Democrat. He served as a member of the first board of trustees in the Drum Valley district, a position that he filled many terms, and assisted in building the first school house in that section. Socially he is a member of the San Francisco Association of California Pioneers. Mrs. Johnson is a valued member of the Christian Church.

JOHN F. BURCH. Classed among the progressive and enterprising farmers of Contra Costa county, John F. Burch occupies a position won by many years of industrious and painstaking effort. He is a self-made man in the best sense implied by the term, and has not only made a success financially but has gained the respect and esteem of all who have come to know him. Born in New York City, December 25, 1837, he was the son of Henry Burch, and in that location he was reared to young manhood. At the breaking out of the Civil war he was among the first to offer his services, becoming a member of Company F, Fifty-sixth New York Volunteer Infantry in 1861. Following his enlistment he served two years and ten months, at which time he was honorably discharged for disability. At the battle of Gettysburg he served as corporal. On his return to civic duties he took up surveying and civil engineering, and spent two winters in South Carolina and ten years in the state of Nebraska. In 1876 he came to California and located at Visalia, Tulare county, where he assisted in building the overland Southern Pacific Railroad, and acted for the company as land appraiser. He remained in that location until 1898 when he bought ninety-four and seventy-five one-hundredths acres of the Playter estate in Contra Costa county, and also thirty-three and one-third acres from Henry Ivey. In addition to these two pieces of land he purchased a small fruit orchard and a vineyard of six acres. The ranch is devoted to the cultivation of grain and hay, in which he has been very successful. He has made many improvements on his property and greatly enhanced its value. The land of this ranch is peculiarly adapted to the production of corn, a farm product which is exceedingly rare throughout the state.

In 1870 in Sullivan county, N. Y., Mr. Burch married Harriet A. Pierson, also a native of that county, and of this union were born two children, namely: Alfred P. and Bertha G. The daughter married William DuBois, and they are the parents of one daughter, Grace M.

MRS. ELLEN (GREENE) LEWIS. One of the large landholders of Tulare county is Mrs. Ellen (Greene) Lewis, who owns and occupies a valuable ranch lying about three miles south of Dinuba. She is a woman of remarkably good business capacity, great intelligence and resolution, and in the management of her farm shows excellent judgment and commendable wisdom. A native of Texas, she was born in Dallas county, near Lancaster, a daughter of the late Robert L. Greene, and a sister of Samuel K. Greene. She comes of old Virginian stock, her grandfather Greene having been born and bred in Virginia.

A native of east Tennessee, Robert L. Greene became a farmer from choice, and in early manhood located in Menard county, Ill. Subsequently removing to Dallas county, Texas, he was for a time there in business as a stock grower and cotton raiser. Returning to Menard county, Ill., he resided there until 1868, when, with his wife and three children, he came across the plains to California, performing the journey with horse teams. Locating in Merced county, he was engaged in farming at Snelling for six years, when, at the time the mill and flume was extended to Madera, he went to Fresno Flats, where he continued as a stock-raiser and farmer for a few seasons. Coming from there to Tulare county, he located near Dinuba, buying a homestead claim of eighty acres, and subsequently purchasing eighty acres of adjoining land. On this ranch that he improved he spent the remainder of his life, dying at the age of sixty-six years. He was a strong Democrat in politics, and a faithful member of the Christian Church, in which he was for many years an elder. His wife, whose maiden name was Rebecca Senter, was born in Tennessee. She survived him, and married for her second husband Judge Louis Van Tassel, who came to California with the "forty-niners," settled in Tulare county, where he served as county judge for several terms prior to his death. Since the judge's death Mrs. Van Tassel resides with her daughter, Mrs. Lewis, being now seventy-six years old. She is a most estimable woman and a member of the Christian Church. By her union with her first husband three children were born, namely: Mrs. Ellen Lewis; Clark C., a farmer near Dinuba; and Samuel K., whose sketch may be seen on another page of this work.

Spending the days of her girlhood in Texas, Illinois and California, Ellen Greene attended the public schools of each of these states, acquiring a good education, in the meantime being trained by a wise mother in domestic pursuits. She married first, in Plainsberg, Merced county, William Dudney, who was born and reared in Arkansas, and when a young man came across the plains to the California gold fields. Subsequently, as junior member of the firm of Simons & Dudney, he embarked in the sheep business on a large scale, keeping ten thousand head of sheep, his range extending from South Mountain to Grand View and Cross Creek Switch, or Traver, a distance of fourteen miles. Giving that up, Mr. Dudney bought a farm two miles south of the one now occupied by Mrs. Lewis, and was there pleasantly and profitably engaged in agricultural work until his death in 1889. He was a Democrat in politics, and a Mason. Mrs. Dudney subsequently married for her second husband Rev. Josiah A. Lewis, a native of Missouri, and a pioneer minister of the Christian Church, who crossed the plains with wagons and located first on a farm in Sonoma county. From there he went to Santa Clara county, settling near San Jose, and thence to Mussel Slough, where he bought land and carried on farming for a time, at the same time preaching in the Christian Church. He afterwards bought and improved a ranch in Tulare county, not far from Dinuba, and there resided until his death, in June, 1895. He was an active worker in his denomination, and assisted in building churches throughout the valley. He was highly respected and was an active Mason.

Since the death of Mr. Lewis, Mrs. Lewis bought her ranch of one hundred and sixty acres from her brother, and for a number of years she was engaged in grain raising, carrying on one thousand acres of land, but since 1899 she has devoted her land to raising alfalfa and stock. Mrs. Lewis has a large property, owning one thousand acres of land adjoining her home farm, and has an alfalfa ranch of three hundred acres lying three and one-half miles south of Dinuba, all of which is under irrigation. Mrs. Lewis has made substantial improvements on her property, and on the home ranch has built three houses, the first two having been burned down. She is an extensive stock raiser, keeping many cattle, horses and hogs, and she has one of the best pumping plants in this vicinity, furnished with a ten-horse-power engine, which she can use in case of extreme dry weather, irrigating six or seven acres a day.

By her first marriage Mrs. Lewis had three children, two of whom are living, namely: Pearl, wife of Edward Lewis of Dinuba; and Rembrandt C. Dudney, a horticulturist living near Dinuba. Mrs. Lewis is an ardent suffragist in politics and fraternally is a member of the Court of Honor and of the Rebekahs, of which she is past grand. She belongs to the Christian Church and is an active member of its Ladies' Aid Society, of which she has been president the past twelve years.

GILBERT B. NEIGHBOR. One of the oldest landmarks in Snelling is the general merchandise store of Gilbert B. Neighbor, where since his arrival in 1873 he has been engaged in the general merchandise business in the growing community, and is respected and honored by all with whom he has had business or social relations. Mr. Neighbor embodies the sterling traits and energy of the west, intensified by an inheritance of eastern grit and determination, honesty and high-mindedness. He was born at German Valley, Morris county, N. J., September 14, 1836, a son of Jacob Weise and Mary Ann (Trimmer) Neighbor, natives of New Jersey. His paternal great-grandfather, Leonard Neighbor, was born in New Jersey in 1730, and his paternal grandfather, also named Leonard, was born in the same state in 1764, both serving in the Revolutionary war. In later life the grandfather served as an able judge, and during his professional career settled twenty-two estates in New Jersey. He died at the advanced age of ninety-one years.

Jacob W. Neighbor was reared on a farm in New Jersey, and when grown to manhood stepped from the occupation of his forefathers to that of merchandising. In 1855 he sought to benefit his condition by removal to Princeton, Ill., where he engaged successfully in buying and selling grain. He lived to be fourscore and two years old, his wife having died in her fortieth year. One of his sons, Jesse H., is a business man of Pacific Grove, Cal. Gilbert B. received his preliminary education in the public schools of New Jersey, and was nineteen years old when the family removed to Illinois. He heard much of the wonders of California and had a longing to see the country, but it was not until 1859 that he was able to realize his wishes. Going to New York, he sailed for Aspinwall, and from Panama to San Francisco, arriving in the latter city December 14, 1859. Going at once to Tuolumne county, he engaged in farming for seven years, and then went to Jamestown, where he clerked in a store for a like period. With his experience to guide him he came to Snelling in 1873, and has been engaged in merchandising since that date.

Until 1893 Mr. Neighbor was interested in sheep raising, at one time having a band of five thousand. He owns a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, as well as some town property. He is public-spirited, and his political activities have been of lasting benefit to the community. A staunch Republican, he has fought for the best tenets of his party, and served as justice of the peace for four years.

In this state Mr. Neighbor was united in marriage with Matilda H. Smith, a native of Augusta, Me., and daughter of P. B. Smith, who came around the Horn in 1850, and is still a resident of Jamestown, Tuolumne county. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Neighbor, of whom Charles G. is a rancher of Merced county; Marjorie A. is the wife of William C. Richards; May N. is the wife of Fred G. Robinson; Ada Grace married R. H. Allen; Pearl is deceased; and Josie, Melvin and Ethel are at home. Mr. Neighbor is one of the popular and successful merchants of Merced county and his record is one which may well furnish encouragement to the youth of the rising generation. One of his strongest characteristics is faithfulness to duty, a trait appreciated by the Wells Fargo Express Company, which he has represented as agent for the past twenty-nine years. In all movements that have tended to advance the welfare of the county and citizens, he has given of his means, time and influence.

THOMAS E. EVERETT. A man of ability and energy, Thomas E. Everett is intimately associated with the industrial prosperity of Tulare as one of its leading business men. An able architect, contractor and builder, his services are in constant demand, and as the owner and manager of the pioneer planing plant of this locality he is active in advancing its manufacturing interests. Born July 22, 1861, in Halifax, Nova Scotia, he was there reared and educated, being graduated from the high school. He subsequently learned the trades of a carpenter and cabinet maker, and followed these with success in his native city. Migrating to Massachusetts in 1899, he spent three years in Boston.

In 1902 Mr. Everett located in Tulare as a contractor and builder. He met with excellent success, and in March, 1904, enlarged his operations by starting a planing mill. Furnishing it with machinery of the most approved patterns, he manufactures building material of all kinds, and carries on an extensive and lucrative business in general mill work.

In Tulare Mr. Everett married Kate B. Beckwith, a woman of rare personal worth. She was born in Illinois, a daughter of John B. Beckwith. Mr. Beckwith removed from Illinois to California about twenty years ago, and was engaged in the grocery and commission business in Tulare until his death, in May, 1903. He was a man of much force of character, ranking among the foremost men of the community, and was highly esteemed. His wife died several years before he did. Fraternally Mr. Everett is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and of the Improved Order of Red Men.

ARCHIE B. WASGATT. Ever since the Wasgatt family became established in America successive generations have been identified with the growth and history of Maine. In that state Elisha Wasgatt was born and reared and there he followed the blacksmith's trade through all of his active life. Following him in line of descent was Moses Wasgatt, a ship carpenter by trade, who for twenty years engaged in the West India coasting trade. It was he who founded the family in the far west. During 1876 he removed to California and settled in Los Angeles county near Florence, where he took up the building business. In 1881 he removed to Selma, this state, where for years he was the leading contractor and builder, following the occupation until his death, which occurred October 10, 1902. Before leaving Maine he had married Ann Adelia Higgins, a native of that state, and now a resident of Selma. Three sons and one daughter were born of their union, namely: Hiram T., a musician in San Francisco; Archie B., of Dinuba; Fred M., agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad at Reedley; and Annie M., a teacher in the Selma schools.

At Mount Desert, Hancock county, Me., Archie B. Wasgatt was born May 28, 1869. When the family removed from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast he was a child of six years, hence his education has been gained wholly in California. At the age of eleven he accompanied his parents to Selma and there attended the public schools. When sixteen years old he secured work in a general mercantile establishment at Selma. A few years later he left that store and became a clerk with Jacob Schwalby in the same town. Later he held a clerkship in Madera, and for two years acted as manager of a store owned by Radin & Kamp of Fresno. From Madera he went to Fresno, where he continued with his former employers for almost three years. On returning to Selma he engaged with the Brownstone Company for two years. During the summer of 1901 he engaged in prospecting at Nome, Alaska. On his return to California he settled in Dinuba, where he has since engaged in business, having in a short time built up the largest business of the kind in town. His establishment contains shoes of all kinds and to suit all tastes, while he also has a large and complete stock of gent's furnishing goods. Possessing energy and resourcefulness, he has worked with persevering fidelity and has attained already a commendable degree of success. In national politics he votes with the Democratic party, while fraternally he affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His marriage, solemnized in Reno, Nev., united him with Miss Cenie Lester, a native of Missouri, and the daughter of Mark Lester, who came to California at an early day and now resides on a farm near Centerville. Reared and educated in the west, Mrs. Wasgatt is in sympathy with all movements looking toward the upbuilding of this part of the country and as a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church is in deep sympathy with all work that tends toward the spiritual uplifting of the community.

GIBBONS ANDREW BOTSFORD. Not alone through the accumulation of large landed estates, but also through his long and intimate association with the history of Tulare county, Mr. Botsford holds a position among the most influential and prominent men of Visalia, where he has made his home and business headquarters since 1859. The family of which he is a member came from New England. His father, T. E. Botsford, was a native of Massachusetts, but removed to Ohio after he was married. For some years he conducted a mercantile store at Akron and from there in 1844 removed to Columbus, Ohio, where he became proprietor of a store and resided until death. Originally a Whig, with the disintegration of that party he became an adherent of the newly organized Republican party and afterward gave its principles his stanch allegiance. His wife, who was Nancy Merillo Gibbons, was born in Connecticut and died in Ohio after his demise. In their family were three sons and three daughters, of whom the subject of this narrative was third in order of birth. A native of Akron, born November 13, 1836, he was eight years of age when the family removed to Columbus, and afterward became a pupil in the schools of the latter city, completing his education by a business course in Cincinnati.

Upon starting out to make his way in the world Mr. Botsford settled in Iowa, where with a brother he conducted a mercantile business for about eighteen months. In 1856 he joined a party of emigrants and crossed the plains via the southern route. In common with the majority of early settlers he tried his luck in mining and prospected considerably both in this state and Arizona. Meanwhile for a year he clerked in a hardware store in Los Angeles and from there came to Visalia in 1859, taking up the trade of tinner and also acting as deputy assessor by appointment. In 1863 he was appointed United States revenue collector for this district and served for one term. In 1865-66 he served as register of the United States land office at Visalia and in 1867 was again appointed for a second term. Since 1867 he has engaged in the real-estate business, but finds his attention required for the management of his own lands. At this writing he owns the Botsford building, a brick structure in Visalia; other town property, including a commodious residence set in the midst of three lots that are adorned with flowers and shrubbery; also various tracts in Tulare county, and a farm of six thousand acres in Kings county, where he has a large number of cattle. At different times he has platted additions to Visalia and sold off the property for residence lots. The loaning of money has been a special feature of his business and he has also engaged in the insurance business.

After coming to Visalia Mr. Botsford married Miss Harriet G. Edwards, who was born in New York and died in this town in 1896. A woman of great capability, she had been a constant help to her husband by her counsel and her death was a heavy bereavement to him. Throughout all of his life Mr. Botsford has been interested in politics. When he was a young man the organization of the Republican party, with its stirring policy and progressive platform, enlisted his support, and he has never wavered in allegiance to its principles. Frequently since coming to Visalia he has rendered able service along party lines, notably through his work as a member of the county and state central committees. Stirring in action, courteous to rich and poor, quick in decision, generous to the needy, he richly deserves the high measure of financial success that has been his portion.

FREDERICK E. BUNKER. In Stanislaus county there are many enterprising agriculturists who bring to their calling good business methods and excellent judgment, and whose labors are crowned with success. Conspicuous among this number is Frederick E. Bunker, who owns and occupies a finely improved ranch, lying about seven miles south of Newman, in a rich and fertile district. A man of undoubted ability and integrity, he is held in high regard throughout the community, both he and his wife being respected for their many virtues, and heartily liked for their frank, open-hearted hospitality and kindly manners. He is a native Californian, his birth having occurred September 28, 1875, in Cottonwood, Merced county, on the farm of his father, Nathaniel Bunker.

A native of New England, Nathaniel Bunker was born and reared in Maine. Becoming a civil engineer, he came with a surveying party to Michigan, when a young man, from there migrating to the Pacific coast, crossing the plains to California. As a miner he searched for gold in Nevada county, but not being especially successful in his quest, he embarked in the lumber business at Truckee. Desiring a change of occupation, he rented land at Cottonwood, Shasta county, in 1869, and was there engaged in farming for nine years. Buying six hundred and forty acres of land in that locality in 1878, he began the raising of grain on an extended scale, and was thus successfully employed until 1903, when he removed to Oakland, Cal., where he is living retired, his home being No. 480 Moss avenue. He married Elizabeth Dunning, also a native of Maine, and they reared a family consisting of four boys and two girls, of whom Frederick E., the subject of this sketch, is the third child, and the third son.

After leaving the district schools, Frederick E. Bunker attended the State Normal School at San Jose for awhile, completing his early education at a private school in Oakland. The ensuing year he was employed as a clerk in a drug store. Preferring a more independent life, he turned his attention to agriculture, and in his chosen pursuit has been exceedingly prosperous. Purchasing his present farm, the old Castner estate, of eighty acres, which is situated seven miles south of Newman, in the Cottonwood district, he has devoted himself more especially to raising alfalfa, and to dairying, keeping on an average from thirty to forty cows. In regard to its appointments, Mr. Bunker's ranch compares favorably with any in the neighborhood, its neat and orderly appearance bearing evidence of the thrift and care of its owner.

In Newman, Mr. Bunker married Lela Switzer, a native of this town. Politically Mr. Bunker affiliates with the Republican party, being one of its most loyal supporters, and fraternally he is a member of Hill's Ferry Lodge No. 236, F. & A. M.

AVON M. COBURN. The town of Springville, Tulare county, was laid out by Avon M. Coburn, an esteemed resident of the place and a potent factor in the material upbuilding of this section. A man of energy and ability, he gives his whole effort to promote the general welfare, making his personal efforts lie parallel with those for the community in which he makes his home. A native son of the state, he was born in Placer county July 26, 1857. His father, Samuel S. Coburn, was a native of Maine, inheriting from his New England ancestors those qualities which make them desirable citizens in any part of the country. He came to California in 1852 via the Horn, locating in Placer county, where he first engaged in mining. He acted as superintendent in the erection of the wagon road over the Sierra Nevada mountains, while he also worked on the construction of the Central Pacific Railway. In 1868 he came to Tulare county and located in Visalia, where he remained for two years. He then went to Mountain View, on the Upper Tule, where he farmed and raised stock for a time, then sold and went to the Middle Fork of the Tule and followed the same business. Eventually disposing of this property, he located near Springville, where his death occurred in 1894. His widow, formerly Julia A. Crockett, a native of Maine, is now living, the wife of S. G. Harvey, of Springville. To Mr. and Mrs. Coburn were born one son and two daughters, of whom Avon C. Coburn is the second child.

The education of Avon C. Coburn was received in the common schools of his native state, more or less limited on account of the primitive conditions of that day. In young manhood he engaged in sawmilling in the pineries at the head of the Tule river, working from fifteen years of age until 1884, when he bought a small mill with his earnings and entered into the work for himself. Later he enlarged the mill and continued successfully until 1901, when he sold out with profit. In 1890 he purchased the quarter section of land on which Springville now stands and erected the planing and box mill which he conducted in conjunction with his sawmill until 1901, when he also disposed of this interest temporarily by leasing the property to what is now known as the Central California Redwood Company until May 1, 1905, when he will again take possession. Mr. Coburn is adding materially to the growth of Springville by putting up houses which he rents. This land he purchased in 1890 from Sweet & Co. of Visalia, and laid out the town of Springville, and has since given his best efforts towards its upbuilding and the promotion of all worthy movements.

In Springville Mr. Coburn was united in marriage with Fannie Daunt, a native of San Joaquin county, Cal., and they have one son, Leonard A. Mrs. Coburn is a daughter of William Giles Daunt and Henrietta C. Tangy, the former a native of Montreal, Canada, and the latter of Germany. He came to California in June, 1867, and lived in Los Angeles and then in Pacheco. He traveled all over the United States and lived in New Orleans for years, besides many other places. He was a painter by trade, and a fine workman. He accumulated considerable property before the war, but lost his wealth in that gigantic struggle. He came to Springville many years ago and the postoffice was named in his honor, he being the first postmaster. Politically Mr. Coburn is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World, and is past chairman of the Springville Lodge, of which he was the first council commander. He also belongs to Mount Whitney Camp.

ALBERT ABBOTT ROWELL. Among the pioneers who have watched the development of Fresno county from a wild desert region to a land of happy homes and flourishing industries, is Albert Abbott Rowell, a carpenter and builder by trade, owner of a one hundred and sixty acre ranch two miles west of Selma, and since 1901 a retired resident of the town. Mr. Rowell started on his independent career at a very early age, with but slight knowledge of the diversions or pleasures which make youth a time to be recalled with unceasing joy. He was born in Essex county, Vt., May 3, 1846, and when four years old removed to McLean county, Ill., with his parents, where his father died the following year, and where he worked hard on the home farm, having but few opportunities of attending the district school. At the age of fourteen he began his independent career by working as a farm hand until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in Company G, Seventeenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until March, 1863. Leaving Illinois in 1871, he located in York county, Neb., and combined carpentering with the management of a one hundred and sixty acre farm.

In 1873 Mr. Rowell came to California and engaged in the sheep business with his brothers in Fresno county, and when it came time to send the herds to the mountains, he plied his trade in Fresno with Andy Law. He cut the first stick of timber used in the warehouses, in the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the water works building, and built the Fresno residence of his brother, Dr. Rowell, mentioned elsewhere in this work. In the spring of 1878 he located the claim still owned by him, and in February, 1879, became one of the first workers on the great Centerville and Kingsburg Irrigation Company's ditch, for which he contracted for the wood work. Not long afterward he went to the Washington colony and assisted with its laying out, dug the ditches and otherwise arranged for the comfort and convenience of the settlers. In December, 1879, he went to the central colony, and there married Nancy Ann Booth, born in Minnesota, and daughter of Stephen Booth, one of the early settlers of that colony. The following year he located on his pre-empted claim two miles west of Selma, set it out to vineyard, orchard and alfalfa, and improved it until coming to Selma in 1901, when its management was given to other parties.

In numerous ways Mr. Rowell has filed a lien upon the gratitude and appreciation of the people of Fresno county. His skill as a builder has erected many monuments, including residences, public buildings, stores, and churches, and his thorough understanding of horticulture has assisted the establishment of the present high standard of excellence throughout the county. Until recently he has taken an active interest in the Christian Church, of which he has been a member for years, and he has been equally energetic in promoting the cause of temperance. Mr. Rowell is a man of high moral character, generous impulses, and practical common sense, and the fact that his present state of health interferes with his enjoyment of life is greatly regretted by his many friends.

JOHN BURGAN. Ever since starting out for himself at twenty-one years of age Mr. Burgan has made his home in California and at this writing is a resident of Tulare, where he engages in business as proprietor of the City livery. The family of which he is a member came from the east, his father, Samuel, having been a native of Ohio, but from the age of twenty-one years a resident of Kansas, where for some years he followed the freighting business on the plains between Leavenworth and Fort Scott. In the interests of the same occupation he made a trip to Pike's Peak and to the Black Hills, thus seeing much of frontier and mining life. Eventually he discontinued freighting and settled on a farm two miles north of Lawrence, where he devoted himself to the cultivation of eighty acres of valuable land. During 1901 he removed to California and has since engaged in the stock business upon a ranch that he owns near Tulare. However, owing to advancing years, he is no longer active in business and many of the activities of former years have been relinquished. By his marriage to Ellen Foltz, who was born in Ohio and is still living, he became the father of ten children, nine of whom survive. In this family John Burgan was second in order of birth. Born at Lawrence, Kans., June 16, 1867, he passed the years of boyhood somewhat uneventfully on the home farm, where from early boyhood he showed a liking for horses. While still quite young he became an expert judge of horseflesh and his counsel was often sought in the purchase of teams by neighbors. At the same time he became a student of the diseases of horses, thus gaining the knowledge which gives him considerable veterinary skill.

On coming to Tulare county, in December, 1888, Mr. Burgan secured employment as a farm hand. After two years he bought forty acres of land two miles from Tulare, and this he checked and put into alfalfa. At the same time he engaged in trading and dealing in horses, an occupation for which his experience and inclination admirably qualified him. In 1896 he purchased the City livery from James Shannon and engaged in the livery, feed and sale business, also continued to buy and sell horses. In 1901 he sold the barn and removed to Los Angeles, where he bought the Nevada stables on Broadway, but a year later disposed of that property and purchased the Richmond stables on Main between Eighth and Ninth streets, continuing in that place until May of 1904, when he returned to Tulare. In October of the same year he purchased the site and barn previously owned by him, and here he conducts a first-class livery. In politics he votes the Democratic ticket, while fraternally he holds membership in the Woodmen of the World, Fraternal Brotherhood and Fraternal Aid. After coming to Tulare he was here united in marriage with Miss Verna Riley, a native of Kansas, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The three children born of their union are Walter Lloyd, Loran Donald and Harold Rex.

WILLIAM G. HUNTER. An industrious, thrifty and able agriculturist, William G. Hunter, living four miles southeast of Dinuba, is a fine representative of the prosperous horticulturists, stock raisers and dairymen of this section of California. Possessing good business tact and judgment, he has made wise and judicious investments, taking advantage of the facilities afforded in these days by the modern machinery and other appliances required in tilling the soil, and is carrying on his extensive operations after the most approved methods. A native of Stanislaus county, he was born January 28, 1864, near Modesto, of New England ancestry on the paternal side, his father, Charles Hunter, having been born and reared in Vermont.

Beginning life for himself as a lumberman, Charles Hunter located in Canada, and for a number of years was engaged in the manufacture of lumber near Montreal. Crossing the plains in the '50s, he settled as a farmer and stockman in Stanislaus county, where he improved a ranch. He was quite successful, and became owner of land near Fresno, and also had land near Hanford. He died while yet in the prime of life, in 1871. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Ketzebach, was born near Montreal, Canada, and now resides in Stanislaus county, Cal. Of the seven children born of their union, two daughters and one son survive.

After the death of his father, William G. Hunter lived for a number of years in Canada, and there began his school life. Coming back to California in 1875, he lived a part of the time on the family ranch near Fresno, and a part of the time near Hanford, attending the district schools of both places. At the age of eighteen years he began the battle of life on his own account, buying, in 1882, from the railroad company, the one hundred and sixty acres of land included in his present ranch, which was then prairie and range land. Two years later Mr. Hunter began its improvement, fencing it and sowing it to grain. In the meantime he and his brother Charles formed a partnership, and for a year farmed a section of land. Mr. Hunter has since been actively engaged in agricultural operations alone, and has met with excellent success. When the ditch was put through his land, in 1892, he leveled and checked his ranch, put out a vineyard of twenty-four acres, an orchard of thirteen acres, and has now eighty acres of alfalfa. He raises considerable stock, and is carrying on a good dairy business, although he makes a specialty of fruit culture, which he finds both pleasant and profitable. He also has a grain farm of one hundred and sixty acres near Monson, from which he realizes a good annual income, besides a stock ranch of two hundred and forty acres one mile southeast of his home.

June 2, 1892, in Dinuba, Mr. Hunter married Harriet B. Rice, who was born in Tulare county, where her father, the late Isaac Rice, was a pioneer settler. Further parental and ancestral history may be found elsewhere in this work in connection with the sketch of her mother, Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Rice of Dinuba. Into the pleasant household of Mr. and Mrs. Hunter three children have been born, namely: Ada Elizabeth, Earl Charles William, and Evelyn Grace. Mr. Hunter takes an active interest in the welfare of the community in which he resides, and politically votes the Democratic ticket. Fraternally he belongs to the Court of Honor. Mrs. Hunter is a member of the Baptist Church.

JAMES E. CAMPBELL. Classed among the successful agriculturists of Tulare county is James E. Campbell, who is pleasantly located just south of Monson Station, where he is devoting his time and attention to the cultivation of the soil and the raising of stock. A man of remarkably good judgment, sound sense and ability, he is well entitled to the high rank he holds among the most useful and enterprising residents of his community. A son of Nathaniel Campbell, he was born in LaClede county, Mo., November 19, 1860. His grandfather, Galloway Campbell, a native of Virginia, migrated to Tennessee, where he worked as a millwright and also followed the trade of a carpenter for many years.

Born June 4, 1828, in Greene county, Tenn., Nathaniel Campbell married in his native state, and in 1858 followed the well-trodden path of the emigrants to LaClede county, Mo., where he lived for three years. He was subsequently employed as a tiller of the soil in Scotland county until after the breaking out of the Civil war, when he joined the Union army. Enlisting in Company E, Twelfth Missouri Cavalry, he served bravely for three years, at the close of the conflict being honorably discharged. Returning to Scotland county, he continued there as a farmer until 1881, when he came with his family to the Pacific coast. The same fall he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land near Monson, just south of the present village, and was successfully employed in agricultural pursuits until his death, April 26, 1903. He was a man of great integrity, and a staunch Republican in his political beliefs. January 17, 1856, in Tennessee, he married Susanna Simpson, who was born in Greene county, Tenn., of Virginia stock, and is now living on the farm that her husband improved, owning forty acres of the original homestead, the remainder of which she divided among her children. Her father, James Simpson, a farmer, was born in Tennessee and died in Missouri, as did his wife, whose maiden name was Dorcas Dewey. Of the union of Nathaniel and Susanna (Simpson) Campbell, seven children were born, namely: John L., marshal of Selma; James E., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Mary March of Taurusa; Mrs. Sarah A. Harris of Selma; J. W., and Luella, both living on the home ranch; and Lee A., engaged in farming near Monson. The mother is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in politics is an un doubted Republican.

Brought up in Scotland county, Mo., James E. Campbell acquired his early knowledge of books in the district schools. With the family he came to California in 1881, and during the following winter homesteaded the tract of land adjoining his father's near Monson. Subsequently, in partnership with W. G. Hunter, he engaged in grain raising on an extended scale, carrying on fourteen hundred acres of land. Since 1900 Mr. Campbell has devoted himself to raising alfalfa, to which the major portion of his ranch of two hundred and ninety acres is sown, the remainder being pasture land. His farm is under irrigation, the ditch passing through it and watering it thoroughly. He is specially interested in stock raising, having over one hundred head of fine Holstein cattle, while in his dairy he keeps about thirty cows.

In Schuyler county, Mo., Mr. Campbell married Lulu Breckenridge, who was born in that county, and they have two children, Harley and Cleo. Politically Mr. Campbell is a true-blue Republican, and for nine years served as trustee and clerk of the Monson school district. Mrs. Campbell is highly esteemed among her neighbors and friends, and is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ROBERT E. BERING, M. D. The stability of character noticeable in the German race and the genial social qualities with which nature has endowed those of southern birth find expression in the temperament and talents of Dr. Bering, who is first vice-president of the San Joaquin Medical Society, and a member of the Fresno County, State and American Medical Associations. As a contributor to medical journals he has advanced ideas of interest to his professional brethren, while by the thoughtful reading of literature of a similar nature he has broadened his own professional equipment. Many physicians of the twentieth century have given themselves to specialties and he has proved no exception to the rule, having established in Tulare a sanatorium where he gives treatment for the cure of the morphine, whiskey and other drug habits.

When Louis H. Bering was a boy he came to America with his father from his native province of Hesse-Cassel, Germany, and settled in Houston, Tex., where he grew to manhood and entered upon a successful business career. From that time forward he had hardware interests in that city and Galveston, and his death occurred in Houston in 1891. While making Houston his home he there formed the acquaintance of Mary J. Michau, a native of Florida, and a daughter of Dr. M. M. Michau, who was a dentist and who also did considerable work as a home missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Louis H. Bering was united in marriage with Miss Michau, by whom he had three children. The eldest, Dr. Robert E. Bering, was born in Galveston, Tex., January 9, 1871, and had excellent advantages in the Houston high school, from which he was graduated in 1888. With a love for the medical profession formed in childhood, he early decided to enter upon its study and practice, and pursuant to that end he became a student under Dr. J. M. Boyles of Houston. In 1889 he matriculated in the Tulare University, New Orleans, where he took the full course of four years, supplemented by two years of work in Charity Hospital in the same city.

After having received the degree of M. D., in 1895, Dr. Bering opened an office in his home town of Houston, but soon removed to Alice, Tex., and from there in 1901 came to California. Since then he has conducted a general practice of medicine and surgery, in addition to maintaining his private hospital, and in both capacities he has become well known throughout the San Joaquin valley. When attending college in New Orleans he met and later married Miss Noemie Bostick, a native of that city, but of English descent. They have three children, Robert Ellis, Virginia May and Louis Henry. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church of Tulare, in which Dr. Bering officiates as a steward. Politically he favors Democratic principles. Before leaving Texas he was initiated into Masonry at Corpus Christi, and in addition he holds fraternal relations with the Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America, Improved Order of Red Men, Independent Order of Foresters, Fraternal Aid and Fraternal Brotherhood in Tulare, all of which bodies retain him in the capacity of examining physician, and in addition he has held the presidency of the organization last named.

JOSEPH D. PILLSBURY. A man of great integrity, ability and resolution, Joseph D. Pillsbury occupies a place of prominence and influence among the leading citizens of Traver. He is actively identified with its business interests, and is widely known throughout this section of the county as collector for the Alta Irrigation District and as postmaster at Traver. He comes from substantial colonial stock, being a descendant in the ninth generation of one William Pillsbury, the emigrant ancestor, who was born in England in 1615, emigrated to New England in 1640, locating in Essex county, Mass., and became founder of one of the most loyal and patriotic families of the United States, one or more of his descendants having taken an active part in every war in which our country has since been involved. The line of descent from this honored ancestor is as follows: (1) William Pillsbury was one of the original settlers of Newbury, Mass., where his death occurred in 1686; (2) Moses, born in 1645; (3) Moses, born in 1672; (4) Ezra, born in 1703, moved from Newbury, Mass., to Weare, N. H.; (5) Ezra, born in Weare, N. H., in 1740, served in the Revolution under Gen. John Stark, taking part in the battle of Bennington; (6) Joseph, born in 1762; (7) Joseph, born in 1786, settled as a farmer near Springfield, N. H.; (8) Daniel H., born in Springfield, N. H., in 1825; and (9) Joseph D., the subject of this sketch, born in San Andreas, Calaveras county, Cal., October 26, 1859.

Improving his natural talents when young, Daniel H. Pillsbury learned the machinist's trade, and for a few years followed it in his New England home. Leaving Boston in the fall of 1849, he embarked on the bark Oscar, which was owned by a stock company, which consisted of the crew, and was provisioned for two years. Sailing by way of Cape Horn, he arrived in California, where the company separated, some settling in Sacramento and others locating in Marysville, where they erected the hotel building that had been brought west on board the Oscar. Mr. Pillsbury, however, went into the mining regions of Calaveras county, where he put through several ditches without the aid of a civil engineer's outfit, using the triangle, the largest one, known as Pillsbury's ditch, being recognized as a splendid piece of civil engineering. The mines failing, he was afterwards employed in the cattle business in that county until his death, in 1889. He was a man of sterling worth and character, active in local affairs, being a Whig until the formation of the Republican party, when he became one of its staunchest adherents. He married Elizabeth Curley, who was born in West Meath, Ireland, immigrated to America, came with relatives to the Pacific coast in 1853, and died in Calaveras county, Cal., in 1872. She bore her husband six children, all of whom are living, Joseph D. being the second child in succession of birth.

Brought up in Calaveras county and vicinity, Joseph D. Pillsbury lived first in San Andreas, then in Eldorado, going from there to Railroad Flat, where the family still own property. Obtaining his education in the district schools, he remained at home until fifteen years old, when he came to the San Joaquin valley in search of remunerative employment. Inheriting in a marked degree the mechanical ability and ingenuity of his father, he became an engineer, and for eight or nine years went with a threshing outfit in that capacity. Locating in Tulare county, near Hanford, in 1884, Mr. Pillsbury worked as a farmer and engineer for two years, running a harvester. Entering then the employ of the Traver Warehouse and Business Association, he was clerk for a year, when the hardware business was burned out, and he was given charge of the warehouse, which has since been under his supervision. Mr. Pillsbury was likewise engaged in the hardware business for several seasons in Traver, and is now one of the leading pharmacists of the place, having a well-stocked drug store. For the past nine years he has been postmaster, and for ten years has served as collector for the Alta Irrigation District, a position to which he has been elected five times. He is also interested in agricultural pursuits, owning one hundred and sixty acres of good land located southwest of Traver.

In Tulare Mr. Pillsbury married Harriet E. Morton, who was born in Sacramento, Cal., the daughter of Darius Morton, who came to California as a pioneer in 1851. Two children have been born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Pillsbury, namely: Etta L., a pupil in the Hanford high school; and Daniel W. Politically Mr. Pillsbury, true to the principles in which he was reared, is a staunch Republican, and has been a member of the county central committee. He served several terms as school trustee, and in 1902 was candidate for the office of county tax collector, running ahead of his ticket. Fraternally he is prominent in Masonic circles as well as in other fraternal societies. He is a member of Traver Lodge No. 204, F. & A. M., which he has served as master for six terms; was grand Bible bearer of the Grand Lodge of California; is a member of Visalia Lodge of Perfection No. 9; was made an Odd Fellow in Mount Whitney Lodge, I. O. O. F., and now belongs to Dinuba Lodge, I. O. O. F., and to the Traver Lodge of Rebekahs; is a member of the Woodmen of the World; and belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood. Mrs. Pillsbury is a most estimable woman, highly esteemed, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ISAAC BIRD. The agricultural interests of central California have no more worthy or able exponent than Isaac Bird, of Merced, who thoroughly understands the vocation which he is pursuing, and, as manager of the Chowchilla stock farm, is carrying on an extensive business as a stock and grain raiser. Possessing in an eminent degree the executive ability and the force of character requisite for the responsible position which he holds, he handles the large body of land entrusted to his care with great success, having by his energy, discretion and good judgment brought it up to its present state of excellence. He is also identified with the financial prosperity of city and county as one of the directorate of the Security Savings Bank of Merced. A son of the late Isaac Bird, Sr., he was born, March 17, 1855, in San Jose, Cal., of English ancestry. His grandfather, also named Isaac Bird, emigrated from England, the country of his nativity, to America, settling in Alabama, where he was engaged as a planter until his death.

Born in Whitehaven, Cumberland county, England, Isaac Bird, Sr., remained in his native land until after attaining his majority. Coming with his parents to Alabama, he lived in the south many years, prosperously engaged in agricultural pursuits. Coming in 1849, with the army of Col. Jack Hayes, to California, he located in Santa Clara county, buying two hundred and fifty acres of land that is now included within the limits of the city of San Jose, and soon returned to Alabama for his family. There he and D. C. Vestal, a California pioneer, were the first to engage in fruit culture in this part of the state, setting out orchards of apples, peaches and pears. Subsequently selling out his orchards, he purchased forty acres of land in the Pajaro valley, near Watsonville, and was there successfully employed as an orchardist until his death, in 1899, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. He was a man of upright moral character, and a valued member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Alabama Welch, a daughter of John Welch, who emigrated from Wales to Alabama, where he became owner of a large plantation, on which his daughter was born and reared. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, serving under General Jackson in New York. Mrs. Bird died, March 17, 1904, in San Jose, and her body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Watsonville. She bore her husband six children, namely: Calvert T., an attorney in San Jose; George W., engaged in the fruit business in Watsonville; Mrs. Mary Bowen, a widow, living in San Jose; Isaac, of this brief review; Mrs. Belle Wood, of Tulare county; and Mrs. Maggie Keesling, of San Jose.

Brought up on the San Jose ranch, Isaac Bird obtained his early education in that place, attending the public schools and the San Jose Institute. Beginning life for himself as an agriculturist, he established a ranch in Monterey county in 1874, and was there employed in sheep raising for five years. Selling out in 1879, he was employed in general farming in the San Joaquin valley for the next two years. In 1881 Mr. Bird entered the employ of the California Pastoral and Agricultural Company as superintendent of the Chowchilla Stock Farm, a position which he has since filled with great credit to himself, and to the perfect satisfaction of the company. This ranch contains one hundred and eight thousand acres of land, and is largely devoted to the raising of stock, a specialty being made of breeding and raising Short-horn cattle. Under the efficient management of Mr. Bird this branch of industry has well-nigh reached a state of perfection. He has also introduced a new system of irrigation throughout the farming lands of this vast estate, making them rich and productive, and now raises large crops of both alfalfa and barley, the grains best adapted, in his judgment, to this section of the country. The leading agriculturist of this section, Mr. Bird is prominently identified with the leading agricultural organizations, being one of the organizers, and a director, of the State Short-Horn Breeders' Association, and of the Thirty-fifth District of the State Agricultural Association.

In San Jose, Cal., Mr. Bird married Josephine Blanchard, a native of Iowa, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Bernice, Isabella and Henrietta. Politically Mr. Bird is well known as a firm supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and is an ex-member of the county central committee. Fraternally he is a member of LaGrange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M. of Merced; of Merced Chapter No. 12, R. A. M.; and of the Knights of Pythias. He is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, toward the support of which he contributes generously.

MATTHEW SIMPSON TARKINGTON.

At an early period in the history of our country Joshua Tarkington and a brother came from England and settled in the colony of North Carolina. Not long afterward, while they were still mere boys, the brother was stolen by the Indians while hunting some lost cows, and he was never heard of afterward. Joshua, Jr., a son of the English emigrant, married Zephia Alexander in North Carolina, and their son, Jesse, was born in Tyrrell county, that state, but early removed to Tennessee, and in the cane-brake region of Davidson county took up the difficult task of clearing a farm. During 1815 he left there in search of a more fertile soil, and two years later arrived in Monroe county, Ind., which was then very sparsely settled. The long journey from the south had been made by wagon, and during their first winter they built and occupied a log house on the banks of the White river at what is now Edwardsport. Immediately after settling in Monroe county they began to clear a tract of raw land in the midst of a wilderness, whose principal inhabitants were Indians. The task of clearing a farm was most difficult, but each member of the family bravely did his part.

In this pioneer family one of the sons was Joseph, born in Nashville, Tenn., October 30, 1800, and a youth of fifteen at the time of going to Indiana. Stalwart of frame and untiring in industry, he was qualified to aid in evolving a home from the trackless wilderness. Reared under religious influences, in a home where prayer was wont to be made, he early had implanted in his soul a deep and unwavering faith in Jehovah. August 27, 1820, he was converted in a camp-meeting at Bloomington and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, where he was appointed a class leader. On being licensed to preach the gospel he entered ardently into the work and was active in the ministry in Indiana and central Illinois. In 1851 he was assigned to the Greensburg district and thereupon moved his family to a farm one mile west of that town, on the Michigan road, where he made his home until he died, in October of 1892. He was a lieutenant in the Mexican war.

Near Vevay, Ind., September 21, 1831, Rev. Joseph Tarkington married Miss Maria Slauson, who was born in Orange county, N. Y., January 22, 1806, and died in Indiana, in December, 1889. Her father, Simeon, was a son of Jonathan Slauson, who died August 31, 1820. A native of Stamford, Fairfield county, Conn., Simeon Slauson learned the cooper's trade in youth and besides following that occupation owned and cultivated a farm in Orange county, N. Y., three miles from Middletown. In 1818, accompanied by his family, he moved to Indiana and settled nine miles north of Vevay, Switzerland county, where he endured innumerable hardships in the difficult task of clearing a farm and making a comfortable home. In the family of Rev. Joseph and Maria Tarkington there were six children. The oldest son, Judge John S. Tarkington, who served in Company A, One Hundred and Thirty-second Indiana Infantry, during the Civil war, is now a resident of Indianapolis, and is the father of Booth Tarkington, author of "A Gentleman from Indiana," and other novels widely read and admired. The older daughter, Mary M., is the wife of Dr. John H. Alexandre of Greensburg, Ind., and the younger daughter, Martha, married Daniel Stewart, now residing in Indianapolis, Ind. The second son, Joseph A. Tarkington, M. D., who died May 1, 1902, had served in the Civil war as a leader of the regimental band of the Seventh Indiana Infantry; the third son, William S. R., who died in Indianapolis in August, 1903, was a drummer in the band of which his brother acted as leader.

The youngest son in the family was Matthew Simpson Tarkington, who was born at Greencastle, Ind., July 15, 1848, and was baptized by Rev. Matthew Simpson (later a bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church), in whose honor he was named. After completing the studies of the Greensburg public schools he entered DePauw University as a member of the class of 1870, and continued there until the close of the junior year. Meanwhile, in 1864, he volunteered in Company A, One Hundred and Sixth Indiana Volunteer Rifles, and served with his regiment until mustered out by special order in the fall of the same year. Later he took up the university course, but in 1869 was obliged to discontinue his studies on account of sickness, and afterward engaged in the stock and grain business on his father's farm. For four years he was freight and passenger agent at Greensburg for the Pennsylvania Railroad, but in 1888 resigned to remove to California, where he has since made Tulare his home.

As state agent for the Page Woven Wire Fence Company, for six years Mr. Tarkington traveled throughout California. The first fence of this kind was put on Cartmill's ranch near Tulare and still stands. In 1894 he introduced the fence on the Southern Pacific system, where it has been used extensively ever since. The business grew to such a magnitude that since 1894 he has confined his personal work as agent to the San Joaquin valley, and has agents in every town of importance. In addition he acts as agent in Tulare county for the Lamb fence. A man of inventive genius, he patented the Tarkington wire fence stay, has two patents on lock whip sockets for buggies, and before leaving Indiana secured the second patent on the tongueless cultivator, operated by attaching a wheel, and manufactured in Kokomo, that state. In addition to his other interests, he built and now operates at Tulare the California steam barley mill, which has a large capacity for barley and other grains.

The residence of Mr. Tarkington was erected under his supervision at No. 346 West Tulare street, and is presided over by his wife, whom he married in Greensburg, Ind., and who was Clara W. Baker, daughter of Marsh Baker, a prominent farmer still living near Greensburg. Mrs. Tarkington is a direct descendant of Colonel Williams, one of General Washington's staff officers. Throughout his locality Mr. Baker has acquired considerable prominence through his successful work in importing and breeding Poland-China hogs and Polled Angus cattle. In religion Mr. Tarkington was reared in the Methodist faith and still adheres to the same, while his wife is identified with the Presbyterian Church. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party. Before leaving Indiana he was made a Mason and raised to the Royal Arch degree at Greensburg; also became a member of Baldwin Commandery No. 2, K. T., at Shelbyville, and was connected with Al Malakia Temple, N. M. S., of Los Angeles.

STEPHEN HICKS. A highly intelligent and prosperous farmer of Tulare county, residing three and one-half miles south of Dinuba, Stephen Hicks is well known in this vicinity for his varied interests, and he and his wife are held in high esteem as people of worth and integrity. A son of William Hicks, he was born November 3, 1851, in Scotland county, Mo., of Scotch ancestry, being the descendant of one of three brothers that emigrated from Scotland to this country in colonial times. His great-grandfather on the paternal side served as a soldier in the Revolution. Stephen Hicks, his grandfather, served as captain of a company in the war of 1812. He subsequently removed from Tennessee to Missouri, settling in Schuyler county as a farmer and there spending the remainder of his life.

Born in east Tennessee, William Hicks removed when a young man to Missouri, and when ready to begin farming on his own account located in Scotland county. In 1852 he crossed the plains to California, coming with an ox team train, and for three years sought for wealth in the gold fields. Returning to Missouri in 1855, he lived on his farm until after the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the Union army for three years, becoming a member of a Missouri regiment. Returning to his farm at the expiration of his term of enlistment, he continued there as a tiller of the soil until 1881, when he settled near Hanford, Cal., where he resided until his death. He married Nancy Pell, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of William Pell, a German by descent and a farmer. She survived her husband and now resides near Hanford, and all of her eleven children are in California and live not far from her.

The second child in order of birth of the parental household, Stephen Hicks, in common with his neighborhood companions, was educated in the district school and early taught to work on the farm. He remained at home until becoming of age, but the following spring bade good-bye to family and friends and started westward in search of fortune, being the first of the family to come to California, although the others followed him in due season. Arriving in Modesto on April 23, 1873, Mr. Hicks worked as a farmer until the fall of that year, when he borrowed money to procure an outfit and began farming on his own account, for six years thereafter being engaged in grain raising on a ranch lying between Lemoore and Hanford. For a short time he lived on land at Mussel Slough, but while there was between two fires, fearing to buy from the Settlers' League and realizing that if he staid the railroad company would bring judgment against him. Selling his house he came away, having lost nearly all of his possessions between the league and the company, and began life anew.

Locating in Tulare county in 1879, Mr. Hicks homesteaded eighty acres of his present farm, improved it, and rented other land, at one time carrying on seven hundred acres, which he devoted principally to grain. When the ditch was put through he sowed alfalfa, one of the best paying crops that can be raised here now. He has two hundred and forty acres now in his farm, lying in sections 32 and 33, township 16, range 24. He carries on general farming, making a specialty of dairying and stock raising, keeping about seventy-five head of stock. He has made valuable improvements on his place, in 1902 building his fine residence, which is commodious and attractive.

In Missouri Mr. Hicks married Eliza Mullinix, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of John and Alzira (Brandon) Mullinix, the latter of whom died February 7, 1903, when seventy-four years of age. Mr. Mullinix is a farmer and makes his home near Hanford, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Hicks have two children living, Albert S., in the Dmuba high school, and Leah Ethel. Their oldest daughter, Alzira, died when six weeks old. In July, 1885, three children died from diphtheria, their names being Alzira, Eliza and John W. In his political relations Mr. Hicks is independent, voting with the courage of his convictions. For the past twenty years he has been one of the trustees of the Wilson school district, and is one of the trustees of the Dinuba Union High School. Both he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church, of which he has been one of its board of trustees.

JAMES ANDREW BOYD. A resident of California since eleven years of age, James Andrew Boyd, a prosperous and thrifty farmer living seven miles southwest of Dinuba, may well lay claim to the title of a pioneer. His life in those early days was full of incident, and to the young people of this generation a record of his hard experiences, privations and tribulations might read like a tale of romance. As a teamster he hauled freight from Sycamore Point, on the San Joaquin river, to Visalia, a distance of seventy miles, that city being then the trading center for all this country, and the land office for the entire region roundabout. This whole section of the state was then an immense sandy plain, with but two sheep camps to be seen, and not a tree to be found excepting the lone willow on the old stage road leading from Kings River to Visalia. In the subsequent development of the rich agricultural and horticultural resources of the country he has played an important part, and by industry, keen foresight and sound business judgment has acquired a competency. A son of James S. Boyd, he was born June 24, 1848, near Van Buren, Crawford county, Ark., on the Middle Fork of the White river.

A native of Tennessee, James S. Boyd removed when young to Arkansas, settling as a farmer on the White river. He served throughout the Mexican war under General Taylor, taking an active part in many engagements, including the battle of Buena Vista. In 1852 he crossed the plains with ox teams, bringing with him a herd of cattle to California, and being seven months on the way. In 1853 he went home by way of Cape Horn, in a sailing vessel, and for six years remained in Arkansas, getting his living by tilling the soil. In 1859, accompanied by his wife and children, he again crossed the plains with ox teams, having three wagons in the train. One yoke of oxen gave out while en route, and a pair of milch cows was substituted. In order to leave Thousand Spring valley, which had but a short time before been the scene of a horrible massacre, on the right, the party made quite a detour, and came by way of the Humboldt river and desert and Carson river to Hangtown, Cal. Locating in the Napa valley in 1859, he was there employed in farming for one year, the following year, 1860, having a large ranch near Lincoln, Placer county, and from 1862 until 1868 being similarly engaged at Murphy's Camp. Becoming the first actual settler of Stokes valley in 1868, he homesteaded and improved one hundred and sixty acres of land. Subsequently selling that, he bought land on the other side of the valley, improved a good ranch and continued in agricultural pursuits for a number of seasons. Selling at an advantage, he moved to Traver, where he purchased town lots, erected a large building and embarked in the grocery business. Disposing of his store and stock, he bought land near Orosi, Tulare county, and for a while carried on general farming, living there until after the death of his wife. Selling out then, he removed to Oregon, and is now living near Salem, a hale and hearty gentleman of seventy-eight years. He married Mary M. Little, who was born in Tennessee and died, in February, 1903, in Orosi, Cal. Five children were born of their union, namely: James A., the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Mary E. Moyle, who died in Traver, Cal.; George W., of Seattle, Wash.; Cordis J., engaged in farming at Orosi; and Mrs. Isabelle Robinson, living near Orosi.

Living in Arkansas during the first ten years of his life, James A. Boyd attended the public schools a short time. While coming with the family across the plains in 1859 he so injured his leg that he was unable to use it much for several years, and was consequently deprived of school advantages until 1864, when he attended one term, his education having been largely obtained by reading and observation. In 1868 he went with his parents to Stokes valley, where, in 1869, he took up a homestead claim. Relinquishing the claim in 1872, Mr. Boyd purchased a large ranch near by, becoming owner of eight hundred acres of land, and embarked in grain and stock raising on a large scale, in the meantime building the grade in the public road known as the Boyd grade. Selling out in 1887, he located in Tulare county, about seven miles southwest of Dinuba, where he has two farms, containing one hundred and twenty acres of rich and productive land. His home estate contains forty acres and is highly improved, twelve acres being devoted to a finely-bearing orchard, six acres to the culture of grapes, and the remainder to the raising of alfalfa. Here he also has a commodious and conveniently arranged residence and a substantial set of farm buildings, his place being one of the best in its appointments of any in the locality, bespeaking the industry, thrift and wise management of the proprietor. His other ranch, and four hundred acres of land which he rents, is used for grain raising and grazing, and as a horticulturist, agriculturist and stock-raiser, Mr. Boyd is meeting with most satisfactory success.

At Todd's Flat, Tulare county, Mr. Boyd married Miss Litha Work, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of Fleming Work, an early settler and farmer of Todd's Flat. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd are the parents of three children, namely: James F. and Zachariah E., at home; and Mrs. Annie Martin of Coalinga, Cal. Politically Mr. Boyd is an ardent supporter of the principles of the Democratic party and an ex-member of the county central committee. Although not an office seeker, he served for a number of years as clerk and trustee of the Kennedy school district. He is an active and valued member of the Christian Church, in which he is a deacon and in whose Sunday-school he was superintendent for many years.

JAMES CUNNINGHAM. One of the most highly esteemed and interesting personages in Merced county is James Cunningham, to whom is accorded the distinction of being one of the organizers of the county. He was born in Dungen, County Londonderry, Ireland, May 12, 1824, a son of James, Sr., and Margaret (Dunlap) Cunningham, the former was born in Castle Colley, eight miles from Londonderry, and served in the English army as a member of the South Fifteenth Infantry for seventeen years, twelve of which he was color sergeant, stationed in the West Indies. He was a brave and courageous man, taking part in some of the most famous battles of his time, and was the last man to leave the island of Martinique when the island was given up to the French, wading to the boat with the water up to his neck. His father was a man of wealth at one time, but lost it all during the war.

James Cunningham, Jr., remained at home

until he was sixteen years of age, when he ran away and went to sea, his ambition as a mere boy being to become a proficient navigator and owner of ocean vessels. In company with a boy friend he went to Liverpool, England, and apprenticed for four years as a sailor with the firm of Booker, Bond & Co., merchants, who shipped to all parts of the world. Being an intelligent youth he was made second mate of the barque John Horrocks, at the age of nineteen, and a few months later was promoted to first mate of the ship Lancaster. While on this vessel he met with an accident, breaking his collar bone and shoulder, which incapacitated him for service for six months, during which time, however, he was not idle. Upon the advice of one of his employers he attended a school of navigation, and when he was able to do duty again he had successfully passed the examination and was made captain of the ship Cyclops. He followed the sea for eleven years, rounded Cape Horn three times, was twice over two-thirds around the globe, and visited many lands. In his travels he had heard of the gold discoveries in California and had made several attempts to get here, even offered to work his passage as ordinary seaman, without success. His idea was to work in the mines, the more rapidly to accumulate wealth, which he intended to invest in ships. In the fall of 1850 a golden opportunity came to him, being selected as chief officer of the clipper ship Canada, two thousand tons burden. After the ship had out-fitted in 1851 he started for the New World and for California, and at the end of a long and stormy voyage he landed in San Francisco in February, 1852. Here the entire crew deserted and left the ship. Mr. Cunningham had eight months' pay coming to him, but as he never received it he found himself in a strange land practically penniless. He soon found a friend in a Mr. Livingston, to whose cabin he removed his effects, and some time later a party was organized to go to the mines; Robert Sherwood supplied him with money and the party of five, among whom was a Mr. Stephenson, a geologist, who had been a passenger on the Canada, set out for the mines on the Yuba river. He spent about two years mining when he made his first trip on horseback to Mariposa county to visit a cousin named Laughlin. While there he located a claim on Mariposa creek, the place now being occupied by a Mr. Myers.

Returning to the mines in Grass valley, Mr. Cunningham also purchased some land in the vicinity, but continued to follow the former occupation. In 1853 he made another trip to Mariposa county, only to find that some one had jumped his claim. In the meantime Captains Smith and Renwick had secured three hundred and twenty acres of good land and put in a crop of barley. Mr. Cunningham purchased the land and crop for $1,000, which was the nucleus of his present large holdings. The land is located on the line between Mariposa and Merced counties and is still in his possession. He harvested his barley and succeeded in getting a good price for it. At the time of purchase the nearest neighbors were seven miles distant.

Not meeting with the desired result in the mines, Mr. Cunningham turned his attention to the stock business, in 1864, with Thomas Fowler, who was afterwards senator from Tulare county. He made several trips to the southern part of the state and purchased cattle for his ranch, and for beef to supply the mines, also horses. That same year was noted for the continued dry season, and many of his cattle died. Accordingly he started for Humboldt county, Nev., but lost nearly all his stock and barely escaped with his own life owing to the depredations of the Indians. After many years had passed he gave up the idea of becoming a ship owner and turned his attention entirely to general farming and the stock business, having on the ranch on an average about fifty head of fine horses and twelve hundred head of cattle. Beginning with his three hundred and twenty acres he has added to it from time to time until the combined acreage of the family aggregates nearly sixteen thousand acres, all devoted to the above named interests, and operated by the Cunningham Land Company, Inc., composed of Mr. and Mrs. James Cunningham (the former as president), his two sons, James Charles and Emmett T., and his daughter, Mrs. E. Massengale, all of whom reside upon the ranch, which is located about sixteen miles northeast of Merced.

July 30, 1868, Mr. Cunningham was united in marriage with S. Elizabeth Turner, a native of Jackson county, Mo., and a daughter of Capt. Nicholas Turner, a pioneer of '49, of California. Of this union three children have been born: James Charles, who married Stella Smith, a native of Mariposa county, and has two children, James Byron and Vesta; Emmett T., who married Bernice Brandon, a native of Merced county, and has two children, Margaret and Ione; and Evangeline, the wife of Eugene Massengale.

Mr. Cunningham is a Democrat in politics, and has taken an active interest in the deliberations of that party as delegate to county and state conventions, and held the office of supervisor from 1860 to '64. For many years he also served as school trustee. It has ever been his policy to elevate the standard of education and he has contributed liberally of his means toward that end. In Ireland he was made a Mason, and is now a member of La Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M., of Merced.

In his long and eventful life Mr. Cunningham has had many interesting and thrilling experiences. Of the latter one incident worthy of mention and one that will perpetuate his memory for generations, occurred in 1862, during the flood at Snelling that threatened the lives of thirty-five people who had sought refuge in the trees when the hotel was washed from its foundation. Accustomed as a sailor to act quickly when danger threatened, he, with the assistance of others, among them Judge Breen, Hon. W. H. Howard, and a Mr. Perkins, constructed a raft and by hard work and danger to their own lives, safely landed the people from their perilous positions.

Though now past eighty years of age James Cunningham is hale and hearty, can read without the aid of glasses, and though practically retired from active labors, takes an intelligent interest in the improvement of his property. In all matters that have been put forward to advance the interest of the people or the welfare of the county, he has always given his support, and extended a helping hand to those less fortunate than himself, and his door is always open to the wayfarer. In the evening of his well-spent life, surrounded by his children and their families, he and his wife are living in the enjoyment of a well-earned rest, respected and esteemed by all who have come to know them, and the love of their children.

JAMES FRANKLIN WILLIAMS. The lineage of the Williams family is traced to the southern state, and Alexandre Williams, a son of Dill Williams by his marriage to a Miss Brooks, was born near Salisbury, N. C., but in childhood, after his father's death, accompanied his mother and other members of the family to Indiana, where he took up farm work. Later he removed to Missouri and settled on a farm near Sandhill, Scotland county, where he remained until death. The next generation is presented by Wiley Williams, who was born in Washington county, Ind., and grew to manhood in Scotland county, Mo., thence at the time of attaining his majority starting to California in company with a cousin, Osborn Wilson, during the memorable year of 1849. Equipped with ox-teams, wagons and provisions, their party crossed the plains in safety and landed at their destination after a trip of six months. Later some of their company settled at Owsley's Bar in the northern mines. The cousin, Osborn Wilson, is still living and makes his home at Hanford, Cal.

Instead of trying his luck as a miner, Wiley

Williams began to run a pack-train into the mines, and later entered government land near Gilroy, three and one-half miles south of that town, on the San Juan road, where he built a hotel and stage station, known as the Eagle house. In addition thereto he conducted farm pursuits and operated a dairy. During the drought of 1856 he lost his cattle and a few years later disposed of the property, removing into Gilroy and opening a store. Previous to this the Spaniards had been the only merchants in the town and he was the first American to establish a store here. In addition he built the Williams house at a cost of $40,000 in construction and furnishing, but when the railroad was built into the south part of the town, one mile from his hotel, he traded the building for a large stock ranch in San Benito county. Unfortunately, the title to this property proved worthless and he lost the entire tract. In 1882 he came to Tulare county and bought two hundred and forty acres two miles north of the present site of Dinuba, where he engaged in farming. While visiting his son at Lemoore, in 1884, he died suddenly of heart disease, aged sixty-six years.

The wife of Wiley Williams bore the maiden name of Mary Tennant and was born in London, England, whence she came by way of Panama to San Francisco with her father, William Tennant, and other members of the family in 1853. Shortly afterward Mr. Tennant settled on the Monterey road and erected the Twenty-one Mile house, which still stands. After some years he relinquished the management of the place to a son, William, and removed four and one-half miles northwest of Gilroy, where he engaged in fruit ranching until his death, in 1871, at seventy-one years of age. It was while Mr. Williams was engaged in teaming to San Jose and Gilroy that he stopped at the Twenty-one Mile house and there formed the acquaintance of Miss Tennant, whom he married in 1854 at the old homestead. At the time of her death, which occurred near Dinuba in 1894, she was sixty years of age. Seven children were born of her marriage and attained mature years, namely: William A., proprietor of the Kenmore, at San Jose; James Franklin, of Dinuba; Mary D., who died at twenty-six years; John, who died at twenty-one years of age, being accidentally killed while working as brakeman on the railroad at Gilroy; Fannie Ellen, wife of John T. Mickle, of San Francisco; Annie, wife of Charles Earhart, a farmer living near Dinuba; and Emily, wife of Porter Mickle, of Hanford.

Near Gilroy, Santa Clara county, James Franklin Williams was born April 18, 1856, and there he passed the years of early youth, receiving his education in the Gilroy public schools. When seventeen years of age he accompanied his parents to San Benito county and afterward remained at home, aiding his father until he was twenty-five years of age. In addition to planting and cultivating the crops on the home place, he put in crops for himself on adjoining land. In 1880 he visited Tulare county and the following year he returned here to locate, having with him for investment $1,000 that he had saved. Soon afterward he opened a livery barn at Lemoore, in what is now Kings county, and from there in July of 1889 removed to a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of wild land near Dinuba. In 1890 he set out forty acres in vines which are still bearing, and in 1900 set out fifteen acres in Thompson's seedless grapes on the old place. Four hundred acres of adjoining land, as well as much of his own place, he had under wheat, and one hundred and twenty acres were leveled, checked and sown to alfalfa. In 1900 he embarked in the dairy business, which he conducted upon an extensive scale for two years and then sold the entire plant. Since then he has acquired other properties. For forty acres of grain land, purchased from Mr. Cummings, he paid $62.50 per acre; one-half of this he planted in a vineyard and the balance is in alfalfa. From R. F. Dunn he bought forty acres for $200 per acre, twenty acres of this being a vineyard and twenty acres an orchard. This gives him an aggregate of two hundred and forty acres in his home place, one and one-half miles south of Dinuba. Of this property ninety-five acres are in a vineyard, with twenty acres in Zinfindels, fifty acres in Muscats, ten acres in Sultanas, and fifteen acres in Thompson's seedless. Twenty acres are in an orchard and the balance of the ranch under alfalfa. The farm house was erected in 1885 and by subsequent enlarging has been converted into a commodious residence. The entire property is under irrigation and takes rank as first-class land. When he first began to raise alfalfa he had no facilities for irrigation, and of course did not cut the large crops that have been made possible by subsequent development of water supply. Through his place runs an avenue of fig trees one-half mile in length, greatly adding to the beauty of the homestead. His work of transforming a sheep range into a garden of beauty entitles him to praise from all who strive for the progress of this region and believe in its possibilities. The name "Moosehead ranch" might be given to the place appropriately, in recognition of what might be called a freak of nature. On one of the eucalyptus trees in front of the house, by the cutting of two large limbs, and the growing of new branches into the shape of horns, there may be seen the head of a moose, with its large nose, perfectly formed neck and curving horns.

In politics Mr. Williams votes with the Democratic party. Fraternally he is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and is a charter member and past grand of the Odd Fellows' lodge at Dinuba, whither he transferred his membership from Lemoore. His marriage was solemnized in Lemoore and united him with Mrs. Alice (Casey) Wilson, a native of Indiana, born near Seymour, Jackson county. Her father, William Casey, was born near Lexington, Ky., a son of William Casey, Sr., a Virginian who spent his last years upon a Kentucky plantation. From Kentucky the junior William Casey moved to Indiana and settled on a farm near Seymour. His wife, Mary Anderson, was a member of an old Virginia family. They were the parents of seven children now living, but Mrs. Williams is the only one of the family to settle in California. While living in Indiana she became the wife of Robert Fulton Wilson, a native of Jackson county, that state. During 1874 they settled in Tulare county, Cal., where Mr. Wilson engaged in the sheep business and also for a short time followed the blacksmith's trade in Lemoore. While celebrating the election of Governor Budd in 1882 he was accidentally killed by an explosion of anvils. Besides his wife he left a son, Clarence Wilson, who is a graduate of the San Jose Normal School, class of 1902, and now holds the position of assistant cashier in the Bank of Dinuba. Of her present marriage Mrs. Williams has one child, Frankie. A woman of culture and refinement, her tastes for the beautiful are evidenced in her comfortable home, over which she presides with grace and hospitality. Active in social affairs, she is a member of the Ladies' Club and past noble grand in the Order of Rebekahs.

CHARLES MELZAR HATCH. Shortly after the Mayflower had landed its passengers on the dreary and ice-bound coasts of Massachusetts, two brothers bearing the name of Hatch came from Wales to the new world and identified themselves with the destinies of its pioneers. While one went some distance south, the other settled at Scituate, Plymouth county, Mass., and from him descended the branch of the family represented by Charles M. Hatch of Tulare county. One of the ancestors, Mark Hatch, a native of Bristol, Me., and for years a farmer in that neighborhood, left his plow at the outbreak of the Revolution, and followed the fortunes of the patriots in more than one sanguinary engagement with the British troops. Mark Hatch, Jr., who was a son of this Revolutionary soldier, and a native of Bristol, in early manhood settled upon a farm in Knox county, Me., where the remaining years of his life were uneventfully and busily passed. Among his children was a son who bore the name of father and grandfather and who was born near Washington, Knox county, Me., but at twenty years of age removed to Bangor, the same state, and took up the trade of a builder. When the discovery of gold allured thousands to the Pacific coast, he took passage on a ship that sailed south on the Atlantic, rounded the Horn, then went north on the Pacific to San Francisco, where he landed in May, 1850. The climate and conditions for future success in California attracted him from the first, but the thought of the dreary miles of mountains and desert separating him from old friends and home gave him a feeling of homesickness, and in 1852 he returned to his home at the other extreme of the country. For some years he carried on a mercantile business at Charleston, Me., and also held the office of postmaster. Meanwhile, in 1857, his son, Charles M., came to California and the following year he joined him in Calaveras county, where he engaged in mining. Later he was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad at Sacramento. At the time of his death, in 1877, he was sixty-four years of age. His wife, Jane Stevens, was born at Stark, Me., and died in Charleston, same state, at forty-two years of age.

The family of Mark and Jane Hatch consisted of seven children, six of whom attained mature years and settled in California: Charles Melzar, of Tulare county; Roscoe Green, a contractor at Woodland, Yolo county; Jane A., wife of C. L. Chase, of Lodi; Florence Adelle, wife of Dr. W. A. Patterson, of Wheatland, Yuba county; Ann, who died in Sacramento; and Helen, wife of Walker Bagby, of Tipton, Tulare county. Charles Melzar Hatch was born in Bangor, Me., October 29, 1836, and received a district school education, supplemented by attendance at Charleston Academy. In 1857 he came via Panama to California, arriving on the 1st of August at San Andreas, Calaveras county, where first he engaged in lumbering and saw-milling, then became a placer miner at Eldorado. From 1871 to 1873 he was with the Southern Pacific at Sacramento, after which he clerked in San Francisco for one year, and in 1874 went to Lathrop, San Joaquin county, as clerk in the motive power department of that division of the Southern Pacific system. When the shops were located at Tulare, in 1875, he came to this place in the employ of the road, being the first division shop clerk in the plant at this place, and continuing as chief clerk until November, 1890. Upon resigning his position with the railroad he turned his attention to agriculture, having bought one hundred and sixty acres of land near Tulare. Immediately after settling on the land he put out an orchard of twenty-two acres. Later a vineyard of twenty acres was started. The balance of the land is under alfalfa, thus rendering the place available for a dairy industry. The irrigation system was completed about the time he settled there and in addition he had an artesian well from which to obtain a supply of water for the land. Under his wise oversight the value of the property has greatly increased and the income derived therefrom has assumed gratifying proportions.

In Dexter, Me., September 17, 1866, occurred the marriage of Charles Melzar Hatch and Miss Clara P. Dugans, a native of Orono, Penobscot county, Me., and next to the youngest of twelve children, of whom two, Newell and William, were killed in battle while serving with a Maine regiment in the Civil war. Her father, William, who was born near Bangor, was employed in early life as a pilot, then became a lumberman, but finally settled on a farm near Medford, Me., and there remained until his death at eighty-eight years of age. He was a son of William Dugans, Sr., a Revolutionary soldier, who married Miss McPheaters, member of an old Scotch family. The mother of Mrs. Hatch bore the maiden name of Mary Parsons, and was born in Bangor. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Hatch there were five children, but only two reached maturity, namely: Laura Alma, who married W. B. Cartmill, and died in Stockton, March 30, 1889; and Luella Augusta, Mrs. James B. Gist, of Los Angeles. For years Mr. Hatch was a member of the county central committee of the Republican party, and for two terms he was a member of the board of irrigation district directors. Largely through his efforts the Tulare Building & Loan Association was organized, and he officiated as its first president. To him is due the credit for securing the location of the cemetery and interesting the people in its establishment; while acting as director of the company having the movement in charge he succeeded in securing as a gift from the Southern Pacific road an acreage twice as large as originally planned. After coming to California he was made a Mason in Calaveras Lodge No. 78, F. & A. M., at San Andreas, and is now connected with Olive Branch Lodge No. 260, and is also a member of Tulare Lodge No. 78, A. O. U. W., in which he is past master workman. While aiding in the progress of the community along material lines, he was not forgetful of its needs from the standpoint of religion. Both he and his wife are ardent church workers, and to their efforts in no small degree is due the organization of the Christian Church of Tulare, in which he now officiates as a deacon and chairman of the board of trustees. The responsible task of building the new house of worship, which was dedicated in May, 1887, fell largely upon him as chairman of the building committee. It is the unanimous opinion of the people that the edifice, which was erected at a cost of $10,000, is substantial, modern and appropriately finished, its quiet elegance within and harmonious effects without all combining to produce a result as desirable as it is rare.

ELIAS FRANCIS JORDAN. When Mr. Jordan started to California he had not been given a name whereby he was to be known among the children of his father's family. The members of the train in which the Jordan family traveled overland to the Golden state gave to the six-weeks-old baby the appellation of "California," their destination, a title shortened eventually to "Forney," the name by which he has ever since been known. He was born in Galveston, Tex., January 28, 1850, a son of John Jordan. The latter, who was a farmer by occupation, traveled overland to California by ox-teams via El Paso, Tucson, Fort Yuma to San Diego, reaching the last-named place in the fall of the year. He located first in San Juan, Monterey county, where he engaged in the stock business for seven years. In 1857 he removed to Tulare county and for one year made his home near Visalia, afterward purchasing a farm in the Yokohl valley. He obtained a charter to build a toll trail from Yokohl across the mountains and the Kern river into Nevada, and successfully completed it to the Kern river. In crossing the Kern river on a raft it went under a fallen tree, he was knocked into the river and was drowned, his body never being recovered. This occurred in 1861, and after that time the road was allowed to fall into disuse and has never been completed. His wife, formerly Eliza Jane Sadorus, a native of Pennsylvania and a daughter of Henry Sadorus, of German ancestry, survives him, and at the age of ninety-two years is still hale and hearty. She makes her home with her son, E. F. Jordan, of this review. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Jordan were twelve sons and one daughter, of whom six sons are deceased.

Elias Francis Jordan was the tenth in order of birth in this large family. He was named by an uncle in Texas, at whose home they stopped on their way to the west, although he had already received the name which could not fail to cling to him throughout life on account of the peculiar circumstances under which it was given him. From the age of seven years he made his home in Tulare county, receiving his education in the public school in the vicinity of the paternal farm, which was located on section 13, township 8, range 26, at the mouth of the Yokohl. He remained at home until he was twenty-nine years old, helping his mother in the management of the farm. During this time he had, however, taken opportunity to locate a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres on section 20, township 18, range 26, three miles north of Exeter. In 1880 he removed to this land and has since made his home here, eventually purchasing another quarter section of section 20, and engaging in the raising of grain. In addition to this property he has rented, in connection with his brother, J. B. Jordan, as high as five thousand acres for the raising of grain. They were successful in their efforts and continued together for some years but have now dissolved partnership. In addition to his home property Mr. Jordan also owns eighty acres of section 26, and the same number of acres of section 35, as well as eighty acres of the old home place. He has at the present time planted to grain five quarter sections of land, eight hundred acres in all, in the operation of this enterprise using three six-horse teams, and a combined harvester which requires the use of thirty-two horses. He is also largely interested in the raising of cattle, horses and hogs, and in this line as well as that of general farming has met with a gratifying success. He is numbered among the representative citizens of the county and merits the esteem and respect of his fellow-men.

In Farmersville, Tulare county, July 23, 1879, Mr. Jordan was united in marriage with Lou-rissia Ann Hill, a native of Iowa, and they are the parents of four daughters and one son, namely: Alice, the wife of W. A. McNay, of Visalia; Leonora, the wife of M. M. Epperson, of Exeter; Frances, Estella and Grover. Mr. Jordan is a staunch Democrat in his political convictions and takes an active interest in the workings of his party. He has always taken a strong interest in the educational affairs of his community, now serving as clerk of the school board of the Kaweah district. Fraternally he was made an Odd Fellow in Exeter, of which lodge he served as noble grand two terms. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jordan are charter members of the Rebekahs, in which Mrs. Jordan has passed all the chairs.

F. J. HESSE. Though born in Virginia, the earliest recollections of Mr. Hesse are associated with Kansas, where he grew to manhood, but since 1885 he has been a resident of Tulare county. In boyhood he removed to Kansas in company with other members of the family and for some years interested himself in general farming and stock-raising on a tract of land near Emporia. During 1884 he came to California and after trying unsuccessfully to get a start at the stock business near San Diego, he went to Santa Rosa, where he again met with losses. In 1885 he came to Tulare county and bought large tracts of land near the present site of Angiola, where at this writing he owns more than ten sections of land in one body. On his range he has large herds of cattle. The stock business has brought him gratifying returns as well as a wide reputation among people engaged in the same business throughout the state. By his marriage to Kate Bamesberger, a native of Illinois, he has three sons and a daughter. The eldest of the children, William G., was born near Emporia, Kans., March 7, 1884, and grew to manhood in Tulare county, where he had the advantage of a course of study in the Tulare high school, supplemented by attendance at the Fresno Business College, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1904.

Very soon after his graduation from the business college Mr. Hesse bought the old Hitchcock meat market at Tulare. Since then he has remodeled the market and put in a cold storage plant with a capacity of two tons of ice. The market occupies a central location on Kern street, where he utilizes two floors in a building, 25x90 feet in dimensions. To facilitate the business he has his own slaughter house, where the meat is prepared for the market. In addition to his retail trade he has built up a wholesale business and ships to various points in the county. On account of the close attention which his business demands he has never participated in local or political affairs, aside from voting the Republican ticket at both local and general elections.

LARKENS K. FRASER. The Pacific coast with its world-famed mining, horticultural and agricultural specialties, has within the past two decades made rapid strides along the path of prosperity, and in no line of industry has there been more noticeable advancement than in that controlled by the energetic, wide-awake ranchman. Conspicuous among the participators in the grand transformation scene that has converted dreary wastes and sandy plains into fruitful orchards, vineyards and grain fields is Larkens K. Fraser, a successful vineyardist, orchardist and stockman, living two and one-half miles south-east of Dinuba, where he has a valuable and well-kept ranch. A native of Nova Scotia, he was born May 1, 1860, in New Glasgow, of Scotch ancestry, being a son of the late Robert John Fraser, and a brother of Abner Fraser, in whose sketch, which appears on another page of this work, further parental and ancestral history may be found.

At the age of eight years Larkens K. Fraser accompanied his parents to Omaha, Neb., where he attended the public schools two years, completing his early studies in the district schools of Visalia, Tulare county, whither the family located in 1870. He subsequently assisted his father in improving a ranch, acquiring valuable experience and knowledge. On attaining his majority, Mr. Fraser took up a homestead claim of eighty acres on section 26, near Monson, and having improved it, he rented adjoining land, and for a number of years carried on grain farming on an extensive scale. Locating on his present ranch in 1891, he has continued in agricultural and horticultural pursuits, his farm of two hundred acres being highly improved, and bearing speaking evidence of his thrift, wise management and practical judgment. He has here a vineyard of thirty acres, an orchard of thirteen acres, and an extensive and valuable alfalfa field, raising the feed for his fine herd of Holstein cattle on the latter. His ranch, located on section 22, ranks high in its appointments, being one of the most attractive in the vicinity, and a credit to his energy and perseverance.

Mr. Fraser married, near Dinuba, Alice J. Garr, a native of Indiana, and into their home two children have been born, Louis Arthur and Dora. Politically Mr. Fraser is a sound Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and to the Beavers. He is a member of the Christian Church, in which he is serving as deacon, and to which Mrs. Fraser also belongs.

JOHN ALBERT KNAPP. Previous experience in different departments of agriculture qualified Mr. Knapp for successful work in the cultivation of the property which he began to operate in 1897 and which became his by right of purchase five years later. The quarter section lies within a few miles of Tulare and is under irrigation, Mr. Knapp having the use of water from the ditch, in addition to his own continuously flowing artesian well eleven hundred and fifty feet deep, with a connecting reservoir which covers one-half acre. In order to secure the feed necessary for the milch cows used in his dairy business he has seventy acres under alfalfa and a smaller acreage in grain. Besides dairying he makes a specialty of fruit and has twenty acres in a vineyard, also thirteen acres in an orchard of assorted fruits. Another specialty, and one in which he maintains a warm interest, is that of apiarist having nearly fifty colonies of bees, and this industry has proved a source of considerable profit in return for the amount invested therein.

The Knapp family comes from German stock. Henry Knapp crossed the ocean and settled in Fulton county, Ohio, later removing to a farm in Williams county, the same state, but eventually returning to Fulton county, where his last days were spent. Accompanying across the ocean, among other members of the family, was a son, Daniel Knapp, who was born in Bavaria, Germany, and was a youth of eighteen when he became a resident of the United States. Near Archbold, Fulton county, he evolved a farm from the forest, a task that demanded the most arduous and long-continued labor. Later he removed to Williams county and bought a farm there. Since retiring from active farm cares he has made his home in the city of West Unity, Williams county. His wife, who survives to enjoy his present prosperity, was Rachel Spiess, a native of Canton Zurich, Switzerland, and a daughter of Henry Spiess. When she was a child the family came to the United States, her father first settling in Fulton county, Ohio, later removing to Williams county and then returned to Fulton county, where he died, aged about ninety-six years.

Among seven children now living (five sons and two daughters) John Albert Knapp is the eldest, and was born near Archbold, Fulton county, Ohio, June 11, 1859. After 1864 he was reared in Williams county, where he received a common-school education. Reared to farm pursuits and possessing a fondness for the work, he chose agriculture for his life occupation, and in addition to cultivating a farm he operated a steam thresher in that part of the country for ten years. His arrival in California occurred February 10, 1891, and soon afterward he bought twenty acres near Tulare. Of this tract five acres were in orchard, and the same amount respectively in a vineyard and alfalfa. After three years on that place he removed to the Lakeside country in Kings county, where he combined dairying and grain farming. In 1897 he moved to the place which five years later he acquired by purchase and of which he is still the owner. During his residence in Ohio he was united in marriage, in Williams county, November 28, 1880, with Miss Effie C. Rittenour, a native of that county and a daughter of George and Sarah (Hisey) Rittenour. Her father came from his native state of Virginia to Ohio and settled in Columbiana county, where he met and married Miss Hisey. From there he moved to Williams county, where he added shoe-making to general farm pursuits. Now, at eighty-six years of age, he is still living on the old homestead near Bryan, that county. Of his thirteen children all but three attained maturity and eight are now living, Mrs. Knapp being next to the youngest of the family. Born of her marriage are five children, namely: Daisy, wife of J. L. Crye, of Kings county; Ivy, wife of B. E. Matthews, of Kern, this state; Ernest, who assists his father on the home farm; Florence and George also at home. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church of Tulare. In politics Mr. Knapp has always been a pronounced Republican, while in social organizations he holds membership with the Fraternal Aid.

Keenly interested in educational matters, he has given his most efficient service to the Buena Vista school district, of whose board of trustees he is a member, and for five years has acted as clerk of the board.

ALFRED PETERSON. The success which has been achieved by Mr. Peterson since identifying himself with the agricultural interests of Tulare county furnishes another proof of the opportunities offered by this section of California to men of resolute spirit and persevering industry. It was during 1896 that he purchased his present property three miles east of Tulare. The original purchase consisted of only twenty acres, but at three different times he has added to the acreage until his landed possessions now aggregate three hundred and forty-five acres in one body, improved with the necessary buildings and fences, and planted to different crops for which the soil is adapted. One hundred and fifteen acres are under alfalfa. A special feature of the place is the raising of stock, and fine grades of horses, cattle and hogs may be seen here, the sale of which adds not a little each season to the income of the owner.

A native of Sweden, Mr. Peterson was born near Oskarshamn, Smoland, August 23, 1869, and is a son of Peter and Christine (Johnson) Carlson, natives of the same locality, where they still reside, the father being sexton in his home church and its cemetery. The grandfather was a soldier in the Swedish cavalry and served in the Napoleonic wars from 1812 to 1815. Since the establishment of the reformation by Martin Luther the various generations of the family have adhered to that faith, and Alfred Peterson was reared in its doctrines, but since coming to America he has been associated with the Methodist Episcopal denomination. He and his sister, Mrs. Selma Pospeshek, of Tulare county, are the only living children in his father's family, the other having died some years since.

At the age of fourteen years, in 1884, Alfred Peterson came to America with his brother, Oskar, and secured work on a farm near Long Point, Livingston county, Ill. After five years in the same part of the country, in 1889 he came to California and began to work as a farm hand. Four years later he entered into the threshing business and with a partner purchased and operated an engine of twenty-four horse-power, continuing with his partner for the first two years, but afterward working alone until 1901, when he retired from the business in order to devote his entire attention to stock-raising.

The marriage of Mr. Peterson, in Chicago, united him with Miss Hilda Anderson, who was born near Westervik, Smoland, Sweden, and like himself, affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he votes the Republican ticket. Since coming to Tulare county he has been identified with the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekahs of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Of recent years he has devoted much of his time to travel and in 1903 covered thirty thousand miles by steamer and railroad. Seven times he has crossed our own continent, and twice has returned to the old home to renew the associations of youth, the first of these trips occurring in 1901, when he enjoyed a pleasant visit with his father in Oskarshamn and with other relatives and friends from whom he long had been separated. While maintaining a deep affection for the land of his birth, he is nevertheless loyal to his adopted country and especially to his chosen home in California, where he believes may be found the most fertile soil in the west. From an early period of his residence here he has been an advocate of irrigation, realizing that the lack of water is the only drawback to the achievement of the most satisfactory results in agriculture. At one time he served as a director in the Farmers' Ditch Company, from which his own land was irrigated, and in other ways he has endeavored to promote the irrigation facilities of his home neighborhood, nor has he been less responsive to other movements for the benefit of the people among whom he has cast his lot.

SPENCER FAY. A well-known landholder of Tulare county, Spencer Fay is located five miles south of Portersville, where in 1889 he purchased five hundred and twenty acres of land. Later he added six hundred acres, now owning eleven hundred, devoted to pasture and the cultivation of wheat. This property he leases, although he makes his home on the place. A native of Springville, N. Y., he was born August 20, 1849, a son of Benjamin Fay, a wagon maker and carpenter of the same place, where he is now living, at the age of eighty-two years. The family came originally from Massachusetts, the paternal grandfather, also named Benjamin, removing from Athol, that state, where he was a farmer, to New York state in 1811. He was an active participant of the war of 1812, after the war making his home in Erie county, where his death occurred. In manhood Benjamin Fay, Jr., married Hulda Cope, a native of Canada, and she died in New York state about 1865.

In a family of four sons and one daughter born to his parents, Spencer Fay was the oldest. He received his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home, after which he was apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith. Deciding to locate on the Pacific coast, he came to California in 1874, and settled at Portersville, where for fifteen years he carried on a lucrative business as a blacksmith. With the results of his industry and energy, in 1889, he purchased the five hundred and twenty acres which formed the nucleus of his property. One of the branches to which Mr. Fay has given his attention has been the budding of orange trees for market, and in which he has met with gratifying success. For a time he was also engaged in sheep raising in partnership with Ed D. Halbert.

In California Mr. Fay married Tennie Rhodes, a native of Tulare county, and they have one daughter, Jewel, who is at home with her parents. Fraternally Mr. Fay is a charter member of Portersville Lodge, A. O. U. W., and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

JOHN BARKER was born in Bristol, England, September 4, 1832, and is descended from a family who for many generations had followed the sea. His father commanded a ship before he was twenty-one years old, and went down with all on board off the African coast when he was thirty years old. He left a widow and three children, the oldest of whom, John Barker, is the subject of this review. With the born instinct of the sailor, before he was twelve years old he made his first voyage to the island of Terceira, one of the Azores, from which place his ship brought home a cargo of oranges. He followed the sea in five Mediterranean voyages, each time passing through the Grecian Archipelago, on through the Hellespont and the Bosphorus, and into the various parts of the Black sea. During the intervals of these voyages he made four voyages across the Atlantic to the United States and one to British America. On three of these voyages he brought passengers, all in the steerage of a sailing ship. On a voyage to Quebec in 1847 his ship took four hundred passengers from the northwest coast of Ireland, where they had taken one thousand tons of shelled corn, the donation made by Abdul Medjid, the sultan of Turkey, to the starving people of Ireland, at the time of the famine there. About half of these passengers died while the ship was imprisoned among the icebergs on the banks of Newfoundland.

At the age of eighteen years Mr. Barker found himself second officer of his ship, well posted on navigation, and if occasion had demanded would have been capable of commanding a ship. In December, 1848, while on a homeward trip from Constantinople to England, they encountered a heavy westerly wind when nearing Gibraltar and were compelled to put into the bay of Gibraltar for a time. This accidental stay was indirectly the means of changing the whole course of Mr. Barker's life, for while there the news of the discovery of gold in California reached his ears. The history of the coast of California was somewhat familiar to him through the stories he had heard from many of the old mariners who had been to the new country and taken back cargoes of hides and tallow. The first officer of his ship had been to the state in command of a ship, and was a whaler on the coast for about three years. His stories of the country and climate inflamed the already heated imagination of Mr. Barker, who determined to start for California as soon as he could after his arrival in England. On reaching England the ship was chartered to carry passengers to New York, and so Mr. Barker concluded to remain aboard of her and not to leave until that city was reached. In the meantime he opened communication with some friends who lived in Galena, Ill., and who advised him to cross to America and make the trip over the plains with them. Reaching New York in the latter part of February, 1849, he left the ship the first evening there, going aboard one of the Hudson river steamers, which carried him to Albany. From that point he chartered his passage on a canal boat to Buffalo, cabin passage with board being $10. Arriving at that city he went aboard a propeller and took passage for Chicago, which was then a small, very dirty town, half buried in mud and water on the shores of Lake Michigan. Although offered profitable employment Mr. Barker declined and went on to Galena, traveling by wagon and stage, as there were then no railroads, only to find at the end of the trip that his friends had already started for the west. Knowing it would be impossible to overtake them before they started upon their journey across the plains, he decided to stay where he was and accept some kind of employment until the following spring, when he also would make the trip. He easily secured employment with Harris Brothers, of Galena, who owned a line of steamers which plied upon the Mississippi river between that point and St. Louis and to St. Paul, Minn. He remained as mate of one of their boats throughout that year, until the river froze up in November, when all traffic ceased above St. Louis. He then began preparations for his trip across the plains, joining a party of young men, eight in number, with eight animals and two wagons.

On May 1, they crossed the Missouri river where Omaha is now located. The trip was full of the incidents characteristic of life on the plains in the pioneer days of the country, including skirmishes with the Indians, in one of which Mr. Barker was wounded in the forehead by a musket ball. They arrived in Salt Lake City on July 4, and remained a few miles from the city until the 26th, when the final start was made on what they were assured was the hardest part of their journey. They came over the Humboldt route along the line now occupied by the Central Pacific. The feed for the stock was of poor quality and scarce, the water bad, and for a great part of the way the road was literally a bed of alkali dust that cut and irritated the mucous membrane of both men and animals. The Shoshone Indians whom they encountered on this part of their journey were troublesome and treacherous, so they were compelled to stand guard over their animals day and night, and isolated and small parties were in constant danger of being massacred. Several of their animals were stolen in spite of their vigilance, and some died, and on their arrival at their destination they had but one pair of mules and a wagon. They reached the summit of the Sierra Nevadas on the old Carson route, September 1, 1850. There the party separated, and each went his way, intent upon finding the fortune for which he had endured such dangers and privations.

Mr. Barker drifted down through Eldorado, Amador, Calaveras, Tuolumne and Mariposa counties, experiencing various fortunes until the spring of 1853. He then was mining at a place called New Year's diggings, between the Tuolumne and Merced rivers. It was what was called "dry diggings," as he had to wheel his gravel in a wheel barrow about three hundred yards to a pool of water and wash it with a rocker. While thus engaged one afternoon three of his former companions with whom he had crossed the plains rode into his camp. He was just washing up his day's work and had $28 in coarse gold as a result. This was the final result of three days' labor. His friends told him they had started out to explore the great valley of the San Joaquin, and that they had heard of a stream called the Kern river which was a perfect Eldorado, and as yet untouched by the hand of the miner. Accordingly he decided to cast in his lot with theirs, and on the following Monday he broke camp and set out for the south. After leaving the neighborhood in which he had located they found no other settlers until they reached Fort Miller, a military post, then under the command of Captain Jordan. There was quite a number of miners on the river as well as on Fine and Coarse Gold gulches. They found Chinamen making $20 per day in diggings that had been abandoned by white men. But having set out for the Kern river they determined to reach it before stopping in their journey. When they arrived at Visalia the town and county were in process of organization and after resting a few days they went on and entered the Kern river mines by way of Linn's valley. They here encountered the usual experience of miners, although the country was far from being as rich in the mineral as in the northern part. After working in the mines for several months they all became dissatisfied and returned to Visalia. There Mr. Barker found employment as a writer in the county surveyor's office and also received the appointment of under-sheriff to W. G. Poindexter. A year later he located on a ranch on Lower Kings river, in what is now Kings county, and entered extensively into the raising of cattle and horses and the growing of hay. He made a final settlement by erecting in 1856 the first human habitation on the Fresno plain and establishing a ranch and road house at Elk Horn.

A pioneer in the truest sense of the word, Mr. Barker was ever found ready to lend his aid for either the upbuilding or protection of his adopted state, and at the breaking out of the Indian troubles in 1856 he was one of the first to offer his services. The Four Creek and Tule River Indians, joined by the Owens river tribes, made a raid on the settlement at Tule river and literally destroyed it, immediately thereafter retreating to the mountains, driving all the stock they wanted with them. There they slaughtered the cattle and collected stores of "charqui" or dried beef, and with plenty of acorns, grass seed and roots, and among their fortifications they defied the settlers. The settlers built a cordwood fort at Visalia and collected therein all the women and children and mustered all the men between Kern river and the San Joaquin, two hundred in number. Accompanied by a lieutenant and twelve soldiers with a gun from Fort Miller, they entered the mountains by way of the Yokohl valley and reached the north fork of the Tule river. Finding there the fortifications of the Indians, they stormed them and destroyed them, killing forty of the Indians and scattering the remainder, which they afterward drove to the reservation. This was such a severe lesson to the savages that they never troubled the white settlers again.

In 1860, about the time of the breaking out of the Civil war, Mr. Barker sold his ranch at Elk Horn and went to Stockton, where, during that year, he was married to Mary Alma Weaver, a native of Ohio. Mr. Barker remained in the vicinity of Stockton for ten years, when, in 1870, he returned to Kern county and engaged in the sheep business, in 1882 changing to cattle, which he believed would be more profitable. After remaining on his ranch on Kern river until 1900 he removed to Bakersfield, where he now resides with two of his daughters, Lottie E. and Emma Belle. Nellie

A. became the wife of John Fremont Bonham and resides in Sebastopol, Sonoma county.

It is not necessary to pass an encomium upon the life of Mr. Barker, as pioneer, patriot or citizen, for he is so well known throughout this section of the state and so thoroughly appreciated for his many sterling traits of character that it would be no information to his friends, nor be understood by those who do not know him. A man of seventy-two years, he has retained his faculties and his mind is as clear and bright as in his young manhood, and teeming with the events which gave to California the chance for her present prosperity. A fluent speaker, he is a very entertaining companion, and is no less eloquent in the writings which he often gives to the public, and which are becoming more and more appreciated as time is removing from the present generation those who were eye-witnesses to the pioneer struggles of the state as well as helpers in the cause. True, earnest and steadfast in his convictions, he has been a Republican all his life, and has been one of the leaders of this party for many years, being one of the four Republicans in the entire San Joaquin valley who, during the early '60s, remained true to their principles and voted for Lincoln. During campaigns he has stumped the county in behalf of his party's candidates, and has also ably edited papers which have proved of immeasurable service to the cause. In personal characteristics he is a man of unimpeachable integrity and courage. As a link in the chain of events leading from the pioneer days to the present, Mr. Barker stands to-day, looking back without reproach, and forward without fear, secure in the peace which is his as a man who has done his best and is now content to reap the reward. Peace and plenty and prosperity are a part of this reward, while the love and respect of a young generation add sunshine to his declining years.

GEORGE W. GIBSON. The family of which this prosperous farmer of Tulare county is a member comes of old southern stock and has long been identified with the history of our country. At an early period in the agricultural development of Missouri his grandfather, John Gibson, removed thither from East Tennessee, and with him was a son, William B., who devoted the balance of his active years to agricultural pursuits in Missouri. During the Civil war the latter enlisted in the Union service as a member of a Missouri regiment and endured many hardships in weary marches, long campaigns and sanguinary battles. When the war closed he resumed the cultivation of his Missouri farm and remained there until his death in 1902. During early manhood he married Susan Wills, who was born in Old Virginia and is still living in Missouri. From her native home she accompanied her father, Lewis Wills, to Missouri and settled in Christian county, where Mr. Wills added stock-raising to general farm pursuits. At the opening of the Civil war he offered himself to the Union, but was rejected on account of disability. In spite of this, however, he took part in a skirmish at Springfield against the forces of General Marmaduke.

The family of William B. and Susan Gibson consisted of seven children, all but one of whom survive, three residing in California and three in Missouri. G. W., who was fourth in order of birth, was born near Springfield, Mo., July 28, 1865. As a child he witnessed the hardships incident to life in Missouri during the years following the conflict between north and south. After finishing the studies of the district schools he was sent to the academy at Henderson for one term, but had no other advantages. Dissatisfied with prospects, he resolved to go to California and return thence to Missouri after earning the money needed to complete his education. The first part of his plan was carried out, but once definitely identified with the west, associated with its people, enthusiastic over its opportunities, and awake to its resources, he abandoned all plans to go back to his old home, and has been content since to remain "in the harness," enjoying the prosperity his quiet perseverance justly merits.

Arriving in Tulare county in 1886 with $9 as his entire capital, but with youth and hope and strength to aid him in getting a start, he at once began to work on a farm owned by his uncle, J. H. Woody. A year later he took up general farming in the vicinity of Tulare and since that time has made a specialty of raising grain. During 1896 he spent six months in Alaska. In October, 1897, he bought a farm of three hundred and twenty acres situated seven miles southwest of Tulare and here he has since operated a grain farm and dairy business. The excellent irrigation facilities furnished by the ditch enables him to raise alfalfa, to which product he has one hundred acres sown, and the crop is used for his milch cows. To aid in his dairy he avails himself of the advantages of a separator, thus securing the greatest possible results from his herd. A few years ago, when the Oakland colony was originated, he bought forty acres in its tract and this he planted to an orchard, afterward selling the land at an advance. After coming to Tulare county and securing the start necessary for the establishment of a home of his own he was married, in 1897, in San Francisco, to Miss Sadie Galbraith, who was born in Stockton, this state, and by whom he has a son, Rex. Together with his wife he attends the Methodist Episcopal Church in Tulare and contributes to its maintenance. The Fraternal Aid numbers him among its members. Though a believer in Republican principles, he takes no part in party work aside from voting the ticket at all elections. Realizing the advantages of a good education and desirous that the children of his locality shall enjoy that which he earnestly desired in boyhood, he has willingly given of his time and influence to promote the cause of the public schools and by his service as a member of the board of school trustees of his district has promoted the interests of education in his district.

HENRY WHALEY. The proprietor of the Tulare Agricultural Works has built up an important trade in his specialties. The business was inaugurated in October, 1897, upon a small scale, but has been increased from year to year until now the stock fills a building 75 x 125 feet, as well as the warehouse adjoining. A general blacksmithing business is conducted, repair work is done, and buggies and various agricultural implements are manufactured, in addition to which a complete stock is carried of wagons, carriages, plows, harrows, discs, riding and walking cultivators. In cream separators Mr. Whaley acts as agent for the celebrated DeLaval, while in gasoline engines he is agent for the Weber, Jr., and in addition he represents the Rushford wagon manufacturers, the Milwaukee mower and rake, the Hooker line of buggies, and the Parlin and Obendorf plow goods.

Another enterprise of which Mr. Whaley is president and with which his name is intimately associated, the Tulare County Live Stock Show and Race Meet, was established by a private company consisting of himself and three others. They purchased the old fair grounds, comprising ninety acres, one-half mile from the city of Tulare, and adjoining the city limits on the east. The grounds have been improved, the old race track remodeled into a kite-shaped track of one mile, pronounced by experts to be one of the best in the state, a grand stand has been erected and large sums of money expended to meet the demands of the people for first-class accommodations. By the establishment of the show it is the hope of the projectors to cause an improvement in the grades of stock raised in the county, and should this ambition be realized the venture would prove more than a source of remuneration to its backers and more than a source of entertainment to its visitors, for the improvement of the stock would directly affect the entire county and promote the prosperity of the people. During the meet, held October 17-22, 1904, Professor Majors was engaged to judge the stock and give lectures to stock-raisers.

Mr. Whaley is a Californian by birth, and was born at Olema, Marin county, October 26, 1871. His father, Samuel, came from Canada to California via Panama and followed dairy farming in Marin county, but later took up general farm pursuits near Sebastopol, Sonoma county, and in 1884 came to Tulare county, where he homesteaded a farm near Tipton. At this writing he makes his home on a farm near Stockton. He and his wife, Rachel, had fifteen children, and nine of these are still living, Henry being the eldest. He was reared principally in Sonoma county, but in 1887 came to Tulare county, and as soon as old enough to take up the task of self-support he began farming. In 1891 he left the farm and took up blacksmithing, which he followed, together with other mechanical work, in the village of Pixley, Tulare county. From Pixley he moved to Tulare, where he has since made his home and here he has built up a modern blacksmith and machine shop, operated by electricity, as well as a warehouse stocked with implements of the most modern patterns.

The marriage of Mr. Whaley was solemnized at Delano, Kern county, and united him with Miss Lizzie Aubery, who was born at San Jose, Cal., and by whom he has a son, Percy. In politics Mr. Whaley is a pronounced Republican. For one term he served as city marshal, but his attention has been given closely to business matters and he has had little leisure for public offices. For nine years he has been a member of the Tulare volunteer fire department, at one time served as foreman of the hose company, three times was chosen chief engineer and is now treasurer of the department. Since coming to Tulare he has been initiated into Masonry as a member of Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M., and is further connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of the Maccabees.

JAMES TURNER DORAN. Possessing great artistic ability, and much native talent, James Turner Doran is the leading photographer of Tulare, and has the distinction of being the longest-established artist in the county. He is also interested in horticultural pursuits, owning land in different parts of the state, and may truly be considered a representative man, enterprising and progressive. A native of Ontario, he was born, August 22, 1844, near Brantford, and was there reared and educated, remaining there until twenty-one years of age.

Migrating to the United States in 1865, Mr.

B. E. Hutchinson,

Doran located in McLean county, Ill., where he was engaged in business as a photographer for twenty years, during which time he kept in touch with all the newer methods employed in his profession. Removing to Chicago in 1885, he followed his profession in that city two years, and then came to California to reside. Settling in Tulare, Mr. Doran built his present studio, which was the first complete establishment of the kind in Tulare county. It is finely equipped with the best instruments and appliances used in photography, including artistic scenery and backgrounds. His work is acknowledged to be of a superior order, and he makes pictures of all styles and kinds, from the smallest to life size, doing his own retouching in a skillful manner. Mr. Doran has bought considerable land since coming to the state, and in its management has met with success. In 1886 he bought forty acres of raw land, lying about five miles west of Fresno, and this he devotes to the cultivation of fruit, one-half of it being set with raisins, and one-half with peach trees. He also owns six hundred and forty acres of land in San Diego county, and he is financially interested in the Tulare Fuel, Feed and Land Company, of which he is one of the directors.

In Illinois Mr. Doran married Kate Brown, a native of Connecticut, and a woman of culture and refinement. Mr. Doran is a member of the California Association of Photographers. Politically he is a strong Republican, never swerving from the principles advocated by his party. Fraternally he is prominent in several organizations. He was made a Mason in Farmer City, Ill., and is now a life member of Garfield Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Chicago; he joined the Odd Fellows in Illinois, and is now past grand of Tulare City Lodge No. 306, I. O. O. F.; and past chief patriarch of Mount Whitney Encampment No. 82; in 1896 and 1897 he was Grand Patriarch of the Grand Encampment of California; in 1898 was representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge, which met in Boston, Mass., and in 1899 attended the meeting of the Sovereign Grand Lodge at Detroit, Mich., in the same capacity.

Revolutionary war. Mr. Hutchinson's father, Solomon, was born in Fenner, Dutchess county, N. Y., August 9, 1809, the son of William, also of that state. In manhood he became a carpenter, removing to Cleveland, Ohio, when it was a small place, and remaining a resident of Cuyahoga county until 1844. He then removed to Indiana, living first in Lafayette and afterward in Mishawaka, where his death occurred at the age of seventy-three years. His wife, formerly Phalla I. Caswell, of New York state, died at the age of sixty-nine years.

The only child of his parents now living, B. E. Hutchinson was eight years old when his parents removed to Indiana, and he remained in the paternal home until attaining the age of twenty-two years. Under the instruction of his father he learned the trade of carpenter. In the spring of 1856 he joined a surveying party headed by Thomas R. Clark, which was planning to go to Superior, Wis., and begin the survey of the Northern Pacific Railroad. The survey was abandoned, however, and Mr. Hutchinson helped to lay out about seven thousand acres in town lots. He also named several of the bays in that vicinity. He then went down the coast, assisted in laying out another town and in building a mill, returning to Indiana in the fall of 1857. Soon afterward he went to Michigan and located in Big Rapids, then a hamlet of only seven buildings. He purchased the only store there and engaged in a mercantile business, continuing uninterruptedly for the period of twenty-two years. He met with success in his work and became an influential man in the town, which had grown to six thousand inhabitants. Always active for the advancement of all movements calculated to increase the prosperity of the community, he was chosen to represent his ward in the city council, was a member of the school board, deputy sheriff for four years, and township treasurer for six years. In addition to his first mercantile interests he had also engaged in the furniture business for a part of this time, and had as well traded among the Indians and learned their language, and attained a considerable degree of influence with them. In 1883 Mr. Hutchinson disposed of his interests in Big Rapids, and went to Des Moines, Iowa, where he remained eight months, in 1884 coming to Fresno, Cal., where he spent the intervening months from February to October. Returning to Iowa he made that state his home for the ensuing two years and a half, when in 1887 he came again to California and located upon his present ranch. This property lies in the Fowler district, on section 4, seven miles southeast of Fresno and three miles from Fowler, and consists of one hundred and seventy acres; eighty acres of this ranch are devoted to the cultivation of raisin

B. E. HUTCHINSON, a well-known vinedyardist and orchardist of Fowler district, Fresno county, is still hale and hearty, and active in the supervision of his affairs. Born in Orange township, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, near Cleveland, June 19, 1836, he was the descendant of a member of an Irish family, three brothers of whom came to America before the Revolutionary war. One located in the southern states, one in Massachusetts, and the other in New York, and they all served the land of their adoption in the grapes, and seventy acres are in orchard. This is considered one of the best fruit ranches in the county. In 1899 Mr. Hutchinson raised from four hundred trees one hundred and eighteen tons of fruit that went to the cannery, besides a large quantity which he dried. This is unquestionably the largest yield of fruit on record in the United States. Mr. Hutchinson has also been interested in the development of the oil fields of Kern county, and still holds stock in the Associated Oil Companies. He travels extensively through the state and addresses farmers' institutes on scientific fruit culture.

In Indiana Mr. Hutchinson was united in marriage with Elma L. Fuller, a native of Ohio, and the daughter of Edson Fuller. The latter was also a native of Ohio, from which state he went to Michigan in 1846, engaging as a merchant in Grand Rapids. To Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson were born two children: C. C., who is station agent at Oleander, Fresno county, and W. W., manager of the Northwestern Insurance Company, his home being located in Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Elma L. Hutchinson died in December, 1896, and October 26, 1897, Mr. Hutchinson married Mrs. Marie L. Van Loo, a native of Michigan. Politically Mr. Hutchinson is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he is a prominent Mason, being a member of Pine Tree Lodge, the Chapter and Pilgrim Commandery of Big Rapids, Mich., having filled most of the chairs in all three organizations.

THOMAS JEFFERSON MULL. The founder of the Mull family in the United States came from Scotland and settled upon a plantation in North Carolina, where he passed the remaining years of his life with the exception of the period of his service in the war of 1812. After he settled in North Carolina his son, James, was born on the homestead in that state, and the latter as a boy was apprenticed to the trade of a tanner and currier, which he followed for a time in Georgia and later at Wetumpka, Elmore county, Ala. Moving to Arkansas in 1846 he carried on a large tannery at Batesville, Independence county, but in 1858 removed to Mississippi and engaged in the saw-mill business at Pontotoc. At the opening of the Civil war he enlisted in the Confederate service and was chosen captain of Company A, Twelfth Mississippi Cavalry, which he commanded until the close of the struggle. Eighteen different times during his service he received wounds in battle and in one engagement was four times wounded. The fall of the Confederacy brought disaster to the south, and he returned home to find plantations laid waste, mansions ruined and homes desolate. Within a short time he became convinced that, to gain a livelihood for his family he must seek a new locality, and for this reason in 1868 he brought his family via Panama to California, where he settled in Merced county on a farm. On retiring from agricultural cares he came to make his home with his son, Thomas J., and here at eighty-eight years of age his life came to an end. In the home of this son also occurred the death of the wife and mother, Marion (Fraleay) Mull, a native of North Carolina, of Dutch lineage.

The family of James Mull consisted of nine children and all but one attained mature years, but only three are now living. Three sons served in the Civil war, Thomas J., Martin and James, of whom the first and last-named served with their father in Company A, Twelfth Mississippi Cavalry, while Martin was a member of the First Arkansas Regiment of Confederate Infantry. Thomas J. Mull, who was sixth in order of birth among the nine children, was born at Wetumpka, Ala., July 30, 1846. His earliest recollections are of Arkansas, whither his parents moved by wagon in his infancy, but after 1858 he lived in Mississippi and attended the public schools there. During the fall of 1862 he volunteered in the Confederate service and became a private in Company A, Twelfth Mississippi Cavalry, in which he remained until the close of the war. Among the engagements in which he took part were those of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Dalton, Kenesaw Mountain, Resaca (where he was severely wounded in the left ear), Dallas, Peach Tree Creek, Snake Creek, Marietta (where he was wounded in the right leg), Buzzard's Roost, Rona, Atlanta, Lovejoy Station, Jonesboro, Spring Hill, Franklin, Nashville and Selma. The war ended, he received an honorable discharge from his regiment, May 5, 1865, and returned at once to his father's home in Pontotoc, where he took up work in the saw mill. Until the fall of 1868 he remained in that town. Meanwhile a brother, Benjamin, had crossed the plains in 1853 and established a home in California, and, returning on a visit in 1867, brought such favorable reports concerning the west that the other members of the family decided to remove thither.

Ten miles south of Merced, Mr. Mull entered from the government one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he cleared and improved and devoted to raising stock and grain. In the fall of 1877 he became interested in the business of boring wells and this he followed until about 1896, meanwhile doing work of that kind in Merced, Stanislaus, Santa Barbara, Los Angeles, Kern, Tulare and Fresno counties. At one time he had five machines for well-boring in active use. All of his own tools he constructed himself, for he possesses mechanical ability of a high order. Some of the wells that he bored reached to a depth of more than one thousand feet, while others were only a few hundred feet deep. In December, 1888, he came to Tulare county and the following year bought an eighty-acre farm situated three and one-half miles northwest of Tulare. Until 1896 he continued to make his home in the city of Tulare, but at that time he retired from the well-boring business and settled upon his farm, where he engages in the dairy business, also has eighteen acres in an orchard of peaches and prunes, and has sixty acres under alfalfa.

The family of Mr. Mull consists of his wife and daughter Carle. The former, who bore the maiden name of Kate Stiles, was born in Iowa, but at the time of her marriage was a resident of Modesto, Cal. In religious connections she is identified with the Baptist Church and Mr. Mull, though not a member, is in sympathy with the work of that denomination and contributes to its work. In fraternal relations he is a Knight of Pythias, and politically adheres to Democratic principles. A man of enterprise, his progressive spirit brings him to the front in all movements calculated to advance the agricultural interests of the community. It is a source of considerable pride to him that he and his brother-in-law, Frank Stiles, own an irrigating plant declared by competent judges to be the finest of its kind in the San Joaquin valley. An abundance of water to accommodate himself and brother-in-law, as well as two neighbors, can be secured from a reservoir covering one-half acre, and into this reservoir the water is pumped from a well four hundred and thirty feet deep, whose pump is operated by a five-horse-power electric motor with a capacity of five hundred gallons per minute. In the building of the water plant every precaution was observed in order to secure the best possible results, and the success which has met the efforts of the two men has not only given them a pumping apparatus surpassed by none, but also has enhanced the value of their farms in a notable degree.

THOMAS HAYES. The founder of the Hayes family in America was Timothy Hayes, a native of Ireland, who after the death of his father accompanied the widowed mother to the United States, landing in New Orleans and from there soon going to New York. At Rosendale on the Hudson he opened the first cement mines in the United States. When these were sold he moved to Pennsylvania and bought large tracts of land near Honesdale, Wayne county, where in addition to general farm pursuits he built a saw mill and engaged in the manufacture of lumber. During 1870 he came to California and bought a farm near Livermore, Alameda county, eventually moving into town, where he died in 1902, at ninety-five years of age. His three brothers, Thomas, Michael and John, came to California and attained eminence in public affairs. The first-named, Col. Thomas Hayes, who was a pioneer of 1848, became an historical character in San Francisco, where in business and politics his influence was great. Michael, also a resident of San Francisco, served several terms in the state senate; and John was a member of the state legislature from San Francisco several terms. All of the brothers are now deceased.

The marriage of Timothy Hayes united him with Julia Carey, who was born at Rosendale on the Hudson and died at Livermore in 1901. They were the parents of fourteen children, and it is worthy of note that all but two of this large family still survive. The eldest son and second child, Thomas, was born at Honesdale, Wayne county, Pa., March 2, 1852, and passed the years of boyhood on the home farm, receiving excellent advantages in the grammar and high schools, Cocheton Academy and Waymart College, from which latter he was graduated in 1869. Immediately after graduation he came to California and began to raise stock and farm products near Pleasanton, in partnership with Joseph Black. The ensuing years were fruitful of large successes and brought him ample means and local prominence. In 1884 he removed to Visalia and in the Redwood mountains of this county built the Hayes lumber mills, with a daily capacity of fifty thousand feet. By means of his own teams the lumber was hauled to his yards in Visalia, from which point it was shipped all through the country. Unfortunately the depression of 1889-90 found him unprepared for such a crisis. With many unsettled accounts on his books, he found his debtors were in no position to pay, while creditors demanded their dues. To add to his troubles lumber depreciated so that, at a price of $8 and $10 per thousand, there was no sale whatever for it. Under these circumstances he was forced to relinquish his business at a heavy loss and once more to make a start in the business world. After a few years as a real estate agent at Visalia, in the fall of 1896 he came to Tulare, where he has since followed the building business. While still a youth he learned the carpenter's trade and qualified himself for thorough and accurate work along building lines.

The first marriage of Mr. Hayes occurred in San Francisco in 1875 and united him with Miss Alice Nougues, who was born in Maryland and died at Visalia in 1888. The only child of this union, Shirley, was the recipient of superior educational advantages and is now vice-principal of the Winfield Scott school in San Francisco. A few years after the death of his first wife Mr. Hayes married Miss Carrie Kelsey, who was born in Oakland, but spent her early life in Visalia. Two children, Leslie and Leland, bless this union. Politically Mr. Hayes is a Republican. Concerning early times in California he is well posted, not only by experience, but by hearing pioneer stories from his uncles. Among his experiences, of which he entertains a vivid recollection, was that of being at the hotel in Tracy when Terry was shot and sitting next to him at dinner just before the catastrophe.

CLARENCE O. MILLER. In Colony Center are located some of the most energetic and thriving young business men of Merced county; men who have been successful in their undertakings, and whose efforts through life thus far, by their own perseverance and activity, have borne ample recompense; prominent among this number is Clarence O. Miller, proprietor of a hardware business and founder of C. O. Miller's ten-acre addition to the town in which he resides. A son of the late F. P. Miller, he was born, June 30, 1873, in Shirland, Winnebago county, Ill. His paternal grandfather, Alexander Miller, was born and bred in Vermont, but subsequently came west in search of cheap and fertile lands, and became a pioneer settler of Winnebago county, Ill., where he followed the trade of a millwright and builder. He lived to a good old age, dying in Shirland, Ill.

A native of Shirland, Ill., F. P. Miller was engaged to some extent in agricultural pursuits, becoming owner of a good farm near Shirland. Possessing great musical ability, however, he made use of his natural talent in this science, for many years being a teacher of both vocal and instrumental music, making a specialty of instructing bands, his services in this capacity being ever in demand. He died in 1900. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Phelps, was born near Rockton, Winnebago county, Ill., a daughter of W. A. Phelps, who removed from New York, his native state, to Illinois, where he followed general farming. She survived her husband, and is now residing in Dos Palos, Merced county, where she owns a fine ranch of forty acres.

The oldest of a family of four children, Clarence O. Miller was brought up on the home farm, receiving the rudiments of his education in the district schools. In 1892 he was graduated from the Rockford Business College, after which he was employed as a farmer for two years. Coming to California in 1894, Mr. Miller located in the Dos Palos Colony, buying twenty acres of land, which he devoted to the raising of alfalfa and fruit, setting out a good orchard. Ten acres of his ranch he has since laid out as an addition to Colony Center, platting it, and selling it in lots. Subsequently, wishing to become proficient as a dairyman, Mr. Miller entered the dairy school of the University of California, from which he was graduated, as a member of the first class to take a full course in that department, in 1901. Thus equipped, he served as manager of the Dos Palos Creamery from 1901 until 1903, and was very successful, winning such a wide reputation as an expert creamery man that he is often called upon to decide tests, and to settle questions connected with the dairy business. Embarking in a mercantile career in 1903, Mr. Miller erected a building and opened the first hardware store in Colony Center, where he has a rapidly growing trade. He is also an expert plumber, and does much skillful plumbing in the vicinity, and is agent for the Star Windmills and the Simplex Separator, and is now serving as secretary for the local telephone company.

In Sac City, Iowa, Mr. Miller married Nevada Irene Booth, who was born in Missouri. Politically Mr. Miller is a steadfast adherent of the Republican party. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, to the Knights of Maccabees and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being one of the first in Colony Center to join this organization. He is one of the leading members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a trustee, and of which he has been steward.

DANIEL ABBOTT. The substantial and well-to-do farmers of Tulare county have no better representative than Daniel Abbott, who occupies a good position among the industrious, thrifty and business-like agriculturists who are so ably conducting the farming interests of this part of the state. He is a self-made man in every sense implied by the term, and though in his long career he has met with reverses and losses, he has pursued the even tenor of his way, and by his indomitable perseverance and patient toil has overcome all obstacles. Beginning life poor in pocket, he has acquired considerable property, and has now a clear title to a three thousand acre ranch lying four miles south of Portersville. A son of Joshua Abbott, he was born January 3, 1836, in Washington county, Ark., where he spent the first four years of his life.

Born in Pennsylvania in 1800, Joshua Abbott there grew to manhood. Ambitious and venturesome, he went to Arkansas, hoping in a newer country to secure greater financial advantages and opportunities. Locating in Washington county, he remained there until 1840, when he settled in Benton county as a farmer. In 1857 he made another move, coming with ox teams and wagons to California, bringing with him his family. He knew something of the country roundabout, as in 1850 he visited Calaveras county, where he worked as a miner for awhile, but without sufficient financial encouragement to stay. Locating in Calaveras county, he lived there four years, but was not quite satisfied with his prospects. In 1861, therefore, he came to Tulare county, settling about four miles southwest of Portersville, on the Tule river, where he took up land, from which he intended to improve a ranch. Being washed out by the memorable floods of the spring of 1862, he removed to Princeton, Mariposa county, where he was a wood contractor for a year or more. Settling in Stanislaus county, near Melton, in the fall of 1863, he bought land, and was there engaged in general farming and stock-raising until after the death of his wife, in 1876. He subsequently spent the remainder of his life with one of his daughters, in Calaveras county, dying there at the venerable age of eighty-six years. He was a man of strong convictions, and a sound Democrat in politics. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Ann Matthews, was born in Tennessee, and died in Stanislaus county, Cal.

The third child in a family consisting of two sons and three daughters, Daniel Abbott was brought up in Benton county, Ark., where he received but limited educational advantages, pursuing his studies in the log schoolhouse during the brief school terms. Crossing the plains to California in 1857, he had many narrow escapes from the Indians while enroute. The savages stole some of the stock belonging to the company, and Mr. Abbott, with six of his companions, followed the marauders from daylight until ten o'clock. They met a large band of the Indians, who fired at their followers, wounding Mr. Abbott in the hip joint, and hitting one of his companions. Mr. Abbott, though badly wounded, was gritty, and while he laid upon the ground fired at the Indians, who fled for the time being. Mr. Abbott secured a horse, and was proceeding on horseback toward the wagon train when he came across his wounded comrade, whom he took on behind. Then, being again surrounded, his companion jumped over a bluff and escaped, but Mr. Abbott had to stand and fight the savages, who tried many times to kill him, but he succeeded in reaching camp after an all-night tramp to the train, which was only seven miles away. On reaching the party he was put into one of the wagons, and during the remainder of the journey suffered excruciating pain from his wound, and has since been a cripple. For two years afterward he was scarcely able to get around.

In 1866 Mr. Abbott embarked in sheep raising on his own account, having flocks in both Stanislaus and Calaveras counties, about six thousand head in all, and is still interested to some extent in this line of industry. He used to take his herds to the Alpine ranges during the summer seasons, bringing them back in the winter time. In 1874 Mr. Abbott settled in Tulare county, near Portersville, and in 1875 bought one hundred and sixty acres of the land included in his present home ranch. During the land grab that followed he acquired title to other tracts and has now three thousand acres all in one body, and all under good cultivation. During his thirty years' residence in this locality he has seen Portersville grow from a small hamlet into a flourishing town, and in its upbuilding has taken an active part. In 1902 Mr. Abbott moved to Portersville, where he has a beautiful residence, in order that his children might have better educational advantages than they could in the country, but after they are all through school he intends to return to his ranch, which he still manages.

In Tulare county, on the Tule river, Mr. Abbott married Mrs. Frances Elizabeth (Fine) Bursey, who was born in Arkansas, and crossed the plains to this state in 1857, the same year that he did, although they did not meet until after their arrival. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Abbott nine children have been born, namely: Martha Ann, deceased; Charles, deceased; Mrs. Louise Mahaffey, of Portersville; Daniel, Jr., deceased; Arlesle, at home; Lana; Winifred and Minnie, twins; and Emma. Mr. and Mrs. Abbott have also the care of two grandchildren, Earl and Claudia Billingsley, to whom they are giving the same kind and loving attention that they bestowed upon their own little ones. Mr. Abbott is much interested in the welfare of town and county, and is a strong supporter of the principles of the Democratic party.

HENRY H. MINER. As a prominent citizen and well-known real estate dealer of Le Grand, Merced county, Henry H. Miner's position is one of consequence in his community, and through him many important deals have been satisfactorily made. He is a man of noble instincts, congenial, friendly, methodical in regard to business details and he always aims to please those with whom he has business dealings. During the two years in which he has followed this line of work he has made a creditable showing, especially during 1904, for in the first five months of that year he effected the sale of forty-five thousand acres of land. He resides on his ranch four miles east of Le Grand, where he owns thirty-eight hundred acres of the best land of the locality and where he has gained recognition as a successful stock and grain raiser.

Mr. Miner was born in Dent county, Mo., October 19, 1859, the eldest of three sons born to Jordan and Emeline (Parker) Miner, both of whom were also natives of Missouri, and descendants of prominent old southern families. The father followed farming as a vocation in Missouri until 1854, crossing that year overland to California behind ox teams. He followed mining four years near Placerville, afterward returning to Missouri by way of Panama and New York. He is now a resident of Madera county, Cal., where his youngest son, David E., resides. His second son, Benjamin F., resides in Madera.

July 17, 1888, Henry H. Miner arrived on California soil and in Shasta county he engaged in mining for eighteen months, later spending one year on a ranch in Butte county. About this time he entered the employ of the Mutual Life Insurance Company with which he was identified until 1892. During that year he was joined in marriage with Mrs. Mary Phenegar, widow of George Robert Phenegar, whose biography also appears in this history. Mr. and Mrs. Miner have one son, Hollis Homer Miner, aged eight years. After marriage Mr. Miner engaged successfully in the drug business in Merced for one year, when he took up farming, to which he has since devoted his time, in addition to carrying on the real estate business in Le Grand, where he is regarded as an influential citizen.

DRAPER FOWLER. For several generations the Fowler family has been identified with the building business. During his active business career Draper Fowler was an architect and superintendent of construction, while his father and paternal grandfather were both contractors and builders in county Kent, England. The former, John Fowler, spent his last days in the home of his son Draper, at Fresno, dying here at the age of eighty-four years. The mother, Mary M. Goldfinch, a native of Kent, was the daughter of a miller who came to America and settled in the south. In the parental family of five children, three daughters and one son are now living, and of these only two are in America. Maria and Draper. The former is the widow of William R. King, formerly an architect, and resides at Seattle, Wash. The third among the children was Draper, whose birth occurred in Kent county August 9, 1843. He was reared in his native town of Ashford and received an excellent education in Borrow Hill Academy and the Latin grammar school. Under the careful supervision of his father he early acquired a thorough knowledge of contracting and building, and when only nineteen was placed in charge of the building of a large hotel. Having an ambition to become an architect he took up the study of the occupation at Croydon, across the line in Surrey county, and later completed his studies at Maidstone, Kent county, after which he took up practical work as an architect in his native village. In addition, with a partner, he established a yard for the sale of lumber, a kiln for the manufacture of brick and a mill for the cutting and sawing of timber, building up by degrees one of the finest plants of its kind in Kent county.

On disposing of his business interests in England, Mr. Fowler, in 1884, went by steamer from London to Auckland, New Zealand, and there for four years engaged in the occupation of an architect as a partner of A. C. Wilkinson, meanwhile erecting and designing many of the most substantial business blocks and private residences in the city. In 1888 he came to the Pacific coast and after arriving in San Francisco learned of the climate and possibilities of Fresno, whereupon he removed to Fresno, and with his New Zealand partner opened an architect's office, under the title of Fowler & Wilkinson. The partnership was dissolved in 1897, but Mr. Fowler did not retire from business until 1899. Meantime, in 1889, he had purchased twenty acres on East avenue in the Central colony and a few years later bought another twenty, making a total of forty acres, comprising lots 12 and 13. At first he made a specialty of raisins, but later decided that a variety of fruits was more profitable, and now has twenty acres in a vineyard and raisins, and the other twenty in apricots, peaches and other fruits, having altogether about twenty different varieties of fruit on the place. Before retiring from the work of an architect he designed a number of business blocks in Fresno and Sanger, as well as many fine residences, and by the excellence of his plans won merited praise.

The marriage of Mr. Fowler took place in Addington, Surrey, England, in July, 1867, and united him with Miss M. J. Brabner, who was born in Yorkshire, December 24, 1841. They are the parents of four daughters living, namely: Mrs. Louisa Marshall, who makes her home in New Zealand; Mrs. Edith M. Otto; Mrs. Flora Durrant, of Fresno county; and Mrs. Daisy M. Chamberlain, of Zion City, Ill. In religious belief Mr. Fowler is a member of the Christian Catholic Church and an upholder of its doctrines. Since becoming a citizen of the United States he has given his support to the principles of the Republican party. When the original Raisin Growers' Association was established on the co-operative plan he became associated with it and later took a part in organizing the society into which the former was merged. Among the people of Fresno he is held in the highest esteem and has a host of warm personal friends in the community where for sixteen years or more he has been a resident.

CAPT. EGBERT H. TUCKER. In Fresno county, Cal., there is no more worthy gentleman than Capt. Egbert H. Tucker, who performs well his duties as justice of the peace. To him belongs the distinction of being one of the promoters and founders of the city of Selma, Cal., his home, which was platted in 1880, and is now the second city in size in Fresno county. As a citizen whose influence and worth early won recognition, Captain Tucker for years has made an efficient public servant, and it may be said of him that he has carried into public life the same indomitable will, honesty and industry that have characterized him in private life, and as a member of the general assembly he made a record that few have equaled. He was elected to this office in 1888, on the Democratic ticket, and was immediately appointed upon a number of important committees, among them were the Irrigation committee, of which he was chosen chairman, the committee on Indian affairs, the Judiciary committee, and others of minor importance. During his term of service he was one of the hardest workers in the assembly, and thirteen bills became laws; of these some were created and championed by Captain Tucker, and it was due largely to his influence that their passage was secured. Among the latter was a bill for the improvement of the Wright Irrigation law, and it is worthy of mention that upon the subject of irrigation, Captain Tucker is one of the best informed men of his locality, having made a study of the work for years.

A native of Livingston county, Ky., where he was born March 9, 1838, Captain Tucker is the second child in a family of five children, three sons and two daughters; his parents, Martin and Matilda (Owens) Tucker, were both Kentuckians, but the paternal grandfather, Lambert Tucker, was born in Virginia. Farm pursuits occupied the attention of Martin Tucker during his residence in his native state, and also in Iowa, whither he removed in 1840, locating in the vicinity of Mount Pleasant. His subsequent removal to Fort Des Moines in 1843 was of material benefit to himself and family, and there he conducted a hotel for a number of years. Disposing of his interests in 1852, he came to California, and the balance of his life was spent in mining at Sutter creek in Amador county. He died about 1868 at the age of seventy years. There also the mother of Captain Tucker passed the closing years of her life.

The recipient of a good education, acquired in the common schools of Iowa and of California, Captain Tucker when of sufficient age joined his father in mining operations, and was so engaged until 1858. About that time he went to Washington, where one year later he was elected sheriff of Pierce county. While there he also served in 1861 and '62 as deputy United States marshal. At the request of Colonel Justin Steinberg, an old friend of his father's, Captain Tucker resigned the office of sheriff, and assisted the colonel to recruit the First Washington United States Volunteer Infantry, and was elected captain of Company K. He continued in command until the close of the Civil war, being honorably discharged from service April 9, 1865. Being appointed quartermaster's agent at Fort Boise, Idaho, the year following, by Major T. J. Eckerson, he filled this position with credit until June, 1867. He participated in the various engagements with Indians that afterward occurred in California, Oregon and Idaho territory, and upon the termination of these wars returned to his home at Terrier Creek. In 1874 he received the appointment of United States mail carrier in Fresno county, and proceeding to Kingsburg, he assumed the duties of that position, and his interests have been identified with those of this section of the state ever since.

Aside from his personal affairs, the captain has been largely instrumental in the development of Fresno county. In company with J. E. Whitson, George B. Otis, and Monroe Snyder, he assisted in laying out the town of Selma in 1880, and also aided in developing the southern part of Fresno county. Neither capital nor labor were spared in building irrigation canals, so essential to this section. He was a member and director of the Centerville & Kingsburg Canal Company, and president of the Fowler Switch Canal Company for a number of years, and his connection with these companies, in addition to his being a member of the state irrigation committee, placed him in a position to render able assistance in the development of this section. By his influence extensive irrigation projects were put through, and the improvements then made have been of untold benefit to the property owners. It was in 1882 that Mr. Tucker first began dealing in real estate and became interested in irrigation, and he made a careful study of this business as the head of the firm of Tucker, Sharp & Co. He served as postmaster of Selma during Cleveland's administration, and in 1885 was also elected justice of the peace, an office he still holds and fills in an exemplary manner. A Democrat in his political preferences, and an active politician, he has also filled a number of minor offices, such as school director, city marshal, etc., and in every way possible has shown his fidelity to this party. By his marriage in Fresno, he was united with Miss Martha E. Fanning, a native of Santa Barbara, Cal., and their union is blessed with one son, Clay H. The latter has been a student in the scientific department of the Stanford University for the past three years, and it is his intention to enter the law department of the same institution. The family unite in worshiping at the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which they are devout and consistent members, Captain Tucker being a member of the board of trustees.

ROBERT H. GALLAGHER. Among the leading business men of Sanger, Fresno county, who have demonstrated their ability to make a success of life financially as well as otherwise, a striking example is found in Robert H. Gallagher, a liveryman of Sanger. Since his location in Fresno county in 1880 he has been identified with several of the enterprising and progressive concerns doing business in this section, among them the Sanger Lumber Company, being in their employ for three years prior to engaging in the livery business. In Gold Hill, Nev., he was born, December 31, 1867, and is a son of the late Thomas Gallagher, of San Francisco.

The latter, a native of Ireland, spent his early life on the sea, and upon one of his voyages he sailed around Cape Horn, going as far north as San Francisco. In 1851, during the gold excitement, like others he went to seek his fortune in the mines, and for about eight years followed mining pursuits in and about Grass Valley, Virginia City and later in Nevada City. Although quite successful in his mining operations, in the early '60s he discontinued work in the mines and took up the somewhat hazardous but profitable business of freighting. Continuing in this business until 1882, he acquired considerable capital, which he invested in land in Solano county the following year and upon this he followed farming until 1890. Retiring from business he took up his residence in San Francisco, where he died in October, 1904, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years.

The boyhood days of R. H. Gallagher were spent in Nevada. He was fifteen years old when his father purchased land in Solano county, whither the family removed, and there he followed ranching pursuits until 1880, when he located in Fresno county. It was several years later that Mr. Gallagher went into the livery business and he has followed that line of work ever since. By his marriage he was united with Minnie M. Hanke, a daughter of the late H. H. Hanke, who in the early days of the history of Fresno county settled here and became prominent as a rancher. Three children bless the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gallagher: Mabel, Grace and Arthur. A faithful adherent to the Republican party, Mr. Gallagher can hardly be called an active politician, being too deeply engrossed in business pursuits. Fraternally he affiliates with the Knights of Pythias and Woodmen of the World.

The Sanger, Millwood and Converse Stage Line, in which Mr. Gallagher owns a half interest, in connection with the Southern Pacific Railway Company, makes regular trips to and from Millwood, King's River Canyon and to the General Grant National Park. From Sanger to Millwood the distance is forty-five miles over an interesting route. The first six to eight miles traverses the level San Joaquin valley, with its orchards, vineyards and grain fields, and then begins the ascent to the mountains, the traveler passing many interesting points, among them the famous Sontag point, Squaw village and McKenzie's mill. After the summit is reached a beautiful forest ride completes the journey to Millwood. From this point by way of Meadow Lake a trip can be taken to the Grant National Park and the Big Tree Groves, which contain one hundred and twenty-five mammoth trees, including the General Grant, one hundred and six feet in circumference at the base, the Garfield, Cleveland, Lincoln, Washington, Dead Monarch, the Happy Family and many other noted specimens. Here also may be seen the Big Tree stump from which the Centennial exhibit was taken.

On the return trip from Millwood the beautiful Sequoia lake, four miles distant, may be visited and in the Converse basin is to be seen one of the largest sawmills in the west, which handles timber unrivaled in size anywhere in the world. A logging railroad extends back seven miles into the forest, which transports the logs to the mills, and from this point the lumber is shipped to Sanger in a V-shaped flume, fifty miles long.

GEORGE A. DODDS. In Plano, Tulare county, is located the ranch of George A. Dodds, where he is engaged in the raising of fruit, giving especial attention to the cultivation of apples, the trees having been brought around the Horn forty-five years ago. Mr. Dodds is a native of Wabash county, Ill., where he was born February 25, 1842, a son of Josiah Dodds, of Tennessee, a farmer in that location and later a merchant and farmer in Wabash county and Olney, Ill., where he located. He died there in 1846. His wife, formerly Cynthia Winters Skeggs, of England, died in 1843. They were the parents of two sons and two daughters, of whom George A. is the only one living.

George A. Dodds was reared by an uncle, S. Z. Dodds, of Richland county, Ill., who was killed at Chattanooga during the Civil war. He attended the common schools in pursuit of an education, and at the same time received the practical training which later added to his ability to make a success. In 1854 he ran away from his uncle's home, going to Crawford county, where he found employment on various farms at $4 per month. After one year of this life he went to live with another uncle, Dr. Adams, also of Richland county, and for a year and a half studied medicine under his instruction. Upon the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in Company L, First Regiment Missouri Cavalry, August 1, 1862, being mustered in at St. Louis. His regiment was active in the suppression of guerrilla bands, while they also took part in various battles, among them being Pea Ridge, where he received a slight saber cut on his right wrist. In September, 1864, at Jefferson Barracks, he was honorably discharged, when he returned to Illinois, and engaged in farming in the vicinity of Olney. In 1871 he located near Quincy, Mo., where he farmed and raised stock for two years. He then removed to Butler county, Kans., and began farming during the grasshopper season. He continued to make his home in that state until 1882, when he came to California and settled near Visalia, Tulare county. He located on a timber ranch on Deer creek until 1893, principally occupied in stock raising, but in that year removed to his present place in Plano, consisting at that time of twenty-one acres, eleven of which were in fruit and vines. Afterward he disposed of seven acres and at a later date bought ten acres more, the tract being given over to the cultivation of oranges.

In Richland county, Ill., April 18, 1867, Mr. Dodds was united in marriage with Lavina Smith, of that place, and they have had one daughter, Emma, who is now deceased. In his political convictions Mr. Dodds is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and is active in the councils of the party.

EZRA LATHROP. A record of the life of Ezra Lathrop is in many respects a record of the progress and development of Tulare, for he has long been inseparably associated with many of its leading and most substantial enterprises. Since 1873 Tulare county has been his home and he dates his residence in California from the year 1866, having come to the state after a brief sojourn in Nevada subsequent to crossing the range from his old Iowa home. The family of which he is a member traces its lineage to England and was established in York state during an early period of our nation's history. His grandfather, William, and father, Perrin Lathrop, were natives of New York, but settled in Susquehanna county, Pa., where the former remained until death. The latter, following the tide of emigration as it drifted toward the Mississippi valley, became a pioneer of Dubuque county, Iowa, settling at Cascade, but later removing to the big woods region of Blackhawk county, where he improved a farm near Cedar Falls at Center Point. Eventually he identified himself with the agricultural interests of Louisa county, Iowa, but upon retiring from farm labors he returned to Blackhawk county to spend the closing days of life. By his marriage to Clementine Dowdney, who was born in the east and died near Center Point, Iowa, he had two sons and a daughter, namely: Ezra, of Tulare, Cal.; Gilead P., who died while serving in the Eighth Iowa Infantry during the Civil war; and Mrs. Mary Ellen Brown, who resides north of Visalia, Tulare county.

The early years of Ezra Lathrop's life were passed at Rush, near Montrose, Susquehanna county, Pa., where he was born in 1839, and where he was primarily educated in district schools. When ten years of age he accompanied the family to Iowa and after the death of his mother six years later he started out to make his own way in the world, at first earning a livelihood as a farm hand. During 1864 he started across the plains with a party of emigrants seeking a home in the western country. Indians were very troublesome at that time, having taken advantage of the war between north and south to commit depredations and steal from travelers. However, this cavalcade proceeded unmolested up the Platte and by way of Salt Lake City into Nevada, where Mr. Lathrop took up farm pursuits on the East Walker river. In 1865 he went to Dayton and worked at teaming. The following year he crossed the mountains to California and settled near Suisun, where he engaged in farming, but three years later removed to Montezuma Hills, and from there in 1873 came to Tulare. On a lot he then bought he built the residence which continues to be his home. At first he was employed in driving six-horse teams and hauling freight into the mountains. Meanwhile, in 1874, he homesteaded eighty acres four miles north of Tulare, which, with other lands, he began to cultivate in 1880, and by the purchase of adjoining property acquired the title to four hundred and thirty acres. At one time he was a director in the Rocky Ford Irrigation Ditch Company, and he also formerly owned the Round Valley ranch of thirty-eight hundred acres. At this writing his landed possessions include four hundred and forty acres in one body, all under ditch, and utilized for grain and alfalfa raising, also for the pasturage of stock; five hundred and sixty acres eight miles south of Tulare; and eighty acres southeast.

Perhaps no citizen of Tulare has been more intimately connected with the lumber industry at this point than has Mr. Lathrop, who embarked in the business in 1882. The most violent opposition only developed in him a determined persistence. After eighteen months, during which time he had built up a valuable trade, the company that had opposed him so strenuously sold out to Moore & Smith, a concern with large financial resources. Unable to cope with a firm of such resources, Mr. Lathrop in 1884 sold out to the Puget Sound Lumber Company, for whom he continued as agent. In 1886 the two firms consolidated as the San Joaquin Lumber Company and he continued as agent for five years. On the incorporation of the company he was chosen manager and continued as such until November, 1898, when the profits were divided among stockholders and the yard was closed.

On the incorporation of the gas company in January, 1884, Mr. Lathrop was financially interested in the work of the concern, and since May, 1885, has officiated as its president. The electric light plant was built by the company in 1890 and since 1894 they have discontinued the manufacture and use of gas. He was chairman of the liquidating committee that succeeded in compromising with the bondholders of Tulare Irrigation district for forty-one cents on the dollar and by fair assessment secured the consent of property owners, raising sufficient money to clear up the indebtedness; this resulted in a grand jollification and bond burning. By his service as school trustee and fire commissioner he has aided two movements of the greatest importance to the permanent prosperity of the town, and in many other ways the value of his citizenship has been felt. Especially has he been helpful to the place by his wise and conservative judgment in financial matters. In 1885 he assisted in the organization of the Bank of Tulare, which is the oldest institution of its kind in the town and, with a capital of $100,000, transacts a general banking business. Under the capable oversight of Mr. Lathrop, who was the first and has been the only president, the bank has established a reputation for stability and strength, and has been a most important factor in the welfare and prosperity of the town. Though for years a Democrat, the silver question and the platform adopted by the Democratic party in 1896 caused Mr. Lathrop to transfer his allegiance to the Republican party, which he has since supported. In fraternal relations he is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, being a charter member of the lodge at Tulare. Before leaving Iowa he formed the acquaintance of Miss Virginia Blake, a native of Oakland, that state, where they were married. Their married life continued to be a union of mutual helpfulness until the death of Mrs. Lathrop in 1898. Two daughters, twins, survive their mother, and both make their home in Tulare, Martha Adeline being the wife of G. W. Bauman, and Matilda Eveline being the wife of W. J. Sturgeon. All movements for the benefit of Tulare have a staunch supporter in Mr. Lathrop, whose wise counsel, sagacious judgment and progressive spirit have been of the greatest assistance in the permanent upbuilding and prosperity of the town.

ELISHA L. CLOER. When Mr. Cloer located in the vicinity of Poplar, Tulare county, the land was nothing but sand moles and sheep camps. Time, with the energies of men strong in the pursuit of fortune and the development of a country given over to pioneer hands, has brought about the changes which today greet the traveler of the San Joaquin valley,—the wide farming lands rich with the harvest yields, the beautiful country homes, the towns, the cities, and the extensive business which speaks eloquently of the prosperity of this section of the state. Prominent among the farmers in the vicinity of Poplar is Elisha L. Cloer, who was born in Washington county, Ark., June 24, 1852. He is a son of E. L. Cloer, a native of Alabama, who settled in Arkansas in an early day and became a farmer and a breeder of fine horses in Washington county, where his death occurred in 1859. His wife, formerly Susannah Stone, was born in Missouri and died in Arkansas in 1886. They were the parents of five sons and four daughters, of whom Elisha L. Cloer was the seventh in order of birth.

Reared in the place of his birth, Elisha L. Cloer received his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home. He then engaged in farming on the old home place until 1873, when he followed the westward trend of immigration and came to California. He had but seventy-five cents in money upon his arrival, and for a time made his home with an uncle in Tuolumne county, where he remained for four months. He then went to Stanislaus county and farmed for two years, in the fall of 1875 going to Portersville, Tulare county, where he entered the employ of the government as assistant farmer on the Tule River Reservation. After five months there he went to Stanislaus county, but soon afterward located once more in Tulare county, purchasing a quarter section of land located two and a quarter miles northwest of Poplar, and here he engaged in farming. In 1879 he removed to Kern county and located on Posey creek, near Delano, where he found employment until 1881. He then returned to Tulare county and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, five miles southeast of Poplar, where he is now located, engaged in the raising of grain, stock and fine hogs. He has added to his property by purchase until he now owns six hundred acres in one tract, devoted to grain, also an additional eighty acres, which is given over to alfalfa.

In West Plains, Mo., Mr. Cloer was united in marriage with Ellen Krause, a native of that state, and they became the parents of five children, Thomas, Everett, Carl, Harold and Myrtle, the latter deceased. Politically Mr. Cloer is a staunch Republican and is active in the councils of the party. For the past thirteen years he has served as school clerk.

WILLIAM ISHAM BURNETT. The Burnett family is of southern extraction. Hardin H. Burnett, the son of a Kentuckian, was born and reared in Missouri, and for a time carried on a farm in Johnson county, but at the time of the discovery of gold in California he joined one of the early emigrant trains in 1849 and crossed the plains with ox teams and wagons. Ere yet success had come to him in the mines, and during his first winter in the west, he died and was buried near Angel's Camp. It had been his expectation, if fortune favored him, to return to Missouri for his wife and three sons, but his death left them with little means, and not long afterward the sons were orphaned by the death of their mother, who was Nancy Janes, a native of Missouri. The maternal grandparents were William and Mary A. (Leah) Janes, the former a native of Kentucky, and the latter of German descent. For years William Janes engaged in farming in Missouri and after his death his widow brought the three orphaned grandchildren in 1859 across the plains to California, where she still lives at San Jose, at the age of ninety-six years. Of the grandsons who accompanied her to the west, William I. makes his home in Tulare county, John J. resides in Hollister, and M. M. is a citizen of Stockton.

Near Warsaw, Benton county, Mo., William Isham Burnett was born December 26, 1845, and there he received such advantages as district schools afforded. When in his fourteenth year he came to California, leaving the Benton county home on the 1st of May and arriving at San Jose during the following September. The family settled in that city, where he attended the public schools and the old San Ramon College. Agriculture has been his life occupation. After working for others some years he bought a ranch near Milpitas, Santa Clara county, but in 1874 removed to Tulare county, where he has since made his home. Immediately after coming to this county he purchased land on the Tule river at Earham and began to make a specialty of raising grain. By gradual increase to his first purchase he acquired more than eleven hundred acres of land, all of which was utilized for farming and stock-raising. Early ventures in the sheep business did not prove profitable, and he discontinued their raising.

October 4, 1871, in San Joaquin county, occurred the marriage of Mr. Burnett and Martha Carter, a native of Clark county, Mo., and a daughter of William Carter, who came to California in 1853. Six children were born of their union, namely: Arthur H., who was one of the first graduates from the electrical engineering course at Leland Stanford University, and who now follows his occupation at Oakland; George Carter, who is his father's business partner, and is manager of the Tulare lumber yard; Mrs. Grace Rosson, of Hanford; Charles, manager of a lumber yard in Hanford; Roy, an employe of the Linder Hardware Company; and Clarence, a bookkeeper in Hanford. In order that the children might have the advantage of town schools, in 1884 Mr. Burnett moved the family into Tulare, later returning to the farm. In 1900 he sold the entire property and purchased his present homestead four miles northeast of Tulare, where he owns one hundred and twenty acres in the Bishop colony tract. One-half of the acreage is under alfalfa, giving him advantages for the stock business. With a dairy of full-blooded Holstein milch cows, and with a separator to aid in the care of the milk, he is equipped for profitable work in an industry that is one of the most profitable in the west. All of the land is under irrigation from the Farmers' ditch, while among the improvements are a neat farm house and substantial barns. Eight acres are in fruit, furnishing a sufficient amount for family use, as well as a considerable amount for the markets. In the organization of the Tulare Co-Operative Creamery Association Mr. Burnett took an active part and was elected the first treasurer, holding the office until he resigned. For eight years he was a director of the Tule River Irrigation District. In political belief he favors Democratic principles, along the line of his occupation holds membership in the Grange, and in religious connections is identified with the Christian Church, in which his first wife was a devoted member and earnest worker.

The death of Mrs. Martha Burnett occurred in 1902, and he was again married, July 3, 1904, at Tulare, his wife being Mrs. Cordelia E. (Chedester) Berry, a native of East Tennessee, and the eldest of three children, all of whom settled in Tulare county. Her father, John C. Chedester, was a son of Thomas Chedester, both natives of Tennessee, in which the family were established at a very early date. In Hawkins county, Tenn., John C. Chedester has long been a well-known farmer and stockman, and there the greater part of his life has been passed. In early manhood he married Candacy Campbell, who was born in North Carolina, and removed to Tennessee with her father, Elijah Campbell. Afterward she made her home in that state until her death in 1885, when somewhat advanced in years. In 1890 Miss Chedester came to California and at Tulare was married to Alonzo Berry, a native of this state, and the owner of a farm in the Elk Bayou district, fourteen miles southwest of Tulare. During the years of their married life Mr. and Mrs. Berry resided on that farm, and there his death occurred in December, 1900, leaving his widow with two children, Vernon and Lois Berry. In her possession now is one hundred and sixty acres where she formerly made her home. For years she has been a member of the Baptist Church and a contributor to its maintenance, while socially she unites with Mr. Burnett in offering the hospitality of their country home to their many friends throughout this county.

HENRY KLEHN. Numbered among the more prominent and progressive agriculturists of Stanislaus county and one of the oldest and best posted settlers is Henry Klehn, who owns and occupies a large and well-improved ranch, lying about one mile north of Newman. As a general farmer and stock-raiser he has fine success, the productions of his land bring him in handsome profits. A self-made man in every sense implied by the term, he is everywhere respected, and his honesty and straightforward business methods have gained for him the confidence of the community in which he resides. He was born August 20, 1844, in Holstein, Germany, where his parents, Hans and Margaret (Meinke) Klehn, spent their entire lives.

The youngest son, and the sixth child, in a family consisting of four daughters and three sons, Henry Klehn received a practical education in the elementary schools of the Fatherland. A lover of the sea from his boyhood, he shipped as a cabin-boy on a Danish vessel when a mere lad, and subsequently as a sailor visited all the important ports of the world, including among others the following named: Hammerfest, London, Antwerp, Riga, Copenhagen, Hayti, Lagos, Mozambique, Zanzibar, St. Helena, Bahia, Valparaiso, Peru, Singapore, Siam, Hong Kong, Bankok, Canton, Chefu, Tien-Tsin, Manila and San Francisco. In the latter city, in 1866, Mr. Klehn took French leave of the vessel, and for a year was employed in coasting along the bay and the river. Turning his attention then to agricultural pursuits, he worked first as a farm laborer in Napa valley, and afterward on Orestimba creek, in the San Joaquin valley. In 1872, forming a partnership with Morris and Crow and Ed. Randall, his former employer, he embarked in farming on his own account, continuing for seven years. The partnership being dissolved in 1879, Mr. Klehn located a mile north of Newman, where he bought his present ranch of six hundred and forty acres, which he has farmed with undisputed success, carrying on general farming, stock-raising and dairying on a large scale. His own land not being sufficient for his operations, he rented a thousand acres of land, which he operated in addition to his own. Active and enterprising, he kept busily employed at all times, during the harvesting season running a threshing machine for over twenty years. He sold his ranch September 1, 1904.

Mr. Klehn married Anna Kricke, a native of Germany, and a lady of culture and refinement; they are the parents of four children, namely: Walter H., Helena D., Bertha E. and Charles F. Of these Bertha E. married the Rev. August Hansen, a minister of the German Lutheran Church. Religiously Mr. Klehn is a member of the German Lutheran Church, and politically he is actively identified with the Democratic party. Fraternal he belongs to Newman Lodge, F. & A. M., in which he has passed all the chairs; is a member of the Stockton Commandery, K. T.; is a member and past officer of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and of the Knights of Honor. Mrs. Klehn is a member of the German Evangelical Lutheran Church, and a member of the Eastern Star.

ELIAS TOUT. Upon establishing his home in the United States during his early manhood Basil Tout, who was by birth a Londoner and descended from a long line of English progenitors, selected Kentucky as the scene of his activities, and there he took up the life of a planter. His son, William S., was born and reared on a Kentucky plantation, from there moved to Adams county, Ill., and eventually came to California, where he died near Dinuba at the close of eighty-four busy years. In marriage he had been united with Lovina Garr, a native of Indiana and a descendant of Abraham Garr, a German, who founded the family now numbering more than six hundred persons scattered in every part of the United States. Her father, Solomon Garr, was a lifelong resident of Indiana, where he followed agricultural pursuits. At the time of her death, which occurred in California, Lovina Tout was seventy years of age. In her family there were sixteen children, all of whom passed the years of childhood. They were named as follows: Mary, who died at sixteen years; Anderson, who enlisted in the Fiftieth Illinois Infantry during the Civil war and served until he was killed in the battle of Bentonville; Mrs. Martha Hobson, of Sultana, Cal.; Eucebia, who died in Illinois; John, a rancher of Fresno county; Mrs. Julia Sproat, living at Traver, Tulare county; Perry, now in Idaho; Mrs. Virinda Buttry, also of Idaho; William, now living near Sultana, and who during the Civil war was a member of the Fiftieth Illinois Infantry; Eleazer, who died in Illinois at twenty-three years; Mrs. Kate Lynch, who died in Idaho; Mrs. Nancy West, living near Dinuba; Elias, who lives near Sultana, and is supervisor of the fourth district of Tulare county; Mrs. Mathilda Fulton, of Illinois; Benjamin, a fruit farmer near Sultana; and Mrs. Letitia Seals, who died in Idaho.

On the home farm near Mendon, Adams county, Ill., Elias Tout was born February 28, 1854, and there he passed the uneventful years of boyhood. It was his privilege to attend the Christian University at Canton, Mo., after which he taught school for two winters in Illinois. In 1882 he came to California and near Hanford secured work in cutting cord wood. During the spring of 1883 he moved to Tulare county and bought land near Smith mountain, also homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres near Traver, Tulare county, locating on the latter property and setting out a vineyard, which he diligently cultivated. After twelve years he sold that place and removed to his other quarter section adjoining Sultana on the east. Of this tract he platted and sold twenty acres. The north eighty acres are in an orchard of different kinds of fruit, fifty acres being in peaches. There are also twenty acres of Sultana grapes. A large tract is in alfalfa, all of which can be irrigated, as indeed can the entire property, for water is abundant. To him belongs the distinction of setting out the first apple trees in Sultana district, and he now has a fine orchard of choice apples.

The marriage of Mr. Tout occurred in Adams county, Ill., and united him with Miss Mary Wright, a native of Missouri. They are the parents of six children, namely: Floyd, a student in the San Luis Obispo Polytechnic school, class of 1905; Mrs. Maude Depew, of Sultana; Carl and Jeane, who are also students in the school attended by their older brother; Grace and Beulah. The family are identified with the Dinuba Christian Church, in which Mr. Tout is leader of the choir and for years, until resigning in January, 1904, acted as superintendent of the Sunday-school. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World and the Court of Honor. In 1902 he was the independent candidate for supervisor of the fourth district of Tulare county, and was elected by a plurality of ten votes given him by count of the supreme court. One of his opponents was given a certificate of election. Mr. Tout refused to appeal, but his friends started a contest, and the investigation proved that five of his votes had been overlooked, thus giving, according to the verdict of the superior judge, a plurality of three to Mr. Tout. His opponent carried it up to the supreme court, and in the recount the plurality of three was increased to ten votes. Meanwhile fifteen months had elapsed, so that it was on the 5th of May, 1904, when he entered upon his duties, after a long contest and with the record of being the first independent candidate for supervisor ever elected in the county. As supervisor he has championed movements for the benefit of the county, yet he has been conservative, careful as to expenditures, guarding well the interests of the tax-payers and property owners. In the temperance movements his influence has been strong and constantly exerted. Believing that a majority of the votes of the people should be necessary to the granting of a saloon license, instead of merely seven as at present, he has worked with unwearied interest and determination to secure the passage of a law giving the decision of this matter into the hands of the majority instead of a small minority as formerly. The new law went into effect January, 1905.

WILLIAM FREDERICK FINK. The substantial and respected citizens of Stanislaus county have no more worthy representative than William Frederick Fink, who occupies an assured position among the keen, progressive, and business-like farmers who are so ably conducting the agricultural interests of this section of the state, his well-improved ranch lying about one mile northeast of Crows Landing. A son of the late Jacob Fink, he was born November 10, 1854, in Marion county, Ohio, of German lineage.

Born and reared in Wurtemberg, Germany, Jacob Fink remained in his native land until 1846, when, his prospects for earning a livelihood there not being very brilliant, he immigrated to America, the land of promise for a poor man. Settling at first in Ohio, he was engaged in farming in Marion county for a number of years. In 1858 he removed to Minnesota, and two years later, in 1860, located in Sheboygan county, Wis., establishing himself in business as a tanner and farmer. Migrating to California in 1873, he bought a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres at Crows Landing, and was here engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, in 1896, at the advanced age of seventy-eight years. His wife, whose maiden name was Rosanna Harsch, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, and died at Crows Landing, Cal. Of their union five sons and two daughters were born, William F. being the oldest son, and the third child of the household.

Spending the days of his boyhood and youth in Sheboygan county, Wis., William F. Fink there acquired a practical common school education. Coming with his parents to California in 1873, he assisted his father in the improvement of a homestead, and in 1878 located one mile north-east of Crows Landing, purchasing three hundred and twenty acres of his present farm. To this he has added other land by purchase, having now four hundred and sixty acres in his home ranch. Here Mr. Fink is carrying on general farming with eminent success, having seventy acres in alfalfa, which is a most desirable crop in this region, the soil being well adapted to its growth. He also pays a good deal of attention to stock-growing, raising cattle, horses and mules. He has made many valuable improvements on his place, and in 1890 built a fine two-story residence.

Mr. Fink was married August 18, 1881, to Laura A. Pipkin, a native of Tennessee, and the only daughter of Andrew J. Pipkin and Elizabeth Gum Pipkin, both natives of Tennessee, where their ancestors were honored pioneers. Andrew J. Pipkin and family came to California in 1873, and settled in Yolo county. In 1874 they came to Stanislaus county, going back to Yolo county in 1876, but returned to Crows Landing in 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Fink are the parents of six children, namely: Ida M., George W., Clara E., Esther R., Eva M. and Lloyd W. Politically Mr. Fink is an earnest Democrat, supporting the principles of that party at the polls. He takes a genuine interest in local affairs, and for a number of years served as school director. Mrs. Fink is a most estimable woman, and a valued member of the Presbyterian Church.

FRANK B. HAMLETT. Among the younger generation in Merced county who are actively engaged in farming is numbered Frank B. Hamlett, residing near Le Grand. He was born in Audrain county, Mo., December 4, 1874, a son of Thomas R. and Amanda (Culwell) Hamlett, both natives of Pike county, the former a descendant of a southern family and one of the well-to-do farmers in Missouri at the present time.

Frank B. Hamlett was reared on his father's farm, educated in the common schools and assisted with the farm work until 1891, at which time he came to California. After spending some time in search of a suitable location, he finally purchased two hundred acres, which he proceeded to cultivate. He later rented two hundred acres and now devotes his land to raising grain.

In December, 1896, Mr. Hamlett was married in Merced county, to Harriett L., a daughter of Jonas Turner, a native of Merced county. Capt. Turner, the father of Jonas, came to California in 1849, and some years later located in Merced county. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hamlett one daughter, Esma A. was born. In politics a Democrat, Mr. Hamlett takes no active part aside from casting his vote, preferring rather the quiet of his home life and his business. He is one of the well-known young men of his community.

JOHN LOCKE HARDEMAN, M. D. Among the leading citizens of Portersville is John Locke Hardeman, M. D., who takes a keen interest in all lines of industry in his adopted county. A son of Dr. Glen O. Hardeman, he was born February 27, 1855, in Marshall, Saline county, Mo.

A native of Howard county, Mo., Dr. Glen O. Hardeman was born in 1825, near Boones Lick. After leaving the district school he was graduated from McDowell's College, receiving the degree of M. D., subsequently taking the same degree at the University of Pennsylvania, where he completed his medical studies. He began the practice of his profession in Missouri, and at the breaking out of the Civil war, although he was a slave holder, enlisted as a surgeon in the Federal army. His father, John Hardeman, an attorney, moved from Tennessee, his native state, to Missouri, and was engaged in the Santa Fe trade. He lived near Kit Carson, the famous scout, who was not particularly friendly to him. He died while in New Orleans on a business trip. Dr. Glen O. Hardeman married Pernelia Townsend, who was born in Missouri in 1830, a daughter of Sanders Townsend. Mr. Townsend was born and reared in South Carolina. In 1820 he moved to Missouri, becoming a pioneer farmer and stock-raiser of Saline county, his home being near Arrowrock. He was a man of strong personality, and until his death, at the advanced age of ninety-two years, was loyal to the south.

The oldest of a family consisting of five sons and three daughters, John Locke Hardeman laid a substantial foundation for his future education in the district schools, subsequently continuing his studies at Pritchett's Institute, in Glasgow, Mo. In 1874 and 1875 he attended the Missouri State University, and then, in 1876, entered the St. Louis Medical College, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1878. Locating in Brownington, Mo., Dr. Hardeman practiced his profession there for ten years, meeting with good success. Coming to California in 1888, he spent the first year in San Diego, and in 1889 located in Portersville, where he has built up a remunerative practice.

Dr. Hardeman has invested his money in a fine orange grove of twenty acres lying east of the town, and a smaller one of five acres lying north of Portersville. With J. H. Williams, he is interested in saddle-bred horses, owning two stallions, registered stock, and five mares. They have some of the finest thoroughbred saddle horses to be found on the coast, among them being Squirrel Montrose, and at the state fair carried off several prizes.

In Washington, Mo., Dr. Hardeman married Elizabeth Jeffries, a native of Franklin county, Mo., and they have two children; Elvira, living at home; and Charles, of Seattle, Wash. Politically the doctor is a steadfast adherent of the Democratic party.

FRANK B. MARKS. Actively engaged in the prosecution of a calling upon which more than any other, the strength, wealth and prosperity of our nation depends, Frank B. Marks, of Dos Palos, is numbered among the successful farmers and dairymen of Fresno county. In his selection of a location, and in the improvement and stocking of his ranch, he has been particularly fortunate, his home estate being now one of the most productive and attractive in the community. A native Californian, he was born, January 31, 1870, in San Francisco, a son of Bernhard Marks. He comes of German stock, his Grandfather Marks, the descendant of a German family, emigrating from Poland, his native country, to America, settling with his family in New York.

Born in Poland, Bernhard Marks came with his parents to this country, and was reared and educated in New York City, and there began life for himself as a clerk. Migrating to California in 1852, he followed mining for three or four years, and then settled in San Francisco, becoming principal of the Lincoln school. He subsequently engaged in mining for a time, after which he again taught school in San Francisco. Taking up land in the San Joaquin valley, he was numbered among the reclaimers of the place, remaining there until he was drowned out. Going to Fresno in 1875, he organized the Colony Settlement of Fresno county, arranging with W. S. Chapman, the owner of the land, for its platting. Having laid out Central California Colony, he resided there for a while, and set out fruits and vines as an experiment, successfully improving a large orchard and farm. Bringing the Colony before the public by judicious advertising, he sold off all the lots, and afterward laid out West Park Colony, in Fresno county. Moving from there to Merced, he talked up the colonization system, and induced the landholders of that section to lay out the Dean Colony, and others. Returning then to San Francisco, he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as general colonization agent, and traveled extensively throughout the east in the interests of the company. He induced Carr & Haggin to sub-divide land near Bakersfield, in Kern county, and in 1890 persuaded Miller & Lux to divide their land in Dos Palos. The land just south of the Dos Palos Depot was first colonized, but as good drinking water was there impossible to obtain the colony was removed to its present advantageous site the following year, a large colony being established through the efforts of Mr. Marks, who gave large concessions on land in the new colony, and persuaded Miller & Lux to move the houses, etc. Mr. Marks is still associated with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, traveling much in the eastern states, and is now colonizing near Galt, in the Sacramento valley, with headquarters at San Francisco. Bernhard Marks married Cornelia D. Barlow, who was born in Dutchess county, N. Y., a daughter of Elisha Barlow, the descendant of an old and honored New England family. She died in Dos Palos, leaving two children, namely: Howard B., employed in the San Francisco postoffice; and Frank B.

Brought up in Fresno, Frank B. Marks there acquired his elementary education, completing it in the San Francisco Boys' High School, from which he was graduated in 1887. Returning then to Fresno, he assisted his father in the land business for a year, and then traveled for a year in the east, visiting all the principal cities. Returning to the Pacific coast, he followed farming in Merced county for eighteen months, and was afterward for a time bookkeeper for Brigham, Hoppe & Co., in San Francisco. Coming to Dos Palos in 1893, Mr. Marks had charge of his father's colony land business for eight years, subsequently locating on his present home ranch, which was then raw land. He began its improvement at once, and on account of the beautiful palm trees which he set out the thoroughfare on which it is located was named Palm avenue. Leveling and ditching the original forty acres contained in his farm, Mr. Marks began farming and dairying on a modest scale, and has since greatly enlarged his operations. He has added by purchase to his first purchase, having now one hundred acres of fine land, the greater part of which he devotes to alfalfa. He has one of the best dairies in this section, milking about fifty cows, and keeping much other stock. In the care of his herd he exercises great judgment, feeding green feed all the year round. He has a large silo, one hundred and fifty tons capacity, which he fills with green corn in the fall for winter feed, his silo being the only one in this part of the county. Mr. Marks' contract with the Colony expired in 1901. He assisted in organizing what is now the Rochdale Creamery Association, and helped build the creamery.

In San Francisco, Mr. Marks married Frances T. Olmstead, who was born in San Joaquin county, Cal., where her father, Edward Olmstead, was a pioneer settler. Three children have been born of their marriage, namely: Frances Blossom, Howard Edward, and Alice Marie. Politically Mr. Marks always casts his vote with the Republican party.

HON. CURTIS H. CASTLE, A. M., M. D.
 During the pioneer history of Illinois Henry Castle brought his family to that state from West Virginia and settled in 1833 among the early inhabitants of Knox county, where he remained until death. Among his children was a son Reuben, who was born in West Virginia, and devoted all of his active years to agricultural pursuits in Illinois, dying in Knox county during 1894. In early manhood he had been united in marriage with Mary A. Long, a native of Pennsylvania, whence she accompanied her father, George Long, to Zanesville, Ohio, and from there in 1835 to Knox county, Ill., where she met and married Reuben Castle. Four children were born of their union. The eldest, Rufus, was a member of Company E, Eighty-third Illinois Infantry, during the Civil war, and afterward settled on a farm near Healdsburg, Cal., where he remained until he died. The second son, George H., who was a lieutenant in the Fifty-ninth Illinois Infantry, from the beginning until the close of the Civil war, and who was severely wounded before Atlanta, is now an attorney in Shenandoah, Iowa, and serves as colonel of the Iowa state militia. The only daughter, Mrs. Griffith, resides in Omaha, Neb., and it was in her home that her mother died in 1904.

The youngest son in the family, Curtis H. Castle, was born near Galesburg, Ill., October 4, 1848, and received excellent advantages in youth, attending Knox College until the close of the sophomore year, after which he became a student in the Northwestern University, from which he was graduated in 1872, with the degree of A. B. Later the degree of A. M. was conferred upon him from the same institution. After graduating he engaged as principal of the schools of Washington, Tex., for four years, and during that time devoted all of his leisure hours to the study of medicine, which he further pursued as a student in the College of Physicians & Surgeons, at Keokuk, Iowa. After his graduation in 1878 he took up professional practice in Fulton county, Ill., but soon removed to what is now Wayland, Henry county, Iowa, where he remained until 1882, and then came to California. A brief sojourn in Los Angeles was followed by his location at Point Arena, Mendocino county, in 1883. Four years later he removed his office to Merced, where he built up a large and lucrative practice.

Until 1892 Dr. Castle voted the Republican ticket, but in the campaign of that year he supported Weaver and since then he has been a Populist. At this writing he is a member of the national committee of his party. In 1896 and 1904 he was chosen a delegate to the national convention, but each time pressure of business and professional duties prevented him from being present at the convention. The convention of his party at Sacramento in 1896 nominated him for member of congress. Shortly afterward the Democratic sub-committee met with the Populist committee and a fusion was effected, Dr. Castle remaining as the candidate of the fusion ticket. He was elected by a majority of two hundred and forty votes over M. C. Bowers, and took his seat in March of 1897, serving through the extra session from March 12 to July 12; also serving in the regular session from December, 1897, to July, 1898, and then from December of 1898 to March 4, 1899. During his service he was a member of the committee on pensions and did much to aid the passage of private pension bills. The old Seventh congressional district which he represented embraced Stanislaus, San Benito, Merced, Madera, Fresno, Kings, Kern, Tulare, San Bernardino, Riverside, Orange and San Diego counties. At the expiration of his first term he was again nominated by the Democratic and regular Populist conventions, but was defeated by Needham by about one hundred and twenty-five votes. His service had been one of the greatest fidelity. The interests of his constituents had been carefully and wisely represented, and he retired to private life with an enviable record in the halls of congress.

Removing from Merced to San Francisco in 1901, two years later Dr. Castle was induced to remove to Dinuba by reason of having acquired interests in raisin lands, and here he now engages in the practice of medicine, also superintends his varied business interests. Two miles north of Dinuba lies his vineyard of fifty-five acres, as well as his forty-acre orchard of peaches. He has been interested in the development of oil in the Coalinga field, is a stockholder in the Fossil Oil Company, and president of the Merced Oil Mining Company. Among the organizations with which he is identified may be mentioned the San Francisco City and County Medical Society and the American Academy of Medicine. While in Iowa he was made a Mason at Wayland and at this writing has his membership in the blue lodge at Point Arena. In religion he is associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, while he has been no less active in educational matters than in religious affairs, being a school trustee and member of the county board of education. While living in Illinois he married Miss Alma Taber, who was born in Rhode Island and died in Illinois, leaving two children, Grace and Curtis. The Doctor's second marriage was solemnized in Merced, Cal., and united him with Miss Virginia Wills, who was born in Mariposa county, of pioneer parents, and by whom he has three children, Chandos Barrett, Mary Mercedes and Genevieve Wills.

VALENTINE DARIUS KNUPP. As mayor of Portersville, Tulare county, Cal., V. D. Knupp is intimately associated with the growth and progress of the city and in touch with all the movements which have tended to develop the county. He is a native of St. Charles county, Mo., where his birth occurred July 20, 1856. His father, Valentine Knupp, was a native of Pennsylvania, who emigrated to St. Charles county, Mo., where he became a merchant. He died in 1859, while on a trip to Texas. His wife, formerly Hulda Pringle, a native of Missouri, was the daughter of Mark Pringle, whose death occurred in that state. She survived her husband and came to California, her death occurring in Visalia in June, 1903, at the age of eighty-four years. They had two sons, Valentine Darius, the subject of this review, and Charles O., who is located in San Francisco.

The oldest son in the family of his parents, Valentine Darius Knupp was reared in St. Charles county, Mo., where he attended the district school and later the district schools in Warren county, where his widowed mother located. In March, 1869, he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama with his mother and brother, locating in Visalia, and the same year he returned east with his mother, attending school in Glasgow, Mo. In 1872 they removed to a farm near Carlinville, Ill., and two years later he returned to Visalia. In Tulare county he engaged in the stock business with his half-brother, Henry Perkins, being located on the Bayou until 1876. Deciding then to take a commercial course, he entered Heald's Business College, of San Francisco. Upon leaving school he became agent for the Visalia Railroad Company, a position which he held for four years, after which he became interested in the abstract business, the firm being known first as Miller & Knupp, later Knupp & Anderson, and is now merged into the Visalia Abstract Company. He became secretary of the Visalia & Tulare Railroad Company, which position he retained until July, 1895, when he resigned and located in Portersville to accept the management of the Pioneer Land Company. This company owns five thousand acres of land, sub-divided in twenty-acre tracts, and since his assumption of the management one thousand acres have been sold off. A part of this land has been set out to oranges, the whole being irrigated by means of pumping plants and irrigating ditches in which the company is largely interested. It has also erected several buildings, among them being the Pioneer hotel and the Pioneer Bank building. In addition to his other interests Mr. Knupp is connected with the Sunnyside Water Company and the Hilo Water Company, both for the irrigation of oranges, and in both of which he serves as a director. Individually he has also given much time to the setting out and cultivation of an orange grove and in this work as well as that of his business career is meeting with a success which places him among the representative men of the vicinity of Portersville.

In Visalia Mr. Knupp was united in marriage with Nellie Cutler, a daughter of Dr. John Cutler, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this volume. They are the parents of four children, namely: Reginald, who is a graduate of Heald's Business College, now associated with the San Joaquin Power Company, of Fresno; Guy, a graduate of the high school of Portersville and now a student in Stanford University; Wilko; and Myra. In his political affiliations Mr. Knupp is a Republican. In 1903, on an independent ticket, he was elected mayor of Portersville, for a term of two years. He has proven himself a man of exceptional ability and earnest integrity, giving his leadership toward the advancement and betterment of municipal affairs, and he is held in high esteem by all who have had business or social relations with him. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Visalia, of which lodge he is past chief chancellor.

CHARLES A. MARSH. For more than a quarter of a century Charles A. Marsh has been identified with the agricultural development of Fresno county, and his farm about one and a half miles north of Parlier is among the most productive and well kept in this vicinity, being utilized as a stock, grain and fruit farm. To Mr. Marsh belongs the distinction of being one of the early settlers of his community, for at the time of his locating here in 1877, there were only two sheep ranches between his farm and the city of Fresno. The country was new and undeveloped, a striking contrast to the present situation with its numerous cities and villages and productive grain field and fruit-bearing orchards.

Born in Muscatine, Iowa, October 2, 1856, Charles A. Marsh is the youngest of four sons born to John and Eliza (Traer) Marsh, the latter of whom was born in Ohio and died in Iowa. The father of Charles A. Marsh went to Iowa in the early '40s, locating in Muscatine county, and for a number of years thereafter followed farming there. In 1877 he left those familiar scenes and came to California. Locating on a farm, now the home of his son, Charles A., for a few years he followed various pursuits and in 1881 went north to Shasta county, where he died about 1888.

The education of Charles A. Marsh was received in Iowa, where he attended only the common schools, and since locating upon this farm in 1877 he has devoted himself assiduously toward making a success of his chosen vocation. He purchased eighty acres from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, one and a half miles north of Parlier, and at once engaged in farming and stock raising, having remained on the same farm through the intervening years. Thirty-five acres of his farm he planted in vineyards, twenty-five acres are devoted to the raising of alfalfa and about two acres are in orchard. The balance is used for grazing purposes, as he conducts a dairy, also shipping his cream to Visalia, Tulare county. In addition to his other undertakings he is interested in a packing house and winery in Parlier, while with his son, Arthur E., he is engaged in the real estate business, their transactions being conducted from the home place.

By his marriage in Cedar Rapids in 1876, Mr. Marsh united his fortunes with those of Sarah E. Zediker, who was born in Linn county, Iowa. Three children blessed this union, two sons and one daughter, namely: Beryl W., the wife of Walter Parlier, residing near the home place; Arthur E. and Glen W. Mr. Marsh is greatly interested in the cause of education and for a number of years has officiated as clerk of the board of school directors for the Mendocino school district. Fraternally he affiliates with Selma Lodge No. 155, K. P.

MAJOR PHILIP N. RUSSELL, M. D. Holding a position of prominence among the leading physicians and surgeons of the San Joaquin valley is Major P. N. Russell, M. D., of Fresno, a practitioner of skill and experience and a close student of the science which he has chosen as a profession. A son of J. N. P. Russell, he was born December 14, 1854, in Fredericktown, Madison county, Mo., of thrifty Scotch ancestry. His paternal grandfather, Levi Russell, a native of North Carolina, removed to Missouri with his family in 1827, becoming a pioneer of New Madrid and he there spent his remaining days, dying at a good old age.

A native of North Carolina, J. N. P. Russell lived there until ten years old, when he accompanied his parents to Missouri. On attaining his majority he embarked in agricultural pursuits, and for many years was prosperously engaged in farming and stock-raising at Fredericktown. He died December 23, 1903, at the age of eighty-six years, at his home in St. Louis, Mo. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, toward the support of which he always contributed generously. He married Sarah Jackson, who was born in Kentucky, near Frankfort, where her parents settled on their removal from Virginia. She died on the homestead in Missouri. Of the eight children which she bore her husband, seven grew to years of maturity, and six are living, Dr. P. N. Russell being the only one residing on the Pacific coast.

The eighth child in succession of birth, P. N. Russell was reared on the home farm. After leaving the district school he continued his studies at the Fredericktown Academy, afterwards entering the Missouri Medical College in St. Louis, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1888. Beginning the practice of medicine in Van Buren, Ark., he remained there a year, and then took a post-graduate course in New Orleans. Returning then to Van Buren, he continued the practice of his profession there until 1891, when he came to California. Locating at once in Fresno, Dr. Russell soon acquired an enviable reputation as a skillful surgeon and physician, and in the comparatively few years that have since elapsed he has built up a large and remunerative patronage. In 1894 he was appointed a member of the State Board of Pension Examiners, of which he was formerly secretary, and is now the treasurer. For two years he rendered excellent service as city health officer, a position that he was forced to resign, in July, 1903, on account of his large practice. In 1894 Dr. Russell was commissioned, by Governor Markham, assistant surgeon, with the rank of captain, of the California National Guard, Sixth Regiment, and in 1897 was made surgeon of the regiment, with rank of major. During the Spanish-American war, in May, 1898, he was commissioned assistant surgeon of the Seventh California Volunteer Infantry, being stationed at the Presidio and at Los Angeles, and held the position until the regiment was mustered out of service, in December, 1898. Returning then to Fresno, Dr. Russell resumed his former position in the National Guard of California, and is still surgeon of the Sixth Regiment, with the rank of major.

August 14, 1899, in San Francisco, Cal., Dr. Russell married Zelia Bridgeport, a native of San Francisco, and a graduate of the high school of that city. Her father, Judge Eugene Bridgeport, was born in Missouri, but when a young man removed to California, becoming a pioneer settler of Colusa county, where he was judge of the superior court for fourteen years. He subsequently became a resident of San Francisco, where he now resides, and where for many years he was engaged in the practice of law with General Cluney. Dr. and Mrs. Russell have one child, De Witt L. Russell. Dr. Russell is a staunch Democrat in his political affiliations. He is identified with the County Medical Society, of which he is ex-president; the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society, the State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He is likewise a member of, and medical examiner for, the Woodmen of the World; a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood; medical examiner for both the Equitable and the Provident Life Insurance Associations; a member of the Spanish-American War Veterans' Association; and a charter member of the Missouri Society of San Francisco, of which Judge Bridgeport was the first president.

ISAAC WRIGHT, A. M., LL. B. As far back as the family history can be traced the Wrights have been identified with the history of county Down, Ireland, and there an ancestor bearing the name of Isaac followed farm pursuits and also engaged in the manufacture of linen. Among his brothers was one, Rev. William Wright, D. D., who became an eminent Presbyterian minister. In the family of Isaac Wright there were seven sons, all of whom crossed the ocean, six settling in the United States, and one in Montreal. Of these Samuel, a native of county Down, became a farmer on the border of Jefferson and Carroll counties, in the eastern part of Ohio, where also he operated a saw mill and manufactured lumber. In religion he was a strict Presbyterian and long officiated as a ruling elder of his church. During the existence of the Whig party he supported its principles and afterward he joined the newly organized Republican party, which he continued to support as long as he lived. At the time of his death he was seventy-nine years of age.

The lady who from early womanhood until her death in 1854 at the age of forty-seven remained the faithful helpmate of Samuel Wright bore the maiden name of Margaret McKee and was born in county Down, Ireland, where likewise were born her father, John (a farmer, flax manufacturer and lumberman), and her grandfather, David McKee (a native of Ayrshire, Scotland, and the founder of the family in Ireland). In the family of Samuel Wright there were six sons and one daughter, namely: Mrs. Mary Kean, who lives near the old homestead; John, a resident of Paola, Miami county, Kans.; Isaac, the subject of this narrative and a resident of Dinuba, Cal.; James, deceased, formerly a merchant at McKee's Rocks, Pa.; William, who died at the old homestead in 1860; Samuel, who died in Minnesota in 1867; and David, who served in the Ninety-eighth Ohio Infantry until the close of the war and is now living in Jefferson county, Ohio.

The old home at Ballynahinch, county Down, Ireland, where he was born in 1835, Isaac Wright remembers with such affection that he has named his California vineyard in its honor. While he was still quite young he accompanied the family to America and settled in Ohio, where he attended district schools. In 1852 he began to prepare for college under Dr. Patterson, and in 1854 he entered Westminster College at New Wilmington, Lawrence county, Pa., from which he was graduated four years later with the degree of A. B. In 1859 he was graduated from the Ohio State Normal School at Hopedale, and immediately became principal of the schools of Steubenville, Ohio, where he remained for two years. For a year following he served at the head of the intermediate department of the high schools of Toledo, Ohio. At the expiration of that time he took up the study of law under Hon. M. R. Waite, on whose certificate he was admitted to the Ohio bar in 1864. During the four ensuing years he engaged in practice at Steubenville, Ohio. In 1868 he went to Tarrytown, N. Y., as vice-principal of the Irving Institute, where he enjoyed some of the most pleasant experiences of his entire life and had the privilege of attending the old church where Washington Irving once worshipped. After two years he became vice-principal of the White Plains military school and during his five years there he built up an institution that had experienced heavy reverses and many hardships. On leaving that school he became connected with the Brooklyn Polytechnic School as a teacher. His work ending each day at three in the afternoon, he devoted the remainder of the afternoon to study in the Columbia Law School, from which he was graduated in 1873 with the degree of LL. B. Meanwhile the school at White Plains, under the control of Dr. Willis, had become unpopular and Mr. Wright was urgently entreated to return, being offered a partnership in the institution. Returning to his old place, he succeeded in bringing the students back to the school and remained there for two years more.

During 1875 Mr. Wright came by steamer to California. His first experience was unfortunate. The Bank of California, in which his money was deposited, closed its doors, leaving him without funds. However, without delay he secured a position in the California Military Academy. At the same time he was introduced to the supreme court by Governor Haight and received the privilege of practicing law in the state. In 1876 he became connected with the University Mound College at South San Francisco, but after five months resigned to enter upon the practice of law in Oakland, where in the spring of 1877 he was appointed deputy city attorney, and for two and one-half years continued in that position. Having meanwhile purchased the Oakland Academy he became its principal and remained at its head for twelve years, meantime bringing it to a high grade and raising its standard of scholarship. On selling the academy he accepted a position in the Oakland high school. A year later he was elected to the head of the classical department of the high school in Portland, Ore., but resigned in favor of a former incumbent of the office, and instead became principal of the Livermore high school. After a year in that position he became principal of the high school at Winters, Yolo county, where he remained for three years. His next position was that of principal in the San Luis Obispo high school. After a year devoted to recuperation and rest at Los Gatos he became principal of the high school at Arroyo Grande, San Luis Obispo county, where he saved the high school for the district. In 1900 he was elected principal of the Dinuba high school, established in 1899, and here he started the junior and senior classes, and had charge of the first graduating exercises. Going to Brentwood, Contra Costa county, in 1902, he organized the high school and had it in charge for a year, when he retired from educational work and returned to Dinuba. Previous to this, in 1901, he had purchased twenty acres adjoining Dinuba on the north, and a year later had set out a vineyard in Thompson's seedless grapes, which already are in splendid bearing condition and bring him quick returns for his investment. After a lifetime devoted to educational activities he finds the care of his vineyard a pleasant change, affording the outdoor exercise he so much enjoys and bringing him into direct touch with nature. As secretary of the Farmers' Institute he proved helpful to that movement and he has been interested in other plans for the benefit of those who gain their livelihoods from the tilling of the soil. The Presbyterian Church has received his support and allegiance for many years. Though not a partisan, he is a staunch Republican, ever interested in the party's principles and progress. While he is a student and a scholar rather than a public man or a politician, he has kept in touch with affairs connected with the prosperity and progress of our nation, and has always been justly proud of the fact that it was his suggestion, made to Mr. Spafford during the presidency of U. S. Grant, that brought to the supreme court Judge M. R. Waite, whose judicial career has been one of unusual distinction and merited honors as chief justice of the United States.

DENNIS A. LEONARD. A practical agriculturist, and a man of more than ordinary executive and business ability, D. A. Leonard, manager for Miller & Lux, of the Dos Palos division, holds a position of eminence among the leading farmers of Fresno county. In the management of the one hundred thousand acres of land under his control, he exercises great skill and excellent judgment, and by his systematic and scientific methods of procedure has wrought wondrous improvements. A son of John Leonard, he was born July 18, 1860, in Utica, Oneida county, N. Y.

Settling when a young man in Utica, N. Y., John Leonard helped build the Erie canal, and afterward assisted in the construction of some of the first railroads of the state, at that time using the old strap rail. On retiring from that occupation, he bought land in Deerfield, Oneida county, N. Y., and is still living on the farm which he cleared and improved, being now a venerable man of more than ninety years, and one of the most respected and honored citizens of the town. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Allen, is now eighty years of age, and her mother lived past the century mark. Of the fifteen children born of their marriage nine grew to years of maturity, and eight are living, four of them being residents of the Pacific coast.

Removing with his parents from Utica, N. Y., to Deerfield, when a boy, D. A. Leonard worked as chore boy on the home farm, completing his education in the district schools. Beginning the battle of life for himself at the age of sixteen years, he worked for a while in Vermont, at the end of a year returning to New York. Engaging then in railroad work, he ran first as brakeman, and later as conductor, on the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, running from Utica to Binghamton. Resigning his position as conductor in 1881, Mr. Leonard came to Kern county, Cal., and as an employe of Carr & Haggin had charge for four years of the heads of the canals on the Zamjora. Locating in Bakersfield in 1885, he opened a livery stable, and was there engaged in business for six years. In 1892 Mr. Leonard assumed the management of the Dos Palos division, and has since continued in the employ of Miller & Lux. He is a man of great energy and perseverance, and has effected marked improvements on this immense ranch since becoming its manager, and is now extensively engaged in raising grain, alfalfa and stock. Fifty thousand acres are under irrigation.

In Bakersfield, Cal., Mr. Leonard married Maria Sanger, who was born in Alvarado, Cal., where her father, Gustof Sanger, now a resident of Inyo county, was a pioneer settler. Politically Mr. Leonard is a zealous supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and while living in Kern county served for several years as deputy sheriff. Fraternally he is a member of Los Banos Lodge, F. & A. M.; of Fresno Chapter, R. A. M.; of Fresno Commandery, K. T.; of Los Banos Chapter, O. E. S., and of the Knights of Pythias of Bakersfield.

WILLIAM BLANKENSHIP. During the early years of California's history as a state, when mining was attracting more attention than agriculture and men were eager to attain riches by a single bound, William Blankenship became a pioneer of Tulare county, where he contented himself with the peaceful pursuit of farming and stock-raising. That he made no mistake in the selection of an occupation is proved by his present standing as a large land-owner and prosperous cattleman. Since 1874 he has made his home nine miles southeast of Tulare, on the Tule river, where he owns all of section 16, and two hundred acres of section 15, making a total of eight hundred and forty acres in his home place, besides which he has three hundred and sixty acres one and one-half miles south of Visalia, where he has alfalfa land and a large herd of cattle.

A native of West Virginia, Mr. Blankenship was born on Brush creek, near Princeton, Mercer county, March 14, 1830, being a son of William and Polly (Martin) Blankenship, also natives of Mercer county. The maternal grandfather, John Martin, who traced his ancestry to Germany, was born and reared in Mercer county, and with the exception of the period of his service in the war of 1812, devoted all of his active life to the occupation of a planter in his native county. The paternal grandfather, John Blankenship, was likewise a Virginian by birth, a planter by occupation, and during the war of 1812 served at the front. At the time of his death he was one hundred and four years of age. His father, who bore the same name as himself, was born in France and in youth became a soldier in the French army. Enlisting under General Lafayette, he accompanied that famous soldier to America and fought on the side of the colonies. At the close of the war he settled in Virginia and took up the work of a planter in Mercer county.

As early as 1833, when Iowa was still considered the remote west and while as yet few civilizing influences had been brought to bear upon its possibilities, William Blankenship, Sr., accompanied by his wife and two children, journeyed over the mountains from West Virginia to the valley of the Mississippi, his family riding pack-horses, while he walked by their side and drove a cow. Their possessions were meager, but their hopes were large, for before them lay the wealth of untilled acres and the possibilities of a vast valley. His course led him through the present city of Burlington, whose site was then unmarked by even one house. Near that locality he settled, but in three years moved to Jefferson county and took up land thirty miles below Des Moines, later going to Marion county. In the fall of 1834 he lost his wife and was left with three small children, namely: John, who became a pioneer of 1850 in California and now makes his home in Stockton; William, of Tulare county; and Mrs. Nancy Sweem, of Stockton. Afterward he married Rebecca Williams, who was born in Indiana and died in Tulare county, Cal. Of that marriage seven children were born, of whom four now make their home in Tulare county. During April of 1850 Mr. Blankenship brought his family across the plains with ox-teams, traveling along the North Platte, thence to Salt Lake, on down the Humboldt river, and via the Carson route to Hangtown, where he landed on the 1st of September, 1850. After mining at Mokelumne Hill for two years he returned to Iowa, but in 1853 again crossed the plains and with a herd of cattle purchased in the east he began in the stock business at French Camp, near Stockton. A second trip east was made in March, 1856, and in 1858 he came to California with his son William, settling down to farm pursuits at French Camp. A year later he came to Tulare county and bought a farm one and one-half miles south of Visalia, where he remained until his death at seventy-five years.

The fact that the subject of this article is a man of broad information may be attributed to habits of close observation and to self-culture rather than to any special advantages that fell to his boyhood years. The son of a pioneer, living in a sparsely settled region, he felt it a peculiar fortune that he was within walking distance of a log cabin where, during three months of the year, a subscription school was conducted, where boys and girls, seated on rude benches surmounting a dirt floor, were initiated into the mysteries of the three R's. Out of that life he passed into the difficult struggle with nature in the improvement of a raw tract of land. The difficulties and obstacles which he was compelled to meet and surmount fitted him to take hold of life as a California pioneer, when, in 1850, he crossed the plains with his father's family. After a brief experience in the mines of Calaveras county in 1852 he returned to Iowa by way of Panama and in 1853 again crossed the plains, this time driving three hundred head of cattle. While at the head of the Humboldt he and his companions missed six head of cattle and suspecting the Indians of having stolen them, four of the men volunteered to follow the red men. This they did, but failed to overtake them and in eighteen hours returned to camp, none the worse for their reckless adventure. On his arrival in California he established a stock ranch on a quarter section adjoining his father's half section at French Camp. In March, 1856, his father returned to the east, and the next month he too began the long journey to his old home. During the voyage a stop of fourteen days was made at the city of Havana. After arriving at New Orleans he proceeded up the Mississippi river to Iowa, where he married. In 1858, with an outfit of ox-teams and a drove of two hundred head of cattle and horses, he and his wife crossed the plains alone. Not an animal was lost during the trip, but their experience would have been different had they not followed in the wake of Johnston's army. After his return to French Camp he remained on his old farm for a year, but in 1859 removed to Tulare county, and from that time until 1874 made his home near Visalia, removing from there to his present homestead.

In Marion county, Iowa, November 3, 1857, Mr. Blankenship married Miss Melissa E. Guthrie, a native of Mercer county, Ohio, and a lady of attractive qualities, superior character and unusual capabilities. Born February 10, 1834, she was a child when the family moved to Indiana and in 1856 accompanied them to Iowa, where she married. In religion she is a faithful member of the Christian Church, in which her brother, Rev. J. D. Guthrie, pastor of a church at Oskaloosa, Iowa, is a leading and well-known minister. The family was founded in America by John Guthrie, a native of Scotland and a pioneer of Georgia. During the course of his service in the Revolutionary war he received a severe wound through the body, but recovered and resumed the work of a planter in Georgia. In that state occurred the birth of his son, James, who early in life settled in Ohio and there followed the tilling of the soil and the trade of a blacksmith. At an early day he settled in Jasper county, Iowa, where he improved a tract of raw land and supplemented his income by work at his trade. The lady who was the companion of his youth and survived to bless his age bore the maiden name of Nancy Corn and was born in Kentucky, her father, George, having emigrated from Germany to America, settled in Kentucky, served in the Revolutionary war, and late in life made his home in Ohio. Both James and Nancy Guthrie died in Iowa. Of their fourteen children all but two attained mature years, but only three are living, and of these Mrs. Blankenship alone makes her home in California at this writing. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Blankenship who are living we make the following mention: John R. married Lena L. Scruggs and has two sons, Ewell C. and Roy W.; Bert G. married Mary Herndon and has two daughters, Mary E. and Retha E. The two sons mentioned, John R. and Bert G., reside on the old homestead, the former working as a farmer, while the latter makes a specialty of dairy business. Della Grace became the wife of F. J. Smith, of Grass Valley, and has one son, Frank W. The three oldest children in the family are deceased. Ludenia L. died at the age of eighteen years. Mary F. died when three years old. Blank William died in November, 1897, when thirty-four years old; in 1881 he married Lucy Hardaway, by whom he had two children, William R. and Kate M. At no time during his busy life has Mr. Blankenship been willing to accept office, and he has taken no part in politics aside from voting the Republican ticket at national elections. In county elections he maintains an independent attitude, giving his support to the men whom he considers best calculated to honorably and intelligently carry out the wishes of the people. Honorable in every transaction, sagacious in judgment, a friend to the needy, hospitable to all, he has proved himself an ideal representative of the honored class of pioneers.

STEPHEN A. TYLER. To Stephen A. Tyler belongs the distinction of being one of the early settlers in the neighborhood of Sanger, Fresno county, and for the past twenty-three years he has followed farming, ranking among the successful orchardists and vine growers in his locality. An Ohioan by birth, he was born July 8, 1847, and his youth and early manhood were spent in his native state. After leaving school he learned the blacksmith trade, which he followed until he attained his majority. His father, Stephen I. Tyler, was born in Providence, R. I. He was a sailor, and for many years was a captain on the great lakes. He was united in marriage with Miss Alzina Edmonds of New York state, and about 1840 he retired from marine life, settling in Ohio and devoting the remainder of his years to the useful trade of a blacksmith. He died at the age of fifty-five years.

At the age of twenty-one Stephen A. Tyler went into Michigan, where he lived for a time, but subsequently moved to Tennessee and followed farming in that state until 1876. It was in that year that he conceived the idea of coming to the Pacific slope and upon his arrival in California found a desirable location in Yolo county, where he engaged in farming for three years. The following year he became a resident of San Joaquin county, where he resided for one year. In 1881 he looked about him for a good investment and a permanent location for a home, and as Fresno county appeared to offer both, he was induced to purchase land there. His original purchase, which consisted of eighty acres, was located one mile south of the farm which is his home at this time, and upon it he followed his chosen vocation for six years. He then purchased the farm upon which he still resides, consisting of sixty acres located in the Parrie school district, about five miles northeast of Sanger.

His ranch is well improved and very productive and bespeaks the prosperity and thrift of its owner. By his marriage in Michigan Mr. Tyler was united with Sarah Anderson, formerly of New York, and they have six children, as follows: George A., W. Harvey, William J., Effie M., Ella M. and Charles. The family unite in worshiping at the Baptist Church, of which Mr. and Mrs. Tyler are members. In his political convictions Mr. Tyler is active in the interests of the Prohibition party.

JAMES DANIEL WAGNER, M. D., furnishes a striking example of one who has made a success of his life work from a professional and a business point of view, and during the twenty-three years of his residence in the vicinity of Selma, Cal., he has been largely instrumental in the upbuilding of this section in addition to fulfilling his many obligations as a general practitioner.

A native of Savannah, Hardin county, Tenn., where his birth took place November 30, 1844, Dr. Wagner is the fourth child in a family of thirteen children born to his parents, being the eldest son of this family, of which seven were sons and six were daughters. On the paternal side, his great-grandfather left his home in Alsace-Lorraine, Germany, immigrating to the United States at an early age, and became a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He settled in Virginia, which was also the home of his maternal ancestors. The maternal great-grandfather was also a soldier, and served as captain on General Washington's staff. While serving as such, he was presented with a watch by the general, and this watch is now a much valued relic in the possession of Dr. Wagner. In tracing the lineage down one generation farther, we find the paternal grandfather, Daniel Wagner, to have been a native of Virginia and a farmer by occupation. He left that state for a home in the south, locating in Hardin county, Tenn., a pioneer settler of that county, and it was there he died. His son, Matthias, also a Virginian by birth, was the father of Dr. Wagner, and he also settled in Tennessee, leaving Hardin county about 1870, and locating near Montague, Tex., and it was in that vicinity that he followed farm pursuits and stock raising until his death, which took place at the age of seventy-three years. He was united in marriage with Miss Mary Graham, a native of Tennessee, and a daughter of James Graham, who although born in Virginia passed his last days in Hardin county, Tenn. The mother of Dr. Wagner died in Texas when about sixty years old.

Completing the course in the common schools of Tennessee, James D. Wagner became a student at the University of Nashville, Tenn., in 1860, graduating from the medical department of that institution in 1873. Soon afterward he engaged as a general practitioner at his old home in Tennessee, and continued to live there for several years. In 1881 he sought a new location in California, locating at that time on the present site of Selma, which was then known as Selma Switch. Here he also began the practice of his profession, which has occupied the greater part of his time during the intervening years, and he enjoys today a practice second to none in his locality. He has certainly aided materially in the upbuilding of Selma, and in making it what it is today. Although the population is but two thousand, it has all the conveniences of a city many times that size, and this is due largely to the influence of such men as Dr. Wagner. He was one of a company who erected the Masonic Temple, and it was due largely to his efforts that the edifice of the Methodist Episcopal Church South was built in Selma in 1887.

In May, 1861, Dr. Wagner enlisted in the Confederate army, being then but sixteen years old, and served under Gen. Joseph Johnston in the Army of the Tennessee, and in General Wheeler's cavalry, in Company G, First Confederate Regiment. At the battle of New Hope Church a shell struck a tree behind which he was standing, and the shock rendered him senseless for several hours. He was rolled up in a blanket for burial, which was deferred owing to the necessary retreat, and in the meantime he recovered consciousness.

By his marriage in Tennessee, Dr. Wagner was united with Miss Elizabeth Gray, a native of Hickman county, that state. Nine children blessed this union, namely: William and Walter are deceased; Dr. J. H. is a graduate of the Vanderbilt University of Tennessee; Mary is also deceased; Alice is attending the State Normal at Los Angeles; John H. is deceased; Ella is also attending the State Normal, as is also Lillian; the youngest child died in infancy. Mrs. Wagner died in Selma March 11, 1888.

Fraternally Dr. Wagner is allied with Selma Lodge No. 277, F. & A. M., Trigo Chapter No. 69, R. A. M., of Fresno. In politics he is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, having served many times as a delegate to county conventions, and as a member of the state central committee. In religious circles he is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Such men as Dr. Wagner are a valuable acquisition to any community.

AUGUST JERNBERG. As agent for the Crocker-Huffman Land and Water Company, Mr. Jernberg also represents the Homeseekers Land Agency, with offices in the large cities of the Union, and through these mediums has assisted in disposing of the forty-five thousand-acre tract in Merced county owned by the former company, all of which is available for growing fruit or alfalfa. This land can be purchased for $35 and up, per acre, with the assurance that the best system of irrigation prevails. Every inducement is given to those of limited means to build a home.

By trade Mr. Jernberg is a practical machinist, and comes of a family identified with that occupation for generations. One member, more ambitious than the rest, emigrated from Germany and settled in Sweden, his example being followed by his descendants, who were peaceful and law-abiding citizens. In Wernland, Sweden, Mr. Jernberg was born March 17, 1858, and the same kingdom was the birthplace of his parents, John and Ulrika (Lovequist) Jernberg, the latter the daughter of Olaf Lovequist, a harness-maker by occupation. That the family were in moderate circumstances, and encouraged independence at an early age, was demonstrated in the case of all the children, of which there were eight, five daughters and three sons. Of these, all but two daughters came to America, and the sons all engaged as ironworkers or machinists. While Mr. Jernberg has been forging his way to the front in real estate circles, his brothers, Carl and John, are equally industrious, the former being mechanical engineer and a partner of the Standard Forgings Company of Chicago, and superintendent of the plant at Indiana Harbor, while the latter brother assists him in the last named capacity. Mr. Jernberg's father was an engineer for his entire active life, and died in Sweden, although he had formerly spent a number of years in Chicago, Ill.

Coming to Chicago, Ill., about 1879, Mr. Jernberg became identified with the Chicago Bolt & Forge Company, was raised to the position of foreman in 1880, and remained with the concern until deciding to embark in the real estate business in 1886. Chicago at that time offered inducements to men thus inclined, and from purchasing small tracts of land outlying the city, he enlarged his business in all directions, laying out the additions to west part of Englewood, and investing in lands in Austin, Morgan Park, West Pullman and South Chicago. At the same time he became identified with the well-known real estate concerns, of the Union Pacific, Western, and Koltz Brothers, operating successfully in the purchase and disposal of their various properties. The same tendency which had prompted the immigration of his family to Chicago, induced him to dispose of his Chicago interests and put his fortunes to the hazard in the west. Arriving in California in 1902, he traveled extensively over the state, finally selecting Merced as a promising and favorable field of operation. He practically laid out the Bradley addition of one hundred and sixty-one lots, and has since vigorously and with telling results, promoted its advancement to a thriving and useful community of interests. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Jernberg is improving a home place of thirteen and a half acres, where he is living with his family, and where may be found the comforts and luxuries dictated by a refined and exacting intelligence. His first wife, Hilda Stope, whom he married in Sweden, died during his residence in Chicago, leaving to his care seven children, in order of birth as follows: Ellen, a resident of Chicago; Hilda, the wife of F. Bryant, of Chicago; Gustav, a machinist by trade; and Laura, Julia, August and Ruth. His second marriage in 1900 united him with Anna Lilia, a native of Sweden and formerly a resident of San Francisco. Mr. Jernberg is a man of pleasing address, and courteous in dealing with patrons. He is rated as one of the substantial men of the community, having inspired confidence and support from the time of his arrival.

JACOB RANDOL HOLDRIDGE. The family of which Jacob Randol Holdridge of Tullare county is a representative was established in Connecticut over four hundred years ago. The emigrating ancestor located in that state and succeeding generations have followed him, members of the family taking an active part in the growth and development of the country. The great-grandfather of Mr. Holdridge was a patriot in the Revolutionary war, while his grandfather served in the war of 1812. His father, Randol Holdridge, a native of New London county, Conn., was a brick and rock mason by trade and also engaged in farming as a means of livelihood. Both himself and wife, the latter being in maidenhood Emeline Read, of the same locality, died in Connecticut. They were the parents of sixteen children, five sons and eleven daughters, of whom the tenth in order of birth was Jacob Randol Holdridge, born in New London county, Conn., March 12, 1849.

Reared upon the paternal farm in his native state, Mr. Holdridge received a rather limited education in the common schools which he attended for a time. When only nineteen years old he decided to follow the example of his earliest American ancestor and seek a home in a newer country. He accordingly came to California in 1868 via the Isthmus of Panama, and upon his safe arrival in the state located in the Sacramento valley near Dixon. Bringing to bear in the prosecution of his work as an agriculturist the qualities of his New England ancestry and training, he met with success and soon acquired a competency. He continued in the Sacramento valley, devoting considerable time and attention to the cultivation of various fruits, until 1891, when he sold his property and came to Tulare county and assumed the management of the Eppinger ranch in the vicinity of Visalia. He soon purchased one thousand acres of land located east of Portersville, in the Mountain View district, which he has owned since 1892. In 1901 he bought his present home property, a half section of grain land nine miles north of Portersville, where he is now living.

In Dixon, Cal., Mr. Holdridge was united in marriage with Isabel Marian Grieve, a native of Illinois, who died at Davisville, Yolo county, Cal., Tuesday, November 4, 1884, at the age of twenty-four years. She was a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Grieve, the former a native of Scotland and the latter of England. They were pioneers of Illinois, emigrating there prior to the Blackhawk war, and were also pioneers of California, coming overland by ox team and experiencing many hardships and trials, as well as attacks by Indians. They died in Dixon, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Holdridge were the parents of three children, namely: Ernest, located on the South Tule river; Robert, deceased; and Hazel Isabel, at home with her father. In his political convictions Mr. Holdridge is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

EZRA M. STEVENS. Distinguished as one of the most successful and progressive business men of Fresno county, E. M. Stevens of Selma is widely known as a prominent vineyardist and orchardist. During the thirty years that he has been a resident of the Pacific coast fortune has favored him with her kindest smiles, bringing him wealth and influence. His investments have invariably proved profitable, and he is now one of the most extensive land owners in this part of the state, and a large stockholder in various leading oil companies. He was born April 28, 1840, in Ontario, Canada, a son of Enoch Stevens. His great-grandfather, Adam Stevens, was a life-long resident of New Jersey, and came from substantial colonial stock. David Stevens, Mr. Stevens' grandfather, was born in New Jersey, but when a young man migrated to Canada, where he was an inn-keeper for many years, but afterward became a farmer.

Brought up in Canada, near Toronto, Enoch Stevens was engaged in agricultural pursuits during his entire active career, being an extensive and prosperous farmer. He died in Blenheim, Ontario, where the last half of his life was spent. He married Clarissa Hall, a life-long resident of Ontario, and they became the parents of twelve children, six girls and six boys. One child died in infancy, and the others grew to years of maturity, E. M., the special subject of this sketch, being the fifth child in succession of birth.

Growing to manhood beneath the parental roof-tree, E. M. Stevens acquired a practical education in the common schools, and a thorough knowledge of agriculture on the home farm. In 1869 he came to California, arriving December 30, and the following six months was engaged in farming in Placer county. Going back to Canada at the end of that time, he remained there three years. Returning to California in 1873, Mr. Stevens bought land near Santa Rosa, and lived there two and one-half years. He subsequently spent one year in Sacramento and one year in Visalia. Locating in Fresno county in 1877, eight miles east of Selma, he purchased a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, and has here improved and developed a magnificent vineyard of two hundred and twenty-five acres, and an orchard of seventy acres, the remainder of his land being devoted to alfalfa. In disposing of the fruits of his vineyard and orchard, Mr. Stevens does his own packing, his raisins being placed upon the market under the name of Ivy Brand.

Possessing unusual business activity and energy, Mr. Stevens is a large property owner, having one thousand acres of land in Kern county; one hundred and sixty acres in Tulare county; town and residence property in Fresno; one thousand two hundred and eighty acres in Adams county, Wash.; and owning mineral land, which he is interested in developing, in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada and Fresno mountains. He is financially interested in the oil industry, being a stockholder in the London Oil Company, of which he is the president, and which is developing fifteen hundred acres of land in Coalinga, Fresno county. He pays considerable attention to mining pursuits, and is now working on the Golden Eagle and the Bonanza mines, and is interested to some extent in the Apache mine.

In Ontario, Canada, Mr. Stevens married Emma DeHart, who was born in Toronto, Canada, a daughter of Nicholas DeHart, a well-to-do farmer, now living retired from active pursuits. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, two children have been born, namely: Reuben E., in business with his father, and Edmund Leslie, deceased. Mr. Stevens is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Methodist Church. He is much interested in the cause of education, and was formerly one of the directors of the Reedley high school. He is a resident of the city of Selma, his home being pleasantly located at the corner of Second and Young streets.

WILLIAM C. WILLIAMSON. In the eastern part of Contra Costa county, just south of Antioch, is located the well-improved and highly cultivated ranch of William C. Williamson, which evidences the ability, energy and industry of its prosperous owner. He came to the state empty-handed less than thirty years ago, a young man of twenty years, his only capital a strong constitution and unlimited ambition, and from the foot of the ladder has climbed steadily upward until he holds rank to-day with the most successful ranchers of the county.

A native of Missouri, Mr. Williamson was born October 27, 1858, a son of Jesse and Missouri Ann (Stallcup) Williamson, the father being a miller by trade. He was reared and educated in Sullivan county, Mo., remaining in that location until 1878 when he decided to try his fortunes on the Pacific slope. Accordingly he came west in that year and located at Mendocino City where he spent one year in the lumber section, but not content with his prospects for a future success, he came to Contra Costa county and rented a ranch upon which he engaged in the cultivation of grain. He met with a success which brought him financial returns sufficient to justify the purchase of a quarter section of land in 1888 from Mrs. Thomas Shannon. This property he continued to cultivate and improve and when it was all paid for he immediately purchased two hundred and forty acres more, all of this land being now devoted to the cultivation of wheat, barley and hay, the first named, however, occupying the greater part of his attention. Among the improvements which have added value to his property are a comfortable residence and commodious barn.

In California, November, 1888, Mr. Williamson was united in marriage with Elizabeth Shannon, a native of the state, and a daughter of Thomas Shannon, who is now deceased. They are the parents of seven children, namely: Nellie, William, John, Mabel, Aubrey, Francis and Leslie. Fraternaly Mr. Williamson belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a charter member of the Knights of the Macca-bees.

C. B. DRIVER. Identified with California not only by reason of a sojourn of more than twenty years in the state, but also by reason of his loyal devotion to the state's welfare and progress, Mr. Driver is typical of the twentieth century spirit of progress and enthusiasm which is bringing to California a foremost position among the states of our nation. He is a member of an eastern family, his parents, James A. and Mary J. (Smith) Driver, having been natives respectively of Maryland and Ohio. After some years upon an Ohio farm his father went as far west as Colorado, where he became a pioneer in the now well known and prosperous community of Greeley, and there for some years he engaged in farming and raising sheep. In 1883 he brought his family to California and settled on a small farm near Fresno. Here he spent the remainder of his days, dying in 1887, and since then his wife has made her home in Fresno. Of their ten children all but two are still living, C. B., having been born in Lorain county, Ohio, May 15, 1863. At the time of the family's removal to Colorado he was nine years of age, and his subsequent schooling was obtained at Greeley.

When twenty years of age, in 1883, Mr. Driver accompanied his father's family to California and settled at Fresno. Two years later he went to Oakland and there served an apprenticeship to the trade of stereotyping and electrotyping, which he followed in that city for some years. In 1889 he went to Australia and at Melbourne put in the machinery for an electrotyping and stereotyping plant, which he conducted for eighteen months. Returning from Australia to California, he resumed work at his trade in Oakland, but after two years discontinued that employment and took up the occupation of vineyardist at Fresno. After nine years in that county, in 1901 he bought one hundred and sixty acres of open land two miles south of Dinuba and in 1903 purchased another quarter section adjoining, so that he now owns three hundred and twenty acres. The entire tract is planted in vineyards, one-half being in Thompson's seedless grapes, while the other one hundred and sixty is in Muscats, with the exception of ten acres in Sultanas.

While in Australia Mr. Driver met and married Miss Jean E. Fraser, a native of Australia, and the eldest daughter of William and Jane (Stuart) Fraser, the latter a relative of James Watt. At an early age William Fraser left his native home in Scotland and tried his fortunes in Australia, where for years he was identified with the lumber business. At this writing he still makes his home there. In his family there are four daughters and three sons now living, all of whom remain in their home land with the exception of the daughter, Jean, in America. Of their union Mr. and Mrs. Driver have three children, Paul, Stephen and Ruth, who are being given excellent educations and the most thorough preparations for positions of responsibility in the social and business world. In religion Mr. Driver is identified with the Seventh Day Advent Church and for some years has officiated as a deacon of the congregation at his home town.

DAVID BROWN DUDLEY. Worthy of mention among the pioneer agriculturists of California who have attained success from a financial point of view is David Brown Dudley, residing near Los Banos, where he has a clear title to two highly-cultivated and well-improved farms. He is one of the progressive and energetic farmers and dairymen of this section of Merced county, and is complete master of the honorable calling which he is following, while his sterling integrity and upright manhood fully entitle him to the position which he holds in the estimation of the people of the community. A son of John Dudley, he was born, August 10, 1840, in Readfield, Me., of English ancestry, being able to trace his descent from the Duke of Dudley. His Grandfather Dudley served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war, after which he settled as a farmer in Kennebec county, Me., purchasing land in Readfield.

A life-long resident of Readfield, Me., John Dudley chose the independent calling to which he was reared, spending his days as a tiller of the soil. Patriotic and loyal as a citizen, he served in the war of 1812. His wife, whose maiden name was Polly Brown, was born in West Hampden, Me., and died on the home farm, in Readfield. She bore her husband twelve children, nine of whom grew to years of maturity, David Brown, the subject of this sketch, the youngest child of the household, being the only one now living.

Brought up on the parental homestead, David B. Dudley acquired his elementary education in the district schools, completing it at Kent's Hill Seminary. Thus equipped, he subsequently taught school several terms, turning his attention to farming during the long vacations. After the breaking out of the Civil war, Mr. Dudley, fired with the same patriotic zeal that inspired his ancestors, tried to enlist in a Maine regiment, but having lost the sight of one eye was rejected. In 1863, on account of ill health, he started for California, hoping in this sunny climate to regain his pristine vigor. Leaving New York on the liner North Star in November, he sailed by way of Panama, where he took passage on the ship Constitution, which landed him in San Francisco in June, 1864.

Going at once to Eureka, Cal., Mr. Dudley taught school there during the summer, and then entered the employ of a stockman, and for eighteen months was engaged in gathering up cattle and taking them in large herds to Bald Hill. Starting then in business on his own account, he located about fifty miles south of Eureka, where he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land in the Mattole country. To this he afterward added by purchase until he owned eight hundred acres of land, and on this ranch he was extensively and successfully engaged in dairying and stock-raising for a number of seasons. Leasing his ranch in 1878, Mr. Dudley started out on a camping expedition, and in the two ensuing years visited twenty-three different counties in this state. Subsequently locating in Pacheco, Contra Costa county, he purchased a ranch, and was there engaged in raising fruit, hay and dairying for seven years. Disposing of that property in 1892, Mr. Dudley came to Los Banos, intending to settle here permanently. Buying ten acres of alfalfa, lying north of the park, he enlarged and repaired the buildings, and embarked in the dairy business. He has been exceedingly prosperous in his undertakings, and has since bought adjoining land, having now one hundred and fifty acres, all under irrigation, and the most of it planted to alfalfa. He made improvements of great value on the estate, putting up windmills, and stocking his dairy with over one hundred head of cattle. Renting this large ranch in 1903, Mr. Dudley sold all of his cattle, and in 1904 bought a smaller farm, consisting of forty-five acres of land almost adjoining his other ranch, and is here busily and profitably engaged in raising alfalfa and dairying, his farm being one of the best in this locality.

In San Leandro, Cal., June 4, 1865, Mr. Dudley married Addie M. Bean, who was born in Readfield, Me., and came to California in 1865. She comes of New England Quaker stock, being a daughter of John Bean, and granddaughter of Joel Bean, prominent members of the Quaker Society of Maine. Her father, who followed the occupation to which he was brought up, was a woolen manufacturer and miller, and one of the brave soldiers of the war of 1812. He married Sophronia Dorr, who was born in New Hampshire, and died in Los Banos, Cal., at the home of Mr. and Mrs.

Dudley, at the venerable age of ninety years. Her father, Stephen Dorr, was a prominent attorney of New Hampshire, and served in the state legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Dudley are the parents of three children, namely: Chester D., in partnership with his father; Annie A., the wife of J. E. Smith, of Pacific Grove; and Serene S., wife of R. L. Miller, of Pacific Grove. Politically Mr. Dudley is a steadfast Republican.

JOHN M. VAN EMON. Born in Minnesota, near Stillwater, Mr. Van Emon is a son of Cyrus and Massah (Miller) Van Emon. His father was a native of Ohio, having been born near Youngstown. He was a son of Michael, who was a native of Pennsylvania and who settled in Ohio in 1805. The great-grandfather of our subject emigrated to this country from Holland and settled in Pennsylvania. Cyrus Van Emon followed farming in Ohio for several years, but later removed to Indiana, where he lived until 1857, when he located near Stillwater, Minn. There he continued farming until 1862, then going to Rice county, and in 1876 migrating to Linn county, Iowa, where he lived until 1884, the year of his arrival in California. Locating in Fresno county, he again engaged in farming. He died near Portersville in 1898, at the age of seventy-four years. His wife was born in Indiana, a daughter of Joshua Miller, a native of New Jersey. By her union with Mr. Van Emon she became the mother of seven children, all of whom are living, as follows: Phoebe, wife of John J. Smith of Portersville; Isabelle, wife of Thomas H. Smith of Portersville; Sarah D., wife of Charles Graham of Minnesota; Louisa, wife of William Maxwell of Fresno; John M., the next in order of birth; Walter S., who resides in Fresno, and William E., whose sketch will be found on another page of this volume.

John M. Van Emon first saw the light of day on January 22, 1858. He was brought up on his father's farm, attending the district schools and assisting in the labors about the home place until he was eighteen years of age. He then went to Iowa, where he remained until 1878, when he came to California. Locating in Tulare county he at once became engaged in farming, which occupation he has since followed with marked success. In 1880 he returned east and in Lisbon, Iowa, married Rosa A. Files. The next year he and his wife came to California and Mr. Van Emon homesteaded a ranch six miles north of Portersville, where he engaged in grain raising. Later he bought a farm on the Tule river, four miles west of Portersville. There he became a large stock-raiser and made his home until 1896, when he removed to the place which is his present place of residence. From time to time he has added to his first purchase until he now owns eleven hundred acres, all in the vicinity of Portersville. While he has, to some extent, engaged in the cattle business, his entire land is practically devoted to grain and at times he rents additional land, having upwards of five thousand acres in grain. He owns two combined harvesters and reapers, and when both are in operation it requires eighty head of horses and mules to propel them. His farm is within one-half mile of the Zante station on the Southern Pacific, making the shipping facilities equal to any ranch in the county. Recently Mr. Van Emon has subdivided three hundred and twenty acres of his land into ten and twenty acre tracts, which are on the market, the whole being the best of orange land. The ranch is supplied with a fine pumping plant of forty horsepower. This makes it possible to irrigate part of his property independent of ditch companies.

As a result of his marriage four children have been born, as follows: Ray C., Mabel G., now the wife of Glover Eldridge of Poplar; Maudie E., now living at home, and Earl E., also at home. The mother of these children died in 1904.

In politics Mr. Van Emon is a Republican, but aside from being a trustee of the Welcome school district, he has never cared to take part in public affairs. In the conduct of his own business he finds all that he can properly attend to. Fraternally he is prominently identified with the Odd Fellows, being a member of the Encampment of which he is past chief patriarch.

Mr. Van Emon is what the world styles a self-made man. He has succeeded in his ventures and is looked upon as one of the leading men of Tulare county. As a citizen he never fails to perform his part. Every movement tending toward progress has his hearty support. He is a firm believer in all that is modern, and is counted one of the most progressive men in the state. Much in the lives of such men is worthy of emulation. Much can be learned from the experiences of those who have fought their way alone and written the word "success" on the pages of time.

JOSEPH M. SMITH, cashier and manager of the newly incorporated Farmers' Bank of Selma, Cal., was born in Gibson county, Ind., February 20, 1874. Mr. Smith is the youngest of two children, being the only son born to W. L. and Annie J. (Calhoun) Smith. The parents were both born in Gibson county, Ind. The father, a man of scholarly attainments, followed teaching as a profession, not only in Indiana but in Santa Barbara, Cal., whither he removed in 1875. In later years he located in Fresno county and turned his attention to carpenter work in connection with farm pursuits in that locality, where he still resides. In 1887 he lost his wife, who died in Selma.

Joseph M. Smith had educational advantages above the ordinary, and his common school education was supplemented by a complete course in the Fresno Business College. It was there he secured the necessary training so essential to success in his after years. After leaving college, he entered the employ of the Wells Fargo Express Company, in Selma, where he filled a clerical position until 1890. The two years following were spent by him in Texas in farm pursuits, but returning to Selma in 1892, he resumed his former position in the office of the express company, and spent two additional years in their employ. In 1894 Mr. Smith first became identified with the banking business, becoming clerk and bookkeeper in the Bank of Selma, retaining his position until 1897. In January of that year he accepted a more lucrative position one step up the ladder, with the Farmers' National Bank of Fresno, where he filled the position of assistant cashier in an able manner until April, 1903, tendering his resignation at that time to assume the duties of his new position as cashier and manager of the Farmers' Bank of Selma.

By his marriage in Selma, Mr. Smith united his fortunes with those of Miss Georgia Nees, who was born in Missouri, and their home is brightened by the presence of one son, George G. Both Mr. and Mrs. Smith occupy a high position in social circles. In politics Mr. Smith is an adherent of the Republican party, having frequently been a delegate to county conventions, and served as city treasurer of Selma one term. He is a member and master of Fresno Lodge No. 247, F. & A. M., a member of Fresno Lodge of Perfection No. 6, Scottish Rite, and a member of Selma Lodge No. 309, I. O. O. F.

TIMOTHY HAYES. Well known as a successful farmer and stock-raiser, Timothy Hayes is extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits, and is one of the largest landholders in the vicinity of Visalia. A resident of California for thirty-five years, he has witnessed its almost marvelous development and progress, and has well performed his part in those grand transformation scenes that have changed the wild and uncultivated tracts of land into waving fields of grain, productive vineyards and fruitful orchards. A son of Timothy Hayes, Sr., he was born, March 10, 1859, in Wayne county, Pa., about ten miles from Honesdale.

A native of Ireland, Timothy Hayes, Sr., came with his parents to the United States when a lad of fourteen years, and lived for a time in New York City, going from there to Rosendale, on the Hudson river. He was subsequently engaged in farming in Wayne county, Pa., for a number of years. Migrating to California in 1870, he settled in Alameda county, and having purchased six hundred and forty acres of land in Livermore, in the valley, engaged in raising grain and stock, and likewise planted a vineyard. He was exceedingly fortunate in his undertakings, and resided on his ranch until his death, in 1900, at the venerable age of ninety-two years, being active and hearty until the last year of his life, retaining his physical and mental vigor to a remarkable degree. His wife, whose maiden name was Julia Carey, died in Livermore, in 1868. Of their twelve children, one daughter died in New York state, and eleven grew to years of maturity, all of whom came to California, and nine of these are still living.

The fifth child of the parental household, Timothy Hayes obtained his elementary education in the public schools of his native county, and after coming with the family to California, in 1870, here continued his studies, which he completed at Heald's Business College, in San Francisco. He subsequently spent two years in that city as shipping clerk for Hawley Brothers, and the following year followed farming in the San Ramon valley. Returning thence to Livermore valley, Mr. Hayes was there engaged in wheat growing for two or three seasons. Locating in Tulare county in 1885, he was for two years foreman on a ranch containing sixty-four hundred acres. Beginning farming on his own account in 1887, he first rented four hundred acres, and succeeded so well that he next took two thousand acres near Goshen. In 1890 Mr. Hayes made his first purchase of land in this county, buying forty acres of the land now included in his home ranch, and in 1891 bought an adjoining forty, giving him eighty acres in section 17. He has from time to time made many other investments in real estate, being now the owner of about twelve hundred acres, five hundred and forty of which are located in section 17, township 18 south, and range 24 east. He also owns all of section 20, and the southeast quarter of section 19. He is one of the largest grain and stock raisers of Tulare county, and is considered an authority on agricultural matters. He has two hundred and fifty acres sowed to alfalfa, a vineyard of ten acres, and an orchard containing thirty-five acres, in which he raises peaches and prunes of a superior quality. Aside from the management of his home farm Mr. Hayes operates a grain ranch of thirteen hundred acres south of Goshen. He runs four and five eight-horse teams, and has a combined larvester and thresher, which he keeps busy in the season. In addition to the holdings already mentioned Mr. Hayes also owns seven hundred and twenty acres of valuable land in Kings county, near Goshen, which is used as a stock farm. He pays much attention to the breeding of hogs and cattle, preferring the Short-horns and Durhams to any other grade of cattle. His home ranch lies six miles north and west of Visalia, and two miles from Goshen. He is interested in the Modoc Ditch Company, in which he is a director, and of which he has been president since 1900, and his entire ranch is subject to irrigation.

In Visalia Mr. Hayes married Elsie Hausch, who was born in Sonoma county, a daughter of C. Hausch, in whose sketch, which appears elsewhere in this volume, a more extended parental and ancestral history may be found. Mr. and Mrs. Hayes have two children, Horace and Helen. In national politics Mr. Hayes is a Democrat, and is a member of the county Democratic central committee.

SIDNEY J. SHANNON. A man of excellent business capacity and tact, enterprising and liberal, Sidney J. Shannon, an esteemed resident of Los Banos, is widely and favorably known throughout the length and breadth of the San Joaquin valley, his position with Miller & Lux as their land agent bringing him in contact with the leading men of this part of the state. A native Californian, he was born, August 27, 1868, at Fort Miller, near Millerton, Fresno county, a son of the late Hon. Jefferson M. Shannon. His paternal grandfather, Nathaniel Shannon, was born and bred in Kentucky, in early life moving from there to Marion county, Mo., where he cleared and improved a farm. Crossing the plains with ox teams in 1849, he located at Diamond Springs, Eldorado county, Cal., where he at once embarked in business as a butcher, thinking to make more money by supplying the miners with meat than in digging for gold. His career, however, was short, his death occurring a few weeks after his arrival in the late fall of 1849.

Born in Marion county, Mo., Jefferson M. Shannon was there brought up and educated. In the spring of 1850, following in the footsteps of his father, he crossed the plains to California, and not until his arrival on the coast did he hear of his father's death. Locating in Sonoma county, he carried on the butchering business there four years, meeting with good success. Settling on Chowchilla creek, in Fresno county, in 1854, he was employed for a time in stock-raising and dealing. Subsequently removing to Fort Miller, he was elected one of the early sheriffs of Fresno county, a position which he held two terms, being connected with the office of sheriff and tax collector until the removal of the office to Fresno. While a resident of Fort Miller he served one term in the state legislature. In December, 1873, he removed to Fresno, where he became connected with the land department of the Southern Pacific, or Pacific Improvement Company, as general town-site agent, having charge of the location of town sites in California, Arizona and New Mexico. He made wise investments in land, becoming owner of several vineyards, comprising hundreds of acres, and being among the largest raisin-growers of California. Removing to Alameda, in 1888, he continued as town-site agent until his death, June 8, 1902. He was a man of upright character, respected and honored by all, and was a prominent member of the Republican party.

Mr. Shannon married Rebecca M. Bailey, who was born in Jackson county, Mo., a daughter of Judge Gillam Bailey. Judge Bailey, a native of Kentucky, moved first to Missouri, settling as a pioneer in Jackson county. Coming across the plains to California in 1854, he located in Visalia, Tulare county, where he served as district judge for Fresno, Mariposa and Merced counties for several terms. He died in Fresno. Of the union of Hon. Jefferson and Rebecca M. (Bailey) Shannon four children were born, namely: Scott Ashman, of Fresno, managing the Fresno county property of his father; Idria, wife of W. E. Toms, of Alameda; Sidney J., the special subject of this sketch; and Leland S., of Alameda. The mother is still living, making her home at No. 1610 Central avenue, Alameda.

His parents removing from Fort Miller to Fresno in 1873, Sidney J. Shannon was there educated, completing the course of study in the public schools when but fourteen years old. Entering then the employ of Miller & Lux, at Dos Palos, he began work in a low position, but gradually worked his way upward, remaining with the firm until 1888. In January, 1889, removing to Alameda, Mr. Shannon accepted the position of office boy with the Pacific Improvement Company, and proved himself so efficient that he was promoted from time to time, soon becoming chief accountant, in which position he remained until April, 1901. Resigning at that time, Mr. Shannon has since served in his present position as land agent for Miller & Lux, in this capacity superintending the colonization of different places, laying out new additions to towns and having charge of the land sales throughout the San Joaquin valley.

In Alameda, Cal., Mr. Shannon married Johanna M. Brock, a native of Alameda, and they have one child, a daughter named Marie Margaret. Politically Mr. Shannon is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he is a member of Oak Grove Lodge, No. 215, F. & A. M., of Alameda; of Alameda Chapter, No. 70, R. A. M.; of Oakland Commandery No. 11, K. T.; of Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of San Francisco; a member and past president of Halcyon Parlor No. 146, N. S. G. W., of Alameda, and also a member of Fresno Lodge of Elks. Mrs. Shannon is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

R. M. OSBURN. The dairy industry, which has proved of incalculable benefit in the development of Stanislaus county, owes its inception and progress to a number of public-spirited men, among whom mention belongs to Mr. Osburn, residing one-half mile from Newman on the west side. When he came to this locality, in 1886, he bought forty acres of wild land under the ditch, and here he has built a residence, set out fruit trees and placed the land under excellent cultivation. Finding that hay could be raised profitably, he has gradually put all of the land in alfalfa, and since 1891 has made a specialty of the hay and dairying business. The dairy industry has proved a source of gratifying profit in Stanislaus county, and on his homestead may be seen one hundred head of high-grade Shorthorn Durhams, thirty of which are milch cows. The demands of his dairy interests were such that he found it advisable to purchase a tract of thirty acres adjoining his original purchase, and this gives him a total of seventy acres, which at its nearest point is one-eighth of a mile from Newman.

In Ontario, between St. Thomas and London, Mr. Osburn was born October 31, 1857, being a son of Hugh and Rebecca (McCully) Osburn, the former a native of Scotland, and the latter born near Dublin, Ireland. Upon starting out to earn his livelihood, Hugh Osburn left his old home and crossed the ocean to Ontario, where he settled on a farm. In 1865 he came across the plains to California and tried his luck at mining on the Frazier river and other localities, returning east via Panama and resuming farm work in Ontario. About 1881 he came to California a second time, but instead of seeking the regions familiar to him during mining days he established himself upon a farm in San Benito county. His last days were passed in Ontario, where his death occurred. In religion he was of the Presbyterian faith. His wife, who was the daughter of Robert McCully, a lifelong resident of Ireland, accompanied him to California, and died in Gilroy. Of their twelve children eleven came to California, and nine still survive, R. M. being fourth in order of birth. When a little less than eighteen, in 1875, he came to California and secured employment as a farmer near Salinas, Monterey county. Subsequently for many years he was employed by Henry Miller in Santa Clara county, and from there removed to San Benito county, where he embarked in stock raising and grain farming. With four other parties he rented Quien Sabe ranch, of twenty-four thousand acres, and during the ten years, beginning in 1881, that they retained the property, they paid an aggregate rental of $150,000. Before giving up his interest in that ranch he came to Stanislaus county, and in 1891 sold his ranching outfit in order to devote himself to enterprises in his present location.

When a movement was inaugurated for the establishment of a creamery Mr. Osburn was quick to see the advantages to be derived from such an industry, and gave it his enthusiastic support, becoming one of the original stockholders in the New Era Creamery Company, which erected the first of the creameries in the county. The name New Era did not prove a misnomer, for the starting of the plant inaugurated a new era of prosperity for the people, and made the dairy industry profitable. Not a little of the recent growth and development of the county is due to the dairy interests and enterprises, whose existence and success are dependent upon the operation of creameries. In politics Mr. Osburn is a believer in Republican principles. Since coming to the coast country he has been a student of the Spanish language, in which he has acquired such fluency that his services are often brought into requisition as an interpreter. He was married in San Jose, this state, his wife being Miss Annie Dunn, like himself a native of Ontario. Their children are Elmer, Robert, Ruth and Raymond.

CLEMENT J. McCULLAH. The keynote to the success of Clement J. McCullah is unflinching industry, to which might be added a love of home, and a desire to make those dependent on him both comfortable and happy. He has never been afflicted with towering ambitions, but has quietly pursued the occupation of soil tilling, for which he is admirably fitted, and in which he finds sufficient to meet his wants.

Mr. McCullah was born in Parker county, Texas, November 28, 1854, his father, John McCullah, being an early settler of that county. John McCullah was born in Tennessee, and when a small boy moved with his parents to Bond county, Ill., where he was reared to manhood and married, and from which place he departed overland with teams and household furnishings to Parker county, Texas. Evidently he found less than he expected to in the great cattle state, for after four years he journeyed back to Bond county. He is now living at Kingston, Cal., at the age of seventy-two years. Clement J. McCullah remained on the Bond county farm until his twenty-second year, and in 1876 came to California by way of Panama, bringing little with him save a strong constitution and willing hands. In what is now Kings county he found employment at ranch work for about four years, and at the end of that time had saved enough money to purchase his present farm of eighty acres six and a half miles northwest of Hanford. He has found alfalfa raising a paying branch of industry, and with the exception of a small dairy, devotes all of his land to it. He has a small family orchard and a garden in which the finest of vegetables grow, and his farm and buildings are neat and convenient, showing the thrifty nature of his owner.

Mr. McCullah is a Democrat in politics, but in local affairs is liberal, voting for the men best qualified to serve the common good. In Kings county he married Alice Smith, a native daughter of California, and they are the parents of six children, namely: Charles Albert, John Dobson, Henry Edward, Lucy Ellen, Neola Ida and Nellie Irene. The last named are twins. Mr. McCullah is a man of highest personal honor, and is esteemed and respected by the neighbors who have worked beside him in the struggle for a competence.

CHARLES PHILLIP SMITH is widely and favorably known as a representative farmer and dairyman. The son of Samuel A. Smith, an honored pioneer of this part of Merced county, he is a native son, a business man of ability, and a highly esteemed citizen. He was born near what is now Los Banos, September 6, 1874, being the youngest son in a family consisting of five boys and two girls. A brief parental history may be found elsewhere in this volume, in connection with the sketch of his father, S. A. Smith.

The early life of Charles P. Smith passed without especial incident. In common with the children of the neighborhood, he attended the district school, gleaming a practical knowledge of books, while on the home farm he labored industriously, becoming familiar with the science of agriculture. Wishing to enter a mercantile career, he was for two years engaged in the grocery business, being a member of the firm of Smith Brothers, in Los Banos. The occupation not proving congenial to his tastes, he sold out his interest in the store, and began the improvement of his farm of forty acres, which is situated one-half mile south of Los Banos. He was one of the first in this locality to check up and ditch his land, and has it now devoted to alfalfa and dairy purposes. Mr. Smith now manages his father's farm of two hundred acres, making a specialty of alfalfa-raising and of dairying. He has over two hundred head of cattle, mostly Holsteins, and milks about one hundred cows. His dairy is equipped with a separator, operated by steam power, and with all other needed machinery and appliances for a first-class dairy. He carries on a large business in this line of industry, shipping his cream to Oakland, where he receives the highest market prices. Politically Mr. Smith is a staunch Democrat. Until the disbandment of the Santa Rita Parlor, N. S. G. W., he belonged to the organization, having been one of its charter members.

GEORGE L. BRADY. Among the successful young business men of Dos Palos, Merced county, there are none possessing greater enterprise and energy than George L. Brady, now serving as postmaster, a position which he has filled with eminent satisfaction to all concerned for more than four years. He comes of old Virginia stock, and was born, September 19, 1867, near Muncie, Delaware county, Ind. His father, the late Jackson Brady, was born and bred in Virginia, but settled as a farmer near Muncie, Ind., where he resided until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Catherine La Rowe, was born, lived and died in Indiana. She bore her husband eight children, of whom three survive, George L., the seventh child in order of birth, being the only one on the Pacific coast.

Brought up in Delaware county, Ind., George L. Brady acquired his early education in the district school, spending the days of his boyhood and youth on the parental homestead, which was located about eleven miles from Muncie. After attaining his majority he had charge of the home farm for awhile, continuing thus occupied until 1889. Thinking in a newer country to enlarge his opportunities for acquiring wealth, he then went to Nebraska, and the following four years was a resident of Geneva. Migrating to California in 1893, Mr. Brady purchased land at Dos Palos, and, improving a good farm, was here engaged in agricultural pursuits for several years, being quite successful. In 1900 he was appointed postmaster of Dos Palos; taking the oath of office July 1, 1900, he has performed the duties devolving upon him in this capacity with commendable fidelity and ability. The work of the office has been enlarged since he assumed his position, rural free delivery in this vicinity having been established in September, 1900. Since 1903 Mr. Brady has also served as fireman at the Dos Palos station of the Pacific Coast Oil Company.

In Shickley, Neb., Mr. Brady married Julia

Ernest Barber

Brown, a native of Illinois, and they have one child, Edna Brady. Mrs. Brady assists her husband in his duties at the office, being assistant postmaster. In his political affiliations Mr. Brady is a true blue Republican. While living in Nebraska he joined Geneva Lodge No. 79, F. & A. M., and is now also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and a member and past officer of the Knights of the Maccabees.

EMMET BARBER. The lineage of the Barber family is traced to the Puritans of Massachusetts. One of the name was a brave soldier of the Revolution, and his son, Reuben Barber, went to the front during the war of 1812. After the close of the first struggle with Great Britain the soldier returned to his home in Massachusetts and later (whether before or after the birth of his son cannot be definitely ascertained) removed to Vermont, where he took up farm pursuits. The next step westward was made by his son, who removed to New York state about 1809 and settled in St. Lawrence county. William, son of Reuben Barber, was born at Middlebury, Vt., in 1804, and was five years of age when the family joined the tide of emigration drifting toward the west. Throughout his entire life he remained a resident of that vicinity, where he was a prosperous farmer near Canton and a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church until his death in 1864. By his marriage he was united with Eliza Barnes, who was born in Connecticut in 1818, and accompanied her father, Truman Barnes (the son of a Revolutionary soldier), to New York, settling in St. Lawrence county, where she married. At this writing she makes her home in Cresco, Iowa, where after a busy and useful existence she is quietly passing the twilight of life's day, cheered by the hope which religion gives.

In the parental family of eight children all but one attained mature years and six are now living, Emmet being the fourth son in order of birth. He was born at Canton, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., September 10, 1849, and in boyhood was given public-school advantages, supplemented by attendance at the St. Lawrence Academy. In 1867 he went to Ohio, where he worked for a year on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad out of Dayton. A year was then spent in New York, but in 1869 he returned to the same railroad in the bridge and carpentering department. In 1870 he went west as far as Iowa and settled in Cresco, where he worked at farming during the summer months, and then attended the Cresco high school. While teaching in a district school during the next two years he studied surveying and civil engineering, and in 1873 and 1874 acted as deputy county surveyor of Howard county, Iowa. The latter part of 1874 he was employed on a railroad survey in Wisconsin, after which he resumed teaching in Iowa. The year 1875 found him a resident of Decorah, Iowa, where for two years he was deputy county surveyor and a practicing civil engineer. In 1880 he removed to Knox county, Neb., and followed surveying and civil engineering, with headquarters at Niobrara. A year after going to the state he homesteaded a quarter section of land. Removing to Creighton, Knox county, in 1883 he worked as a surveyor and also engaged in the real estate business, besides acting as manager of the Creighton Pioneer from January, 1884, to April, 1886.

From October 1, 1887, Mr. Barber dates his residence in California and his first identification with Tulare, where he has engaged in surveying and civil engineering, with a specialty of irrigation work. For fifteen months he was employed in the Poso irrigation district and for six months had charge of construction work for the Tulare irrigation district. As chief engineer, in 1893, he had charge of the construction work of the Tule river irrigation district, a task that occupied eighteen months, then made a trip with team to Mexico and return looking for a location for a colony. For two years, beginning in 1895, he was employed by Miller & Lux in building canals in Kern county. On his return to Tulare in 1897 he resumed professional work and also took up the real estate and insurance business. An important responsibility which he filled was the dividing up of the Waukena tract of two thousand acres, also the surveying and dividing of the Laurel tract of fourteen hundred acres. At this writing he represents the Central California Realty Company, also the Atlas and Liverpool, London & Globe, and German Alliance Fire Insurance Companies. Elected the first city engineer of Tulare, he established the city grades and did other work of an important nature while filling the office from 1888 to 1892.

When the McKittrick oil fields were opened Mr. Barber surveyed the first tract of oil lands there and did other pioneer work in the district. On the organization of the first oil company he was retained to survey their lands and assisted in the management of the property. After several good wells had been found on the Shamrock oil claim this claim was sold to the Associated Oil Company for $50,000. Eight hundred acres of oil land are still in the company's possession and he remains a stockholder and director. He is a stockholder in the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Tulare, owns an interest in more than two hundred acres of land in this vicinity (a part of which he owns individually), owns two dairies individually and a one-half interest in another dairy, was interested in the establishment of the Tulare Co-operative Creamery Association that bought and improved a creamery in this city, and was also interested in organizing and starting the Tulare Rochdale Company.

While living in Iowa Mr. Barber was married at Cresco to Miss Ella A. Smith, who was born in Wisconsin and died in Nebraska. The children of their union are named as follows: Alma B., who is married and makes her home in Petaluma, this state; Louis and Luther (twins), the former professor of schools in Cortlandt, S. Dak., and the latter a traveling salesman of Denver, Colo.; and Mrs. Blanche Frisby, who resides at Hulett, Wyo. The marriage of Mr. Barber and Mrs. Belle Perrine, a native of Monroe, Wis., was solemnized at Omaha, Neb., in 1883; Mrs. Barber died in California, August 31, 1901, and their only son, Earl, passed away December 22 of the same year. The present wife of Mr. Barber was Mrs. Mollie B. Gould, a native of Missouri, who was united with him at Tulare October 5, 1902. The connection of Mr. Barber with the Episcopal Church dates back to 1877 and for years he has officiated as a vestryman. In early manhood he voted the Republican ticket, but a study of the relations between capital and labor and the conditions that depress the poor in great cities has caused him to adopt socialistic views. In fraternal relations he has been identified with Masonry since his initiation in 1871 into the blue lodge at Cresco, Iowa, and at this writing he holds membership with Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M., at Tulare; while at Cresco he was also raised to the chapter degrees and since coming west he has transferred his membership to Tulare Chapter No. 71, R. A. M. January 7, 1905, he was installed as master of Tulare Grange, P. of H., No. 198. No resident of Tulare is more interested than he in the development of its resources. The success he has attained he attributes to the possibilities this valley affords, and the opportunities he believes to be as great now as in years gone by.

JAMES H. HAMLETT. Located on a ranch of six hundred and forty acres, thirteen miles east of Merced, is the residence of J. H. Hamlett, where, since 1808, he has been engaged in general farming. He was born in Pike county, Mo., August 24, 1863, a son of William and Altha (Burford) Hamlett, natives of Virginia and residents of Missouri from their early married life. The father is a successful farmer there and owns a quarter section of land.

Upon his father's farm in Missouri James H. Hamlett was reared to manhood and until twenty-five years of age he remained at home assisting his father. He then went to Texas, where he farmed for some time, after which he returned to Missouri. In 1894 his attention was attracted to the west, at which time he came to California. His first location was in Mariposa county, where he remained for four years and then came to Merced county. Here he rents a ranch which is devoted to the raising of grain and stock, meeting with success in both of these branches of agriculture.

In California, August 23, 1896, Mr. Hamlett was united in marriage with Miss Rhoda Ryan, a native of Mariposa county and a daughter of James Ryan, an early settler of that county. Mr. Hamlett is a Democrat in politics. He and his estimable wife are held in high esteem by their friends and acquaintances in the community in which they reside.

EDWARD GUY WILSON. Occupying an assured position among the venerable and well-to-do citizens of Fresno county is Edward G. Wilson, a veteran agriculturist. He is the owner of a choice and well-appointed ranch near Selma, where he is spending the later years of his long and varied life in ease and comfort. A native of England, he was born June 24, 1819, in Bingley, Yorkshire. His father, Dr. Thomas Wilson, was born in Yorkshire Center, England, and there began the practice of his profession. Removing to Bingley after his marriage, he continued there as a physician until his death, at the age of seventy-one years. His wife, Jane Tenent, was a native of Yorkshire, also, and spent her entire life in England. Of the three sons and one daughter born of their union, Edward G., the special subject of this sketch, was the third child.

Having completed the course of study in the grammar schools of Bingley, Edward G. Wilson served an apprenticeship at the tinsmith's trade. He was a musician and leader of the band and served during the Crimean war in the First Royal Lancashire Militia. A skilled mechanic, and possessing considerable inventive talent, he began the manufacture of brass musical instruments and of sewing machines. The first sewing machine that he made was most intricate, having fifty-six needles to be used in making figures, and cost him five hundred pounds sterling. After being in business for himself three years, Mr. Wilson disposed of his interest in the firm for twelve hundred pounds. Prior to this, in 1857, he went to Australia, where he mined for gold two years, and was afterward employed in the manufacture of machines. Immigrating to California in 1878, Mr. Wilson engaged in fruit growing in Petaluma, buying five acres of land for $1,500, but a few years later selling it for $2,000. Locating in Fresno county in 1885, he purchased ten acres of land lying one mile northeast of Selma, on the line of the Centerville and Kingsburg irrigating ditch, and has from it developed a productive fruit and raisin ranch, which yields him an annual income of $800.

In England, in 1854, Mr. Wilson married Margaret Ann Crossley, who was born in Yorkshire, England, and died, in 1884, in Petaluma, Cal. Five children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, namely: Alice M., Albert E., Edgar G. (deceased), Emily J. and Harry C. Albert E. Wilson, the oldest son, was born in Keighley, England, May 30, 1872, being but six years old when he came with his parents to America. With his brother and sisters, he remains at home with his father. He is an industrious, progressive agriculturist, owning a valuable ranch of eighty acres, of which fifteen acres are devoted to the culture of vines, twenty acres are set out to trees, and five acres are sowed to alfalfa.

HON. WILLIAM L. WILLIAMS. The postmaster of Madera is a member of an old and honored Welsh family and was born at Milford-Haven, the largest natural harbor in the world, situated in Pembrokeshire, on the southwest coast of Wales. His father, John Williams, of Welsh birth, married Fannie Lloyd, also a native of that country. In the spring of 1869, seeking a new home for the family, he came to the United States and settled at Nanticoke in the mining regions of Pennsylvania. Shortly after his arrival a memorable disaster occurred whereby more than one hundred men and boys were entombed in a mine that was on fire. The horror-stricken spectators of the disaster, not knowing the fate of those within the mine, sent down a dog in a cage and were encouraged when it was brought up alive. Two men then volunteered to undertake the work of rescue and were sent down, but when the cage came again to the surface both were dead. Undeterred by this calamity, two more men volunteered to descend. One of these was John Williams. He stayed below twenty-one minutes and found the men and boys dead in a heap, all naked, having taken off their clothing to use as a barricade against the smoke. On being brought to the surface he was overcome and passed into a state of coma. When he recovered consciousness he found himself in a morgue. He remained in Pennsylvania until 1891, when he settled with the John Brown colony in Madera and now owns twenty acres near this city. When the smelter was building here he hauled brick for its construction and while engaged at this work his team became frightened and ran away, throwing him to the ground. For six weeks he remained unconscious. Skilled physicians in San Francisco, who examined the case, were baffled by it and confessed their inability to be of any assistance. At the end of that time he regained consciousness and soon recovered. Notwithstanding his age (he was born in 1837) and the many hardships he has experienced, he retains a degree of health scarcely to be expected and works almost as constantly as in his younger years. He and his wife became the parents of six children, four of whom are living, all in Madera.

The oldest member of the family circle was William L., who was born July 25, 1860. In the fall of 1869 he and the others in the family joined his father, who had preceded them to the United States. At the age of nine years he was put to work in the breaker as a slate picker. Two years later he was sent into the mines as door boy, then made a driver and next a runner, finally becoming a miner. In 1886 he left the mines to enter school, for he was ambitious to gain an education. With the money he had saved he paid his expenses in the Bloomsburg normal school, from which he was graduated in 1888, having completed the regular three years' course in two years. At his graduation he received the degree of B. E. He remained in Nanticoke, where he was employed as principal of the school until 1891. Meanwhile, in the fall of 1888, on the Republican ticket he was elected to represent Luzerne county in the state legislature and served in the session of 1889.

On leaving Nanticoke in 1891 Mr. Williams came to California and secured employment in his profession at Madera, where for eleven years he was a teacher and principal. In the fall of 1902 the board of supervisors appointed him expert bookkeeper to examine the county books, and this work occupied his entire attention during the winter. In February of 1903 President Roosevelt appointed him postmaster of Madera and on the 1st of April he took the oath of office, since which time he has given his attention to the duties of his position. Just prior to his appointment there had been a number of candidates and the determination with which each faction supported its candidate caused much ill-feeling. In order to settle the difficulty J. C. Needham proposed that the candidates be dropped and the different factions unite on another Republican. This was done. Both sides solicited Mr. Williams to become a candidate and he consented, although prior to that he had no idea of entering the race.

During his residence in Nanticoke Mr. Williams married Mary Hughes, who was born in Glamorganshire, Wales. They have three children, Percy, Maude and Ethel, of whom the two eldest are high-school students. The family is identified with the Madera Baptist Church and Mr. Williams is a member of its board of trustees. He was made a Mason in Madera Lodge

No. 280, F. & A. M., and is further connected with the Woodmen of the World. Though no longer actively engaged in teaching, his interest in educational affairs remains as deep and strong as in his earlier years. For six years he was a member of the Madera board of education and during four years of that time he officiated as its president. On two occasions the Republican party placed him in nomination for the office of county superintendent of schools, but he was defeated with the balance of the ticket, the county being strongly Democratic. From 1894 until 1900 he served as secretary of the county central committee of his party and he was also secretary of the congressional convention at the time that Congressman Needham was first nominated to represent this district at Washington. Movements for the benefit of his home town, including the Chamber of Commerce, receive his support and encouragement, and he may always be relied upon to aid all such to the extent of his influence and ability. Thoroughly devoted to the interests of this part of California, he is one of those public-spirited citizens whose coming from the east has meant so much to the development and growth of the state.

HENRY CLOW, one of the most prominent citizens of Le Grand, Merced county, has been interested in farming for many years and since 1808 has conducted a livery, feed and sales stable in Le Grand. He caters to the traveling public, having a fine equipment of horses for ladies, saddle horses and up-to-date vehicles for the transient trade.

Born in Defiance county, Ohio, October 31, 1855, Mr. Clow is a son of Abraham and Maria (Vigerson) Clow, the former born in Defiance county, September 13, 1827, and the latter a native of Germany. At the age of thirteen years she immigrated to America with her brother, who located in Ohio. When Henry was two years old his parents moved to Fort Dodge, Iowa, locating on a farm, where the son received his education in the common schools.

In 1876 Henry Clow came to California and in Mariposa county followed stock-raising for a few years prior to locating in Merced county in 1880. In the vicinity of Le Grand he began raising wheat and barley upon fourteen hundred acres of rented land, giving his attention to this branch of agriculture for fourteen years. He subsequently moved into Le Grand and engaged in the livery business. He built the Commercial hotel, which he afterward sold. He now owns the building in which were located the lodge rooms of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; the Knights of Honor and the Le Grand hotel. In addition he owns other valuable real estate in Le Grand, including a comfortable residence.

In Mariposa county Mr. Clow was married to Lucinda J. Kinser, a native of Kansas, and to them have been born six children, namely: Elsie, the wife of E. A. Graham, of Point Richmond; Edward, deceased; Bessie, Harry, Edith and Elmer. Politically Mr. Clow is a faithful adherent of Republican principles, and at all times exerts his influence in favor of his chosen party. Considerate and thoughtful for others, he has every claim to the title of gentleman, and his popularity is richly deserved.

LE GRAND, unlike many other towns that have sprung up in the west during the last few years, had many natural advantages to offer as inducements to settlers, and as a result its growth has been steady and permanent. Situated in the center of the most fertile spot of the San Joaquin valley, a few years ago the town site was a part of the Dickinson estate, but the building of the San Francisco & San Joaquin Valley Railway through the eastern part of Merced county opened a market for the hitherto unknown country and consequently lands formerly devoted to wheat were divided into small tracts to sell to homeseekers. In this way the splendid lands of Mrs. Luella Dickinson and others were thrown open to settlers upon such terms as made it possible for the most humble family to own a home.

Through the generosity of Mrs. Dickinson the right of way was granted to the railroad company on the condition that they erect a depot and freight station, the town site, however, to remain a part of the property of the Dickinson estate. As a result a very handsome depot and warehouse were built, and in July, 1866, the embryo town took definite shape. In September of the following year the town site was surveyed and laid out and the growth of the town from that time has been phenomenal. What Chicago has accomplished on an immense scale has been done by Le Grand in miniature, for almost in a single night the transformation from a dreary ranch into a bustling town took place, and today there stands on the same ground a prosperous town, a town of steady, rapid, substantial growth, that gives no evidence of falling off in the future, but on the contrary shows every sign of continued prosperity and growth.

The Le Grand Improvement Club has not only been instrumental in inducing residents to set out trees and otherwise make permanent improvements, but through their efforts, $300 was raised to buy the right of way through two pieces of property in order that the road into Mariposa county could be thrown open. The opening of this road has been of untold benefit to the citizens of Le Grand and the whole of Mariposa county is now easy of access from the town.

The soil of the surrounding country is a sandy loam susceptible of irrigation without baking, but by far the greater part of the land is very fertile and productive without irrigation. Surface water can be obtained at a depth of from twelve to fifteen feet, and by agreement with the Dickinson estate the railroad company supplied all the water necessary for town purposes for two years, for which purpose they erected a substantial tank with a capacity of fifty thousand gallons. The place now contains several hotels, general merchandise stores, drug stores, livery stables, blacksmith shops, general provision stores, harness shops, dressmaking parlors, barber shops, churches, schoolhouse, hall and a number of handsome residences. In the surrounding country can be seen growing side by side all the different varieties of citrus and deciduous fruits, which prove to the most skeptical the truthfulness of all that is claimed for this section, showing the capability of the soil without water, save the natural rainfall. The same can be truthfully said not only of these particular lands, but of the thousands of acres owned by Price Brothers, the Ipsom estate, the Turners, the Burchells, and in fact all the lands surrounding this prosperous town, which has inducements offered by no other part of the state.

CHARLES M. LUMEREAU. Now retired from the active cares which have so long engrossed his attention, Charles M. Lumereau is numbered among the representative citizens of Portersville, Tulare county, where he is making his home. A native of Jefferson county, N. Y., he was born January 21, 1838. His father, Lucius Lumereau, was a native of Albany, N. Y., and as a lad demonstrated the qualities inherited from pioneer ancestry. When only nine years of age he drove a team for his father, and at twelve drove a government team during the war of 1812. In young manhood he mastered the trade of carpenter, and after his marriage in Jefferson county, N. Y., removed to Syracuse, where he followed his trade. In 1850 he came as far west as Bureau county, Ill., where he remained for four years, when he started for Nebraska. Meeting with a wagon train bound for the more remote west, and being disappointed in Nebraska, he joined them and traveled to Salt Lake City. There he spent the winter and in the spring continued the journey to California. He located in El Dorado county, where he carried on his trade, until injured by a nail striking him in the eye, causing total blindness. His death occurred in that location. His wife, formerly Eunice Brogham, was a native of Ostego county, N. Y., and the daughter of Alexander Brogham, of Vermont, who located in New York state and carried on shoe-making, farming and the conduct of a hotel until his death. The family was distantly related to Lord Brougham, of England. Two sons and two daughters blessed this union, of whom Charles M. is the third in order of birth.

Charles M. Lumereau received his education in the common schools in New York and Illinois. He was sixteen years of age when he accompanied his parents across the plains, and after his arrival he found employment in the mines of El Dorado county. After five years (in 1859), he located in Tulare county, and prospected and traveled for his health on the desert, a year later going to Mono county, and in 1861 to Lind valley, with the exception of three months spent as clerk in a store, remaining there two years. In November, 1863, he went to Los Angeles and in the hope of benefiting his health made a trip to the Colorado river shortly afterward. Later he drove an ambulance at Drum Barracks for three months, after which he returned to Visalia. During the year 1864 he worked in a sawmill on Greenhorn mountain, two years later went to Pajaro valley and farmed, and in 1867 removed to Mountain View, Tulare county, and in partnership with three others put up a sawmill. This they conducted for a year, when they sold out. Mr. Lumereau then engaged in saw-milling in conjunction with the farming of his mother's claim, located on the north fork of the Tule river, continuing so occupied until 1878. In that year he sold the mill and shortly afterward traded land which he had pre-empted in 1877 in Pleasant valley, for one hundred and sixty acres on the Tule river, four miles west of Portersville. He farmed in that location until 1880, the following year homesteading one hundred and sixty acres near Tipton, which he left in 1897, moving back to the Tule river ranch. In December, 1903, he located in Portersville, renting his ranch, which is considered one of the most fertile in this section, all being under irrigation ditches, while he also irrigates from the river.

In 1876, at Mountain View, Tulare county, Mr. Lumereau was united in marriage with Margaret E. Frame, a native of Guernsey county, Ohio. She accompanied her parents to California in 1859, her father, James Smith Frame, of Ohio, bringing his family across the plains to Nevada and later to El Dorado county, Cal., where he engaged in mining. In 1876 he came to Tulare county and located at Mountain View, where he engaged in farming. He finally made his home with Mr. Lumereau, where his death occurred in 1883, at the age of sixty-one years. His wife, formerly Susan C. Webster, a native of Virginia, still survives him, making her home with Mr. Lumereau and his wife at the age of seventy-six years, still enjoying the best of health. Mr. Lumereau and his wife have reared two children, namely: Albert A. Foster, employed in the ticket office for the Southern Pacific Railway, of San Francisco; and Lillian Lottie, who is the wife of W. H. Simms, of Lindsay, Cal. Fraternally Mr. Lumereau is a member of Tulare City Lodge No. 306, I. O. O. F., of Tulare, and Portersville Encampment No. 89. Politically he reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

W. A. MOORE. Notwithstanding hardships and discouragements, of which he has experienced not a few, Mr. Moore, by force of persistence and persevering industry has risen to a position of influence among the business men of Madera and is now president of the Moore-Plate Company, Incorporated. Of remote Scotch-Irish descent, he is a descendant of one of the pioneer families of New Jersey and his great-grandfather was a native of that state, but removed to Northumberland county, Pa. The grandfather, Abraham, and father, Charles Moore, were natives of Northumberland county and both learned the mason's trade; but, while the former followed it as a life occupation, the latter early turned therefrom to farm pursuits and now resides on the property which has been his homestead since 1858. During the Civil war he was unable to serve, but was in sympathy with the Union, and had two brothers who went to the front as soldiers. His wife, Jane Thomas, daughter of a Quaker family of Northumberland county, died in Pennsylvania in March of 1903.

In a family of seven children, all still living, W. A. Moore was fourth in order of birth and is the only one to settle in California. He was born near Sunbury, Northumberland county, Pa., February 27, 1862, and as a boy aided in the cultivation of the home farm. However, his tastes did not lie in the direction of agriculture. Ambitious to acquire a thorough education, he attended Union Seminary and after teaching school for two years used his earnings to pay his expenses in the Bloomsburg normal school, from which he was graduated in 1885 with the degree of B. E. For three years afterward he engaged in teaching in his home county. The convention of the National Educational Association, held in California in 1888, led him to come to the coast and he was so pleased with the country that he abandoned his plans for returning east. After traveling over the southern part of the state he settled on a ranch at Piru City, Ventura county, but a year later went into town and secured a clerkship in a store. Three years later he embarked in business for himself, but after a year sold out in 1893. The sale proved an unfortunate one, as the purchaser failed and Mr. Moore lost $1,500.

Coming to Madera in 1893, Mr. Moore became a partner with C. M. Petty in the grocery business. At first they carried only a small stock and conducted business with a very limited capital. During the financial depression which swept over the country from 1893 to 1897 it was only by the exercise of the greatest economy and constant care that they were able to continue in business. However, as better times came to the country and they became more widely known for integrity of dealings and honesty of purpose, they reaped a more gratifying success. In January of 1895 the store was moved to its present location, where a two-story structure is occupied, 25x100 feet in dimensions. Here may be found a complete assortment of groceries, hardware, queensware, paints, oils, etc. In January of 1903 the Moore-Plate Company was incorporated, with Mr. Moore as president, and in that capacity he has the management of the growing business. At the time of the incorporation of the Madera Match Company he became interested in it and became treasurer of the original company, serving in that capacity until its plant was destroyed by fire.

In San Jose, Mr. Moore married Nettie Falconer, who was born in Nova Scotia and died at Madera in 1899, leaving three children, Walter LeRoy, Estella and Charles A. The second marriage of Mr. Moore was solemnized in Madera and united him with Freda C. Kicker, who was born in St. Louis, Mo. Of that union there is a daughter, Marie. The family is connected with the Presbyterian Church of Madera, in which Mr. Moore is treasurer, an elder and trustee, also assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school.

The Madera Chamber of Commerce is one of the local activities which he supports, believing it to be an influence for the upbuilding of the town and county. Though not a partisan, he is staunchly Republican in his political views, while fraternally he associates with the local organization of Woodmen of the World.

FLEMING McLEAN. Among the prominent vineyardists of the Malaga district is Fleming McLean, owner of an eighty-acre ranch five miles southeast of Fresno, and one of the most successful in his line in the county. Fifty acres of his ranch are devoted to raisin grapes, averaging about a ton to the acre. The balance of his ranch is under orchard and alfalfa, and is under the direction of Mr. McLean, who thoroughly understands the scientific aspect of horticulture, as well as the possibilities of soil production in his adopted state.

Of Scotch ancestry on the paternal side, Mr. McLean is descended from an ancient Virginia family, his mother having been Hannah, daughter of Jacob Weese, both of whom were natives of the Old Dominion. His father, William, was born in Virginia, as was also his paternal grandfather, Daniel, while his paternal great-grandfather, the founder of the family in Virginia, was born in Scotland. William McLean followed in the footsteps of his forefathers and devoted his life to farming, his death occurring in Virginia at the age of fifty-six years.

The youth of Fleming McLean was uneventfully passed on the paternal farm until the breaking out of the Civil war. In 1863 he enlisted in the Confederate army in Company E, Sixty-second Virginia Infantry, and served until 1865 in Virginia, under command of Captain Hill. After the downfall of the Confederacy he returned to his home in Virginia, and in 1867 removed to Scotland county, Mo., and engaged in farming until the spring of 1869. He then boarded a steamer bound for the Isthmus of Panama, reaching San Francisco April 1, 1869, and soon after went to Dixon, Solano county. There, and in Colusa county, he remained for fourteen years.

In 1883 Mr. McLean came to Fresno county and located on his present ranch, almost immediately returning to Scotland county, Mo., where he farmed for six years. In April, 1890, he returned to his farm in Fresno county, and has since bent his efforts towards its wisest and most substantial upbuilding. In Canton, Iowa, Mr. McLean was united in marriage with Tenna M. Smith, who, at the time of her death, left a daughter, Mina F. Mr. McLean is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is a Mason.

ORLANDO D. BERRYHILL. For nearly thirty years a resident of California and for twenty-two years a resident of Fresno county, Mr. Berryhill has demonstrated the possibilities of the agriculturist's life. His success is attributed not alone to his industry and singleness of purpose, but to his keen foresight and good judgment in selecting the most profitably grown crops. He has found by experience that both climate and soil are adapted to fruit growing in his locality, and this is particularly so regarding raisin grapes and alfalfa.

Born in Barry county, Mo., in April, 1849, O. D. Berryhill is a son of M. V. Berryhill, who was a native of Alabama and a farmer by occupation. He went to Missouri in the early days of the history of that state and later to Arkansas, and it was in the latter state that he died at the advanced age of eighty-two years. In 1875 O. D. Berryhill came to California to seek his fortune and for a few months was located in Sonoma county. In 1876 he went to Kings county and upon leased land engaged in raising wheat until 1882, when he found a more favorable location in Fresno county. Purchasing a ranch south of his home place from the Southern Pacific Railway Company, he lived upon it for three years, when he sold his right and purchased two other farms north of his present home, where he farmed for twelve years. Again selling, he purchased the farm of eighty acres upon which he now resides, four miles south of Sanger, and he also owns forty acres one mile north. Of the home place forty acres are devoted to the raisin grape, thirteen acres to other fruits, and twenty-seven acres to alfalfa. January 12, 1879, Mr. Berryhill was united in marriage in California with Melissa Myers, a native of Missouri and daughter of Conrad Myers. They have a family of seven children living, as follows: Floyd H., Eugene A., Homer Lee, Edith (the wife of Henry Estes), Claude C., Leonard R. and Augusta Pauline. Zoia Alice, the first born, died at the age of six years.

LEONARD P. ST. CLAIR. Whatever measure of success Mr. St. Clair has achieved may be attributed to his unaided exertions, for he was orphaned at an early age and has made his own way in the world ever since youth. He was born in Allegheny county, Pa., November 20, 1831. After the death of his parents he accompanied his grandfather, Philip Covert, to Athens county, in the southern part of Ohio, where he aided in the cultivation of a farm in summer and during the winter months attended district school. In the spring of 1848, when sixteen years of age, he went to Iowa and secured employment as a farm hand near Burlington. Next he was engaged on a farm near Mount Pleasant. In the spring of 1850 he went to Burlington for the purpose of learning the blacksmith trade, but after he had worked in a shop there about a year he determined to come to California. Returning to Mount Pleasant he prepared for the long journey across the plains. In March of 1852 he started overland, with a party of eleven, having three wagons drawn by oxen. He walked most of the distance, driving one of the ox-teams.

Upon arriving at the headwaters of the Feather river, August 1, 1852, Mr. St. Clair began prospecting and mining, but after a few weeks he left with the intention of going to the mines of Australia. However, upon reaching Sacramento he gave up the trip and spent the winter of 1852-53 in Auburn and vicinity. In the spring of 1853 he engaged in mining on the Middle Fork of the American river, but after a short time went to Volcano, Eldorado county, where he engaged in the butchering business. On selling out in 1856 he bought a tannery on Otter creek in company with Judge Aaron Bell, but the venture did not prove successful and the following year he resumed the meat business. In 1859 he went to Red Dog, Nevada county, where he engaged in butchering for a year or more. His next location was on Dutch Flat, in Placer county, but he soon left there for his former location and remained at Red Dog until 1865, when he went back east. After two years, in 1867 he came again to California and opened a meat market at Dutch Flat, at the same time buying and selling cattle.

The fall of 1887 found Mr. St. Clair a resident of Bakersfield, where he has since made his home. For a year after settling there he conducted a meat market. On disposing of that business he turned his attention to securing gas and electric lights for the city, and acted as manager of the Bakersfield Electric Light & Gas Company until 1902, the success of which is largely due to his assiduous devotion and painstaking care. In that year he sold his stock in the company and has since lived retired. His home, erected by himself, is a beautiful residence and stands on the corner of Fourteenth and H streets. Its presiding genius is his wife, formerly Mary F. Dunn, whom he married in 1869 and by whom he has four children: Leonard P., Jr., Everett S., Franklin C. and Cora May, all at home.

JOHN W. KELLY. Only those who have lived in Kern county, and are familiar with the motley crowd which comprises a considerable portion of its inhabitants, can arrive at an appreciation of the enormous responsibility of the man elected to serve its interests as sheriff. There are but two cities in the state of California where more civil and criminal cases are tried than in Bakersfield, Kern county. These are San Francisco and Los Angeles. In the former, the law allows eighty deputy assistants, in the latter ten, and in Bakersfield there are but four. Numerous causes contribute to the lawlessness of the region, among them being the oil fields and mines, which attract large numbers of wealth seekers, many of whom bring with them lurid careers, and a propensity for breaking out afresh under the favorable circumstances among which they find themselves in the west. The history of criminology in the county is both startling in its nature and persistent in its duration, in consequence of which, the high official depended on to bring order out of chaos, and maintain a wholesome respect for the law, is necessarily a man of great force of character and unflinching determination. An average of from fifty-five to sixty prisoners are guests of the state, and in their aggregate embody the sharpest and most desperate of offenders.

John W. Kelly, the present sheriff of Kern county, is a Democratic politician who has effected his rise solely through the medium of sterling worth and faithfulness to trusts imposed. He is a Missourian, and spent his youth on the farm in Cooper county, where his birth occurred October 19, 1861. His first educational training was received in the country school near his home, and subsequently he attended a private school at Boonville with his second cousin, Ex-Gov. L. V. Stevens, of Missouri. His childhood was one of toil and privation, for after the death of his mother, when he was eight or nine years old, he was obliged to shift for himself, and to depend upon his innate strength and fine instincts for guidance. He contracted the western fever in 1884, and after locating in Newville, Glenn county, worked by the day, and later became interested in a stage line operating between Newville and Redbluff, a distance of forty-five miles. Those were desperate times, and the stage-driver took his life in his hands in the same way that he did in the days of the discovery of gold and the rush of early argonauts. After a year of stage-driving he engaged in farming in Colusa, now Glenn county, until 1895, and then repaired to Randsburg, which was then making a start as a mining center. He was one of the first to place any faith in its future, and remained there in active mining for several months, in time purchasing property, which he still owns.

Mr. Kelly's active political career began in 1897, when he was appointed constable of Randsburg, a position maintained until his election to the office of supervisor in 1900. Upon being elected sheriff of Kern county in 1902, he resigned the supervisorship, and has since devoted himself uninterruptedly to making the life and property of citizens as safe here as elsewhere in the state. He is admirably adapted for his work, possesses authority of manner, and while humane in his tendencies, and always willing to help a man to better things, he knows no mercy for the habitual evildoer. During his maintenance of his present office he has been called upon to perform dangerous service in the interests of good government, not the least of which was his position as leader of a posse which surprised a desperado in the Chinese quarter, April 19, 1903, and succeeded in shooting him only after he had added to his crimes the killing of two of the officers under Mr. Kelly. In Glenn county, Mr. Kelly married Ida Perry, a native of California. He is one of the prominent men in fraternal circles of Kern county, and is identified with the

James A. Brantree.

MRS. J. A. CRABTREE

Masons, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Eagles, all of Bakersfield. Mr. Kelly is a brave, tolerant and broad-minded citizen, a keen reader of human nature, and an ardent worker for the best welfare of Kern county.

JAMES A. CRABTREE. Among the earliest pioneers of Tulare county, James A. Crabtree has been identified with the development, growth and material upbuilding of this section for nearly a half century. A native of Jefferson county, Ill., he was born November 13, 1829. The family traces its ancestry to England, when two brothers, banished from their native land, came to America and located in Virginia. The first to leave Virginian soil was Isaac Crabtree, a native of the Old Dominion, who became a pioneer farmer of Tennessee and later of Illinois. In his family was a son, J. B. Crabtree, who was born in Tennessee. In young manhood he enlisted for service in the war of 1812, serving at New Orleans as a member of the life guard of General Jackson, who as a boy had made his home with the Crabtree family. Coming safely through the perils and adventures of war, J. B. Crabtree returned to civic life as a farmer in Illinois, preferring agricultural pursuits to the trade of hatter, which he had learned. He eventually removed to Benton county, Ark., thence to Newton county, Mo., remaining in the latter location for four years, when he settled in Lamar county, Tex., and engaged as a stockman and hatter. In 1852 he brought his family across the plains, crossing the country by teams to Durango, thence packing across the mountains to Mazatlan, then by boat to San Diego. The remainder of the journey was made on the steamer Ohio to San Francisco. A desirable location was chosen for a home at Santa Cruz, but the family later removed to San Juan, Monterey county, where they remained until 1857. In that year James A. Crabtree located in Tulare county, where he engaged in the stock business. In 1860 his father, J. B. Crabtree, located in Tulare county, and in 1864 homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres on the site of the soda springs at Springville, which town he laid out. Later he sold the springs and passed the remainder of his life in retirement, living to be eighty-three years old. His wife was formerly Rebecca Wilkerson, a native of Tennessee, and a daughter of Thomas Wilkerson. She died on the home place in Tulare county at the age of seventy-four years. Of their family of nine children, four sons and one daughter are living, namely: Rebecca, the wife of J. H. Thorp, of Napa; James A., of this review; J. F., located on the Kings river; W. N., on the Tule river; and E. J., at Bakersfield.

The boyhood years of James A. Crabtree were spent principally in Texas, receiving his education in private schools in Hopkins and Cherokee. He was twenty-three years old when he accompanied his father across Old Mexico to California, remaining with him in his residence in Santa Cruz, San Juan and Tulare counties, engaging in the stock business on the lands adjacent to the Tule river. For many years he remained occupied as a stockman, when he began prospecting and mining, opening the White Chief mine at the headwaters of Kaweah, which he still owns. Adjoining that is the Silver Lake mine and the Lady Franklin mine, both of which are fine silver properties. Of late years he has sought retirement from active cares and is making his home on his farm of one hundred and sixty acres located two and a quarter miles east of Portersville, in which town he had previously made his home. Seventeen acres of his ranch is devoted to navel oranges in full bearing, while the entire property is fine orange land, all being under irrigation, as he has a fine electric pumping plant. He is also interested in the Pioneer Ditch Company.

At Plano Mr. Crabtree was united in marriage with Paulina Moreland, a native of Jackson, Mo., who came with her father, Zachariah Moreland, to California, in 1849. She died January 12, 1903, at the age of sixty-one years. She was a devout member of the Christian Church, although her husband is a Methodist. Of the five children born of this union two are living, namely: Thomas, a farmer living at home, and William, a farmer at Rocky Ford, both of whom own considerable alfalfa land. A public-spirited citizen, Mr. Crabtree has taken an active interest in public affairs, being one of the organizers of the cemetery association at Portersville, and was for several years a director. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. As a pioneer Mr. Crabtree has many recollections of the early days, interesting alike to old and young,—to those who participated in the stirring events and to those who are profiting by the courage and energy of the first settlers of this region. He recalls the days when the plains abounded in deer, elk, bear, panther, etc., and the many adventures which he had when only courage and presence of mind saved his life. Today the fields are dotted with orange groves, orchards and prosperous farming lands, all eloquent of the changes which the years have wrought.

ALBERT H. DEAN. One mile north of Fowler is located the well-improved ranch of Albert H. Dean, consisting of forty acres, twenty-two of which is given over to the cultivation of grapes, seven to a peach orchard, and the remainder devoted to general farming. Mr. Dean has been the owner of this property since January, 1882, when he came to California and located in Fresno county, purchasing the ranch which he has since brought to rank with the best in this section of the country. Born in Indiana August 15, 1849, he is the son of Harmon R. Dean.

Harmon Dean was a native of Virginia and the son of John Dean, also of that state, whose ancestors had emigrated to the western world from Germany. Harmon Dean removed to Indiana with his parents when only four years old, in years of maturity engaging in an agricultural life and marrying Catherine Evens, a native of Indiana and daughter of Samuel Evens, an emigrant from Wales. The remainder of the years of Mr. and Mrs. Dean were passed in the Hoosier state, and there Mr. Dean died at the age of seventy-eight years, his demise occurring in Dearborn county. Albert H. Dean was reared upon his father's farm until he had attained the age of twenty-two, when he married Martha Allen and engaged in agricultural pursuits for himself. He remained in Indiana until 1876, when he came as far west as Osborn county, Kan., continuing his farming operations until January, 1882. On that date he sought a home in the state of California, becoming the owner of his present property, since which time he has devoted himself assiduously to its proper cultivation and has met with the returns which follow close application in any line.

His first wife having died in February, 1895, Mr. Dean was married in 1896 to Mrs. Emma L. (McKittrick) Radley. By his first wife he has two daughters, namely: Ida, wife of J. S. Niswander, of Fresno county, and Emma, wife of D. S. McCullaugh, of Fowler. Politically Mr. Dean is identified with the Republican party and fraternally belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church and for six years has been chairman of the board of trustees.

CHARLES WILLIAMSON. With a justly won popularity and esteem, Charles Williamson is rounding out the years of a well spent life as a vineyardist of the beautiful and productive county of Fresno, where he has made his home for nearly a quarter of a century. A native of Scotland, he was born August 23, 1831, a son of David and Johanna (Henderson) Williamson, and was reared upon the paternal farm until he was twenty years old. Attracted by the manifest advantages of the western world, he came to the United States in June, 1852, and located first in the state of Pennsylvania, remaining three years, when he came as far west as Illinois. In the latter state he engaged in coal mining for a like period, after which he settled in Missouri and followed farming. In 1862 he once more took up the march westward and became a resident of Nevada, working in the Comstock mine for many years and winning for himself a position of prominence in the county wherein he resided. Becoming interested in the fruit growing districts of California, he came to this state in 1881 and purchased a ranch of twenty acres located about four miles southeast of Fresno on Cherry avenue, devoting this land to the cultivation of grapes and various other fruits, as well as alfalfa. He has made a success of his agricultural work in the county and has built up for himself a competence and a very desirable home among the pleasant and prosperous surroundings of one of the finest counties in the state.

Mr. Williamson has been thrice married, his first wife being Elizabeth Perry, to whom he was united in Missouri, and his second, Asenath Geach Gay, whom he married in Virginia City, Nev. By his present wife, formerly Jessie L. Gibson, he has one son, Charles F. In politics Mr. Williamson is a staunch Republican and has always been active in the promotion of the principles he endorses, while a resident of Nevada serving as sheriff of his county for two years.

MARCUS L. DEAN. In reviewing the lives of the substantial and representative citizens of Fresno county, we call attention to Marcus L. Dean, who is not only a practical farmer and orchardist, but a firm business man in every particular, a gentleman of quiet tastes, of exceptional worth, and one who is esteemed by all who know him. He first became identified with agricultural pursuits in Fresno county in March, 1878, and for a number of years thereafter he rented land near what is now Sanger and carried on farm pursuits. In 1888 he purchased his home place of eighty acres in Bethel school district, about two and one-half miles southwest of Sanger. In addition to improving and beautifying his place, Mr. Dean accumulated capital and in 1902, by additional purchase, he acquired eighty acres directly opposite his home place, thus making his farm one of the most productive farms in this locality. Planting eighty acres in vines, he grows the raisin grape quite successfully, and his peach orchards cover a tract of forty-five acres, containing some of the choicest varieties grown.

In tracing the ancestry of Marcus L. Dean, we find him to be a member of a worthy southern family and a son of William and Annie (Lilly) Dean, both of whom were natives of North Carolina. His father, a farmer by occupation, removed to Mississippi in 1858, and for eleven years followed farming in that state. In 1869 he found a more suitable climate and location for a home in Arkansas and for many years was an esteemed resident of that state. He was a Democrat in his political views. He died at an advanced age in February, 1900. Born March 6, 1855, in Anson county, N. C., Marcus L. Dean was taken to Mississippi by his parents when but three years old, and spent his boyhood days upon his father's farm. He attended school and improved every opportunity to add to his stock of knowledge and became equipped for his life-work, being in his fifteenth year when the family removed to Arkansas.

At the age of twenty-three he left home to seek his fortune and spent the following six months in Colorado, working for a month or so in the mines adjacent to Denver. In October, 1877, he proceeded to California and after a short time spent in San Francisco he went to Placer county and worked for a time in the wood camps. But with keen foresight he once more returned to the occupation of his youth, this time in Fresno county. By his marriage in California, Mr. Dean was united with Mrs. Amanda Edwards, who was born in Tennessee. Fraternally Mr. Dean is a member of Sanger Camp No. 265 W. O. W. In his political affiliations he supports men best qualified for office regardless of party lines.

BENJAMIN F. COKLEY. Self-made in the best sense implied by the term, Benjamin F. Cokley, a prominent vineyardist of Paige district, Fresno county, has brought his own success by the application of energy and industry with which he has devoted himself to the accumulation of a competence. A native of Sumner county, Tenn., he was born September 10, 1859, a son of William Cokley, who owed his nativity to Robinson county, of the same state. He married Martha Lawrence, also of that state, whose father, Lammy Lawrence, was a native of Virginia. William Cokley was a farmer, and both himself and wife died early in life, leaving Benjamin F. Cokley an orphan at the age of twelve years. Reared to manhood in the family of an uncle, he was trained in the practical duties of a farmer. He remained with him until attaining the age of twenty-two years, when he came to California, locating, in 1882, in Fresno county, where he engaged in farm work on King's river. For twelve years he was actively engaged in this work, and having accumulated sufficient money to warrant his enterprise he came into possession of the property upon which he has since lived, that being the year of 1897. He has forty acres of land devoted to the cultivation of grapes, orchard and the raising of hay. He also has sixteen acres in alfalfa in the Malaga district, and twenty acres in the Garfield district devoted to vines and peaches. Politically Mr. Cokley is a Democrat and fraternally is identified with the Woodmen of the World.

JOHN J. SCHLITZ. Like the majority of men gifted with speculative ability, John J. Schlitz has experienced his moments of financial elation and depression, and on several occasions has won and lost fortunes which would have maintained an average family in comfort for the remainder of its days. Unquestionably one of the most capable grain buyers and dealers in Kern county, his present position as buyer for the G. W. McNear Company affords ample scope for his exhaustive knowledge of the grain resources of this section of the state, knowledge gained through practical management of a grain farm of fifteen hundred acres, and years of study along his chosen occupation. He has been with the present concern since 1898, and during certain prosperous years has purchased as high as a hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of grain. The company has four warehouses between Bakersfield and Tulare, and carries on one of the most extensive businesses of its kind on the Pacific coast.

A representative German-American citizen, Mr. Schlitz is a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and was born December 2, 1835. According to the custom of the country, he learned a useful trade, apprenticing to a lace maker for three years, with which assurance of a livelihood he immigrated to the United States, arriving in New York in September, 1852. A year later he went to Philadelphia and worked at his trade for a couple of years, and in 1855 sailed around the Horn to San Francisco, reaching there August, 2. His first occupation in the west was as an assistant in the construction of the first starch factory in Berkeley, for the firm of J. Everding & Company, and after its completion he was employed in the factory for a year. He then worked on a farm until 1859, when he became interested in mining, and ineffectually sought to enlarge his fortune at Dutchflat for one season. His next venture was as manager of a dairy ranch in Contra Costa county, and in 1866 he engaged in a general merchandise business at Walnut creek, Contra Costa county, a venture which netted him twenty-five thousand dollars, when he sold out in 1876. Later on he engaged in quicksilver mining speculation in Napa county, and in one year lost all that he had.

Removing to Oakland, Mr. Schlitz became manager of a produce business until 1881, and then rented a ranch near Fresno for a couple of years. In 1883 he went to Tulare and operated a grain warehouse for three years, and in the meantime had purchased a three hundred and twenty acre ranch in Tulare county, where he raised his first crop of grain in 1884. He continued in grain raising with fluctuating success until 1898, often having as many as fifteen hundred acres under cultivation. He still owns his ranch in Tulare county, near the Kern county line, but found that grain raising, when conducted exclusively, did not pay. In keeping with his line of business and public spirit, Mr. Schlitz became one of the organizers and the secretary of the Delano board of trade in 1903. From time to time he has taken an active interest in Republican politics, serving as justice of the peace for twelve years in Walnut creek, for two years in Fresno, and for four years in Tulare county. He has been a notary public for several years. Mr. Schlitz is identified with Delano Lodge No. 309, F. & A. M., and Tulare Chapter, R. A. M. His marriage occurred in 1868, which united him with Mattie A. Jones, a native of Contra Costa county, who was born in 1847. Six children have been born of this union, of whom the oldest is deceased. Lizzie, the second child, is the wife of Charles S. Eaton, of Tulare; Mabel is the wife of H. D. Zimmerman, a large sheep raiser of Tulare county; Juanita is the wife of R. M. Miller, of the vicinity of Delano; Nellie is the wife of A. B. Bullock, of Reno, Nev.; and Frank is a rancher in Tulare county. Mr. Schlitz bears an honored name in the community, and is regarded as one of the liberal-minded, generous and public-spirited citizens of Delano.

ROBINSON R. PORTER. A thorough business man and a highly respected citizen of Malaga, R. R. Porter is conducting a general mercantile establishment as well as acting as postmaster of the town. The family of which he is a member came originally from England, the grandfather, William Porter, a native of Virginia, being the first born upon American soil. Later in life he removed to Elizabeth county, Ky., and there William Pike Porter was born. He married Nannie Robinson, also a native of the state. He removed to Lewis county, Mo., and abandoned his work of brick mason for that of farming, continuing so employed until his death at the age of sixty-eight years.

Born in Lewis county, Mo., February 17, 1868, R. R. Porter was reared and educated among the surroundings of his birthplace, remaining on his father's farm until attaining the age of twenty years. In 1890 he came to California and located in the Malaga district, Fresno county, where he followed farming for three years, after which he engaged in the general merchandise business in Malaga in partnership with Frank S. Bagley. Disposing of his interests a little later he bought forty acres of land, where he engaged in raisin culture for six years. Returning to Malaga he purchased the store of Mr. Bagley in 1902, since which time he has carried on a successful business in the mercantile life of the community.

Mr. Porter was married February 17, 1892, to Rose McCann, a native of Marion county, Mo., and daughter of Thomas McCann of Kentucky. They are the parents of the following children: Maurine, Beth, Roberta and Thomas. In his political preference Mr. Porter is a Democrat. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World, being a member of the Fresno lodge. In his religious convictions he subscribes to the doctrine of the Baptist Church.

PERCY B. FULTON. The efficient postmaster at Dinuba, who has filled this responsible position since November of 1897, is a descendant of old Virginian ancestry and a member of a family prominent in the early settlement of the west. His father, Rev. Samuel D. Fulton, was born in Ohio, where the grandfather, John Marks Fulton, M. D., a native of Botetourt county, Va., engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery for a long period. Early in life he completed his classical education and supplemented the same by the study of the law, which he practiced in Weston, Mo., and also as a member of the law firm of Bixler, Williams & Fulton, at Virginia City, Nev., during the balmy days of the rich Comstock mine. On his return to Missouri he resumed professional work at Weston, but later removed to Quincy, Ill., and there was ordained to the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. For years he served as a missionary on the frontier and established churches and schools in various parts of New Mexico and Arizona. From New Mexico he removed to Oregon and accepted the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Dallas, Polk county. His next and last pastorate, which covered a period of several years, was at Hollister, Cal., and from that place he came to Dinuba, where he died in 1896 at the home of his son. During much of his active life he was connected with the Masonic fraternity, whose principles of brotherhood and charity he believed to be in harmony with the divine teachings.

The marriage of Rev. Samuel D. Fulton united him with Adelaide A. Buell, who was born in New York City, July 31, 1838, and was the eldest child of John T. and Louisa Pamela (Cook)

Jim Hultead

Buell, the former born in New York City, June 19, 1812, and the latter born in Bridgeport, Conn., July 13, 1817. Her grandfather, Abel Buell, was a sea-faring man and a ship officer in the merchant marine service. In October of 1839 John T. Buell left his eastern home and migrated to Burlington, Iowa, where he was soon afterward chosen chief of police and continued in that capacity until shortly before his death in 1900. During the early history of the town he was one of its most influential citizens, and few were more closely associated with its growth than he, nor did any cherish a deeper interest in its development. Of his marriage there were six children, and the eldest, Adelaide Augusta, Mrs. Fulton, now makes her home with her only son, Percy B., in Dinuba, and in her family there are also two daughters.

At Weston, Mo., Percy B. Fulton was born July 25, 1867. In boyhood he attended the public schools of Quincy, Ill., and later became a student in Highland University, at Highland, Kans. During 1886 he went to New Mexico and settled at Aztec, San Juan county, where he held the office of postmaster for two years. While there he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law. On the Republican ticket in 1889 he was nominated as a member of the constitutional convention of New Mexico, but removed before the election to Oregon, consequently resigned as nominee. After settling at Dallas, Ore., in 1889, he engaged in the real estate and insurance business. During 1893 he came to California and bought a fruit ranch at Dinuba, where he not only engaged in fruit-growing but also carried on a real estate and insurance business. When he was appointed postmaster under President McKinley this was a fourth-class office. In the fall of 1903 it became a third-class office, and about the same time two rural mail routes were started from here into the adjoining country. January 1, 1904, he was again appointed to the office under President Roosevelt. In addition he continues to sell real estate and negotiate insurance policies. In 1896 he was appointed justice of the peace and two years later was elected to the office for a term of four years, at the expiration of which he was re-elected to the position.

While living at Aztec, New Mexico, Mr. Fulton married Miss Irma Koontz, who was born in Florence, Colo. Her father, Hon. John A. Koontz, was a member of the Colorado state legislature several terms, later founded the town of Aztec in New Mexico and at this writing is a resident of Palo Alto, Cal. By his marriage Mr. Fulton has four children, Howard, Gladys, Lester and Muriel. In religion he and his family are identified with the Presbyterian Church. Here, as in the other places where he has resided, the Republican party has received his staunch allegiance, and at this writing he is a member of the county central committee. In the Board of Trade he is a member of the executive committee. Fraternally he is secretary of the Court of Honor and past officer in the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JASPER NEWTON HALSTEAD. In Mr. Halstead we find one of the oldest pioneer settlers of Tulare county. Coming here in 1854 he has seen this country change from a wilderness to a thickly populated district. In his time cities have grown up, the railroads have come as have also the telegraph, the telephone, electricity, in fact everything that makes us the advanced nation of the world. When Mr. Halstead located here the only means of travel were ox teams. Neighbors were few and far between, yet there was a spirit of brotherly love and helpfulness that can no longer be found. At that early date men were taken for what they really were. If a stranger appeared, no questions were asked and as long as he acted the part of a man he was honored and respected by all. In this great march of civilization Mr. Halstead has played a prominent part. He has ever been ready to lend a helping hand and when there were need of men to do men's work Mr. Halstead was there. A native of Indiana, he was born near South Bend April 30, 1836, a son of Timothy and Annie (Dendend) Halstead. His father was born in New York state and on going to Indiana settled near South Bend, where he resided until 1845, when he removed to Kirksville, Mo., remaining there until 1853 and that year he brought his family across the plains, six months being the time necessary for this long journey. The first year in California was spent near Stockton and in October, 1854, he located near Visalia, where he purchased a farm of three hundred and twenty acres on which he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. There he died at about the age of eighty years, as did also his beloved wife.

Jasper N. Halstead attended the pioneer schools in Indiana and Missouri and in 1853 crossed the plains with his parents, driving four yoke of oxen most of the way. Coming to Tulare county in 1854 he remained at home for a time, but later became engaged in the stock business and the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land. Meeting with success in this line of business, he became known as one of the leading stock men of the county, following this occupation until January, 1892, when he removed to Goshen and engaged in the livery business, which he has since conducted, although he still owns eighty acres of land three miles from Goshen, where he raises considerable stock.

Mr. Halstead has been twice married, his first union being with Miss Mary Cason, who was born in Missouri. She bore him one child, Edward, who lives in Goshen. For his second wife Mr. Halstead married Miss Georgie Bacon, a native of Massachusetts and a daughter of George and Charlotte (Sawyer) Bacon. George Bacon, a soldier in the Civil war, was killed the first year of the war, 1861, at the age of twenty-three years. As a result of this marriage three children have been born, as follows: Burt, who is in the employ of the Southern Pacific at Bakersfield; Mabel and Walter, at home.

In politics Mr. Halstead is a true-blue Republican and while he has never been very active, he has at all times been deeply interested in local affairs, taking an especial interest in educational matters. Although now an old man and with but a few more years to live, Mr. Halstead is active and takes as much interest in affairs as he did fifty years ago. It is a matter of special pride that the famous historian and writer, Murat Halstead, is an own cousin of Mr. Halstead, and yet, while he has fine antecedents on both sides of the family, he has never risen in the world through any support he has received from them. What he has accumulated has been the natural results of his own honest efforts. He is one of the vast army of men who crossed the plains to this new country that is fast becoming thinned in ranks, each year adding to the list that has responded to the last call. Tulare county honors and respects Mr. Halstead. Here he has hosts of friends who wish him many years of continued happiness.

ADONIJAH BICKFORD. Well known as a sturdy and successful agriculturist, Adonijah Bickford of Merced is also distinguished as one of those brave and heroic pioneers who, by their industry, energy and pluck, assisted in developing the resources of that country bordering on the Pacific coast, and paved the way for civilization's grand march across the continent, thus making possible California's present prosperous condition. Little do the young people of this day and generation realize their indebtedness to those men of brain and muscle. The descendant of an old and much-respected New England family, Mr. Bickford was born November 24, 1820, in Penobscot county, Me. His parents, Nathaniel and Susan (Stevens) Bickford, were both born and brought up in New Hampshire, but after their marriage settled on a farm in Maine.

Educated in the district schools and reared on the parental homestead, Adonijah Bickford remained at home until attaining his majority. When the news of the discovery of gold on the Pacific shores reached the eastern coast of our continent, his ambition was aroused and in 1851 he came by way of Panama to California, landing in San Francisco. He proceeded directly to the gold fields of Placer county, and for eighteen years thereafter was a gold digger. In 1863 he went to Arizona prospecting for a company at the Walker and Weaver diggings, and after his return to this state again mined in Placer county. During the eighteen years that he was thus employed, Mr. Bickford had the proverbial luck of a miner, being a rich man one day, and the next day perhaps losing all of his wealth. On the whole, however, he was quite successful, accumulating considerable money.

Coming to the San Joaquin valley in 1869, Mr. Bickford lived for three years in Tulare county. In 1872 he came to Merced, and the next seven years had charge of the Eagle hotel. Then, renting a section of land four miles south of Merced, he was engaged in grain raising for a number of years. In 1880 Mr. Bickford purchased his present ranch, which is favorably located, about one-half mile southeast of Merced, and contains one hundred and fifty acres of rich and productive land. He is here successfully carrying on the various branches of agriculture, raising grain and stock. From the time of settling here until 1904 he also rented five hundred acres of adjoining land, which he managed in connection with his own, but this tract he has recently given up, giving his entire attention now to his own ranch.

In the fall of 1859 Mr. Bickford married Eleanor Adeline Kerr, who was born in Mansfield county, Ohio, October 4, 1842. She is the daughter of Col. William Kerr, who raised a company and was commissioned an officer for the Mexican war, and subsequently, in 1855, brought his family to California. Mr. and Mrs. Bickford have one child, Lillian M., wife of Edward Mugler, who was the first white child born in Merced county. Mr. and Mrs. Mugler have two children, Eleanor Caroline and Frederick Riley. Politically Mr. Bickford is a staunch Republican, and fraternally he has belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for forty-five years. He was one of the organizers and is one of the directors of the Merced Security Savings Bank.

FRANZ MISCH. Prominent among the younger generation of agriculturists who are meeting with commendable success in their undertakings is Franz Misch, who, as superintendent of the Colony farm for Miller & Lux, is carrying on an extensive and lucrative business. He is a man of good executive ability, well versed in the science of agriculture, and holds an assured position among the leading men of the community. A native of Germany, he was born, November 19, 1870, in Breslau, where he attended the public schools and the gymnasium. Working with his father, he subsequently learned the miller's trade, after which, at the age of eighteen years, he became bookkeeper for a large milling establishment in Breslau.

Leaving the Fatherland in 1892, Mr. Misch immigrated to the United States, locating first in Chicago, Ill. A month later he came to the Pacific coast, and in San Francisco completed his education, attending the Lincoln evening school, and studying under private tutors. Going to Firebaugh in 1893, he accepted a position as foreman over a gang that were leveling and ditching for alfalfa. The following year he was made foreman on the Colony farm, and in 1895 was promoted to the position of manager, which he has since filled with signal ability. The ranch was almost in its original condition when he assumed its management, but he has labored unremittently in its improvement. He has broken much of the land, fenced and ditched it, and has leveled and checked three thousand acres, placing it in alfalfa. In the orchards that he has set out he raises a variety of choice fruits, including peaches, apricots, apples, pears and plums. He likewise pays much attention to stock-raising, making a specialty of Short-horns. Mr. Misch also owns a valuable ranch of thirty-five acres in the Dos Palos Colony, on Eucalyptus and Elgin avenues, where he has an apple orchard of twelve acres, the remainder of his farm being devoted to alfalfa.

In Dos Palos in 1901 Mr. Misch married Annie May Christian, who was born near Stockton, Cal., a daughter of Martin Christian, proprietor of the Dos Palos hotel, and into their household three children have been born, namely: Madeline M., Alvina E. and Annie F. Politically Mr. Misch is a steadfast Republican, and takes great interest in party affairs. He is a member of the board of directors of the West Side Union high school at Los Banos. Fraternally he is a member of Mountain Brow Lodge No. 82, I. O. O. F., of Los Banos.

WILLIAM E. VAN EMON. A native of Minnesota, Mr. Van Emon was born near Stillwater, July 1, 1864, a son of Cyrus and Massah (Miller) Van Emon. His early days were spent on his father's farm near Faribault, but in 1876 he went with his parents to Iowa, settling near Lisbon. There his attendance at the public schools was followed by a course in Cornell college at Mount Vernon. In 1883 he started out for himself and came to California, securing employment on the farm of his uncle, J. W. Miller, near Portersville. Seven years later, in 1890, he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land, which is his present home and where he has since resided. The place is now known as the "Oakdale Dairy," which branch of farming Mr. Van Emon has made a decided success. He has nearly fifty cows and supplies the local trade in Portersville with milk and cream. His place is located five miles northwest from Portersville and is well improved. He disposed of seventy acres of his land in 1896. Mr. Van Emon is also engaged in the stock business on the Tule river.

In 1891 he was united in marriage with Miss Jessie Payne, a native of New York state, and a daughter of James H. Payne, who is a resident of Portersville. To this union have been born five children, as follows: Roy E., Merle Eva, Irving, Bernice and Grace E.

Fraternally, Mr. Van Emon is a member of the Woodmen of the World, while in politics he supports the men and measures of the Republican party, but he has never cared to take a very active part in public affairs, preferring rather to devote his time to his own business. He is a self-made man in the full sense of the word.

JOHN WILCOX MILLER. Probably no name in Tulare county is more widely or favorably known than the one introducing this review, and no work of this nature would be complete were mention of this honorable pioneer and successful business man to be omitted. A '49er, Mr. Miller came to the state when all this country was a barren waste of land, and where one now sees beautiful orchards and well cultivated fields was then an endless expanse of sand that no one thought would ever be used for any purpose.

A native of Indiana, he subsequently removed to Missouri, being one of the very early settlers of that state. It was in the early '30s that Mr. Miller took up his residence there, and St. Louis was merely a French trading post, numbering but a few hundred souls. Not being satisfied with the prospects in Missouri, he soon after went to Texas, locating near Paris, where he erected a tannery and engaged in the tanning business until 1849, the year of his arrival in California. The trip overland was made with ox teams, and none but those who have made a similar journey can tell of the hardships these venturesome pioneers endured. After spending some time in the mines, Mr. Miller engaged in the hotel and livery business at Marysville. Later he went to Havila, and still later to Visalia, where he conducted a livery stable on the corner that is now occupied by the Harrell block. Subsequently he sold this business and started in to raise sheep. This was about 1868, and his first ranch was located near where the Welcome school house now stands. Soon after he purchased the old Lewis place, on which he located. From that time on he began adding to his landed possessions until at one time he owned ten thousand acres of valuable land, six thousand five hundred acres of which was located on the Tule river. For many years he was one of the largest and most successful sheep raisers in the state, but during the last few years of his life he devoted more of his time to general farming and grain raising. It is quite natural that a man so prominent in a business way should take a leading part in public affairs, but Mr. Miller never had the desire to hold office, although he was deeply interested in the success of the Republican party, which organization he always supported by his voice and vote.

In fraternal relations he held membership with the Masons, in which lodge he attained the Royal Arch degree. His death was caused by an accident in 1886, which happened during a visit to Portersville. He was driving a spirited team which became frightened and ran away; the wagon struck against some obstruction, and he was thrown from his seat against the post of the bridge; this resulted in internal injuries from which he died twenty-four hours later. His death was a sad blow to the whole county in which he had lived so many years, and the funeral was one of the largest ever held in the vicinity of Portersville.

Such, in brief, is an outline history of this man who took such an important part in the developing of the county. He was public-spirited to the last degree and never withheld his support from any movement calculated to be of material benefit to the county or state. Had he desired he could have been elected to any office within the gift of the people, and his circle of friends was co-extensive with his circle of acquaintances. Such men are history makers, for they blaze the way for later day developments, and while the present generation has done much to perpetuate the memory of the pioneer, these noble men and women will never receive too much credit. But for them California would never have been developed, and what is now one of the greatest states in the Union would still be a wilderness.

HORACE GREELEY BROWN. The original acreage purchased by Mr. Brown shortly after his arrival in Tulare county in 1894 has been increased by subsequent purchases and at the same time the entire tract has been brought under cultivation and improved with a substantial set of farm buildings. The twenty acres constituting his first purchase has been placed under cultivation to an orchard and improved with buildings erected by himself and in addition he owns an adjoining tract of seventy-five acres on the Lindsay road, about two and three-quarters miles east of Tulare. Of this tract thirteen acres are in an orchard, eighteen acres in salt grass for pasturage and the balance in alfalfa, irrigated by the Farmers' ditch. The dairy business forms a leading industry, but in addition Mr. Brown engages in bee culture on an extensive scale, having over one hundred colonies of bees on his home place, and an apiary of equal size on the Lindsay road.

Very early in the history of Indiana William Brown left his native state of Pennsylvania and settled in the wilds of the new region, where he proceeded to evolve a farm from a tract of raw land. With him from Pennsylvania came his son, Joseph H., who in early life followed farm pursuits and also worked at the building business, but left home to serve the Union as a soldier in the One Hundred and Twenty-third and later in the Sixty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry. At the close of the war he was honorably discharged and returned to the pursuits of civic life, but, instead of resuming the occupations in which he had engaged formerly, he studied law and became a very successful attorney, his worth, character and ability giving him large influence among associates. In early manhood he married Hester Palmer, who was born at Steam Corner, Fountain county, Ind., a daughter of Daniel Palmer, and a descendant of Scotch-Irish progenitors. Her death occurred in middle life, about 1868. Of her six sons and three daughters, three sons and three daughters survive, among these being Horace Greeley Brown, who was born at Alamo, Montgomery county, Ind., November 29, 1862, and in boyhood lived at Steam Corner, attending the common schools of that locality. When fourteen years of age he began to work for farmers and ever since then he has depended upon his own exertions for whatever progress he has made in the world. With a desire to broaden his education he attended the Veedersburg high school, working his way by his own labors.

When seventeen years of age Mr. Brown removed to Newman, Ill., and engaged in farming. After getting a start he returned to Indiana and at Veedersburg married Caroline Hershberger, a native of that state. The young couple began housekeeping four miles from Longview, Ill., where Mr. Brown bought a farm of eighty acres and engaged in farming and stock-raising. During 1891 he removed to Iowa and bought three hundred and twenty acres of land near Rockwell City, Calhoun county. Two years later he sold the land at an advance of $2,500, and with the proceeds of the sale was ready to invest in California property upon removing to this state in 1894. During that year he acquired the twenty acres forming the nucleus of his present homestead near Tulare, and here he has since engaged in dairying and the work of an apiarist. His home is brightened by the presence of his wife and their children, Claude, Joseph, Everett, Charles, Edith, May, Goldie, Ruth and Hester. The family stand high in the community and have many friends among those whose acquaintance they have formed in the decade of their residence in Tulare county. Mr. Brown is independent in politics, voting for the men whom he considers best qualified to serve the interests of the people. The Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Brotherhood number him among their members, and in the work of each he takes a lively interest. For five years he was a member of the board of school trustees of Oakdale district and served as clerk of the board until he declined to hold the position longer, preferring to give other men the opportunity to serve the interests of the school as he had done. In every respect he has proved himself a valuable addition to the agricultural population of Tulare county.

OBADIAH RIPLEY BENNETT. Distinguished alike as a pioneer resident of California and as the representative of an honored pioneer family, Obadiah R. Bennett is well worthy of mention in a work of this character. There is probably no man more familiar with the topography of the Pacific states than he, his rides on the range having extended from Tulare Lake to Puget Sound and Spokane Falls. He comes of Revolutionary stock, and among his most cherished possessions is a powder horn, a Revolutionary relic, probably one hundred and fifty years old, that both he and his father have often used in hunting excursions. A son of the late Silas F. Bennett, he was born February 12, 1846, in Stephenson county, Ill.

Born in Canada in 1801, Silas F. Bennett was brought up on a farm in Ohio, and as a boy endured the hardships and privations incident to pioneer life. He subsequently moved to Stephenson county, Ill., where he reclaimed a farm from the wild prairie, living there nearly a score of years. Starting with his family for California in 1848, he joined a party coming with ox-teams along the overland trail. While en route, in Nevada, they met Mormons from California, who told them of the discovery of gold in California. This so excited the people that they threw away much of their load, even provisions, and when the stock became exhausted they were helpless and their stock was run off by the Digger Indians. They were so nearly starved that at one time Mr. Bennett, unable to get anyone to accompany him, started alone to hunt, and killed a large deer, but was too exhausted from hunger to load it on his horse. He returned to his companions without it, but later brought the deer into camp, when all ate the meat raw, and then laid down around the camp fire to sleep, the stars the only sentinels and wolves howling a lullaby. Soon afterward relief appeared, Kit Carson having heard of their distress through the Indians. On arriving at Coloma, Mr. Bennett was for a while employed as a lumber manufacturer and dealer, subsequently re-building Sutter's mill lower down the stream. Going then to Sacramento, he ran a schooner for a short time, and then located in Santa Cruz, where he was employed in agricultural pursuits until 1861. He afterwards removed to Mendocino county, where he built a saw-mill and a grist-mill, both of which he operated for a number of years, being at the same time engaged in stock-raising. He spent his last years in Oakland, dying at a ripe old age. His wife, whose maiden name was Susanna Ripley, was born in New York state, and died in Oakland, Cal. Of the three sons and three daughters born of their union, all are living excepting one son and one daughter. One daughter resides in Corvallis, Ore., being the wife of Prof. T. M. Gatch, president of the Oregon Agricultural College. The professor is very prominent in educational circles, having formerly served as president of Willamette University, in Salem, Ore., and of the University of Washington, at Seattle.

Brought up in Santa Cruz and Mendocino counties, Obadiah R. Bennett attended the public schools when young, and from his earliest boyhood was accustomed to the saddle, riding on horseback all over the vast ranges of the great northwest. He began life as a stockman in Mendocino county, in 1879, going from there to Soden Flats, Idaho, near Lewiston. Purchasing land on the Snake river, he rode the range for eighteen consecutive years, traveling all over Idaho, eastern Oregon and Washington. Returning to California, Mr. Bennett located at Grangeville, where he embarked in horticulture, for which he had a natural taste, setting out an orchard of twenty acres, and in its subsequent care meeting with good success. In 1899 he bought his present home ranch of seventy acres, lying one mile east of Dinuba, and in 1900 assumed its possession and management. It was then an immense grain field. Erecting the first house built on his section, Mr. Bennett began the improvement of his ranch, setting out vines and fruit trees, and has now a fine vineyard of thirty acres, and a bearing orchard of sixteen acres, the remainder of his farm being in alfalfa.

February 8, 1869, in Mendocino county, Cal.,

Mr. Bennett married Candace Cassandra Kanawyer, who was born in Indiana, a daughter of Peter Kanawyer. She comes of substantial German ancestry, her grandfather, Frederick Kanawyer, having emigrated from Germany to the United States, locating first in Ohio, and then in Indiana, where he spent the closing years of his life. A native of Ohio, Peter Kanawyer was brought up principally in Iowa on a farm. In 1862 he came by the overland route to California, settling first in Grangeville, and being there through the Mussel Slough troubles, which are so vividly portrayed by the late Frank Norris in his celebrated novel, "The Octopuss," which treats of the conflict between the wheat growers of the San Joaquin valley and the railroad. Mr. Kanawyer married Abigail Cole, who was born in Ohio, where her father settled on removing from Pennsylvania, and died at Grangeville, Cal. Of the children born of their union, three survive, namely: Mrs. Crowell, of Hanford; Mrs. Bennett; and Peter, of Fresno, a government ranger. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett are the parents of four children, namely: Mancel A. and Horace H., engaged in horticultural pursuits near Dinuba; Mrs. Edna Smith, living near Dinuba; and Pearl K., at home. Politically Mr. Bennett is a true-blue Republican, and religiously he is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Bennett is identified by membership with the United Brethren Church, and belongs to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

WILLIAM WHITTINGTON, M. D. Notwithstanding a comparatively brief sojourn in Dinuba, Dr. Whittington has established a practice which proves his growing reputation as a skilled physician, particularly in the line of his specialty, tuberculosis and other diseases of the lungs. With a beautiful home in this city, a cultured wife and talented children, possessing the friendship of many and the esteem of all, he has won many of the greatest prizes that life can offer. Of northern birth and southern extraction, he unites with the enterprise of the one the culture of the other, and worthily represents an honored race.

At an early period in the settlement of Illinois Joseph Whittington removed from Tennessee and settled near Benton, Franklin county, where he secured a tract of virgin soil and engaged in farm pursuits until his death. Next in line of descent was J. F., a native of Franklin county, Ill., and a farmer near Benton until death terminated his activities about 1886. Surviving him is his widow, formerly Mary Spencer, who removed from Tennessee to Illinois with her parents and settled on a farm in the neighborhood where she still resides. Of her ten children two sons and three daughters survive, William being the eldest of those now living and the only member of the family in California. He was born near Benton, Ill., December 12, 1853, and grew to manhood on the old homestead, where he acquired a thorough knowledge of every detail connected with agriculture. The occupation, however, held few fascinations for him as conducted in that day and locality, and at an early age he began to teach school, also took up the study of medicine under Dr. C. O. Kelley, of Ewing, Ill. During 1878 he matriculated in the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, from which he was graduated March 4, 1880, with the degree of M. D. Returning to Illinois, he took up professional practice at Ewing, but soon removed to Campbell Hill, Jackson county, where he married Miss Jennie Hackney, a native of Tennessee.

On coming to California in 1891 Dr. Whittington opened an office at Reedley, Fresno county, but in 1893 removed to Tulare, where he conducted practice for a number of years. From 1898 to 1900 he followed his profession in Los Angeles, after which he returned to Reedley, and continued in practice there until his removal, in November, 1902, to his present location at Dinuba, Tulare county. During his residence in Illinois he was actively identified with the Southern Illinois Medical Society and still retains membership in that organization. In politics he is a Democrat, but not radical in opinions. With his wife he holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church and contributes to its maintenance and charities. Initiated into Masonry in Shiloh Hill Lodge No. 695, F. & A. M., he is now a member at Reedley, and has further been raised to the thirty-second degree, Scottish Rite. In his family there are one daughter and four sons now living, namely: Pearl Lone, wife of H. Hamner, of Los Angeles; Frank Edward, who died at the age of ten months; William E., a student in the medical department of Washington University, St. Louis; Charles Roy and Ray Hackney, who are students in the high school of their home town.

ALFRED RICHARD GURR. An active, brainy and progressive man, noted as a promoter, and an early settler, of the British Colony, Merced county, Alfred Richard Gurr is a prominent exponent of its agricultural, manufacturing and business interests. By occupation he is a general farmer, raising grain, cultivating fruit, manufacturing olive oil, and keeping a large apiary, in every branch of his industries meeting with eminent success. A son of the late A. J. Gurr, he was born in London, England, March 13, 1851.

A. J. Gurr was born, reared and educated in the county of Sussex, England. Engaging in mercantile pursuits when a young man, he settled in London, where he was in active business until his death, at the age of forty-eight years. He married Mary Bennett, a native of London, and of the children born of their union three are living, namely: Alfred Richard, the subject of this biographical sketch; Rev. Henry J., a minister of the Episcopal Church, located in Chelan, Wash., and Edwin R. of England. A. R. and Rev. H. J. Gurr came to Merced in 1889, and were the first settlers of the British Colony, Merced county, Cal., from which was derived its present name. E. R. Gurr came to Merced in 1891 and resided two years, in the meantime building the Weaver residence. He then returned to England.

After his graduation, in 1866, from Christ's Hospital, better known as the Blue Coat School of London, England, Alfred Richard Gurr entered into business in London with his father, remaining in that metropolis until 1889. Emigrating then to the United States, he came directly to California, and bought his present farm, which lies four and one-fourth miles west of Merced. About twenty acres of his ranch he has sowed to alfalfa, and in addition to general farming he has a fine dairy, keeping Jersey cows, and also raises many hogs each year. He is an expert horticulturist, and has made great success in caring for his vineyard of four acres, at the mid-winter fair in San Francisco winning the bronze medal for his exhibit of three and four crown raisins. A man of great enterprise and keen foresight, Mr. Gurr manufactures a fine quality of olive oil, having established a plant on his farm, and buying his olives from the growers of that fruit. He leases land on the San Joaquin river, and on this land are his apiary, which contains three hundred stands of bees, and yields him large quantities of honey each year.

In London, England, Mr. Gurr married Emily Hunter, a native of that city, and into their home twelve children have been born, namely: Alfred J., Henry R., Edwin, Emily M., William, Mary (the wife of M. P. Crookshanks of Hanford), David, Nellie, Ethel, Gordon, Beatrice, and Ernest.

CHARLES R. SCOTT. The family represented by this influential citizen of Tulare is of eastern extraction. His father, Joseph, was a native of Chambersburg, Pa., but at an early age accompanied his parents to Ohio and settled on a farm near Goshen. On starting out to earn his own way in the world he went to Illinois and settled on a farm in McLean county, thence in 1864 removing to Doniphan county, Kans., where he combined the raising of stock with the tilling of the soil. When advanced in years he came to the coast and died in California, August 24, 1904, after eighty busy years. During the days of his youth he met Maria Thacker, who was the daughter of William Thacker, one of their neighbors near Goshen, Ohio. The acquaintance thus formed ripened into affection, and their destinies were united by marriage. Mrs. Scott was a member of an eastern family; her father was a native of New York state, and for years carried on a farm in Ohio, but eventually removed to Michigan, where he died. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Scott has made her home in Tulare, and notwithstanding her advanced age of seventy-eight years, she is still physically and mentally robust. In religious belief she is a devoted adherent of the Presbyterian Church.

In a family of seven children, of whom two sons and two daughters are now living, Charles R. Scott was third in order of birth, and was born near Heyworth, McLean county, Ill., April 6, 1857. Accompanying his parents to Kansas in 1864, he was primarily educated in the public schools of Doniphan county, and then took the regular course of study in Highland University, from which he was graduated in 1882 with the degree of A. B. During the next few years he engaged in teaching school in his home county and in Buchanan county, Mo., meanwhile devoting his leisure days to the study of law under the preceptorship of M. Poke, of St. Joseph. In 1885 he was admitted to the bar in Kansas and entered upon a general practice at Nashville, Kingman county. The prospects, however, were not flattering. There was much to turn his ambitious thoughts from the conditions and climate there to the opportunities offered in the transmountain region, and he decided to seek a home in the coast country. On New Year's day of 1889 he arrived in Fresno, and with the new year began life in a new region. November 20, 1889, he left Fresno and came to Tulare, where he began in the practice of law, but gradually drifted into the real estate and insurance business, which he now conducts, in addition to the negotiating of loans. He also acts as agent for the Laurel colony of fourteen hundred acres, is a director of the Rochdale Company, owns individually an alfalfa ranch north of Tulare and considerable orchard land, and is further a one-tenth owner and a stockholder in El Mirador Colony with four thousand acres of orange land, which, as the company's local agent, he superintends for colonization purposes. The El Mirador Land Company's property lies at Lindsay, at the approach of the Sierra Nevada range, almost at the base of Mount Whitney, with sufficient elevation to give a commanding view of the valley to the west, with a climate of warm, sunny days and cool but frostless nights, thus being well adapted to the orange, lemon, fig, apricot, peach, plum and cherry. El Mirador is a tract formerly known among Californians as the Lewis creek ranch, and at the old homestead there stands the largest lemon tree and the largest lime tree in the state, also figs forty years old and more than a hundred feet high, which each year are burdened to the ground with valuable fruit.

In Tulare Mr. Scott married Miss Annie H. Wilder, who was born in Germantown, Pa., and by whom he has a son, Joseph Francis. For six years Mr. Scott filled the office of city attorney of Tulare, elected on the Independent ticket, and he has also served as treasurer of the Tulare Board of Trade, being the present incumbent of the office. He is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood and a leading worker in the Tulare Congregational Church, of which he is now president of the board of trustees.

MORTIMER G. THOMPSON. The Thompson homestead consists of one hundred and twenty acres situated five and one-half miles southwest of Dinuba and largely under alfalfa and in pastures, facilitating the dairy interests of the owner, who since 1894 has made this industry a special feature of his farm work. While it was in 1889 that he purchased this tract, it was not until three years later that he built a farm house and brought his family to reside on the place, and since then he has made various other improvements that have added to the value of the property. Besides the management of his land and dairy, he devotes considerable attention to the work of ditch tender of the Alta district, which he has filled since March of 1904, and in which one of his duties is to make daily inspections of many miles of canals.

Of eastern ancestry, Mr. Thompson was born at Theresa, Jefferson county, N. Y., May 7, 1840, being the second among seven children, all but one of whom reside in California. His father, J. D. Thompson, was born and reared in New York, where he followed the milling business. After removing to Wisconsin and settling at Neenah, Winnebago county, he supplemented milling by agricultural pursuits, and became a prosperous and influential man in his community. From Wisconsin he came to California in 1888 and settled on a small ranch at Traver, Tulare county. His death occurred in Oakland when he was seventy-four years of age. While living in the east he married Mary E. Kennan, who was born in New York and now, at seventy-six years of age, makes her home with her children in California.

From the age of three years Mortimer G.

Thompson was reared in Wisconsin, where the family home was on a farm near Neenah. At nineteen years of age he began to farm for himself and for this purpose rented land near Fond du Lac, Dodge county. While living there he established domestic ties through his marriage, March 30, 1870, to Miss Jennie Butler, a native of Leroy, Dodge county, Wis., and a daughter of James Henry and Sarah (Billings) Butler, natives respectively of Pelham, Hillsboro county, N. H., and Newburg, Cleveland, Ohio. Her paternal grandfather, James Butler, removed from his native locality in New Hampshire to New York and afterward became a pioneer of Wisconsin, where he improved a farm in Dodge county, but eventually moved to Adams county and there died. The maternal grandfather, Sylvester Billings, removed in an early day from Vermont to New York, later settled in Ohio, and finally established himself in the sparsely settled region of Dodge county, Wis., where he improved a farm from a tract of raw land. Late in life, during 1874, he came to California, where he died at Healdsburg, aged seventy-eight years. At the time of settling in Dodge county, Wis., James Henry Butler was twenty-one years of age, and at Leroy in 1850 he married Miss Billings, after which he settled on a farm of his own near Leroy. During 1874 he came to the west and bought land near Healdsburg, Cal., where at first he devoted himself exclusively to agriculture, but later turned his attention to the trade of blacksmith and carriage-maker. At the time of his death, in 1895, he was sixty-eight years of age. His widow now makes her home with her oldest child, Mrs. Jennie Thompson, besides whom she has two other children now living, four being deceased.

After his marriage for a time Mr. Thompson engaged as baggageman with the railroad at Fond du Lac. With other members of the family, in 1874 he came to California and settled on a farm near Healdsburg. Four years later he became a pioneer of the state of Washington. With the first boat that landed at Asotin Flats he sought the new country in the southeastern part of Washington, and took up one hundred and sixty acres as a homestead, situated south of Lewiston, Idaho, in the Nez Perces country. Fifteen miles back from the creek he built a log cabin, where he made his home. Hardships innumerable were crowded into the next few years. The struggle for a livelihood was fought amid the most discouraging environments, in a region where settlers were few and conveniences conspicuous by their absence. At harvest time he went to Walla Walla to earn money with which to buy provisions for his family.

Tiring of the uncongenial environment Mr. Thompson in 1885 came south overland, bringing with him fourteen horses and household necessities. For his first location he settled one mile south of his present home in Tulare county and here engaged in grain-raising, operating at times as many as eight hundred acres. In 1889 he bought and began to improve his present property, and here he and his wife, with their son, James Earle, have made their home since 1892. Fraternally he was formerly connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Traver and is now a member at Dinuba, where he is past grand. With his wife he is connected with the Order of Rebekahs, in which he is past noble grand, and in addition he holds membership with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Though not identified with any denomination, he is in sympathy with the work of the Christian Church, to which his wife belongs and in which he has been a contributor during the entire period of his residence in Tulare county. In politics he favors Republican principles and casts his ballot for the men and measures advocated by that party.

ELEAZAR T. GIVENS. Living retired in Oakland, Cal. E. T. Givens is rounding out a well-spent life, free from the business cares which have engrossed his attention for many years. He was born in Union county, Ky., October 17, 1828, a son of Thomas and Catherine (Richards) Givens, both of whom were highly esteemed residents of Union county. E. T. Givens received his education in the pioneer school of his day and grew to manhood on his father's farm. Among his schoolmates were George Penn Johnston, of San Francisco, and the Casey brothers, for whose father Caseyville, Ky., was named.

April 5, 1849, Mr. Givens left Caseyville with a party of emigrants for California, crossing the plains by way of St. Joseph, Mo., and Salt Lake City. At the latter place the party separated, and Mr. Givens and his brother remained six weeks in that city, then joined another party under the leadership of James Waters, of San Bernardino. They took the southern route and in October arrived at the Rubidoux ranch, along the Santa Ana river, and there the following winter was spent working on the ranch. March, 1850, found Mr. Givens in the Coarse Gold Gulch, of Fresno county, where he met with fair success. He then went into Mariposa county, where he met with good success in the Whitlock and Agua Fria mines. October 11 of that year he met with a severe accident that necessitated his retirement from mining for a time. On that morning one of the party, John W. Childs, wounded a grizzly bear and returned to the camp for assistance. Mr. Givens and three others responded and upon going to the place where the encounter had taken place, found the bear with two cubs. Upon the approach of the party they started to run away, when both Mr. Childs and Mr. Givens shot and wounded the bear again. After following them for some time they were found in a thicket and the final fight took place. Being near the bear Mr. Givens fared badly, losing a part of his scalp and sustaining other severe injuries. Mr. Childs, with true heroism, stood by him and fired three shots, at the risk of killing his friend, before the bear was killed. After suffering for a long time Mr. Givens recovered and in 1851, nearly a year afterward, was enabled to return to his home in Kentucky. In 1852 his parents came to this state by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and the following year E. T. Givens returned overland, coming as far as Salt Lake City by the same route that he had first traveled and completing the journey by way of the Carson route. In the meantime, in 1853, in Morganfield, Ky., he had married Martha Pratt, who came with him. They arrived in California without any mishap and spent that winter on the old Texas ranch in Mariposa county, then owned by his father. In 1854 they settled on Bear creek, in what is now Merced county, ten miles from the present site of Merced. Upon the organization of Merced county Mr. Givens assisted in electing the first officers. In 1856 he removed to a place on Mariposa creek, and it was under the trees on this ranch that the first court in the county was held. This ranch continued to be his home until the fall of 1904. There were seven children born of this marriage, but of these four died in early childhood. The others are: Mary Louise, wife of C. H. Porter, of Chico, Cal.; Matilda Frances, wife of E. B. Prescott, of Texas; and James William, of Merced county. In 1867 Mrs. Martha P. Givens died at the home of her sister in East Oakland. The daughters were placed in Mills' Seminary at Benicia, and the son was later educated at the California Military Academy, in Oakland. In 1870 Mr. Givens was united in marriage with Adelaide M. Brooks, who was born in Canada in 1837, a daughter of Alonzo Brooks, who removed in an early day to Jefferson county, N. Y., in 1838 to Sheboygan, Wis., and in 1849 to California, during the excitement of the discovery of gold. By this marriage five sons and two daughters were born, viz.: Arlington B. of Merced, Helen E., E. Virgil, Thomas T., Frederick C. and Constance E., living; and John H., a twin of Thomas T., deceased. Two of the sons operate the home ranch of thirteen hundred and sixty acres, which is devoted to grain, stock and poultry. The ranch is well improved, with a comfortable house and a substantial set of buildings adequate for the needs of the place; also to facilitate shipments of grain. Mr. Givens has a warehouse 40x100 feet located on the Southern Pacific Railroad. On his ranch is located one of the oldest buildings in Merced county, a smoke-house, erected in 1856, which is covered with shingles made by hand from timber brought from the mountains. This has never been re-shingled and is now in a fair state of preservation.

In politics Mr. Givens has given his support to the Democratic party and by his voice and vote has ever been an advocate of good government and is a promoter of education. He has never been willing to accept any office, though he has had them offered him at various times. By his upright character, integrity and public spirit he has won a host of friends among those with whom he has come in contact.

ELMO E. PYLE. Prominent among the younger generation of ranchers of Kern county is Elmo E. Pyle, of whom it may be said that the advantage of inheriting his estate and of being surrounded with early opportunities above the average has in no wise stilled the voice of ambition nor lessened his desire to establish an independent reputation for enterprise and public spirit. Mr. Pyle has the task before him of maintaining high standards established by two other generations of his family in the state, that of his grandfather, William, and his father, Hon. Darius Pyle. William Pyle became an early settler of Vermilion county, Ind., where two of his eleven children were born, a daughter, and Darius, the latter born April 20, 1851. Mr. Pyle was ambitious and far-sighted, and in 1852 came to the Pacific coast, settling at Sutterville, three miles below Sacramento. In 1855 he was joined by his wife and two children, Darius at that time being four years old. He removed to Orange county in 1883 and continued to live on his farm for the balance of his life, dying in 1890, at the age of sixty-six years. Eight of his children attained maturity, and all had opportunities for developing their various abilities not experienced by the average children of the pioneers. Mrs. William Pyle makes her home in San Francisco, aged seventy-three years.

Hon. Darius Pyle was educated in the common schools and at the University of the Pacific, and afterward applied himself to learning the tinner's trade. After serving an apprenticeship of three years he taught school for four or five years in Santa Clara county, a part of that time being principal of the Alviso school. He took a prominent part in educational matters in the county, was clerk of the board of trustees, and assessor of the town of Santa Clara. In 1876 he leased land and engaged in the stock-raising and dairy business at Gilroy. During the six years thus employed he was elected to the general assembly, serving in the regular session of 1885, and the special session of 1886. In the latter year he was elected supreme representative of the American Legion of Honor of California, and was present at the session of the council in Boston, Mass. In February, 1887, he removed to Kern county and became superintendent of the Mountainview dairy and stock-ranch for the Kern County Land Company, and in the fall of 1891 bought the ranch upon which his son Elmo now lives, and which consists of sixty acres, at that time unimproved. He has made extensive changes, erecting a fine rural home, and setting the ranch out to fruit and general products. In 1894 he supplemented his former political success by service as under sheriff of Kern county. In 1897 he became interested in mining, and with his son Elmo and others prospected near Randsburg and discovered what is now the St. Elmo mine, named after the son, to whose energy was due a large share of the success of the expedition. The history of this mine is a veritable financial tragedy, and as far as the Pyle family was concerned had its end in the duplicity of a trusted friend. Father and son were offered $150,000 for the mine, but thinking to make more money by retaining possession, formed a stock company with a capitalist who froze them out and stole the mine. Mr. Pyle was completely prostrated by the change in his fortunes, but fortunately in 1897 had deeded his ranch to his son, and thus averted total financial loss. For a time he was manager of a ranch for Claus Spreckels in Santa Clara county, and eighteen months later removed to Guadalajara, Mexico, where he started the creamery and cheese factory which has since netted him a comfortable income. Personally he is a man of strong character and fine business ability. While his mining experience was a bitter one, it covered but a small part of his life, and represented the loss of a piece of good fortune, rather than the gain of a lifetime of toil. He bore it as would a strong and noble character, and remains unembittered, and hopeful in his survey of life.

The wife of Mr. Pyle was formerly Mary Rea, born in Santa Clara county January 1, 1850, an adopted daughter of Hon. Thomas Rea, who was a native of the vicinity of Gallipolis, Ohio, and born November 22, 1820. Mr. Rea removed to Hancock county, Ohio, in 1833 with his parents, thence to Macon county, Ill., where he started out to earn an independent livelihood. From 1842 until 1849 he was interested in lead mining in Wisconsin, and then responded to his ambition to make a fortune in the mines of the far west, reaching San Francisco via Panama February 22, 1850. He worked in the mines of Placer county and Downieville until 1852, and then returned east and married, at Springfield, Ill., in 1853, Mary Ann Jones, and with his wife started overland to the coast, locating in Gilroy township, Santa Clara county. Here he engaged in ranching and stock-raising on a large scale, and in 1868 removed to Gilroy, where he erected his present handsome residence, and has since lived in comparative retirement. His active brain has seen countless opportunities of increasing his fortune, and he owns thousands of acres of land in Santa Clara county, all valuable, and bringing in a substantial yearly income. He also erected the Rea building in San Jose, which is a valuable property. He gave his children the best possible education, as Mrs. Pyle can testify, and his life and character are enshrined in the hearts of an appreciative community. To Mr. and Mrs. Darius Pyle four children have been born, namely: Elmo E.; Aldine, a musician of repute; Elva W. C., an artist, being educated by her grandfather, Thomas Rea, at Hopkins Art Institute; and Rea, at home.

Elmo E. Pyle was sixteen years old when he came to his present ranch, and with the exception of the two years spent in mining with his father, he has made this his home. Since 1902 he has served as postmaster of Pylema, the town being named after the family. He is a keen, practical business man, industrious and bound to succeed, and utilizes to the best possible advantage his sixty acres of well-tilled land. His home is ten miles south of Bakersfield, where hospitality and good cheer seem to emanate from its fertile fields, and its quiet, peaceful and sunshiny atmosphere.

BENJAMIN M. ALFORD, M. D. The Alford family is of English extraction and the first representative in America became a planter in North Carolina. A son of this immigrant, Wylie Alford, was born and reared on a southern plantation and at an early age settled near Nashville, Tenn., where he enjoyed the prosperity attending southern planters in the days before the Civil war. At the time of his death he was sixty-two years of age. During early manhood he married Sophia Drake, like himself a native of North Carolina; she was the daughter of a farmer who served in the Revolution and traced her lineage direct to Sir Francis Drake. When eighty-six years of age she passed away on the Tennessee plantation.

Among the eleven children of Wylie and Sophia Alford the youngest was Benjamin M., a native of Tennessee, born fifteen miles from East Nashville, December 13, 1833, and reared on the plantation, with the best educational advantages private schools could bestow. While still a mere lad he developed a liking for the medical profession and selected the same for his life work. Pursuant upon that ambition, he took the entire course of lectures in the Nashville Medical College, from which in 1856 he received the degree of M. D. Immediately after graduating he opened an office at Boston, Bowie county, Tex., where he built up a practice extending through all of the surrounding country. When the Civil war began it was natural that his southern training and sympathies should assert themselves. Fired with loyalty to the old southland, he at once offered his services as a surgeon in the First Mounted Battalion of Texas Troops. However, the battalion being already overcrowded, the regiment was made the Thirty-second Texas Infantry, and he was commissioned surgeon, with the rank of major. The record of his army service is a record of hard marches, privations innumerable and hunger that at times verged on starvation. The effect of constant hardships and exposure wrecked his health and threatened life itself, but with the devotion characteristic of those who loved the lost cause, personal suffering was sunk beneath the claims of the Confederacy.

In all of the engagements of his regiment Dr. Alford bore a part. After crossing the Mississippi with General Price he took part in the battle of Corinth and then accompanied Gen. E. Kirby Smith into Kentucky, serving under him until after the battle of Perryville. Later he was present at Murfreesboro and Chickamauga, and then followed Gen. Joseph E. Johnston into the Georgia campaign, participating in the battles that marked the retreat to Atlanta, after which he served at Nashville, Tenn., for a time, then was transferred to Mobile, Ala., and remained until the campaign ended. When the war came to a close he returned to Texas, with health shattered and property gone. All that was left to him were his ex-slaves who, remembering his goodness to them and reluctant to take up the task of earning a livelihood without his aid, refused to leave him; but, as he was no longer able to support them, he found homes for all as soon as possible and assisted them to get a start in the world.

During 1868 Dr. Alford came to California via Panama. Having heard much concerning the climate of the Pacific coast, he was desirous of coming hither in the hope that his health might be benefited by the change. For five years he remained with his father-in-law, W. B. Poer, who owned the McFarland toll road in the mountains. The pure mountain air proved the tonic most needed and, with health renewed, he returned to Texas in 1873 and opened an office at Fort Worth. However, like the majority who have once come under the fascinating spell of California's charms, he felt dissatisfied elsewhere, and in 1875 returned to the coast, settling at Portersville, Tulare county, where he engaged in the practice of medicine. Since June of 1881 he has engaged in practice at Tulare, where he is now the oldest physician in point of years of practice. Since coming here he has acquired alfalfa lands, which he rents, and also owns a building on the corner of Tulare and K streets. Twice since buying this corner he has been burned out, but the present building is a fire-proof structure, so he has no further fear of disaster.

While living at Boston, Tex., Dr. Alford married Miss Josephine Poer, a native of Texas, and a daughter of W. B. Poer, who served in the war for the independence of Texas, also in the Mexican war, later becoming a pioneer of 1849 in California, and eventually dying at Tulare. The family of Dr. and Mrs. Alford comprises two sons and two daughters, viz.: William H., an attorney of San Francisco, now serving as adjuster of the state taxes on the board of equalization; Forest L., who practices law at Bakersfield; Josephine, the widow of W. D. Haslam, and a resident of San Francisco; and Daisy, Mrs. Hetherington, of Columbia, Mo. Throughout all of his active life Dr. Alford has been a staunch Democrat and has never failed to cast a vote for the candidates of his party. Along the line of his profession he has been an interested worker in the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society and the Tulare County Medical Society, and has officiated as president of the latter organization. The Independent Order of Odd Fellows number him among their members and he is also identified with Masonry, having been made a Mason while at Boston, Tex., and later becoming a charter member of Olive Branch Lodge, F. & A. M., at Tulare, in which he is now an influential member.

JOHN B. ROSSON, M. D. The founder of the Rosson family in America was Major Joseph Rosson, an Englishman, who crossed the ocean accompanied by a brother and settled in the colony of Virginia. When the Revolutionary war opened he offered his services in behalf of his adopted country, was commissioned a major in Washington's army and bore a part in numerous engagements, including the siege of Yorktown, where he witnessed the surrender of Lord Cornwallis. Later he engaged in the practice of medicine in North Carolina, where his son and namesake was born and reared. In time the latter removed to Tennessee and engaged in farming in Marshall county. Next in line of descent was Osborn Rosson, a native of North Carolina and by occupation a farmer. When the Civil war brought its train of devastation and financial ruin to the south he suffered the loss of his farm, and in 1866 made a new start in the world, removing to Illinois and settling on a farm near Murphysboro, Jackson county, where he died in 1894 at eighty-three years of age. In character he was a man of great strength, firm of purpose, strong of will, and politically was a Democrat and a great admirer of Stephen A. Douglas. By his marriage to Rebecca Patton, a native of Marshall county, Tenn., he became allied with a family of Scotch extraction and southern renown. John Patton, her father, was a soldier in the Seminole war, and for years followed farming in Tennessee; her mother was a member of the Beck family, of German descent, and was an aunt of Gen. N. B. Forrest, the celebrated cavalryman.

In the family of Osborn and Rebecca Rosson there were four sons and one daughter, namely: John B., of Tulare, Cal.; Mrs. Virginia Mahoney, M. D., who is a graduate of the Woman's Medical College of Chicago, and is now engaged in practice at Phoenix, Ariz.; William T., a farmer in Jackson county, Ill.; James A., who follows farming in Union county, that state; and Theodore W., deceased. John B. Rosson was born in Marshall county, Tenn., November 20, 1853, and at thirteen years of age removed with his parents to Illinois, where he attended the Centralia high school. Later he pursued academic studies at Troy, Tenn. For five years he engaged in teaching school, using the money thus earned in paying the expenses of his medical education. After having taken his preliminary studies under Dr. O. L. Mahoney, of Phoenix, Ariz., he matriculated in the Ohio Medical College (now the medical department of the University of Cincinnati), and there he remained until his graduation in 1872. Returning to Jackson county, Ill., he took up professional work near Vergennes, where he built up a valuable practice and served also as a member of the board of pension examiners. In 1894 he removed to California and settled in Tulare, where he has since devoted himself to professional work. Surgery has always possessed especial fascination for him, and his work in that department has been skillful to an unusual degree.

While still a mere lad Dr. Rosson took up the study of shorthand under Prof. Charles Wright, under whom he made such advancement that his accuracy and speed in stenographic work attracted local attention. In 1866 he was engaged to report the Braden-Ditzer debate and for twenty years acted as reporter for the Southern Illinois Medical Association. His work in reporting was a source of great pleasure to him and was continued for years, not as a source of remuneration, but for the enjoyment it afforded him. He is the father of five children. The eldest child,

J A Moorehead

Charles T. Rosson, M. D., now of Hanford, is a graduate of the College of Physicians & Surgeons, San Francisco, class of 1903, and later engaged in clinical work at the San Francisco county hospital. The other children are Dora L., of Tulare; Maude, a teacher in Illinois; Virginia F., who also resides in Illinois; and Ray Wright, now in Tulare. Since coming to his present location Dr. Rosson has rendered valuable service as a member of the board of health examiners and the school board. Various fraternal organizations number him among their members, some of these being the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Improved Order of Red Men, Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World and Fraternal Brotherhood. In politics he was reared in the Democratic faith and has never swerved in his allegiance to the party. Whatever pertains to the progress of medical science receives his thoughtful attention. Especially has he been interested in bodies organized by physicians rendering possible the cultivation of a fraternal spirit as well as discussion concerning methods of coping with disease. Besides being prominent in the organization of the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society he has officiated as its president and been a leading factor in its deliberations. The Tulare County Medical Society also receives his support and co-operation, while he is further connected with the American Medical Association and retains connection with the Southern Illinois Medical Association as an honorary member.

JAMES ADDISON MOOREHEAD. Occupying a position of prominence among the active and prosperous agriculturists of Tulare county is James A. Moorehead. His fine homestead and farm, located about six miles northwest of Tulare, is a well-appointed and well-kept estate, his stock and machinery being of modern manufacture, and everything about the premises indicating the industry and keen judgment of the owner. A large number of magnificent oak trees adorn his ranch, one of which, the monarch of all, is worthy of especial mention. It is nearly, if not quite, thirty feet in circumference, one hundred and twenty-five feet in height and its top over-shadows a larger space of ground than any other tree of its species in the county or valley, its trunk resembling one of the immense redwoods for which the state is noted. It is known far and wide, and has been many times photographed, both by local artists and by tourists.

A son of John Moorehead, Jr., Mr. Moorehead was born, August 15, 1833, near Lewisburg, Greenbrier county, W. Va. His paternal grandfather, John Moorehead, Sr., was born on the Atlantic ocean, while his parents were en route from England to the United States. He was brought up in West Virginia, and during his active career was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Greenbrier county.

Born, reared and educated in Greenbrier county, W. Va., John Moorehead, Jr., grew to manhood on the home farm. Moving westward in 1850, he bought government land in Louisa county, Iowa, and was there employed in general farming for nearly a quarter of a century. In 1873 he located in Idaho, and a few years later came to California, settling in Stanislaus county, near Newman, where he resided until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Nancy McVey, was born in West Virginia, and died of cholera, in 1850, while en route to Iowa. Six sons and four daughters blessed their union, and of these four sons and one daughter are living, James Addison, of this review, being the second child.

Spending the days of his boyhood and youth in his native town, James A. Moorehead received but meager educational advantages, his school life being limited to a few brief terms. One of the oldest of a large family of children, he began assisting his father on the farm and in the sawmill when a lad, and after removing to Iowa assisted in the clearing and improving of a homestead, remaining at home until after attaining his majority. Embarking then in agricultural pursuits on his own account, he continued a resident of Louisa county until 1862, when he made up his mind to follow the march of civilization to the Pacific coast. With a train consisting of thirty wagons drawn by horses he started across the plains, having previously been appointed captain of the party. Taking the old overland trail, via Salt Lake City, he found some of his former friends there among the Mormons, and being well treated by them stopped there two weeks, having a pleasant visit and a good rest. Continuing the journey to Stockton, Cal., Mr. Moorehead remained in that city about two years, and was afterward engaged in placer mining in Eldorado county for four years. Locating in Tulare county in 1869, he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of his present ranch, and after proving up homesteaded eighty acres of adjoining land, so that he has now in his home farm two hundred and forty acres. By dint of unceasing toil and wise management Mr. Moorehead has made substantial improvements, enhancing its value and adding to its attractions. He has a productive orchard and vineyard, forty acres planted to alfalfa, all under irrigation, and in addition to general farming, pays considerable attention to the breeding and raising of stock, his specialty being horses and hogs, and in conducting the latter industry he has eighteen different fields fenced, and hog tight. He also owns a fine grain farm of one hundred and sixty acres, lying about three miles southwest of Tulare, and from this he receives a good annual income also. Though not an aspirant for office, Mr. Moorehead takes an intelligent interest in political matters, and is a staunch adherent of the Republican party.

ABRAM HUNTER MURRAY, Sr. Although several generations of the Murray family have made their home in America they still display, in their rugged constitutions and mental traits, the possession of Scotch proclivities inherited from a long line of sturdy ancestors who lived and labored and died in bonnie Scotland. A strong patriotic sentiment and a love for the stirring life of the frontier were predominant characteristics among representatives of the family in the early days of American history. Originally established in the southeast of the Mississippi river, Thomas Murray, who was a native of Tennessee, removed from that state to Missouri. Accompanying him, among other members of his family, was a son bearing the name of Thomas, who was born in Campbell county, Tenn., January 28, 1797, and who during early manhood served in various wars. During the war of 1812 he went to the front, later served in the Blackhawk war from Missouri and was an officer in the Mormon war. After making his home for a time at Boone's Lick, Cooper county, Mo., he moved to the mouth of the Moniteau river in Cole county, that state, where he ran a ferry across the river and also carried on farm pursuits. About 1843 he moved to the western part of Missouri and settled in Cass county near the town of West Point, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. Meanwhile, drawn to the west by the discovery of gold, his sons had joined a party of Argonauts, and in 1853 he and his wife, with their three daughters, followed the westward tide of emigration and joined their sons in California, settling at Petaluma, Sonoma county, where he died at the age of eighty-five years. During his residence in Missouri he had served as county judge about fourteen years and there as well as in California he held office as justice of the peace for many years.

The marriage of Thomas Murray, Jr., united him with Barbara Hunter, who was born in Powell's valley, Tenn., July 7, 1797, and died at Cloverdale, Sonoma county, Cal., at eighty-four years of age. The family of which she was a member crossed the ocean from Germany to Virginia in an early day and her father, Abram Hunter, removed from the Old Dominion to Tennessee, where he engaged in farm pursuits. Of her marriage twelve children were born, namely: Mary M. (commonly called Polly), Mrs. Walker, who died at Santa Rosa, this state;

Margaret, Mrs. Hensley, who died in Madera county; Jane C., wife of Enoch Enloe, and deceased in Cole county, Mo.; Emily M., Mrs. Hugh Enloe, a resident of Inyo county, Cal.; Abram H., Sr., who was with one exception the earliest settler of Tulare county; Urith, Mrs. Orr, who died in California; Barbara Ann, Mrs. Williams, of San Diego county; Joshua H., who came to California in 1830, engaged in farming for years, and eventually died at Visalia; Josephine, who died at the age of ten years; Rachel, Mrs. Clark, a resident of Santa Rosa; Sarah E., Mrs. Stanley, living in Humboldt county, this state; and Hannah Retta, Mrs. Cooper, of Cloverdale.

At the home farm, ten miles west of Jefferson City, in Cole county, Mo., Abram Hunter Murray, Sr., was born January 17, 1827. From the age of sixteen years he was a resident of Cass county, Mo., until his removal to California. April 25, 1844, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah T. Hensley, who was born in Cole county, Mo., July 4, 1824. Her father, Hon. John Hensley, a native of Tennessee and a pioneer of Missouri, passed through St. Louis when it was still under the Spanish government. For a time he lived in Gasconade county, that state, but later became a pioneer farmer of Cole county. A man of large ability and possessing the qualities qualifying him for leadership, he was three times elected to represent his district in the state senate, where his record was that of an honorable official and progressive citizen.

After having engaged in farming and stock-raising in Cass county for some years, Mr. Murray decided to remove to the coast. In 1852, accompanied by his wife and three children, he crossed the plains with ox-teams and driving a herd of cattle. On the 10th of April the journey was begun. After leaving Missouri the party traveled up the Platte, thence along the overland trail, and down the Humboldt, then into California by the Carson river route. After a few weeks in Stockton they came up the San Joaquin valley in the then wilderness of Tulare county. S. C. Brown had arrived here a few days before Mr. Murray and they were the only men in all the country. As early as 1850 a Mr. Woods had sought to establish a home here and had built a log hut, but he had been killed by the Indians and seventeen of his men met a similar fate, only one escaping to tell the story of their massacre. The town of Woodville in Tulare county was named in honor of this first settler.

Selecting land in what is now the western part of Visalia, Mr. Murray engaged in farming and stock-raising on an extensive scale. From the state and government he bought eighteen thousand acres of land, but this he afterward lost through business reverses. He was also unfortunate in losing a large number of sheep during the dry years. In 1870 he removed to The Dalles, Ore., where he was engaged in steamboating and the wood business. However, finding the winters too cold in that climate, he returned to the San Joaquin valley and settled on a tract of two hundred acres. Much of this property has been sold, but he still retains forty acres in vineyard and alfalfa. Politically he is a Democrat and fraternally holds membership with the Masons, being connected with Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M., of which he was twice elected master; and in addition he is a denitted Chapter Mason. In religion he was liberal, but generous to all denominations and especially interested in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which his wife was a member. Mrs. Murray died July 8, 1902, and since then her place at the old homestead has been filled by her eldest child, Mary F., wife of William J. Adams, who was a California pioneer of 1850. The other children are as follows: Thomas H., who follows ranching near the Toll Gate in Fresno county; John H., also a rancher of Fresno county; Commodore P., a retired rancher in Humboldt county; Jackson C., who carries on a ranch in Fresno county; Barbara E., Mrs. Taylor, who died in Tulare county at her home on the White river; and A. H., Jr., court reporter, and a resident of Visalia.

ABRAM HUNTER MURRAY, JR. Practically the entire life of A. H. Murray, Jr., has been passed in Tulare county, where he is well known. Upon the home farm near the present city of Visalia he was born November 12, 1863, being the youngest among the seven children of Abram Hunter Murray, Sr. The educational advantages of the growing town of Visalia were within his reach and of these he availed himself to the utmost, taking the regular course of study in the old Visalia Normal, from which he was graduated in 1882. Meanwhile, during a portion of the years 1870 and 1880, he had been employed at The Dalles, Ore., where his father temporarily engaged in business. Soon after his graduation from the Normal he took up the study of shorthand in San Francisco and when he had completed the course he returned to Visalia. For a time he was connected with an abstract office as clerk and stenographer and then entered the service of another abstract firm, with whom he remained until his appointment in 1888 as deputy to the county clerk, John G. Knox. In September, 1890, he was appointed official reporter of the superior court of Tulare county and has held the position ever since, with the exception of the years 1896-98, when he was engaged in private business. In his profession he has the reputation of being an expert, and among the court reporters of the entire state none stands higher than he in accuracy of transcripts and thoroughness of work. A man of progressive spirit, he has been eager to adopt any plans calculated to benefit him in the discharge of his official duties. Among other improvements, he was one of the first to adopt the graphophone in the transcribing of his notes. The first efforts in this line were not successful, but after certain changes had been made in the cylinders, the machine began to work with accuracy, and he now uses it to the entire exclusion of the old-fashioned system of transcripts.

Within one-half mile of the city limits of Visalia Mr. Murray owns a fruit ranch of twenty-three and one-half acres, of which eight acres are in an orchard and the balance in alfalfa. The supervision of this property enables him to gain a needed relaxation from the trying responsibilities of his work as reporter. The comfortable home occupied by his family was built by himself some years since and is one of the attractive dwellings of Visalia. An influential Democrat he holds office as chairman of the county central committee and is a leader in all local work of the party. Fraternally he is a prominent Mason, being master of Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M.; member of Visalia Chapter No. 44, R. A. M.; Visalia Commandery No. 26, K. T.; Islam Temple, N. M. S., and the Order of the Eastern Star. In addition, he is an active member of Visalia Parlor No. 19, N. S. G. W.

In Visalia Mr. Murray married Miss Karoline A. Knox, by whom he has one child, Rita. Mrs. Murray was born in the Greenhorn mountains in Kern county and received her education in Visalia, where she is a leading member of the Episcopal Church, the Eastern Star, and Visalia Parlor, N. D. G. W. In the latter organization she acts as grand organist of the Grand Parlor, to which she presented a march of her own composition. The Parlor adopted it as their official march and published it under the name of the Karoline march in her honor. In other ways her talent as a pianist has brought pleasure to her friends and honors to herself. The family of which she is a member traces its genealogy to Scotland, but became early settlers of Virginia and a number of them bore arms in the Revolution. Her father, John G. Knox, a California pioneer of 1857, was born in Greene county, Mo., being a son of George and Amanda (Gaw) Knox, natives of old Virginia, but long residents of Greene county, Mo., where George Knox followed mercantile pursuits, also engaged in the steamboat business and the Santa Fe trade. In a family of four daughters and four sons, of whom two daughters and two sons survive, John G. Knox is the oldest one now living. He was born February 19, 1838, and after completing the studies of the district schools attended the Jones Commercial College at St. Louis for a year. When seventeen years of age he became a clerk on one of his father's boats. In 1857 he made the overland trip to California, whither an older brother, George, had migrated in 1850. The journey was made with ox-teams to Salt Lake, and thence by pack animals on the old Mormon trail to San Bernardino, Cal., thence to Visalia and on to the Kern river mines, where Mr. Knox became interested in buying and selling mines, and also engaged in the stock business. In 1865 he was elected county clerk, but after three months he resigned for the privilege of residing in the Greenhorn mountains. He was interested in the organization of the county of Kern and served there as an under-sheriff. In 1869 he came to Visalia, where he first served as deputy county clerk and later for twelve years held the clerk's office. In 1893 he took out papers as a notary public and United States commissioner and at this writing is referee in bankruptcy, also owns an interest in the Tulare Abstract Company. Politically he is a Democrat and fraternally holds membership in the Independent Order of Foresters. Elected a member of one of the first boards of school trustees in Visalia, for years he continued in that position and filled the same with characteristic fidelity. Near Farmersville, Tulare county, he married Julia Brown, who was born in Indiana and came to California in 1854 at the age of eight years, accompanying her father, John Brown, a pioneer miner of Tulare county. Of their marriage three children were born, namely: Karoline, wife of A. H. Murray, Jr., of Visalia; Nora, wife of W. T. Nicholson, who is supreme court reporter in San Francisco; and John Franklin.

A. J. HONIGSBERGER. Among the active and progressive business men of Visalia is A. J. Honigsberger, proprietor of one of the leading clothing establishments of Tulare county. A man of good impulses and strict integrity, careful and conscientious in all of his dealings, he is observant of those high moral principles that have gained for him the respect of the community and the good will of his fellow-men.

Born, reared and educated in New York City, A. J. Honigsberger began life as a wage-earner at the age of thirteen years, finding employment in a jewelry store. His health failing, he came to San Francisco, Cal., in 1876, and was there engaged in the wool business for a number of years. Locating in Visalia in 1891, Mr. Honigsberger opened a gentlemen's clothing and furnishing goods store, and has since built up an extensive and lucrative trade. Beginning on a modest scale, he enlarged his operations as demanded by his patronage, and has now a fine location on the corner of Church and Main streets, having moved to this building on its completion, in 1897. By good management and thrift Mr. Honigsberger has accumulated a competency, a part of which he has invested in real estate, having a peach orchard of ten acres lying a mile and a half southwest of the city. He is identified with the business progress of this section and is a member of the Visalia Board of Trade.

Politically Mr. Honigsberger supports the principles of the Democratic party. Fraternally he was made an Odd Fellow in San Jose, and is now past grand of Visalia Lodge, past chief patriarch of Visalia Encampment; a member of the Rebekahs, and of the Visalia Canton; and belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

BASIL G. PARKER. This California pioneer of the early '50s was born in Ray county, Tenn., September 20, 1825, and in 1834 accompanied his parents to Arkansas, settling on a tract of cane land in Carroll county. There with a grubbing hoe he assisted in clearing off the cane and underbrush and endured all the privations of life in the midst of the most primeval conditions. Educational advantages there were absolutely none. All the knowledge he possessed was acquired in the school of experience. While still less than twenty-one, July 20, 1846, he married Malinda Charlotte Kelly, and the two began housekeeping without any capital save affection and hope. Hardships gathered thick and fast; the loss of their little home by fire proved a distressing occurrence; and the strictest frugality and hardest labor did not enable them to provide their children with the comforts they desired. Believing he might be more successful in another section, Mr. Parker secured the consent of his wife to remove to California, and April 1, 1853, they started on the long journey through an unknown desert and over trackless plains. They crossed the Arkansas river with a large party, then traveled up the river to Fort Smith, next journeyed through the Cherokee, Chickasaw and Choctaw Indian nations, crossed the Red river at Preston, traveled across the frontiers of Texas to the Rio Grande, which they followed about sixty miles before crossing, and from there pursued their way into New Mexico, a land then abounding with rattlesnakes, horned toads, centipedes and tarantulas; next entered the most desolate part of Arizona, and traveled on through Santa Cruz, Tucson and Pima. After crossing the Gila river they began the journey through the desert of ninety miles, on whose glistening surface lay the bleaching bones of many travelers. The journey was full of perils. Water was so scarce that death from thirst threatened the entire party, and at one time Mr. Parker was about to give up in despair when his father, a man then about sixty years old, walking on ahead, soon returned to tell of a running brook of pure water. With the discovery of this stream their worst troubles were over, for they were then within sixteen miles of the end of the desert.

While the family were spending the winter at Los Angeles, one of the daughters died of the scarlet fever. In the spring Mr. Parker brought the other members of the family to Tulare county, stopping at Visalia, where they camped under an immense oak tree occupying the present site of the court-house. The town consisted of a few board shanties, but the climate seemed excellent, wood, water and grass abounded, and all the butter Mrs. Parker could make found ready sale at seventy-five cents a pound. These inducements were sufficient to cause the family to settle here. Mr. Parker obtained a tract of land five miles north of town, and there put up a shanty about twelve feet square, this being the first roof they had slept under for twenty months. From the first he was interested in raising stock, those he brought with him forming the nucleus of a large herd. After a few prosperous years word came from Arkansas of the death of his oldest brother, so Mr. and Mrs. Parker decided to return there for the widow and her three little boys, also for a widowed sister of Mrs. Parker with her two girls. Proceeding to San Francisco, they bought first-class tickets on the Orizaba, which sailed November 20, 1856. At Central America they encountered trouble owing to the filibustering expedition of Walker and were forced to go without food for such a long period that, when provisions came, many of the passengers ate too heartily and died of cholera. From Greytown they proceeded to New Orleans and there took a Mississippi river steamer for Arkansas. Meeting old friends did not form all of Mr. Parker's activities while there, for he also bought a herd of cattle to drive overland; with these and a number of Arkansas acquaintances he started on the return trip, traveling via the Arkansas river and on to the South Platte, over Cripple creek to Green river, thence to Salt Lake City, where they procured a reinforcement of provisions, on to Ogden, thence to Bear river, and the head waters of the Humboldt river, thence across the desert of forty-five miles to the Carson river, after which they found an abundance of water, grass and wood all the way to the Sierras, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles. October 1, 1857, they reached the summit of the mountains, and then traveled along the Big Tree route past Angel's Camp and Murphy's, and on the 26th of October arrived at his ranch with a herd of three hundred head of cattle.

Shortly after his return Mr. Parker built a two-story brick house. For some years he was prospered, but with the passage of the law regarding fences he saw that cattle could no longer be raised with profit, and so turned his attention to sheep. However, these proved an expensive investment and caused him heavy losses, finally obliging him to sell his ranch to meet his debts. At this time a nephew, Thomas Kelley, came to his aid, offering him equal shares in all that he could raise on a ranch on the Tule river. The proposition was accepted and in less than three years uncle and nephew divided over $7,000 and had more stock on the ranch than at first. With the money thus gained Mr. Parker bought a ranch near Portersville, but there he became a sufferer from malaria, and was forced to move out on the plains, where he soon regained his health. On account of his two grandchildren who lived with him wishing to find work, he and his wife moved into Tulare, and there ten years later his beloved wife passed away, leaving him alone in the world. His last days were spent in the home of his grandchildren at Tulare, where the loneliness of age was mitigated by their companionship and cheerful ministrations. He passed away May 19, 1903.

WILKO MENTZ. Active, energetic and progressive in his views, Wilko Mentz is prominent in the agricultural, financial, social and fraternal circles of Tulare county, and is identified with the best interests of Portersville, where he has spent the greater portion of his life. A man of ability and push, he has been successful in his undertakings, and judging from his past career a fine future is before him. He is a native-born Californian, his birth having occurred, January 5, 1857, in San Francisco. On both sides of the house he comes of thrifty German ancestry, and has inherited in a marked degree those habits of industry and prudence characteristic of his race.

Henry Mentz, his father, was born August 20, 1824, in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, and when a young man immigrated to the United States, arriving in the spring of 1850. He came almost directly to California, and for a few years resided in San Francisco. Coming to Tulare county, from there, he located in Portersville, where he was engaged in the cattle business until his death, which occurred August 13, 1901. His wife, whose maiden name was Regina Meyers, was born in Germany, and died in San Francisco, leaving an only child, Wilko, of this review.

Reared and educated in San Francisco, Wilko Mentz first attended a private school, after which he entered the City College, where he took a full business course. After his graduation he worked with his father in the stock business for a few years. In 1887 he opened a store of general merchandise in Portersville, and built up a large and thriving trade, which he conducted until burned out in the great fire of 1897, when his building, with its contents, was destroyed. Since that time Mr. Mentz has rented a store and continued as a general merchant, meeting with exceptional success. He is also still interested in the stock business, having two large ranches, aggregating thirty-six hundred acres of land, devoted to general farming and cattle breeding and raising. He is recognized as a man of financial ability, and is serving as president of the First National Bank of Portersville. He was president of the first board of trustees of the city, of which he was one of the incorporators.

Politically Mr. Mentz is a stalwart Republican, ever ready to support the principles of his party by voice and vote. Fraternally he is a member of Portersville Lodge No. 303, F. & A. M.; of Portersville Chapter No. 85, R. A. M.; and of Portersville Lodge No. 93, K. of P., in which he has passed all the chairs.

WILLIAM L. WEAVER. Prominent among the most respected and esteemed residents of the British Colony, Merced county, is William L. Weaver, who, as an industrious and capable farmer, is closely identified with the agricultural and industrial prosperity of this section of California. Although not very large, his ranch, with its excellent improvements, constitutes one of the best and most desirable pieces of property in the neighborhood. His house, a two-story frame building of modern construction, was built at a cost of $7,000, and contains eight rooms and a bath. It is conveniently arranged and furnished, surrounded by beautiful flowers, whose brilliancy is enhanced by the vivid green of a large field of alfalfa which forms the foreground of the home lot, rendering the estate especially attractive to the passers-by. A native of Westmoreland county, Pa., he was born January 15, 1847. His father, Henry Weaver, was a Pennsylvania farmer and died at his home in July, 1888, aged seventy-three years. His wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Pool, survived him, passing away at the age of eighty-seven years, in 1902.

Reared and educated in his native state, William L. Weaver followed the carpenter's trade during his earlier life. In January, 1870, he made a trip to California, and until October, 1871, remained here, working in the meantime for wages. Returning home in 1872, he followed his trade in Pennsylvania for a while, but not content came again to the Pacific coast in 1874, bringing his family with him. In 1876 he took up his residence in Merced county, and for three years was employed on different ranches. Buying a half section of land in 1879, he was for twenty-one years successfully employed in raising grain, finding the occupation both pleasant and profitable. Disposing of that property, Mr. Weaver bought his present ranch in 1901, at that time buying sixty-two acres of land, but having sold a part of the original purchase his farm now contains but forty acres, the greater part of which he devotes to alfalfa, although he has a vineyard of three acres from which he has gathered forty-five tons of grapes. He likewise pays some attention to stock growing, raising hogs on a limited scale. His farm is advantageously located, being but four miles west of Merced, and within easy reach of good markets. Mr. Weaver has three brothers living in Merced county, one of whom, R. A. Weaver, owns a ranch fifteen miles from Merced, which is operated by John and Abram Weaver, his brothers.

While a resident of Pennsylvania Mr. Weaver married, December 28, 1871, Annie Stoner, who was born in that state February 5, 1847, a daughter of Christian Stoner, a lifelong resident of Pennsylvania. Nine children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Weaver, the two oldest of whom were born in Pennsylvania and the others in California, namely: Charles H., farming on the west side; Elma, the wife of J. C. Middleton, living near Newman, Cal.; Sarah C.; Christian S., a teacher; Robert, farming with his brother Charles; Mollie R., a teacher; Nettie M.; Margaret A.; and Alvin E.

JOHN CRAL BRAUER. The industrial circles of Newman have no more worthy representative than John C. Brauer, who has built up an extensive and remunerative business as a general blacksmith, his mechanical skill and ingenuity being recognized by all with whom he has dealings. A son of Paul Brauer, he was born August 20, 1861, in Rendsburg, Holstein, Germany. A native, also, of Holstein, Paul Brauer was for many years foreman of a fertilizer factory in Rendsburg, Germany, where he is now living retired from the active cares of business. He married Christina Hansen, who died in the fatherland, where her entire life had been passed. She bore him nine children, three sons and six daughters, John C. being the fifth child in order of birth.

Having acquired a substantial education in the public schools of his native land, John C. Brauer served a full apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade in, or near, Rendsburg. In 1880, prior to attaining his majority, he crossed the ocean to America, and for about six months worked at his trade in the Simpson Carriage Factory, in Omaha, Neb. Going thence to Colorado, he assisted in the construction of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad, and of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy Railroad, working as a blacksmith in the railway camps. Removing to Idaho in the spring of 1882, Mr. Brauer worked on the Oregon Short Line for six months, and then, in the fall of 1882, came to the Pacific coast, locating in Sacramento, and has since traveled extensively throughout the state. Settling in Newman, in 1890, he worked as a journeyman blacksmith for a year, and then, with a partner, bought his present smithy. In April, 1903, Mr. Brauer purchased his partner's interest in the business, which he has since managed alone, meeting with characteristic success in his undertaking.

Since becoming a resident of Newman, Mr. Brauer married Maria Ibs, a native of Germany, and they have four children, namely: Ella, Paul, Freda and Anna. Intelligent and well informed, possessing excellent judgment and sound common sense, Mr. Brauer is ably performing his duties as a faithful citizen of his adopted country. A staunch adherent of the Republican party, he has served for the past six years as a member of the County Central Committee. He is an influential member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having passed all the chairs of his lodge, and belongs to the American Order of United Workmen, and to the Woodmen of the World. A man of great moral worth and integrity, he is a valued member of the German Lutheran Church, toward the support of which he contributes liberally.

CAPT. THOMAS H. THOMPSON. Intense loyalty to their country has ever characterized the Thompson family. When they became transplanted from Scotland into the rigorous climate of Maine they brought with them the courage, perseverance and fidelity characteristic of the race. Thomas Thompson of Maine was a brave soldier of the Revolution, and his son, Capt. Thomas H., Sr., who was born in Brunswick, Me., served in the war of 1812 with the same patriotic devotion that had led the father to endure hardships innumerable in the first struggle with Great Britain. Some years after the second war had terminated Captain Thompson removed to Plattsburg, N. Y., and in 1832 went as far west as Chicago, then known as Fort Dearborn, where he built the first bridge across the Chicago river. Eventually he removed to the Fox river in Kane county, where he died in 1861.

His wife, who bore the maiden name of Sarah Hoyt, was born in Plattsburg, N. Y., and died in Illinois. She was a daughter of Col. George W. Hoyt, a native of New York, and an officer in the war of 1812, later becoming a pioneer of Bloomingdale, Ill., where his last days were passed.

In the family of Capt. Thomas H. Thompson, Sr., there were ten children, and all but one attained mature years. A son, Harlow C., is now manager of the water works at Santa Barbara, Cal. Thomas H., Jr., was born in Kane county, Ill., October 1, 1842, and as a boy worked so constantly on the home farm that he had little leisure to attend school. Notwithstanding his lack of advantages he gained a thorough knowledge of civil engineering and surveying, and as early as 1859 he turned his attention to surveying and map-making. When the Civil war began he was fired with the patriotic spirit inherited from a long line of courageous ancestors and at once offered his services for the required time of three months, but the quota being filled he and his companions were not sent to the front. During September, 1861, he enlisted in Company I, Fifty-second Illinois Infantry, which was mustered into service at Geneva, Ill., and sent south. The list of his engagements includes the battle of Pittsburg Landing or Shiloh, first battle of Corinth, Lagrange, Iuka, Holly Springs, Chattanooga, Dallas, Resaca, Snake creek (where his regiment built the pontoon used to move the first troops over the water), Peach Tree creek, Kenesaw, Lost mountain, Buzzard's Roost, Altoona Pass, Jonesboro and siege of Atlanta. After Shiloh he was promoted from the ranks to be second lieutenant, sixty days later became regimental quartermaster, eighteen days later was made brigade quartermaster, still later was made first lieutenant and division quartermaster, and eventually was raised to the rank of captain and inspector-general, detailed as topographical engineer on the staff of General McPherson, whom he met fifteen minutes before he fell in battle. After the death of McPherson he was given the same work on the staff of General Logan, but after the arrival of General Howard he was transferred to the staff of Gen. John M. Corse as inspector-general with the rank of captain. It is significant of his accuracy that, when relieved as quartermaster, his accounts showing millions of dollars that had passed through his hands were closed up and settled with the passage of but one letter. Not the slightest error could be found in them, notwithstanding the large amounts handled.

On the expiration of his term of office and service Captain Thompson in October, 1864, was mustered out at Rome, Ga. The following winter he spent in Louisville, Ky., and during that time renewed a close friendship formed with General Sweeney, the veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars. For about seven years afterward he engaged in publishing maps and county atlases in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa. After the great fire in Chicago he carried on a furniture business there, but sold out in 1873 and resumed the publication of maps. On coming to California in 1875 he engaged in the map business in Oakland, continuing there until his health failed about the fall of 1883. During 1885 he came to Tulare county, where he bought a ranch and took up farm pursuits. Later he became interested in the sale of agricultural implements and vehicles, from which he drifted into the real estate business and also published atlases of Fresno and Tulare counties. At this writing he is an extensive dealer in lands and real estate, makes loans and issues insurance policies in old-line companies.

Ever since casting his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, Captain Thompson has been a firm believer in Republican principles. In Illinois, Iowa and California, he has been prominent in the work of the state conventions, and in this state served as a member of the executive committee for years, also in 1884 was chosen a delegate to the national convention at Chicago that nominated James G. Blaine for president. In 1890 Governor Markham appointed him commissioner from his congressional district to the Columbian Exposition of 1893. On the organization of the commission he was chosen secretary and general manager and during the following two years devoted almost his entire attention to the work of preparation, meanwhile advertising to the state and the country the fine natural resources of California. In April, 1893, he resigned as secretary of the commission, but three months later returned to assist them in their work. The splendid state building at the Chicago Exposition, furnishing a fine type of old mission architecture, and filled with the most magnificent fruits and other products of the state, was admired by thousands of visitors and brought many home-seekers to the coast.

The marriage of Captain Thompson occurred in Dundee, Ill., and united him with Lucy W. Hemenway, who was born and reared there. Her father, William R., who was a farmer by occupation and for some years the postmaster of Dundee, served as commissary sergeant in the Civil war, being a member of Company I, Fifty-second Illinois Infantry. The children of Captain and Mrs. Thompson are Sarah May (Mrs. C. F. Rillet of Oakland) and Lucy Pearl (Mrs. William H. Jones of Salt Lake). In religious connections Mrs. Thompson is identified with the Congregational Church. While living in Illinois Captain Thompson was made a Mason at Dundee, and is now a member of Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, at Tulare; is demitted from the Chapter at Anamosa, Iowa, and still a member of Mount Olivet Commandery No. 36, K. T., at Anamosa. Until the disbandment of the Grand Army Post at Tulare he was its commander, and he is further connected with the California Chapter of Loyal Legion in San Francisco. Among the social organizations of which he is a member may be mentioned the Union League Club of San Francisco. At this writing he holds office as vice-president of the Tulare Board of Trade, in which for years he has been a leading worker. At the time of President Harrison's visit to the Pacific coast he was appointed president of the committee to arrange for the entertainment of their distinguished guest. Desiring to introduce some novel feature into the affairs, the captain brought to town the stump of one of California's big trees. The stump had a diameter of twenty-nine feet and from it, with appropriate decorations, President Harrison delivered an address to the throng of people gathered to welcome him. The unusual platform furnished gave rise to the comment that this address was the "biggest stump speech" ever given, and the presence of such a unique product of the state, supplemented by other features provided for the entertainment of the president, made of the occasion a successful function to which the people still refer with pride and pleasure.

CHRISTOPHER H. BANTA. The owner of a pleasant home and farm in Fresno county, C. H. Banta, of Dos Palos Colony, is widely and favorably known as justice of the peace for the First District of Fresno county, which includes nearly all the west side of the county. Liberal and enterprising, he is also noted for his keen intelligence, and sound judgment as a public official, his decisions being marked by fairness and impartiality. A son of William J. Banta, he was born April 22, 1855, near Clinton, Henry county, Mo. His paternal grandfather, A. Banta, was one of the hardy pioneers that assisted in settling Missouri. He afterward removed to Colorado, and there spent the declining years of his life, dying in 1883.

Although born in Kentucky, William J. Banta grew to manhood in Missouri, and there commenced life for himself as a farmer. Removing with his family to Colorado, he settled first near Pueblo as an agriculturist, but went from there to Cripple Creek, where he discovered and opened mines that proved of great value. He accumulated great wealth in his operations, and now has two homes, one in Idaho, and one at Dos Palos, Cal. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Goff, was a native of Tennessee.

John Martens

The oldest of a family of nine children, C. H. Banta spent the days of his boyhood and youth in Colorado, going there when eight years old, and receiving his early education in the public schools. Turning his attention to agricultural pursuits, he afterward worked on cattle ranches and as a teamster for a while. He subsequently traveled extensively in Colorado, becoming acquainted with all parts of the state, for a short time being employed as clerk in Durango. Coming to California in 1884, Mr. Banta located in what is now Kings county, and for two years followed farming for a living. Locating in Firebaugh in 1886, he worked during the summer seasons for Miller & Lux for a number of years, while in the winter he was busily employed in hunting, supplying the local and city markets with ducks and geese. In 1899 Mr. Banta settled in Dos Palos Colony, his residence and farm being in Fresno county, where he operates ten acres of land. Being elected justice of the peace in November, 1902, he took the oath of office in January, 1903, and has since served ably and faithfully in this position, his services being recognized and appreciated by all concerned. The territory over which he has official jurisdiction embraces a large part of the west side of Fresno county, and he has two offices, one at Firebaugh and one at Mendota.

Mr. Banta married, in Fresno, Mrs. Sarah P. (Johnson) Dye, who was born in West Virginia, and came to Dos Palos in 1894. By her former marriage four sons were born, Homer, Clarence, Frinzy and Evert. The only child born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Banta is a son, named Leonard. In his political views Mr. Banta is a staunch Republican, and is an active member of the party, at the present time being a member of the Republican county central committee. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of the Knights of the Maccabees and of the Fraternal Aid.

JOHN MARTENS. Coming from a country where the density of population makes of agriculture an intensive occupation, one unfamiliar with Mr. Martens' capable and energetic disposition scarcely would expect him to embark in stock-raising upon a scale undreamed of in his native land. Abundant proof of his ability is furnished by the quickness with which he grasped the large opportunities offered by California. From the time of his arrival in Tulare county, in 1872, until the present day, he has been engaged in the sheep business upon a scale so extensive that more than once his flocks have numbered twenty-three thousand head, and without question he is the largest raiser of sheep in the entire county. During the long years of his large ventures he has had his share of losses, perhaps the most disastrous of these occurring in 1877, when out of a flock of thirty-seven hundred he lost all but fourteen hundred. Yet, take it all in all, the business has proved very profitable, the losses have been recompensed by large profits, and the years have brought him a success where another man with less courage might have met with failure.

The Martens family is of loyal German stock. John Martens was born in the city of Heide, Holstein, not far from the shores of the North sea, and is a son of John J. and Wipke (Sivers) Martens, natives of the same kingdom, and lifelong residents of that part of Germany, making their home upon a farm. The father was a participant in the first Schleswig-Holstein war; at the time of his death he was sixty years of age. In his family there are six children, namely: Harder, who remains upon a farm in Holstein; Claus, who is engaged in the sheep business in Tulare county; Hans, a manufacturer of plush cases, doing business in New York City; Mrs. Annie Beshorn, of San Francisco; John, of Tulare county; and Elene, Mrs. Peters, who still lives in Holstein. The youngest son, John, was born August 28, 1850, and received a common school education in Heide. During the fall of 1867 he crossed the ocean to New York, and from there sailed to Aspinwall, thence to San Francisco. For a year he was employed on a farm at what was then Bannos. In the fall of 1868 he and two brothers went to the new city of San Diego and homesteaded land on the mesa near the San Miguel mountains, where they engaged in raising grain for three years. The rainfall being insufficient to mature their crops and facilities for irrigation not being available at that time, they abandoned their house and farm and came to Tulare county, where they entered land on the Big Bayou and engaged in farming.

The sheep business, which has been the chosen occupation of Mr. Martens since 1873, was started in that year on the Bayou, the valley being utilized as a range for the flocks. After three years he moved his sheep to Kern county and later to Fresno, where he had his camp on a spot within the limits of the present city of that name. Returning to Tulare county in 1879 he rented land at Fountain Springs south of Deer creek and turned his sheep upon that range for three years, later moving to a point somewhat below the other. At this writing he rents for his sheep a ranch of nine thousand acres, and of this property he owns four hundred and eighty acres situated near Alila. In addition he rents twenty thousand acres in the Antelope valley in Kern county, this property, as the other, being abundantly supplied with wells. The sheep are of the Shropshire and Merino varieties, and to care for them twenty hands are employed under the oversight of two foremen.

In San Francisco, September 2, 1886, occurred the marriage of Mr. Martens and Miss Christina Dorothea Dahl, a native of Heide, Holstein, and a daughter of Suhl and Christina Dahl. Her parents were natives of Holstein and spent their lives upon a farm, dying at their home farm on the same day. Of their seven children, Claus died in Iowa. Five are now living, namely: Herman and John, of Iowa; Katherine, who remains in Holstein; Wipke, living in Iowa; and Christina, Mrs. Martens. Mr. and Mrs. Martens have been extensive travelers. He has made six trips back to his old German home and his wife has returned there seven times. Their daughters, Dorothea and Mary, were born in Linden, Germany, and have been made citizens of Germany by Emperor William. The family are of the Lutheran faith and conform to the doctrines of that denomination. After coming to Tulare county Mr. Martens was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is still a member of the local lodge. Though cherishing the greatest fondness for his native country, he discharges every duty resting upon a citizen of California, has been a student of the government of the United States and has adopted the Republican platform as the expression of his personal opinions in matters of national moment. Any plan for the promotion of the sheep industry meets his hearty co-operation. Largely through his efforts an organization was effected known as the Tulare County Wool Growers' Association and of this he has been an active member and leading worker.

JOHN AUGUST LEEBON. Three miles east of Visalia, Tulare county, is located the fine fruit ranch which belongs to John August Leebon, one of the progressive and successful ranchmen of this section. A native of Sweden, he was born May 16, 1861, and was reared to young manhood in the country, receiving his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home. In 1881 he immigrated to America and located in Minneapolis, Minn. Desiring to acquire more education than he possessed he attended school for one year, after which he engaged as a laborer on a farm, and also worked in the stables of a street car company. Coming to California in 1886 he located in San Jose and found employment in an orchard for a year and a half, after which he worked in a sawmill in Tacoma, Wash. As the result of an accident he was in a hospital for some time, and in 1889 returned to San Jose and engaged in teaming. He continued profitably in this employment for about eight years, when, in 1897, he came to Tulare county and in the vicinity of Visalia rented one hundred and eighteen acres of land from the First National Bank of San Jose. In 1901 he was able financially to purchase this property, the greater part of which was then planted to fruit, sixty acres given over to the cultivation of peaches, twenty to prunes, six to nectarines, while the balance is devoted to pasture and grain. He is modern and up to date in his methods and has made a success of his work.

In San Jose, Cal., Mr. Leebon was married to Annie Anderson, also a native of Sweden, who died in her home in Visalia, leaving two sons, Oscar William and Carl Edward. Mr. Leebon was one of the founders of the Swedish Mission Church of San Jose, of which he is a charter member. Politically he is a Republican, and though never desirous of public office he has accepted that of school director, and is now serving as clerk of the board. He is an enterprising and public-spirited citizen and commands the esteem of all with whom he comes in contact.

ALBERT G. AKIN. The record of a life well lived, of duties faithfully discharged, of a competence won in all good conscience, make bright the evening of his days for Albert G. Akin, a pioneer vineyardist of Fresno county, located upon his ranch near Oleander. A native of Wentworth, N. H., he was born November 22, 1824, the son of William Akin, also a native of New Hampshire and whose death occurred in Rochester, N. Y., when Mr. Akin was but one year old. He was a millwright by occupation. The family is of Scotch origin, the great-grandfather of Mr. Akin, Jedediah, having emigrated from his native land to the United States, where he participated in the Revolutionary war.

Reared to manhood upon a farm, Mr. Akin was trained in the practical duties and the methodical habits which are characteristic of the successful agriculturist, and in engaging for himself in the battle of life carried with him the benefits of both training and inheritance. Being of a studious turn of mind he at first thought he would follow a profession, studying law for two years. In 1870 he went to the oil fields of Pennsylvania, where he engaged in drilling wells for some time, remaining in the state for fifteen years. Previous to his work in the oil wells of that state, however, he had gone to Indiana, where he enlisted in the Forty-second Indiana Regiment of Infantry and served valiantly in the Civil war. Attracted by the manifest opportunities of the West he came to California in 1885, spending the first eight months in Ventura county, after which he located in Fresno county, purchasing his present farm of forty acres in Washington Colony, seven and a half miles from the city of Fresno. Upon this ranch he has since made his home, interested in agricultural pursuits. Of the ranch twenty-nine acres are devoted to the cultivation of grapes, and he has also another ranch of forty acres in the same colony, devoted to grapes and various other fruits.

In Newcastle, Pa., March 17, 1846, Mr. Akin was married to Joanna W. Carroll who was born in that state October 19, 1826, a daughter of Jonathan Carroll, also a native of that state. Mr. Akin and his wife celebrated their golden wedding in 1896 and are happy in their lengthening years together. They are the parents of five living children, of whom Emlyn H. is engaged in Texas oil fields; George W. is operating for oil in Indian Territory; Melvine is engaged in drilling water wells in Fresno county and conducts the home ranch; Franklin A. is a printer in Titusville, Pa.; and Willard N. is mining in Alaska. In his political convictions Mr. Akin is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and fraternally is a member of the Masonic order, in which he is past master.

JAMES M. ESTES. Ever since establishing his home in the county of Tulare Mr. Estes has made agriculture his chosen occupation, his specialty at times being the raising of grain, while more recently he has devoted his attention largely to the dairy business as a member of the firm of Hunsaker & Estes. By means of a dairy comprising seventy-five head of cows and with the aid of a separator, a large and profitable industry has been gradually built up by the two partners. The cattle are pastured on their farm of nine hundred and sixty-seven acres on Elk Bayou, four and one-half miles east of Tulare, of which property five hundred and fifty acres are under alfalfa and the balance utilized for the raising of general farm products. In the mowing of hay a Fleming buck rake is used to gather up the alfalfa, which is then brought to a stack and from there elevated by a derrick and fork. During the last season (1904) five hundred tons were baled from two cuttings of two hundred and fifty acres and the balance of the cuttings were threshed for seed.

Mr. Estes is of southern parentage, his parents, W. H. and Emily V. (Carroll) Estes, having been natives respectively of Kentucky and Virginia. The paternal grandfather, James Estes, who served in the Black Hawk war, removed from Kentucky to Missouri in 1823, when W. H. was only a year old, and the latter in time became the possessor of the Missouri homestead, where he remained until his death in July of 1887. His wife, who accompanied her parents to Illinois at an early age and from there went to Missouri, died at the old home in August, 1885. Of their seven children three make their home in California. J. M., who was the eldest son and second child, was born near Louisiana, Pike county, Mo., February 19, 1860, and in boyhood attended the common schools of his district. When twenty-one years of age he took up farming for himself in his home state, but in 1886 removed to Kansas and entered upon railroad work at Chanute, Neesho county, later following the same occupation at Blue Hill, Neb. From there in 1887 he went to eastern Oregon, spending a short time at Arlington, Gilliam county. During six months of 1888 he was engaged in assisting to drive seven thousand sheep from that section of country across the plains to Sidney, Cheyenne county, Neb., it being his intention to remain in the east after his return. However, finding that his father had died during his absence and the old home thus broken up, he decided to come to California, and April of 1889 found him in Los Angeles, whence in June following he came to Tulare. Since then he has made his headquarters in this city, his present home being on South G street. From here he has made frequent trips to his country place, in the interests of his agricultural pursuits. At one time he cultivated a tract of three thousand acres, using four six-horse teams in the work; but of recent years he has given his attention almost wholly to the dairy industry, and has been successful to a gratifying degree in the management of this responsible work. In politics he votes with the Democratic party. The Woodmen of the World and Fraternal Brotherhood number him among the members of their orders at Tulare. In this city he was united in marriage with Miss Mary White, who was born and reared in Tulare county, being a member of a pioneer family of the state. At an early day her mother came to the coast by way of Cape Horn, while her father, Mosby White, who now resides at Palo Alto, was a very early settler of Tulare county.

LOUIS F. BAMBAUER. Among the dairymen of the Los Banos district are many who correctly estimate the opportunities by which they are surrounded, and who, by diligence and faithfulness to trusts imposed, fulfill their mission as exponents and successful managers of worthy enterprises. Of these, Louis F. Bambauer is well known and highly honored, being one of the younger generation who are carrying on the work begun by worthy sires in the pioneer days.

Mr. Bambauer was born in Calaveras county, this state, February 11, 1872, the youngest of the children of Charles Daniel Bambauer, who came from Baden, Germany, and whose life is reviewed elsewhere in this work. Mr. Bambauer lived on his father's mountain farm until five years old, and then located with the rest of the family on a farm near Hills Ferry, Merced county, where he attended the public schools, and lived until his twentieth year. Looking ahead into the future, he chose the blacksmith trade as a worthy means of livelihood, serving an apprenticeship under his brother, Charles D., at Volta, and continuing to work at his trade in the same town for nine years. He then left the forge and anvil and engaged in stock-raising and general farming, and in 1902 purchased his present fertile ranch of forty acres, one mile south of Los Banos. He has a dairy of about twenty-five cows, mostly Durhams and Holsteins. The Bambauer ranch, called Green Acres, is well improved and equipped with modern, labor-saving devices, and under its present management gives evidence of the method and care adopted by its owner.

In Palo Alto, this state, October 5, 1903, Mr. Bambauer married Lulu Gertrude, daughter of the late Charles A. and Mrs. Marian A. (Souther) Wood, both early settlers of California. Mrs. Bambauer was born in San Felipe, Santa Clara county, and after graduating from the San Jose Normal School engaged in educational work in Los Banos for several years. Mr. Bambauer votes the Democratic ticket in national politics, but locally is guided solely by the merits of office-seekers. He is a liberal and public-spirited gentleman, having many friends in a community which has watched his progress during his active life, and which has found him invariably honorable, courteous and steadfast.

PETER S. CROOP. Eight miles north of Le Grand, in Merced county, Cal., and fifteen miles northeast of Merced, resides Peter S. Croop, who, for the past five years, has rented a ranch which contains fourteen hundred and eighty acres, upon which he devotes his time to raising grain and stock, and from the beginning has met with gratifying success. A native of Allegany county, N. Y., he was born December 16, 1872, the fourth in a family of six children born to Stephen and Susan (Wagner) Croop, both of whom were natives of Pennsylvania.

When a young man Stephen Croop left the Keystone state for a home in New York, where he engaged in dairy farming, for years devoting his time exclusively to this business. In 1880 he left New York and with his family came to California; locating in Merced county, he purchased the ranch of eight hundred acres which is still occupied by his widow and where his death occurred in 1900. He met with good success in his farming operations, and as a citizen he was one of the most highly respected men in the county. Politically a Democrat, he never cared for office, but was always a strong advocate of party principles. He was a member of the Masons and Odd Fellows. Mr. and Mrs. Croop became the parents of six children, namely: Mrs. Ida Herren, Mrs. Hattie Aumsbaugh, Scott, Peter S., Maggie and Grover, all residents of Merced county. Grover conducts the home ranch for his mother, twelve miles southwest of Merced.

Peter S. Croop was about eight years old when his parents brought him to Merced county. He was educated in the common schools and remained on the home ranch until he was twenty-five, and then embarked in business for himself. Renting twelve hundred acres of land six miles south of Merced, for two years he engaged in raising stock and grain; he then leased the ranch where he now resides. He is a worthy representative of the young men of Merced county, aiding all movements that have been of benefit to the people and making it one of the prosperous communities of the state. Like his father he is a Democrat, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Modern Woodmen of America.

SAMUEL A. ALLEN. A few years before the discovery of gold had attracted thousands of fortune-seekers to California, the Allen family became established in this state, and S. A. Allen, manager of the Westwood orchard, three miles west of Tulare, represents the third generation of the family in the far west. During the early years of the nineteenth century his paternal grandfather, Isaac Allen, left his home in western Tennessee and migrated by wagon to Missouri, settling near Jefferson City, and also for a time making his home on the Platte purchase. Reports concerning the desirable soil and climate of California led him to determine to make the long journey hither, although at the time the overland trail was not definitely marked out and emigrants faced countless perils in attempting to reach the coast. In 1846 he started upon the journey, accompanied by members of the family, including a son, William, who was a native of west Tennessee, and who some years before had taken as a bride a young lady from Missouri, Miss Albina J. Foster. With an equipment of wagons, ox teams, and necessary provisions and supplies, the Allen family joined a large train bound for the west. After the journey had progressed for some time Isaac Allen died and his body was buried on the plains. The others continued on the road, where for a time they were companions of the unfortunate Donner party, but crossed the Sierras about two weeks ahead of them. Some members of the train wished to camp at the lake in order to secure needed feed for their oxen, but the guide urged them so strongly to hasten onward without delay that they yielded to his solicitations and thus their lives were saved. After their arrival in California the widow of Isaac Allen made her home with her children for a time, but later married Elam Brown, a well-known resident of Lafayette, Contra Costa county.

The first winter in California William Allen and wife spent in the Childs valley, Napa county, but in the spring of 1847 settled at San Jose, and a few years later removed to Martinez, where he built one of the first frame houses erected in the town. For some time he engaged in placer mining, but afterward took up farming and stock-raising near Lafayette, and in 1860 settled in San Joaquin county, at Collegeville, twelve miles from Stockton. Eventually he took up farm pursuits in Kings county, which at the time was still a part of Tulare county. After his retirement from active cares he came to make his home with his son, S. A., and here died in March, 1903, at eighty-four years of age. All through his life he was guided by high Christian principles and exemplified in his kind and charitable disposition the doctrines of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he officiated as a ruling elder. His wife was a daughter of Elijah Foster, a pioneer of Missouri; she died near Tulare at sixty-five years of age.

Three children had been born to William and Albina Allen while living in Missouri, but two had died there, and at the time of crossing the plains they had only one child, Isaac N., who now resides on a farm at Camp Badger, Tulare county. Nine children were born after the family settled in California, but only four of these are now living, namely: Mrs. J. E. Barton, at Three Rivers, Tulare county; E. E., near Watsonville; William T., near Ripon, San Joaquin county, and S. A., who forms the subject of this narrative. He was born near Lafayette, Contra Costa county, Cal., April 2, 1860, and until fifteen years of age lived principally near Collegeville, after which from 1875 to 1882 he made his home on a farm in what is now Kings county. Going to Orange, Cal., in 1882, he for four years was engaged in the horticultural business there. On his return to Kings county in 1886, he took up horticultural work near Hanford. From 1892 to 1899 he acted as superintendent of the Minnewawa ranch in Fresno county, where under his supervision was a valuable tract, comprising six hundred and forty acres of land, utilized for dairy purposes, also to some extent planted in an orchard and vineyard. On resigning that position he acted as superintendent of an orchard at Farmersville, Tulare county, for a year. In July, 1901, he was appointed manager of the Westwood orchard of three hundred and eighty acres, situated three miles west of Tulare, and under cultivation to peaches, prunes, pears and grapes. This position he has since filled with characteristic energy and capability.

The marriage of Mr. Allen united him with Miss Rhoda J. Fry, who was born in Iowa, but at the time of marriage made her home in Visalia, Cal. Their family consists of six children, Clarence A., John Wesley, Myrtle, Henry L., Ralph E., and Roy H. The family are in sympathy with the work of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, with which Mrs. Allen is actively identified and to which Mr. Allen has always been a contributor. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party, but is not active in public affairs, his tastes inclining him toward horticulture and agriculture rather than toward public life. In fraternal connections he is associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Fresno, the Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Aid at Tulare.

MORGAN RUSH was born on the old Rush homestead five miles north of Visalia, March 13, 1863. His father, Isaac Rush, a native of Tennessee, was the son of a farmer and was trained to the practical duties incident to such a life. In young manhood he removed to Arkansas, where he married, and from which state, in the early '50s, he crossed the plains to California. Upon his arrival in the state he located on the property now owned by his son in Tulare county, entering the land and proceeding to a practical improvement and cultivation of the farm. He became an extensive and successful stockman and was one of the prominent men of his day in this section. His death occurred in Texas, at the age of seventy years. Mrs. Rush, formerly Mary G. Parker, was a native of Arkansas and a daughter of Hiram Parker, who removed from Tennessee, his native state, to Arkansas, where he died. Another member of this family is the late Basil G. Parker, of Tulare county, who was a cousin of Mrs. Rush. She survives her husband and makes her home on the old farm. Of her six sons and five daughters all attained maturity, while seven are now living.

The fourth in the family of his parents, Morgan Rush was reared on the old home place, receiving his scholastic training in the public schools in the vicinity. From boyhood he followed farming, when still youthful assuming charge of the place for his mother, as he was the oldest living son, and he remained at home for about twenty years as manager of the property. In 1898 he bought the two hundred and forty acres which forms his property, located on section 5, township 18, range 25, four and a half miles north of Visalia, where he now engages in farming and stock-raising. He has twenty-five acres devoted to alfalfa, and is largely interested in the dairy business, besides which he also engages in stock-raising in the mountains, and owns three hundred and twenty-nine acres in Harmon valley, Fresno county, on section 18, township 13, range 25, eighteen miles from Sanger, where he has the greater part of his cattle and hogs.

In Fresno Mr. Rush married Rosalie Bennett, a native of Tulare county, and the daughter of Booker and Lizzie Bennett, residents of Fresno. Politically Mr. Rush is a Democrat and fraternally is identified with the Woodmen of the World of Visalia. All his life a resident of this county, with the exception of four years, from 1900 to 1904, which he spent on a farm in Fresno county, Mr. Rush has won the highest esteem from those who have known him, his ability in his line of work winning the commendation of the farmers, and for his integrity and manhood the respect of all.

SOLOMON SWEET. Scarcely any name in Tulare county is more intimately associated with the business history of Visalia than that of Solomon Sweet, whose death was a distinct loss to the citizenship of the town with which he had been identified for more than forty years. A native of Germany, he was born in Kreisheim, October 18, 1827, and received a fair education in his native locality. Desiring to avail himself of the opportunities offered by the new world, in 1845 he crossed the ocean to New York and from there went to Chicago, thence to Ogle county, Ill., where he was employed as a stage driver. Later he secured a clerkship in Milwaukee. In the fall of 1850 he returned to New York and took passage on the Georgia for Chagres, thence across the Isthmus, and from there on the Columbia to San Francisco. At first he clerked in a general mercantile store in Stockton, but in the fall of 1851 proceeded to the mines of Mariposa county and later carried on a general store at Agua Fria.

Arriving in Visalia in 1857, Mr. Sweet in 1859 opened what is now the oldest store in town, having as a partner James L. Wells, under the firm title of Sweet & Wells. Railroads as yet having not been built into the valley, all the goods were hauled in wagons drawn by oxen, and the trip of two hundred miles occupied from one to three months. In addition the firm furnished the milling supplies for this part of the state. Their goods were sold and hauled to Kern, White and Owens rivers; to Millerton, sixty miles north; to Tehachapi Pass on the south, and to Independence. Inyo county, on the east. Eventually Mr. Wells was succeeded in the business by J. M. Fox and he by Elias Jacob and Simon Sweet, and after 1879 two nephews, Adolph and Leon Levis, were associated with Mr. Sweet as active partners in the house. About 1895 the firm of S. Sweet & Co. was incorporated, with Solomon Sweet as president, a position that he continued to fill until his death in San Francisco four years later.

By the purchase of land at different times Mr. Sweet acquired a large acreage in Tulare county, and this he improved and irrigated by means of canals, then set out orchards and engaged in horticultural pursuits, also raised general farm products and stock. As a stockholder, vice-president and chairman of the executive committee he was connected with the California Fruit and Wine Land Company, which owned sixty-six hundred and forty acres, with three hundred acres of the land planted in raisins, and one hundred and twenty acres in oranges, olives, almonds and peaches. He was a stockholder and director in the Goshen & Visalia and the Visalia & Tulare Railroads. Another enterprise was the building of the Palace hotel, which his estate now owns. In politics he always voted the Republican ticket. Fraternally he was a Mason of the Royal Arch degree. The Jewish Orphan Asylum of San Francisco, which he assisted in founding, for years had the benefit of his counsel and experience as a member of its board of trustees.

The marriage of Solomon Sweet was solemnized in San Francisco in 1860 and united him with Miss Annie Phillips, who was born in New York City. Their eight children were born in San Francisco, and during his latter years Mr. Sweet spent much of his time in that city, in the society of his family and in the enjoyment of their beautiful home on Pacific avenue. Since his death Mrs. Sweet has continued to live in that city, which is also the home of a number of her children.

N. H. LEGGETT. A small stock of dry goods, occupying but one-half of a store room, formed the nucleus from which Mr. Leggett has built up an extensive and growing trade in Tulare and the surrounding country. When he located in this city, April 28, 1899, he had little capital and was obliged to start in business upon a very small scale, but as his means increased, he was enabled to add to his stock and enlarge his equipment. The original room soon became too small for his growing trade and he removed to a brick building, and in December of 1903 opened business in his new building, a structure 60x75 feet in dimensions, which is well stocked with a full line of dry goods, ladies' furnishings, carpets, etc., while the clothing and gents' furnishings are still carried in the brick building across the street. The department plan has proved a success in this store, as it has also in the establishment at Portersville, which he opened October 9, 1903, and which he now successfully conducts.

Early in the colonial settlement of Virginia the Leggett family crossed the ocean from England and became planters and farmers in the new country. John Leggett, who was a Virginian by birth and a soldier in the war of 1812, became a pioneer farmer of Bedford county, Tenn., and about 1874 came to California, where he died in Tulare county. His son, John Calvin Leggett, was a native of Tennessee and for many years engaged in farming in that state, but in 1892 established his home in Texas and later died in Grayson county, that state. Since his death his widow, who was Elizabeth Musgraves, daughter of a Tennessee farmer, has continued to make her home in Texas. Strong in Christian faith, he was a man universally respected, and his wife also has always held the regard of acquaintances. In their family of three daughters and three sons, one of whom, Cooper, is a resident of Hanford, Cal., N. H. Leggett was next to the youngest, and was born in Bedford county, Tenn., January 8, 1868. After having completed his studies in the grammar and high schools of Bedford he began to earn his livelihood as a clerk when he was eighteen years of age, but two years later became interested in photography and the picture business, in which he continued until his removal to California. During July of 1891 he arrived in Hanford, where he secured employment as a clerk with A. Weiner. In 1897 he went to Fresno and became a clerk in the White Front store, but resigned the position in order to embark in business for himself at Tulare. Since coming to this city he has become identified with the Tulare Board of Trade and has also been interested in other enterprises for the benefit of the vicinity, the development of material resources and the enhancement of the people's prosperity. Fraternally he holds membership with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Foresters, Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Aid.

ALEXANDER LOGAN WILSON, M. D.

Among the well known physicians and surgeons of Tulare is Alexander Logan Wilson, M. D., who by his devotion to his work and the careful study and diagnosis of the various diseases that have come under his observation, has been exceptionally successful in his professional career, and has gained a wide reputation for skill and ability. By means of thrift and good management he has accumulated some means. A son of A. M. Wilson, he was born January 31, 1860, in Randolph county, Ill., near New Palestine, of English ancestry. Grandfather Wilson, who was born and reared in London, England, later settled in New York City. His son, A. M., was born in the new world and spent the first ten years of his life here. Running away from home then, he sailed on a merchant vessel to London. There, joining a whaler, he followed the seas for a number of years, and in this way circumnavigated the globe several times. Retiring from that occupation, he settled in Illinois when about twenty-three years old, and became a citizen of prominence. He bought land near New Palestine and carried on general farming during the remainder of his life. In 1861 he enlisted in the Thirtieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being first a member of Company C, but afterwards of Company I, and served until the close of the war. He was present at the siege of Vicksburg, marched with Sherman to the sea, and was mustered out at Washington after the grand review. He was promoted from time to time, receiving commissions from both Gov. Richard Yates and Gov. Richard Oglesby, becoming major of his regiment. He married Susan Young, who was born in Illinois, coming from an old and honored family, and they became the parents of eight sons and four daughters, and of these six boys and two girls are living, Alexander L. being the eighth child. The eldest son, Ulric, in 1861, when but seventeen years old, enlisted for three months, and at the expiration of that term joined the Thirtieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served under his father till the close of the conflict. Two of the sons, John and Edwin, are prosperously employed in farming in Tulare county.

Brought up on the home farm, Alexander Logan Wilson attended first the district schools of New Palestine, and was afterwards graduated from the Sparta high school. Entering then the Missouri Medical College, he was graduated from there with the degree of M. D. in 1884, and at once began the practice of his profession in Appleton, Cape Girardeau county, Mo. Succeeding well, he remained there eleven years. In 1895 Dr. Wilson located in Tulare, Cal., and in the years that have since elapsed has built up a substantial and remunerative general practice. He is also surgeon for the Santa Fe Railroad Company, having the medical and surgical charge of the Tulare district. The doctor is also identified with the agricultural prosperity of this section of the county. Six miles south of Tulare he owns a well improved ranch containing three hundred and eighty acres, through which the Tule river passes, and from which he secured water for irrigation, having his own ditch system. He makes a specialty of dairying, has one half of his farm planted to alfalfa and has a good orchard of twenty acres.

In Appleton, Mo., Dr. Wilson married Emma Lang, a native of that place, and they have four children: Maud, Delia, Edgar and Murray. The doctor is prominent in medical, fraternal and political circles. He is a member and ex-president of the Tulare County Medical Society; a member of the San Joaquin Medical Society; of the Pacific Coast Association of Railway Surgeons; is United States Pension Examiner; is a member of Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M.; of Tulare Chapter No. 71, R. A. M.; and is a member and medical examiner of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Foresters. Politically he is a steadfast Republican. Mrs. Wilson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HENRY E. WEAVER. A man of excellent business capacity, keen foresight and great enterprise, Henry E. Weaver holds a prominent position among the active and progressive agriculturists of San Joaquin county. As a general farmer and grain raiser, he has met with unquestioned success, and in the harvesting and handling of the products of the eighteen hundred acres of land that are under his management he uses the most modern approved machinery, all of his implements and appliances being up-to-date and of a practical and substantial character. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born March 5, 1872, in Westmoreland county, which was the home of his ancestors for several generations, being the birthplace of his father, J. L. Weaver, and of his grandfather, Henry Weaver. The latter, a farmer, came to California with a view to settling here in 1875, but being dissatisfied with the place returned to Westmoreland county and there passed his remaining days.

Born and reared in Pennsylvania, J. L. Weaver began work for himself as a coal miner, but subsequently purchased land and was there employed in tilling the soil from 1877 until 1884. Migrating then with his family to the Pacific coast, he located in Merced county, Cal., where he continued his farming pursuits. Subsequently buying the ranch of one hundred and sixty acres that he now occupies, he has since been prosperously engaged in raising grain and stock. He married Jennie Greer, a native of the Keystone state, and they have three children, namely: Carrie, born February 10, 1870, and now the wife of Charles Sutliff, of San Joaquin county; Henry E., with whom this brief sketch is principally concerned; and Lloyd, born July 9, 1875, engaged in farming near Merced.

Coming with his parents to California when twelve years old, Henry E. Weaver completed his early education in the schools of the Merced district. Working under his father's instructions, he obtained a superior knowledge of the various branches of agriculture, remaining beneath the parental roof-tree until his marriage, in 1892. Locating then in Stanislaus county, Mr. Weaver rented a ranch of seven hundred and twenty acres, near Turlock, and for a year was prosperously engaged in raising grain. In 1893, in partnership with his brother-in-law, Charles Sutliff, he rented the Joyce ranch of two thousand acres, which he operated a year. The ensuing four years he carried on the Mitchell ranch in Merced county, renting it and making considerable money. Locating in San Joaquin county in 1897, Mr. Weaver rented the Muenther and Sutliff ranches, together containing twelve hundred and fifty acres of land, and operated them successfully until the fall of 1904, when he gave up the Sutliff farm. Removing then to the Harrison ranch, which contains one thousand acres of land, lying in Stanislaus county, he is carrying that on with characteristic success, and also manages the Muenther farm of eight hundred acres, which he still rents. Mr. Weaver raises one thousand acres of grain each year, running three ten-mule teams, and has a combined header and harvester, which is run by thirty-two head of horses and mules and cuts over forty acres of grain per day.

In San Joaquin county, near Stockton, Mr. Weaver married Lulu May Sutliff, who was born March 7, 1872, near Stockton, a daughter of Charles B. Sutliff, and they have two children: Claude Leslie, born July 30, 1893, and Stella Myrtle, born June 4, 1897. Politically Mr. Weaver cordially supports the principles of the Democratic party by voice and vote. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and of the Woodmen of the World.

ALBERT WARREN MORLEY. California numbers among her native-born citizens many loyal, true-hearted men, men of excellent business ability, who, as farmers, have done their part toward making the state famous for its grain and live-stock, and to this class of citizens belongs A. W. Morley, a prominent raucher in the vicinity of Plainsberg, Merced county. Mr. Morley has under his supervision twelve hundred acres of the most productive land in the county, a part of which is rented land. He owns his home place of two hundred and forty acres about two miles west of Plainsberg. He is successfully engaged in raising grain and live-stock.

Born near his present home, August 5, 1871, Albert W. Morley is the eldest of five children born to John W. and Abbie Jane (Spangenberg) Morley, and is a grandson of Israel Dodge and Samantha Morley. John W. Morley was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., September 29, 1836; his wife, Abbie J., was born June 16, 1847. They were married in 1869 in Stanislaus county, and of this union the following children were born: Albert W., of this review; Eugene L., born July 29, 1873, now a rancher near Plainsberg; Walter S., born June 3, 1875, an instructor in the University of California; Helen, deceased; and Edith, born in 1883.

A. G. Seebetter

John W. Morley was reared on a farm, and in 1847, being then a mere boy, he ran a horse-power threshing machine under his father's direction. After leaving home he spent five years in Indiana and Michigan; subsequently locating in Steuben county, Ind., he resided near Ft. Wayne until 1852. In March of that year he began the tedious journey with ox-teams across the plains to California, coming by way of Chicago, Iowa City, and Council Bluffs, crossing the Missouri river May 2, 1852, and arriving in Hangtown, Cal., August 3 of the same year. During the most of this trip Mr. Morley was confined to a wagon, owing to inflammatory rheumatism. He farmed in San Joaquin county until 1853, then went to Stanislaus county, which continued to be his home until November 16, 1869, at which time he located in Merced county, where the remainder of his life was spent as a successful rancher and stockman. At the time of his death in 1891, he had accumulated twelve hundred acres of land, which was divided among his heirs. His widow is now a resident of Missouri.

Albert W. Morley was educated in the public schools of Merced county and attended school in Oakland for five years. Upon leaving school he turned his attention to farming, having been engaged successfully in that vocation ever since. By his marriage he united his fortunes with those of Mary E. Earl, a native of Merced county and a daughter of Robert Earl, who settled in California about 1860. Mr. and Mrs. Morley are the parents of three children, Gladys T., Grace H. and Kenneth E. The family are attendants of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. Morley is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Aid societies, and as a citizen he is highly respected.

ADDIS GOULDER LEDBETTER. The Ledbetter family is widely known throughout Tulare county and honored for the sterling traits of character which have distinguished its members. The pioneer to the state of California was James Ledbetter, a native of Lincolnshire, England, who located in New York state upon his removal to the United States. There he engaged as a farmer until his removal to Waterloo, Iowa, where he followed the same occupation, and finally in Blackhawk county, purchased a farm, which he cultivated and improved, breaking up the prairie land. Deciding to locate in the more remote west, he brought his family to California in 1876, locating in Tulare county, where he engaged in farming on the Cottonwood. The following year he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres in Drum valley, after one year returning to the Cottonwood. In the fall of 1879 he purchased three hundred and twenty acres on section 17, which is now the site of Orosi, and which he held for some time, erecting modern and substantial buildings and improving the land. Eventually he traded that property for his present place, consisting of one hundred and forty acres in Orosi, a half-mile south of the corners. He is still living, a hale and hearty man of nearly eighty years, having been born in February, 1825. He married Sarah Wrought, also a native of England, the ceremony being performed in New York state. Her father, Thomas Wrought, was an early settler of New York, and afterward a farmer in Iowa. Mrs. Ledbetter died in Orosi, four of her eight children surviving her.

Addis Goulder Ledbetter was born September 20, 1860, the second in age of the children now living. He is a native of Blackhawk county, Iowa, where he spent the first fifteen years of his life, receiving his scholastic training in the common schools, and at the same time following the practical work of a farmer's son. Coming to California in 1876, he found employment in farming and teaming. Deciding to take up agricultural pursuits independently, he located upon his present property and has since given his entire time and attention to this work. For many years, in conjunction with his father and brother, he was interested in an extensive line of work, the three cultivating as many as twelve hundred acres at a time. He bought two hundred and forty acres on the Lovell road and improved the same, later selling eighty acres of it. He now owns one hundred and sixty acres located on sections 17 and 18, upon which he has put up modern buildings, improving and cultivating the land, principally devoting his time to grain and stock-raising. Since 1896 he has found considerable profit in running a combined harvester, which requires thirty-two horses and mules.

In Orosi Mr. Ledbetter was united in marriage with Mary Calcote, who was born near Visalia, a daughter of A. K. Calcote, and sister of William Calcote, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. They are the parents of four children, namely: Lee, a student of the Dinuba high school; Roy, attending the Chestnutwood Business College, of Fresno; Oscar, and Gordon. Mr. Ledbetter is Democratic on national issues but locally gives his support to the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. In the interest of educational matters in his vicinity he has served on the board of school trustees for twelve years, for eight years of that time acting as president. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias, being past chancellor for two terms. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, in which he has officiated as ruling elder and trustee for some years. He is also active in the work of the Sunday-school, having acted for some time as superintendent. Mr. Ledbetter is a man of force and energy, his ability commanding the respect of his business associates, and by the sterling qualities which have distinguished his citizenship winning the esteem of all who know him. He merits the high place he holds among the representative men of this section.

JOHN B. O'CONNOR. The first locomotive whistle which awoke the echoes in Visalia was blown by the trained engineering hand of John B. O'Connor, as he started the first engine over the Visalia & Goshen Railroad in 1874. Mr. O'Connor was the first steam engineer to locate in this town, and he has since been identified with its growth, having shared its fortunes when little of promise beckoned settlers within its borders, and helped to bring about the prosperity which it now enjoys. After years of activity as an engineer he is living retired on his beautiful home of twenty acres at the foot of Watson avenue, on the southern edge of the town, caring for his apricot and French prune trees and taking a genial and kindly interest in his many friends and associates. Mr. O'Connor has traveled far and in many directions during his active life, and always with observant eye and remembering brain. He is an interesting and instructive conversationalist, having picked up snatches of humor and pathos from his surroundings, wherever he has been.

Mr. O'Connor was born in Maine, on a farm along the Penobscot river, in Indian Old Town, twelve miles from Hampden, December 4, 1825. His family was an old one in Maine, having been established on the Penobscot in 1812 by his parents, Daniel and Bridget (Keenan) O'Connor, natives of Ireland, the former born in County Kerry in 1802. The elder O'Connor was a machinist by trade, who in 1827 moved to Syracuse, N. Y., and was employed by the Schenectady Locomotive Works in that city. In 1857 he located in Louisville, Ky., and engaged in the machine shops of the railroad company, his death occurring in Louisville in 1861. His father, Arthur O'Connor, also was a native of Ireland, and was a man of military prowess, attaining to the rank of general in the rebellion against England under King George's reign. For this disregard of royalty he was transported to Van Dieman's Land, but was allowed his freedom on the island, and in 1837 was made a free man by Queen Victoria, married and remained in Australia. Mrs. O'Connor died in Huntsville, Ala., in 1887, at the age of seventy-seven years, having reared a family of four sons and two daughters.

The oldest in his parents' family, John B. was educated in the public schools of Syracuse, and as soon as old enough served an apprenticeship as machinist in the Schenectady Locomotive Works. With this admirable training he moved to Massachusetts in 1845, and during the next three years assisted with the construction of the Vermont & Massachusetts Railroad and the Cheshire Railroad, afterward becoming an engineer on these roads. Returning to New York state in 1854, he soon after was sent to Sycamore, Ill., as an engineer on the Dixon Air Line, and in 1859 crossed the plains to California with horse teams, locating in Visalia, where later he left his team and went to Oroville. Engaging in mining in Oroville, on the Feather river, he next mined in Inyo county, on Owens river, for three years, and after locating in Visalia worked as an engineer of the Visalia Flour Mill for twenty-four years. He then returned to locomotive engineering, pulled the throttle of the first engine that came to the town, and for a few years was interested in running a threshing machine in different parts of the county. He put together the first steam fire engine that came to Visalia and ran it four years. From 1872 until 1876 he engaged in the sheep business in connection with his other work, purchasing his present place in the latter part of 1865, and moving onto it in 1867.

While living in Syracuse, N. Y., December 7, 1850, Mr. O'Connor married Elizabeth Bettinger, who was born in 1825 on a farm skirting the Mohawk river in Herkimer county, and who, as a child, was a playmate of her husband's, and a daughter of Baltes and Elizabeth (Fulmer) Bettinger, of Dutch ancestry. Mrs. O'Connor has grown old gracefully, retaining her charm of manner, her innate refinement and her large-hearted hospitality. She is the devoted mother of three children, of whom Mary is the wife of S. Stevenson of Visalia, and John is living at home. Francis died at the age of twenty-three. Mr. O'Connor's genial manner and ability to entertain his friends have made him a social favorite, and for years he has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having been a delegate to the Grand Lodge on five occasions. He also is a member and past chief patriarch of the encampment, and was sent as a delegate to the Grand Encampment in San Francisco in 1904. He is a Republican in politics and in religion is a member of the Christian Church.

COTTLE BROTHERS. Energetic, industrious and enterprising, Messrs. Melvin Green and Ulysses Grant Cottle are actively identified with the business and agricultural interests of Tulare county. They are land owners and stockmen, and are also carrying on a substantial livery business as proprietors of the Tulare stables, located on South K street, Tulare. Sons of the late E. L. N. Cottle, both were born in Lincoln county, Mo., near Troy, the birth of Melvin Green occurring February 16, 1861, and that of Ulysses Grant September 22, 1862. Their grandfather, Edward Cottle, the descendant of an old and honored New England family, was born and reared in Vermont. Moving westward, he located in Missouri, where he cleared and improved a farm, and for many years was prosperously engaged in tilling the soil. Crossing the plains in 1854, he came as a pioneer to California, settling first in Coyote, four miles from San Jose, but subsequently removing to that city, where he spent his last years.

Born in Missouri, E. L. N. Cottle spent the larger part of his life in his native state, being engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1885 he came to California to make his permanent home. Locating thirteen miles southwest of Tulare, he bought land, and there continued the independent occupation of his choice until his death, September 22, 1892. He married Louisa Duff, who was born in Lincoln county, Mo., the daughter of a pioneer settler, who removed to that state from Pennsylvania, and was afterwards killed by the Indians while hunting for his horses. She survived her husband, and now, a bright and active woman of seventy-six years, continues her residence in Tulare. She bore him eleven children, ten of whom are living, namely: J. A., of San Jose; R. E., of Los Angeles; H. B., of San Francisco; Mrs. Celia E. Elder, of Visalia; Sarah, of San Jose; Marshall, of Tulare; Mrs. Jennie Birkhead, living near Tulare; Melvin Green and Ulysses Grant, of this review; and M. Mae, of Tulare. One child is dead, William having lived but two years.

Both Melvin Green Cottle and Ulysses Grant Cottle were brought up on the home farm in Missouri, and both were educated in the public schools and subsequently trained to agricultural pursuits. In 1885 M. G. Cottle came to Tulare county, Cal., and the following year he was joined by his brother, U. G. Cottle. Both brothers worked as farm hands until 1887, when they began farming on their own account, renting two ranches and making a specialty of raising grain. Giving up that business in 1898, they turned their attention to stock raising. They purchased land in different places and now own eight hundred and eighty acres of land, all lying within twelve miles of Tulare. A part of this they use for grazing and stock raising and a part is sowed to alfalfa. They keep now about one hundred and fifty head of cattle and maintain a good dairy farm, which they run with profit to themselves. In April, 1904, Messrs. Cottle purchased of Williams & Webb the Tulare stables, and have since carried on an extensive livery, feed and sale stable. Although they still continue their stock and dairy business, they reside in Tulare, and Melvin G. is a member of the Tulare Board of Trade.

M. G. Cottle is a shareholder and a director of the Co-operative Creamery Company of Tulare. For eight years he served as deputy county assessor. He was made a Mason in New Salem Lodge No. 270, of Argentville, Mo., and is now a member of Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M., and also belongs to the Woodmen of the World. Fraternally Ulysses G. Cottle is a member of the Woodmen of the World, of the Improved Order of Red Men, and of the Independent Order of Foresters.

SEBERT STEVENSON. One of the first white children born in Tulare county was Sebert Stevenson, whose natal day was September 16, 1854, and whose native town was Visalia. In 1852 his parents, Robert and Frances (Willis) Stevenson, crossed the plains with ox teams, having the usual experiences which befell the plains travelers, and eventually located in what is now Tulare county. Robert Stevenson was born in Pennsylvania, and after starting out on his own responsibility lived in Illinois, Missouri and Iowa, in the latter state changing his bachelor state for one of marriage with a native daughter of Iowa. He assisted in the organization of Tulare county, took quite an active part in its politics and government, and became the owner of a large amount of land upon a portion of which Visalia has since been built. His home was just half a mile from the town of Visalia, and here he died in 1874, at the age of sixty-seven years. June 10, 1893, his wife died at the age of seventy, having reared a family of seven children, of whom Sebert is the fifth oldest. Cyrus and Preston are deceased; Curtis is a resident of Visalia; Robert is a rancher of this county; Corolla is deceased; and Fannie is now Mrs. Keener of Visalia.

From boyhood up Sebert Stevenson has engaged in stock raising and farming, and he has both the desire and the industry to succeed. He had a common school education, which he has supplemented by years of reading and research, and for many years he was one of the most successful stock raisers in this neighborhood. Continuously since his father's death he has lived on the home place, and still owns the fifteen acres within the city limits, which is now set off in town lots. He has been an interested spectator of the upbuilding of Visalia, particularly of Main street, which goes by his house. He married into one of the old families of Tulare county, Mary O'Connor being a daughter of John O'Connor, the first steam engineer of Visalia, and who, previous to locating on his present fruit ranch near the city, was employed in engineering and other capacities here for many years. Mr. O'Connor, whose information concerning the early days is both interesting and exhaustive, is written of at length in another part of this work, and given the honor due his energetic and worthy life. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson have three children, Ocie, Hazel and Sebort, Jr. Mr. Stevenson is a Republican in politics, and is a quiet, methodical man, faithful to friends and interests and appreciated for his many excellent traits of character.

WILLIAM L. SELLERS. A typical representative of the self-made men of today, W. L. Sellers came to California without means, and by the exercise of his resolute will and persevering industry has established a prosperous dairy business and gained a substantial position among the successful agriculturists of Tulare. His enterprise, thrift and straightforward dealings with all have won for him the respect of the community in which he resides. A native of Iowa, he was born, October 6, 1856, in Keosauqua, Van Buren county, a son of Franklin S. Sellers.

Born and reared in Pittsburg, Pa., Franklin S. Sellers was well endowed with mechanical genius, and when a young man learned the trade of a blacksmith. He settled in business first in Muncie, Ind., from there removing to Keosauqua, Iowa, where he followed his trade a few years. During the Civil war he served in a Kansas regiment, and took part in Price's raid. He afterward took up land in Wilson county, Kans., becoming owner of three hundred and twenty acres, from which he improved a farm. He spent his last years, however, in Ford county, dying in Dodge City. He married Lydia Bentley, who was born in Indiana, a daughter of Joseph Bentley, and died in Kansas. Five children were born of their union, William L. being the second child.

Brought up in Wilson county, Kans., William L. Sellers received a limited education in the pioneer district schools, and as a boy and youth assisted his father in clearing a farm from the raw prairie. After his marriage Mr. Sellers engaged in farming and stock-raising in his native state, remaining there until 1887. Going then to Las Animas county, Colo., he bought government land, and there continued as a farmer and stock-raiser for three years. The land being too dry, with no irrigating advantages, Mr. Sellers returned to Kansas in 1890, and for two years was engaged in farming in Wilson county. Not satisfied with the result of his labors, he came to California in 1892 in search of a more favorable opportunity for increasing his finances. Beginning again at the very bottom of the ladder, he worked out as a farm hand for about three years, and by means of economy and prudent thrift saved some money. In 1895 Mr. Sellers purchased twenty acres of land, lying one and one-half miles southeast of Tulare, and started in the dairy business on his own account. In this occupation he labored hard, for the first six years doing all of the work himself, milking the cows, and delivering the milk, making two trips each day. Meeting with well-deserved success in his operations, Mr. Sellers enlarged his business as his patronage demanded. January 1, 1904, he bought his present ranch of forty acres, lying within the city limits, and now retails all of his milk in the city, running the Tulare Dairy. His home ranch is all under irrigation, and is devoted to alfalfa. He also rents three hundred and twenty acres of land near Tulare, and part of this he has sowed to alfalfa, while on the remainder he pastures his large herd of cattle. He keeps a fine lot of choice cows for his dairy, and in the raising of stock is carrying on a good business also.

In Wilson county, Kans., October 31, 1879, Mr. Sellers married Mary E. Sears, who was born near Joplin, Mo., and they have two children, Effie J. and Mattie B. Politically Mr. Sellers is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and to the Woodmen of the World.

SAMUEL BURGAN. A worthy representative of the prosperous and thriving agriculturists of Tulare, Samuel Burgan holds a high position among the esteemed and respected residents of the township. He has seen much of the stormy side of life, but even under the most discouraging circumstances never for a moment lost his grit. As a freighter across the plains, he met with many rough and thrilling experiences, and in the mining camps of the earlier days suffered hardships and privations. Industrious and courageous, however, he continued his way without thought of giving up, and by dint of perseverance and good management has acquired a fair share of this world's goods. A son of Samuel Burgan, Sr., he was born, September 25, 1841, in Holmes county, Ohio, of Scotch descent. His paternal grandfather, William Burgan, was born in Pennsylvania, but removed from there to Ohio, becoming a pioneer of Wayne county.

A life-long resident of Ohio, Samuel Burgan, Sr., was born and reared in Wayne county, and died in Holmes county. His wife, whose maiden name was Hester Burnett, was born in Pennsylvania, and died in Wayne county, Ohio, where her father, Isaac Burnett, settled when she was a girl. Of the six children born of their union, five grew to years of maturity, Samuel being the youngest child.

Brought up on the home farm, near Wooster, Wayne county, Ohio, Samuel Burgan received a common school education in his native district. Breaking home ties in 1861, he migrated westward, going as far as Indiana, where he spent a year. Continuing his onward progress in 1862, he started with wagon and team, May 6, intending to come to the Pacific coast. After crossing the Missouri river he and a companion started across the plains with a load of freight and provisions, using ox-teams for transportation. Selling out his entire load at Fort Kearney, Mr. Burgan returned to the Missouri river. Hiring out then to a man loading a freight train, he proceeded to Denver, Colo., arriving there in January, 1863. Finding nothing to do in that embryo city, he went back to the Missouri river to await the opening of spring, when he started with a load of freight for the mines, going first to Montana, then to Idaho, and on to Oregon, where he intended to winter. From Boise City he went down the river of that name to the Snake river, but finding the snow too deep to travel through, he turned his course, and after camping for awhile went back to the Idaho mining fields. The following winter Mr. Burgan spent in Denver. In July, 1866, he made a trip to Nebraska, locating on the Missouri river. Picking up a load of freight, he started, in October, 1866, for Kansas. Arriving in the Kaw valley, he took up land two and one-half miles north of Lawrence, and there engaged in farming and freighting, for a number of seasons being engaged in teaming to southern Kansas. He subsequently sold and traded lands until he had title to eighty-four acres, situated three miles north of Lawrence. He engaged in general farming, including the raising of vegetables, finally achieving notable success as a potato grower. He also operated a threshing machine, and paid much attention to horse breeding, in all branches of agriculture being successful, and in the meantime improving one of the finest home estates in Grant township.

In 1901 Mr. Burgan came to California, locating in Tulare, where he has since been extensively and profitably employed in the stock business. He owned five hundred acres of land five miles south of the city, and also leased a large tract, running a little over nineteen hundred acres in all until the fall of 1904, when he sold out to his son-in-law, William E. Green, whose sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Burgan now owns a valuable ranch near Tulare, where he is successfully conducting his chosen occupation.

While a resident of Nebraska Mr. Burgan married Ellen Foltz, a native of Ohio, and into their home nine children have been born, namely: Rose, wife of W. E. Green, of Tulare; John, engaged in the livery business in Tulare; Anna, of Nebraska; Charles, a dairyman in Tulare; Ida, wife of Dr. Snell, of Texas; and Etta, Samuel, Blanche and Inez, of Tulare. Politically Mr. Burgan is a Democrat in national affairs; socially he belongs to the Fraternal Aid; and religiously he is a Methodist.

JOSEPH WEISENBERGER. As a successful orange grower of the vicinity of Portersville, Tulare county, Joseph Weisenberger is widely known. A native of Germany, he was born in Baden, near Weissweil, June 7, 1842, the youngest in a family of five children, of whom three are living. His father, Mathias Weisenberger, was a native of the same locality and a farmer by occupation. He was accidentally killed by a falling tree when his son was six months old. His wife, formerly Magdalena Houser, was also a native of the Fatherland; she died in Missouri in 1871, having come to America to make her home with her children. Joseph Weisenberger was reared on a farm in his native country until 1865, when he came to America, locating first in New York state, then in New Jersey, and in the spring of 1868 coming as far west as Illinois. He was located for a time in Chicago, then Bloomington, remaining in that state until 1871, when he went to Rockport, Atchison county, Mo., where he bought a farm of one hundred and sixty-two acres. He engaged in general farming and stock-raising in that locality for twenty-three years, meeting with success in his work. His first trip to California was made in 1890, but he returned east shortly afterward and then it was his intention to remain. However, five years later he sold out and sought a home in the southern part of this state, buying the ranch of forty acres, which he now owns. In the spring of 1896 he set it out in navel oranges, and now has twenty-five acres in this fruit. The land is under irrigation from the Pioneer ditch, and in the spring of 1905 he contemplates putting in a pumping plant. His orchard is located within a half mile of Zante.

In Missouri, in 1874, Mr. Weisenberger was united in marriage with Augusta Heidenreich, a native of Germany. She died in California in 1898, the mother of eight children, of whom six are living, namely: Ernest J., of Portersville; Anna, the wife of J. B. Spears, of Berkeley; J. Richard, of Portersville; Leo M.; Carl; and Josephine, the three last named being at home. Mr. Weisenberger's second marriage occurred in California, April 20, 1901, and united him with Mrs. Amelia (Becker) Mathews, a native of Germany, who was brought to America by her parents when an infant. Her first husband died in Mississippi, after which she came to California. Mr. Weisenberger is interested in the Portersville Rochdale Company. Politically he is independent in his affiliations, preferring to reserve the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

JOHN W. MARTIN. The Martin family is of colonial Virginian ancestry. James Martin was born in Montgomery county, Va., in 1801, and removed from there to Livingston county, Mo., in 1843, settling on a large tract of land, where he engaged in general farming and the breeding and raising of fine horses. During 1854 he crossed the plains to California with ox-teams and settled in Yuba county near Marysville, where he remained until his death in 1861. With him to the west came his wife, who was Linnie Williams, a native of Montgomery county, Va., and a daughter of George Williams, a Virginian planter. She survived him for a long period and died in Yolo county during 1884. Of their five children only two are living, viz.: George C., a farmer near Woodland; and John W., who is engaged in raising horses and in general farm pursuits near Woodville, Tulare county.

While the family were living near Chillicothe, Livingston county, Mo., J. W. Martin was born April 2, 1850, and from there he accompanied his parents to California at the age of four years. During the memorable flood of 1862 their fine bottom land was almost wholly ruined and his mother therefore decided to dispose of the property. After selling out they removed to the vicinity of Woodland and bought a raw tract of land, which the sons improved and placed under cultivation. Meanwhile J. W. Martin was given good educational advantages in Hesperian College and later, at the age of about twenty years, began to teach school. With the money thus earned he paid his tuition and board while attending the California State Normal at San Jose, where he remained until his graduation in 1874. Returning to Yolo county he resumed the work of teaching school and for eight years acted as principal of schools in that county. Eventually, however, delicate health forced him to seek an occupation that would permit him to be in the open air, so he turned his attention to the raising of standard-bred horses, in which both his father and grandfather had been successful. As early as 1875 he had purchased land on the Tule river, ten miles southeast of Tulare, and in 1890 he settled on the farm, which he still owns and occupies. In 1890 he brought fifty head of horses to the farm and has since made the breeding of horses his principal industry. The farm comprises three hundred and twenty acres, of which eighty acres are under alfalfa, irrigated from the Woodville ditch, in which he is financially interested. Among the valuable horses that he owns may be mentioned McKinley, with a record of 2:29, one of the greatest horses in the San Joaquin valley, by McKinney, dam by Richard's Elector, son of Electioneer, and he also owns some fine fillies that are standard-bred. In 1905 he installed a twenty-five-horse power pumping plant on his ranch.

While living in Yolo county Mr. Martin married Miss Emma Bonham, who was born at Healdsburg and died in Yolo county. Of their four children the sole survivor is Benjamin A., who is a practicing attorney of Woodland, Cal. The second marriage of Mr. Martin occurred in 1884 and united him with Miss Lizzie Smith, by whom he has four children, Claire E. C., Leland S., Roswell E. and Lucille. In 1902 he was elected on the Democratic ticket to serve for a term of four years as supervisor of the fifth district. In 1898 he was chosen a presidential elector on the Bryan and Sewall ticket, receiving a majority of about four thousand and being the only Democratic elector chosen at the time. It is worthy of note that he received a large vote in his old home locality in the Sacramento valley as well as a large vote in the San Joaquin valley, this attesting his popularity among neighbors and associates. With characteristic enthusiasm he canvassed the entire valley in the interests of the ticket. At the election Bryan received one hundred and forty-four thousand seven hundred and sixty-six votes, being the largest vote ever received by a Democrat in California. At one time Mr. Martin was a member of the county central committee of his party and he has also served as a delegate to state Democratic conventions. Fraternally he is connected with the Woodmen of the World, also the Fraternal Brotherhood, of which organization he was chosen the first president.

Through the efforts of Mr. Martin the indebtedness was settled that long had hung over the Tule River Irrigation District, and for his work in the matter he received many flattering press notices, not a few papers claiming that the settlement was the best of its kind ever made in California. Seven months of arduous labor brought about the result he so greatly desired. Through bringing together the bondholders and land owners, he secured the consent of the former to settle at fifty cents on the dollar, without interest, and bonds in escrow. Next an order was made levying a tax. It was necessary to negotiate, in person or by letter, with all land owners. Finally he succeeded in raising $50,000, with which he cancelled the bonds at Fresno in January, 1904, and in May of the same year the bonds were burned, leaving the district in excellent financial condition.

SAMUEL KELLEY GREENE. Capable, enterprising and eminently trustworthy, Samuel K. Greene occupies a conspicuous position among the leading residents of Dinuba and vicinity. The owner of a finely improved ranch, situated three and one-half miles from Dinuba, towards the southeast, he is carrying on an excellent business as a general farmer and dairyman, and is widely and favorably known as the superintendent of the Alta Irrigation District, which includes Fresno, Tulare and Kings counties, his office being in Dinuba. A native Californian, he was born, May 24, 1858, in Merced county, a son of Robert L. Greene.

Of Virginia ancestry, Robert L. Greene was born and reared in Tennessee. He settled as a farmer in Menard county, Ill., living there until 1850, when he crossed the plains to California, coming by the southern route. He brought with him his wife and family, and it is said that she was the first white woman to cross the Tehachapi Pass. In 1858 he returned east with his family, and until after the close of the Civil war resided in Texas. He subsequently spent two or three years in Menard county, Ill., and 1868 again came across the plains to this state. For six years he lived on a farm in Snelling, then located at Fresno Flats, from there coming, in 1876, to Tulare county, where, not far from Dinuba, he homesteaded land, on which he lived until his death. He married Rebecca Center, a native of Tennessee, and she now resides with her daughter, Mrs. Ellen Lewis, being the widow of the late Judge Louis Van Tassel, whom she married for her second husband.

Until the close of the war Samuel K. Greene lived in Dallas county, Tex., from there going with the family to Illinois, and with them coming to California in 1868, completing his education in the district schools of Merced county, and at Fresno Flats. In 1876, while yet in his teens, he wrote a petition for the establishment of the Greene school in the Wilson district. On attaining his majority Mr. Greene took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres, three and one-half miles south of Dinuba, and having proved up engaged in grain farming until he sold the farm to his sister, Mrs. Lewis. He subsequently built a planing mill at Traver, after which he erected a steam saw-mill in the Redwood Mountains, where for awhile he was engaged in the manufacture of lumber. Returning to the vicinity of his old farm, Mr. Greene bought ninety acres of land, which he has placed under irrigation, and is now engaged in dairying, stock-growing and fruit-raising, having a good vineyard and orchard, and raising alfalfa as his principal crop.

In 1895 Mr. Greene was elected superintendent of the Alta Irrigation District, which embraces one hundred and thirty thousand acres of land, and has over two hundred and seventy-five miles of canal, all of which, with the aid of ten men, he supervises.

In Tulare county, on the Tule river, Mr. Greene married Lula J. Harper, who was born in Yolo county, Cal., where her father, T. W. Harper, was a pioneer settler, and they are the parents of eight children: Joseph E., a graduate of the Dinuba high school, is now a student in the law department of the University of California; Daisy, Pearl and Hazel are pupils in the Dinuba high school; and Ruth, Irene, Edward and Marguerite complete the family. Mr. Greene is interested in educational matters, and is one of the trustees of the Dinuba Union High School, and a trustee and clerk of the Wilson District School. Politically he is a sound Democrat, and fraternally he belongs to Traver Lodge, I. O. O. F. Mrs. Greene and the family are members of the Christian Church.

CHARLES L. SMITH, D. D. S. A skillful dental surgeon, possessing a thorough knowledge of his profession, Charles L. Smith, D. D. S., of Tulare, has attained his present honorable position among the leading dentists of Tulare county by his own unaided exertions, earning the means for pursuing his studies by his own labors. A son of the late Valentine E. Smith, he was born, August 13, 1859, at Strongs Prairie, Adams county, Wis. His grandfather, Rev. John Smith, a minister of the United Brethren Church, removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio, settling in Galion, Crawford county, where he had charge of a large society.

A native of Pennsylvania, Valentine E. Smith was born and brought up near Harrisburg. He afterward lived in Ohio, from there going to Strong's Prairie, Wis., becoming the pioneer merchant of that town. About 1872 he removed to Chippewa county, Wis., where he was engaged in the hotel business until his death. He married Miema Wock, who was born in Sauk county, Wis., a daughter of Peter Wock, who emigrated from Germany to the United States, and settled permanently in Wisconsin. She survived her husband, and now resides in Tulare, making her home with her son, Dr. Smith. She has three children: William, in business at Chippewa, Wis.; Charles L., and Edward B., of Tulare.

Accompanying his parents to Bloomer, Chippewa county, Wis., in 1872, Charles L. Smith continued his studies in the district school, remaining at home until 1885. Coming in that year to the Pacific coast, he located in Tulare, and for two years thereafter was employed in boring for artesian wells, and the following three years worked in the Southern Pacific Railway car shops. Desirous then of entering upon a professional career, Mr. Smith began the study of dentistry with Dr. Belfils, and afterwards practiced for a year by himself in Lemoore. Entering the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in San Francisco, in 1896, he took a course of three years in the dental department, from which he was graduated in 1899 with the degree of D. D. S. Returning then to Tulare, Dr. Smith opened an office here, and has since built up a large and lucrative practice.

In Delano, Kern county, Cal., Dr. Smith married Alma Latimer, a native of Fairbury, Ill., and they are the parents of two children, Edgar and Esther. The doctor is much interested in everything pertaining to the advancement of his profession, and is a member of the State Dental Association. In April, 1903, he was elected to the City Council, from the first ward, and is now chairman of the finance committee. He is quite active in secret and benevolent organizations, being past grand of Tulare Lodge No. 306 I. O. O. F.; chief patriarch of Tulare Encampment; a member of the Woodmen of the World; and of the Fraternal Aid.

JOHN JACOB LASCH, M. D. Through travel in every part of the United States, including visits to every city of importance in the entire country, Dr. Lasch has gained a knowledge of climates, customs and conditions not always possessed by a native-born American, and as a result of this experience he gives it as his opinion that Tulare is the healthiest city in our country with the sole exception of Ironton, Mo. Since establishing his home in Tulare in 1888 he has conducted a drug business and, in point of years of business activity, claims to be the oldest pharmacist in the town. Though a graduate in medicine, the science of therapeutics never fascinated him, and for this reason he has devoted himself to pharmaceutical work, in which he is deeply interested and well informed.

The Lasch family was founded in America by Jacob Lasch, who in early life served as an official in the German government, but after the revolution of 1848 plunged his ambitious hopes in defeat, he removed to America, settling in New Orleans in 1850. Three years later he died of yellow fever. With him to America came his wife, who was Elizabeth Kunz, a native of Baden; after his death she continued to make her home in New Orleans until she passed from earth in 1866. Of their seven children only two are living, one of these being John Jacob, who was born in Baden, Germany, October 6, 1838, and at twelve years of age accompanied the family to New Orleans, where the advantages previously obtained in German schools were supplemented by attendance at public schools and a commercial college. Varied experiences were crowded into his youth. Disliking the work at which he was engaged, he ran away from home on a steamboat, but soon returned, only, however, to run away a second time and take up the carpenter's trade. A cruel master filled his days with heavy tasks, and caused him to regret his rashness in leaving home, so he returned and took up the study of pharmacy under Dr. Albrecht, of New Orleans, later becoming a student in the medical department of the University of Louisiana (now Tulane University), from which in 1860 he was graduated with the degree of M. D.

A short experience in the practice of medicine convinced Dr. Lasch that the work was not to his taste, and he accordingly entered the drug business as a clerk, filling positions in this capacity in all the large cities of the United States. After some years, in 1872 he suffered a severe and almost fatal attack of cerebro-meningitis, during which his physician gave him at one time eight grains of quinine, instead of the usual dose of two grains. He was left blind and deaf and almost helpless, but with a firmness of will characteristic of him he refused to be discouraged, and as soon as possible began to work at hard manual labor, gradually regaining his faculties and strength. In 1886 he arrived in San Francisco and bought out a drug company on Mission street, but the climate did not prove satisfactory to him and two years later he moved the stock of drugs to Tulare, where he continues in business at this writing, and is also a member of the State Pharmaceutical Association.

By his first marriage Dr. Lasch has three children, namely: Arthur C., a resident of Delano, Kern county; Mrs. Florence L. Lee and Miss

J. R. Robinson.

Mary Louise Lasch, both of Tulare. The present Mrs. Lasch was Mrs. Mary Josephine Michau Bering, a native of Tallahassee, Fla., and who became his wife at Houston, Tex., in June of 1900. Her father, Dr. M. M. Michau, a native of South Carolina, was a dentist, and also filled pulpits in the Methodist Episcopal Church in both Florida and Texas, his death finally occurring in Galveston. The two children comprising his family were born of his marriage to Louisiana Floyd Newsom, daughter of Capt. D. P. F. N. Newsom; she was born in Florida, and died at Houston, Tex. The first husband of Mrs. Lasch was Louis H. Bering, a hardware merchant and influential Mason of Houston, Tex., where he died at fifty-two years of age. The children born of that marriage are named as follows: Robert E. Bering, M. D., of Tulare; Mrs. Hortense Bryant, of Houston, Tex.; and Raymond L. Bering, a stenographer, now in charge of the Lasch pharmacy at Tulare.

J. R. ROBINSON. Many and varied have been the experiences of this well-known pioneer of Tulare county, who for more than twenty years was the most extensive stock-buyer in the upper part of the San Joaquin valley, but who now to some extent is retired from active business cares. Two and one-half miles north of Visalia, on the St. John's river, lies his stock farm of three hundred and twenty acres, the value of which is greatly increased by sub-irrigation. Throughout all this section of country he has a reputation as a judge of stock, and often now his counsel is sought by those desirous of making purchases, but he no longer conducts the large enterprises of former years, when he was accustomed to ship stock by the train load from Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada and California. During his long and active career he made thousands and lost thousands, his largest losses being caused by cholera breaking out among his hogs. At one time he lost $20,000 from that disease alone. However, many of his ventures in the hog industry were most profitable. It is still a matter of history in the San Francisco stock market that at one time (1880) he cornered the hog market so completely that the city dealers were obliged to come to him for purchases, large San Francisco buyers paying him seven and three-fourths and even eight cents per pound for hogs, of which he had more than ten thousand head. In buying wool his first experience was with a Mr. Beach of Nevada, with whom he bargained for the clip from seventeen thousand sheep, amounting to about thirty thousand pounds. Two days later he sold the wool to Mr. Lovejoy of Boston at an advance of eight cents a pound, clearing over $2,400 in the deal.

Mr. Robinson was born in Richland county, Ohio, August 14, 1835, and was third in a family of two sons and three daughters, of whom he and one sister survive. His father, George, a native of Ohio, and a pioneer farmer of Iowa, took up land from the government near Farmington and for a long period made his home there, eventually in the spring of 1883 coming to California, where he died in the home of his son. Previous to this he had lost his wife by death; she was Margaret Snellbecker, a native of Ohio, and died in Iowa. After 1838 J. R. Robinson was reared on an Iowa farm twenty-five miles northwest of Keokuk, where he attended a subscription school and learned to write by the aid of an old-fashioned quill pen. At the age of sixteen he left home and secured work on a farm and two years later he began to trade in stock. During 1861 he crossed the plains with a bull-team. The party preceding his own lost thirteen persons killed by Indians, but his company made the journey without molestation or harm. After a journey occupying exactly six months he reached the Carson river. Later he went to the Washoe valley, where for two years he was employed in logging and saw-milling with Mr. Musgrove. July 13, 1863, he arrived in Tulare county. Not only was he without any means, but he was further handicapped by the extreme drouth of that year rendering work difficult to secure and payment uncertain. To add to his difficulties his wife was suffering with consumption. However, after several years of discouragements his finances began to improve, and he was able to take up farming and stock-raising on a tract of one hundred and sixty acres which he homesteaded. Later he turned his attention to shipping stock, making his home and headquarters in Visalia. From 1883 to 1885 he was engaged in the wholesale butchering business in San Francisco and Oakland and later again turned his attention to the shipment of stock, in which he continued until 1901. Endowed with remarkable judgment, he carried to success plans and speculations that would have brought many a buyer to financial ruin. Allied with keenness of judgment was firmness of will. Indeed these two traits are his most prominent characteristics, and have been the principal factors in his success, securing for him a position of influence among the stock buyers of the west.

The first wife of Mr. Robinson was Elizabeth Denny, who was born in Clark county, Mo., and died in Tulare county, Cal., in 1873. Six children were born of their marriage, of whom the following survive: Mrs. Mary Shippy, of Santa Clara; Mrs. Alice Shively, of San Francisco; Josephine, of Sacramento; Mrs. Olive Black and Rose, both of San Francisco. At Visalia, September 4, 1883, occurred the marriage of Mr.

Robinson and Miss Mathilda Kibbler, a native of St. Johns, New Brunswick, and a daughter of James and Catherine (Burns) Kibbler, natives respectively of London, England, and New Brunswick. On crossing the ocean to New Brunswick Mr. Kibbler settled on a farm near St. Johns and continued in the same locality until he died. In his family there were thirteen children who attained mature years and seven are now living. Mrs. Robinson was the eighth in order of birth and is the only member of the family living in California. At fourteen years of age she went to Boston, Mass., where she attended the public schools. In 1869 she came to California and followed the occupation of a nurse in San Francisco, remaining there until 1883, when she removed to Visalia. In religion she is of the Methodist faith, taking a warm interest in the work of the church, as well as in all movements for the uplifting of humanity. Politically Mr. Robinson votes the Democratic ticket, but has never been an active partisan and at no time has he sought the emoluments and honors of official positions.

FRANK PFITZER. August 10, 1903. Frank Pfitzer succeeded through purchase to the general merchandise business of G. M. Martin, and has since taken an active part in the commercial life of Volta, attending also to the duties of postmaster. Mr. Pfitzer's reputation as a business man rests upon years of worthy effort as a sheep raiser, and upon successful dealings in lands, and the ability to accumulate several large and paying country properties. His entire active life has been spent in California, as was also the greater part of his youth, for he came here a child in the summer of 1863. He was born in Jackson county, Iowa, February 21, 1850, and is the oldest of ten children of Anthony and Theresa (Myers) Pfitzer, natives of Wurtemberg, Germany, the latter a resident of Santa Cruz.

Anthony Pfitzer was a blacksmith by trade, giving to his work the thoroughness and application required of apprentices in the old world. With his trade as a guarantee of at least a fair livelihood, he came to the United States, traveled throughout the east, and finally became a pioneer farmer of Jackson county, Iowa. His land lay along the Maquoketa river, was fertile and productive, and soon placed him above indebtedness and on the road to success. In the spring of 1863 he yielded to a desire to see the far west, and with his family crossed the plains, locating in Eldorado county, where he followed freighting. In 1867 he located on land near old Los Banos, engaged in the stock-raising business, and became one of the largest stock and grain men in the county. From a small beginning he branched out repeatedly, purchasing additional land from the settlers, until he owned over six thousand acres. During the last years of his life he leased the greater part of his property, his death occurred in Merced county in 1892, at the age of sixty-two years. He was a man of marked characteristics, liberal and public-spirited, and impressed his influence upon many departments of the county's growth. As a Democrat he was active in the interests of his party, served on the county central committee, the school board, and was instrumental in securing the building of the first school house in Volta. He was one of the founders and builders of the church at Volta. Honest and straightforward in all of his dealings, genial and considerate in his association with friends and neighbors, he commanded the respect and good-will of the community, and left a void in the hearts of many when he died. Nine of his ten children are living, and of these Joseph, the second son, is a farmer of the Cottonwood district; Mary is the wife of A. Domegine, of Fresno county; Julia is the wife of E. McCabe of Merced county; Anthony lives on the old home farm; Rose married William Bunker of Cottonwood; William is a farmer of the Cottonwood district; Clara is a resident of Santa Cruz; and Louis runs a dairy near Los Banos.

From 1867 until his twenty-first year Frank Pfitzer lived on his father's farm, after which he started out on his own responsibility in the sheep business, herding his sheep on the plains and in the valley. Eventually he purchased a farm of sixteen hundred acres in the foothills, which he still owns, and where he pastured sheep until July, 1903. Since then he has rented this property. He also owns a thousand acres of land south of Volta, which he rents for grain purposes, and two hundred and forty acres in his home ranch, all under irrigation, of which eighty acres are under alfalfa and rented out for a dairy. Mr. Pfitzer practically retired from immediate supervision of his landed interests when he embarked in the merchandise business in 1903, but his responsibilities are still great, and include active political service, and an interest in all questions of local public moment. He is at present a member of the Republican county central committee, and has been for many years a delegate to state and county conventions. The friend of education and all manner of improvement, he was formerly a member of the school board, and his contributions to church and charitable undertakings are generous. Mr. Pfitzer was united in marriage in 1881 in Merced county, to Esther A. Knight, a native of Jones county, Iowa, and they have four children, Clarence, May, Ruby and Frances. Fraternal he is associated with the Hills Ferry Lodge No. 236, F. & A. M., of Newman, and the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Los Banos. His character, life-work and aims command the respect of an intelligent and discriminating commonwealth, and his rise to success is of such a nature as to furnish encouragement and hope to the industrious and ambitiously inclined.

DAVID M. ROUSE. The former superintendent of the San Joaquin and Kings River Canal & Irrigating Company has probably superintended the construction of more miles of waterways in the state of California than any other man. His work included first the canal and reservoir of Salt Spring valley, at Milton, Cal., the Crocker & Huffman canal in Merced county, the Modesto canal and the San Joaquin and King's river canal, built by Miller & Lux, begun in October, 1891; the latter waterway is one hundred and thirty-nine miles in length, including the main canal of seventy-four miles, fifty miles outside of the canal, and fifteen miles of Colony ditch, besides many miles of laterals. He has made a profound study of irrigation, and upon resigning his position with the San Joaquin and King River Canal & Irrigating Company, in January, 1904, was probably as well posted in his particular line as any man now interested in this department of progress. Mr. Rouse is now in the employ of James Stephenson, and is superintending the construction of that rancher's canal on the west side of Merced county. He has invested in town and country property, owning, besides his residence in Los Banos, a ranch of seventy acres adjoining the town, which is rented and devoted to dairying.

Mr. Rouse's youth was spent on the frontier of Iowa, on a farm near Ottumwa, Wapello county, near the Indian agency, upon which his father had settled. As the first white child to come into existence in the wild and uncultivated region, he was a subject of curiosity to both whites and Indians, although the family was a large one, he being the second youngest of ten children. His parents, D. J. and Eliza (Manson) Rouse, were born in Indiana, his paternal grandfather having settled in the Hoosier state during the Indian wars, in which he took a prominent part. D. J. Rouse sold his Iowa farm about 1870, removing to Olathe, Johnson county, Kans., where he lived in retirement until his death in 1874. He was a man of much ability and natural shrewdness, considerable of a politician, and at one time clerk of Wapello county on the Republican ticket. He was survived by his wife until 1894. George, his oldest son, served all through the Civil war in the First Iowa Cavalry, and now lives in Iowa.

Reared in the Indian agency, D. M. Rouse found plenty of hard work to test his growing strength, and his opportunity for acquiring an education was limited in the extreme. At the age of twenty-two he engaged in independent farming, and shortly after removed to Olathe, Kans., and the same year to Coffey county, that state. There he pre-empted land and lived on his quarter-section until 1874. Selling out during that year he removed to Stockton, Cal., and engaged in grain raising near Lodi, moving later to Milton, where he undertook his first superintendency of a California canal. He found it sufficiently remunerative and interesting to warrant investigation and study, and so continued to work and made a name for himself as an authority on the subject of irrigation.

The first marriage of Mr. Rouse was solemnized in Ottumwa, Iowa, with India Hixson, a native of that locality, who died in California. His present wife, Sarah McCulligh, was born in the north of Ireland, whither her family had removed to avoid religious persecution. There are two children of this union, Horace Manson and David Mansfield. Mr. Rouse votes the straight Republican ticket and is a member of the school board, which is constructing the new school building of Los Banos. He is fraternally connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mrs. Rouse is a member of the Presbyterian church. Whatever success has come to Mr. Rouse has been of his own making, for his start in life was unattended by advantages of either money or influence. He illustrates the value of gift and perseverance, as well as of integrity, reliability, and personal agreeableness.

WALTER E. PREMO, PH. B., supervising principal of the Tulare schools, occupies a conspicuous place among the leading educators of Tulare county, his superior ability and scholarly attainments eminently qualifying him for his important work. He is a native son of California, his birth having occurred in San Joaquin county, May 8, 1875, on the farm improved by his father, Michael Premo.

A Canadian by birth, Michael Premo was born and reared near the city of Montreal, the son of a farmer. With the love of youth for travel and adventure, he went to New York in search of work, from there coming by way of Panama to San Francisco in 1869. Subsequently locating in San Joaquin county, he took up land on the French Camp road, near Atlanta, and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1882. Coming in that year to Tulare county, he bought a ranch west of Tulare, in the artesian belt, having six hundred and forty acres, and was there employed in grain farming for nearly twenty years. In 1901 he removed to Longbeach, Los Angeles county, where he still resides. He married Magdalene Minges, who was born in California, the daughter of John Minges, a pioneer who crossed the plains with ox-teams and settled in the San Joaquin valley, spending his last years in Stockton. Eight children were born to Michael Premo and his wife, seven of whom are living, Walter E., of this review being the oldest child.

But seven years of age when his parents settled in Tulare county, Walter E. Premo here received his elementary education, being graduated from the Tulare High School in 1893. The ensuing two years he worked with his father on the home farm, after which he attended the University of Southern California for two years. In 1897 Mr. Premo entered the University of California as a junior, and in 1899 was graduated from that institution with the degree of Ph. B. After teaching mathematics and the sciences for a year in the Portersville High School, in 1900, he accepted a similar position in the Tulare High School. His services in this capacity proved so acceptable that in 1902 he was elected supervising principal of the Tulare schools, which includes the grammar and high schools. Under his regime, these are in a flourishing condition, in 1904 there being five hundred and eighty-five enrolled, and the teachers numbering fifteen. Mr. Premo is very popular in educational and social circles, and for three years was president of the Tulare High School Alumni.

In Tulare Mr. Premo married Alice McDonald, a native of Virginia City, Nev., and they have two children, Walter and Olive. Fraternal-ly he is a member of Olive Branch Lodge No. 260, F. & A. M.; and of the Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a Republican. He takes a keen interest in athletic sports, and while in Portersville coached the football team, and is now coaching the Tulare team.

ROBERT C. MOOREHEAD. At an early period in the development of Stanislaus county Mr. Moorehead became identified with its agricultural possibilities and has since accomplished much in promoting the development of its lands. The influence which he wields as an old settler is heightened by his successful prosecution of various departments of farm work. Through the exercise of constant industry and sagacious judgment he has converted an unattractive area into a valuable homestead, whose fertility is enhanced by irrigation from the canal. The place is situated three and three-fourths miles southwest of

Newman, and, with its improvements, stands as a monument to the owner's unwearied efforts, continued through many years.

Remotely of English and Scotch descent, Mr. Moorehead represents a family long resident in America. His father, John, was the son of a Kentucky farmer, machinist and blacksmith, who proved as valiant in war as he was industrious in peace, and served with recognized faithfulness in the war of 1812. A native of Greenbrier county, W. Va., John Moorehead was a young man when in 1850 he resolved to seek a homestead among the undeveloped lands of what was then considered the far west. Establishing himself in Iowa, he improved a farm near Columbus City, Louisa county. Meanwhile the trend of emigration had drifted still further westward. The gold fields of California and Colorado had attracted thousands of Argonauts, who had settled permanently in the west. With a longing for larger results than could be achieved on his Iowa homestead, and impelled by the rumors of the wealth of the great gold fields of the west, he started across the plains in 1864, accompanied by his three sons, and using oxen and horses as motive power for the "prairie schooners." An experience of four years in Boise Basin mines and other camps proved less remunerative than hoped for, and he retired from the occupation, coming to California in 1868, and spending the balance of his life in this state. During his residence in Iowa he served as justice of the peace, but in the west did not identify himself with local affairs. He had attained the age of eighty-four years when, in 1887, death came to him at the home of his son, Robert C., in Stanislaus county. His wife, Nancy (McVey) Moorehead, was born in Virginia and died in St. Louis while en route to Iowa. They were the parents of five sons. The eldest, Samuel A., a pioneer of 1862 in California, resides on the West Side in Stanislaus county. The second son, J. A., who came to California in 1863, now owns and occupies a farm in Tulare county. The third son, George W., came to California, but returned to Iowa, and died there in 1902. The other sons, W. T. and R. C., are farmers in Stanislaus county.

In Greenbrier county, W. Va., Robert C. Moorehead was born July 15, 1846. While still a very small child he was taken to Iowa, and there received a district school education. With his father and two brothers he crossed the plains in 1864. After an experience of four years in the mines he came to San Francisco, and two weeks later proceeded to Eldorado county, thence going to Truckee, Nevada county, where he engaged in lumbering. When Stanislaus county was still an undeveloped region he became one of its pioneers, August of 1869 finding him a partner of his brother, Samuel A., in farming pursuits on the west side. After three years he disposed of his interests and then bought a farm adjoining his present property. The nucleus of the place which he now owns became his about 1886, since which time he has added to it by purchase, until now his landed possessions aggregate two hundred acres. All of the improvements have been made under his personal supervision. Twenty acres are under the ditch and in alfalfa, while the remainder of the land is used for the raising of grain. Though he has not made a specialty of dairying, he owns twelve milch cows and finds his dairy interests no unimportant factor in the footing of each year's profits. Attention to details and untiring industry have brought him a large measure of success, while his fair dealings with all have retained for him the confidence of his associates. Fraternally he holds membership with the Knights of Pythias. In political matters he votes the Democratic ticket, and has served as a delegate to county conventions of the party. Three children, Elvin J., Raleigh C., and Nellie May, were born of his marriage to Miss Jessie Johnson, who was born and reared in Merced county, this state, her father, Daniel B. Johnson, having come from Germany during the early settlement of the valley, where he became a well-known farmer and stockman.

J. D. WAUGH. The Waugh family came originally from England, the first emigrant being John Waugh, a native of Yorkshire and the son of William Waugh, an agriculturist, and the representative of an old and distinguished family. John Waugh came to Virginia and located on the Potomac, near Leesburg, where he became a farmer and an importer of Durham and Devon cattle from England. He became the owner of a fine farm, upon which he made his home until his death in 1844. His wife, formerly Mary Cox, was a native of Dublin, Ireland, who came with her parents to Virginia. Her death occurred when her youngest son was an infant. Born of this marriage were the following children: Thomas, who served in the Civil war in a Missouri regiment, and was killed with some comrades on his way home from the war; Ann, Mrs. Hayes, a resident of Knox county, Mo.; and J. D., the subject of this review.

Born on the Potomac, near Leesburg, Va., June 17, 1832, J. D. Waugh was reared to young manhood in Virginia, receiving his education in a private school at Leesburg and the Upperville Academy. In 1856 he came as far west as Missouri and located in Edina, Knox county, where he followed farming. In the first years of the Civil war he removed to Iowa, locating in Mount Vernon. Deciding to emigrate to the more remote west, he crossed the plains in 1864 by mule-teams, leaving Muscatine, Iowa, May 10, 1864, and arriving in Grass valley September 17 of the same year, the trip being made via Echo canon, Salt Lake and Truckee route, under command of Captain Beach. The train comprised one hundred men, all well armed and prepared for the dangers and rigors of the tedious journey. For four years Mr. Waugh remained in Grass valley, for a part of the time engaged in prospecting, and also conducting the Ohio saw mill ranch which he purchased, raising hay and fruit. October 13, 1868, he went to San Jose and bought a small place on Stockton avenue, engaging in the dairy business there and on the Guadeloupe river, until February, 1873, when he came to Tulare county. Seven miles east of Visalia, on the Kaweah, he bought a small place, where he made his home until 1876, when he sold out and bought his present property in Antelope valley, consisting of railroad land. This he improved and cultivated, and later pre-empted what is now the Sequoia Reservoir, then known as the Mill flat, a rich little basin or valley. The Sequoia Lumber Company dammed it up and made a lake of one hundred and sixty acres for fluming, having an altitude of forty-eight hundred feet. Mr. Waugh has put up ice in winter, having built an ice-house of logs and sawdust, and two seasons he hauled ice to Visalia with teams, a distance of more than fifty miles. In Santa Clara county he began to raise Jersey cattle and upon his removal here brought them to Tulare county and continued in the dairy business, having sixty cows. Deciding to devote his energies to the raising of stock, he invested in Aberdeen Polled Angus and Black Commodore Polled, imported from Scotland. He now has Forest S., brought from Iowa, at the head of his herd, and also owns Leonmaster, the second. He has about seventy-two full-blooded Aberdeen Polled Angus, his ranch being known as the Polled Angus Stock ranch. He owns seven hundred and sixty acres in Antelope valley, sixteen miles northeast of Visalia.

Mr. Waugh has been twice married, his first wife being Mrs. Eliza (Leonard) Debolt, a native of Ohio, who died October 1, 1897, leaving three children, namely: Georgie, who became the wife of Thomas Chatten of Visalia, and died January 22, 1904; William, engaged with his father in the stock business; and Harry V., of Tulare county. His second marriage occurred in Fresno and united him with Mrs. Eveline (Collier) Strang, a native of Iowa. Her death occurred September 6, 1904. A prominent citizen in all local affairs, Mr. Waugh has served as a member of the school board for over twenty years, now acting as clerk of the Townsend district. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Friendship Lodge No. 210, and now belongs to Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M. Politically he is a staunch Democrat and has served as a member of the county central committee.

WILBUR FISK DRAPER. Instances of the attainment of a gratifying degree of success are of frequent occurrence in Stanislaus county, where the development of the dairy industry, the growth of the stock business and the cultivation of the farms in the valleys and foothills afford opportunities for men of wise judgment and untiring industry. Among the men of influence identified with local stock and ranching interests few have been more successful than Mr. Draper, who resides one and one-half miles west of Newman. Since making his first purchase of property in the county he has been one of its leading land owners. It was during 1879 that he bought thirty-one hundred acres of low foothill land in this county, and at the same time he purchased eight hundred acres in the valley. On the latter farm he established his home in 1880, and here he has since resided. In addition he owns fifty acres of alfalfa land at Crow's Landing, which makes a first-class hay farm. All of these various properties he personally superintends, besides acting as president of the Acme Creamery Company.

The Draper family is of English extraction, but has been identified with New York state since an early period in our country's history. Addison Draper was a lifelong farmer, and died in Akron, N. Y. His son, Alfred, father of Wilbur Fisk Draper, was a native of Genesee county, N. Y., and grew to manhood in Akron. After his marriage to Eliza Doney he removed to Michigan and settled in Rives township, Jackson county, where he acquired the ownership of two hundred and forty acres. Four brothers also settled in that county and identified themselves with pioneer influences and environments. In that day the city of Jackson contained only two grocery stores, and its population was so small as to give no evidence of future municipal importance. On his retirement from agricultural operations Mr. Draper moved into the city of Jackson, about 1884, and has since made his home there. For many years, during his earlier life, he served as justice of the peace. Since the organization of the Republican party he has supported its principles. In religion he is connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife was born at Black Rock, a suburb of Buffalo, Erie county, N. Y., and grew to womanhood at Clarence Hollow, same county, but was married at Black Rock. She was a daughter of Harry Doney, a native of New York, and of French ancestry. At the time of her death, which occurred at Jackson, Mich., she had attained the age of eighty-six years. Of her marriage there were born eight sons and one daughter, namely: Edwin, who makes his home at San Jose, Cal.; Mrs. Mary Beebe, who died at Jackson, Mich.; Wilbur Fisk, of Stanislaus county; Harry, a rancher at Paso Robles, Cal.; Milton, who follows farm pursuits at Hull, Iowa; Frederick, who is living retired in Jackson, Mich.; George, a railroad man living in Chicago; Alfred, of San Jose, Cal.; and Clarence, who is a business man at Toledo, Ohio.

On the home farm in Jackson county, Mich., Wilbur Fisk Draper was born February 8, 1840. The common schools of the district afforded him all the educational advantages that he ever enjoyed. In 1862 he left home for California via Panama, sailing from New York May 1, 1862, on the steamer North Star, and after crossing the isthmus took passage on the Orozaba for San Francisco, May 26th being the date of his arrival at the Golden Gate. Selecting a location on Walnut creek, Contra Costa county, he engaged in general farming for two years, and afterward, in partnership with his brother Edwin, cultivated a farm owned by Albert Stone, where he used two four-horse teams in the tilling of the soil. After a year he went to Washoe, Nev., and for a year engaged in teaming between that town and Virginia City. During the fall of 1864 he returned to California, this time renting a farm at Livermore, where he remained until 1869. His next removal took him to the west side in Merced county, and there he farmed three sections of the Page ranch and had charge of Mr. Page's interests, during his second year acting as superintendent. In that capacity he started eight new farms and superintended the erection of eight farmhouses and accompanying barns and granaries. In addition he had four thousand sheep pasturing in the foothills. From there he came to Stanislaus county, where for sixteen years he continued to conduct an extensive sheep business in addition to raising grain. The tract of thirty-seven hundred acres that he owns is excellent grain land, besides being adapted for stock. Of his valley farm one hundred and thirty acres under the canal are in alfalfa, thus furnishing an abundance of hay for the cattle, horses and mules. In addition to his own land he tills a rented tract of two hundred and sixteen acres in the river bottom. Eight ten-mule teams are necessary in the working of his various tracts, while the harvesting is done with the aid of a combined Stockton harvester and thresher operated by thirty-two mules.

The first marriage of Mr. Draper took place at Alamo, Cal., and united him with Miss Candace Jones, a native of Missouri. Her parents, John M. and Mary (Smith) Jones, crossed the plains from Missouri in 1846. With them came the ill-fated Donner party, whose tragic end is one of the saddest chapters of western frontier history. Fortunately the Jones family took the old Dutch flat route, and crossed the mountains one and one-half days before the others. When they landed in California they settled near Alamo, Contra Costa county, where Mr. Jones died; his widow still resides on the old homestead in that county. Mrs. Candace Draper died in Merced county, leaving three children, namely: Frederick, now in Alaska; Clarence, a resident of Oakland; and Blanche, wife of Edward Besheer, of Modesto. After the death of his first wife Mr. Draper married Miss Carrie Driskell, of Modesto, who was born at Jacksonville, Ore., and came to California with her father, James Driskell; the latter is now a dairyman near Newman. The only child of Mr. Draper's second marriage was a daughter named Lena, who died at three years of age. Fraternally Mr. Draper affiliates with the Masons. He was made a Mason in Hill's Ferry Lodge No. 236, F. & A. M., which later became the Newman Lodge. In addition he holds membership with Merced Chapter No. 12, R. A. M., and Pacific Commandery No. 3, at Sonora. Always a Republican, he has been active in promoting the local progress of the party and has voted its ticket in all elections, local and national.

JOHN HENRY RAMM. Though a comparatively recent settler at Dinuba, Mr. Ramm has made California his home for many years and is familiar with its growth and development during the past thirty years. When he came to Dinuba in 1902 he built the residence he now occupies and also improved with a family orchard and alfalfa the forty acres he owns at this point. In addition he owns eighty acres on section 16, one-half mile east of Dinuba, where he has twenty acres in peach trees and forty-two acres in a vineyard subdivided into the following: Twenty acres, Muscat; twelve acres, Thompson's seedless; and ten acres, Sultanas, all in excellent bearing condition and furnishing large crops of the choicest varieties of grapes.

A native of Germany, Mr. Ramm was born in Holstein, at Henstedt, near Killinghosen, April 25, 1854, and was second in a family of two sons and two daughters, all of whom are living except one son. His father, Henry, spent his entire life in Holstein, where he was a mason and contractor until his death at an early age; the mother, Abby Wagner, was also a lifelong resident of Holstein. Their son, John Henry, who was the only member of the family to settle in America, passed his boyhood years in Bergen, where he attended school and became familiar with farming. In 1871 he crossed the ocean to America and stopped at Fremont, Neb., where he worked on a farm for a time and later bought eighty acres of railroad land. This he sold, then purchased one hundred and twenty acres, which he improved and sold. The year 1875 found him in California, but he remained only a short time in San Francisco, soon proceeding to Whatcom county, Wash., and pre-empting land at Samish Flats. Thither he brought the first reaper ever used in those parts, and with three yoke of oxen and one team of horses threshed the first crop of grain on the Flats. Though not a native-born American, he proved his patriotism by starting the first 4th of July celebration the Flats had ever witnessed, securing for this purpose a flag pole and flag.

After two years Mr. Ramm sold his farm on the Flats and removed to the Kittitas valley in Washington, where he bought and improved one hundred and twenty acres of railroad land. Settlers were few in that locality. Few attempts had been made at improvements. Produce had to be hauled one hundred and sixty miles. Indians were hostile and numerous at first, but after two years, through the strategic capture of Old Moses, the red men were quieted, and Mr. Ramm had no further trouble with them. After his marriage he engaged in raising grain and stock on his farm of three hundred and twenty acres situated on the Yakima river, and in addition for twelve years he operated a flour mill at Thorp, Kittitas county. His large farm near Ellensburg on the Yakima he still owns, but rents it to tenants, having removed from there to California in 1902 and settled on his present homestead.

At Ellensburg, Wash., in 1884, occurred the marriage of Mr. Ramm and Mrs. Sophronia Ellen (Parker) Pollington, a native of Adams county, Ill., and the next to the youngest in a family of twelve children, all but two of whom attained mature years. Two of her brothers, Lewis A. and William Jefferson, served in the Civil war and the latter was imprisoned at Andersonville. Her parents, Archibald and Anna (Combs) Parker, were natives of Ohio and Kentucky, respectively. For many years they lived on a farm in Adams county, Ill., thence removed to Kansas, later to Wyoming, going from there to Elko, Nev., and eventually going to Washington, where they died, the father April 24, 1903, at the age of eighty-eight, and the mother in July, 1888. During the Civil war Mr. Parker served in an Illinois regiment. The first marriage of Mrs. Ramm was solemnized in Cheyenne, Wyo., and united her with Shadrick Price, who was in the government employ when he was killed by the Ute Indians, in the White River Agency massacre, September 29, 1879. This was one of the most noted of the Indian outbreaks resulting from dissatisfaction with the Indian agent, N. C. Meeker. He and seven others, among whom was Shadrick Price, were shot while working on a store building. Mrs. Price, her two children, Mrs. Meeker and daughter Josephine, aged twenty-two years, were captured by the Indians and kept prisoners twenty-three days, but were rescued by General Adams and his party. The Indians took their prisoners about three hundred miles on horseback into the mountains. The rescue took place on Plateau creek, and was effected by the head chief of the Utes, Ouray, who threatened to exterminate the tribe if they harmed the prisoners. After the rescue the women and children went to Denver, from there to Greeley, Colo., and from the latter place Mrs. Price went with her parents to Washington. By her first marriage she had two children, namely: Florence, now Mrs. Schaaf, of Sultana, Cal.; and John A. L., who resides in Washington. Afterward she was married to Horace Pollington, of Ellensburg, Wash., a native of England, and a farmer in Washington, where he was killed by a falling tree. By that union there was one daughter, Rosa, now Mrs. Weaver, of Sultana. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Ramm are Charles Henry and Anna Pearl, who remain with their parents. In politics Mr. Ramm is independent and in religion adheres to the Lutheran faith, in which he was reared. While living in Washington he became connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Ellensburg and is now noble grand of the lodge at Dinuba, also a member of the Encampment at Ellensburg, while with his wife, who is past noble grand, he is warmly interested in the work of the Rebekahs.

JASPER KOLB. Noteworthy among the thrifty and progressive agriculturists of Tulare county is Jasper Kolb, living about four miles west of Dinuba, where he has a highly productive ranch, that in point of improvements and appointments compares favorably with the best in the vicinity. Belonging to a family noted for its patriotism, he has himself a distinguished record as a soldier, and is a fine representative of the substantial citizens of the community in which he resides. A son of William Kolb, he was born, August 9, 1836, in Rush county, Ind., of German ancestry, his great-grandfather on the paternal side having been born and bred in Germany. His grandfather, Jonathan Kolb, a native of South Carolina, settled as a farmer in Georgia when young, but subsequently became a pioneer of Indiana, where he spent the later years of his life.

William Kolb was born in Georgia in 1805, and was there reared and educated. Removing to Indiana in pioneer days, he lived for three years in Fayette county, being employed in agricultural pursuits. He was afterward engaged in farming in Rush county for a number of years, from there going to Benton county, Ind., where he resided until his death at the venerable age of ninety-three years. He married Keziah Rich, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of John Rich, and died in Indiana when ninety-one years of age. Nine children were born of their union, and of these eight are living, Jasper, the fifth child, being the only California resident. He and two other sons served in the Civil war. One son, Richard Kolb, enlisted in Company E, Fortieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was commissioned first lieutenant of his company, but after the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, in which he was wounded, he resigned his commission, and he is now living in White county, Ind. Another son, William D. Kolb, now of Marion, Ind., served as a member of Company C, Ninety-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was wounded at the siege of Atlanta.

Brought up in Rush county, Ind., Jasper Kolb obtained his rudimentary education in the district schools, after which he attended the Kokomo Normal School for awhile. Removing with the family to Benton county in 1854, he taught school for two terms in Tippecanoe, subsequently remaining on the home farm, and assisting in its management until coming of age. Anxious to further advance his education, Mr. Kolb then began to work on his own account, and with the money thus earned he paid his way through one of the higher institutions of learning, being principally employed in teaching. In November, 1861, inspired by true patriotic impulses, he enlisted as a private in Company E, Fortieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and with his comrades took a very active part in many of the more important engagements of the Civil war, being in the following-named battles: Stone River; Missionary Ridge, where he received two slight wounds; Resaca, Buzzards Roost; Dallas; New Hope Church; Lost Mountain; Kenesaw Mountain, where he received a flesh wound; Peach Tree Creek; Lovejoy Station; Jonesboro; Spring Hill; Franklin, where he was twice wounded; and at Nashville. In the latter engagement, November 30, 1864, under General Thomas, Mr. Kolb was so severely wounded in the left thigh, the bone being fractured, that he was sent to the Nashville Hospital, later being transferred to the Louisville Hospital, and from there being sent home to recuperate. Able to go to the front in sixty days, he joined his regiment at Huntsville, Ala., and from there was ordered to Texas, where he was stationed until January, 1866, when he returned to Indiana, and January 23, 1866, was mustered out at Indianapolis, being then first lieutenant of his company, his promotion through the various ranks having been earned by bravery and faithful conduct.

Being married soon after receiving his discharge from the army, Mr. Kolb located in Fountain county, Ind., where he was successfully engaged as a lumber manufacturer and dealer for nearly a score of years. Migrating to the Pacific coast in 1884, he was for seven years engaged in farming and stock-raising in Paso Robles, San Luis Obispo county. In 1891 he located in Tulare county, purchasing forty acres of his present farm, and putting in alfalfa for his first crop, and setting out an orchard. Succeeding well in his efforts, Mr. Kolb has since bought another forty acres of adjoining land, and on this has made great and valuable improvements. He has a fine orchard of fourteen acres, but devotes the larger part of his ranch to the growing of hay and alfalfa. He makes a specialty of dairying and stock raising, and is meeting with unquestioned success.

In Lafayette, Ind., Mr. Kolb married Maria Knight, a native of that city, and they have three children living, namely: Nellie B., at home; and Henry Clay and Jesse J., farmers. Politically Mr. Kolb is an earnest supporter of the Prohibition ticket in national affairs, but in local matters is independent, voting according to the dictates of his conscience. He is a man of high moral principles, and a member of the Christian Church at Dinuba.

BENJAMIN HAMILTON CROW. Another pioneer resident of Stanislaus county may be found in the person of Benjamin H. Crow, an octogenarian, who for more than half a century has been identified with the agricultural interests of California. It was in Mercer county, Ky., that Mr. Crow was born February 27, 1824. His father, Walter Crow, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, left his native state, Kentucky, in 1828, and settled in Pike county, Mo., near Bowling Green. He followed farming in that locality until 1849, when, like thousands of others, he swelled the tide of immigration toward the Pacific coast, crossing the plains with ox-teams. He and his two companions were accompanied by two negroes, named Marion and Sam. Arriving in California Mr. Crow spent some time in the mines at Hangtown, and subsequently returned to Missouri by way of the Isthmus of Panama.

Accompanied by four of his sons, William H., James A., Benjamin H. and Alfred M., Mr. Crow again crossed the plains in 1850, driving a herd of eight hundred cattle. At Junction City, in Trinity county, on the Feather river, Mr. Crow became seriously ill with typhoid fever and died. The sons took the cattle to the San Joaquin valley, and in Stanislaus county they took a squatter's claim to one hundred and sixty acres of government land. They afterward purchased a land grant in the same county and became prominent citizens. The mother, who was known in maidenhood as Susan Pritchett, was born in Kentucky, a daughter of Abraham Pritchett, a native of Virginia, and a pioneer of Kentucky. Mrs. Susan Crow died in Pike county, Mo., in 1833, when about thirty-five years of age. She became the mother of nine children, eight sons and one daughter, as follows: Isaac, William H., James A., Benjamin H., John Bradford, Alfred McDowell, Lewis, Pike and Susan. The latter became the wife of Capt. James W. Smith, and with her family resides in Stockton, Cal. All of the sons eventually came to California.

Benjamin H. Crow was the recipient of only a limited education in his youth and this was gleaned from the common schools of Pike county, Mo., but nevertheless the results accomplished in his life challenge the admiration of all. After the death of his father, in 1850, although still retaining his interest in the cattle business in the San Joaquin valley, he followed mining during the years 1851, '52 and '53. In 1854 he located in Stanislaus county on Orestimba creek, among the foothills, and there followed ranching until 1869, in which year he removed to his present home, three miles east of Crow's Landing. At that day Crow's Landing was a place of considerable importance, as all shipping was done by boat, and the landing and postoffice were located near Mr. Crow's ranch. It was in 1870 that he built the home now occupied by himself and wife. His possessions aggregate nearly four thousand acres of land, of which about one thousand acres are under the West Side ditch. In addition to carrying on general farming, he has paid considerable attention to the raising of cattle, mules and sheep. Owing to advanced years Mr. Crow has rented his land for a number of years, which insures him a comfortable income.

By his marriage October 10, 1858, Mr. Crow was united with Miss Emma Patchett, who was born in Chester county, Pa., a daughter of John and Esther (Passmore) Patchett. John Patchett was a native of Lincolnshire, England, and in an early day immigrated to the United States. His marriage occurred in Pennsylvania, in which state he conducted a brewery for a number of years. Going to Iowa in 1836, he resided in Van Buren county on the Des Moines river, for some time. In 1850 he came to California, locating in Napa valley, near Napa, in which vicinity he acquired a large amount of land. He died in 1875, when eighty years of age, surviving his wife a quarter of a century, her death occurring in Noember, 1850, soon after their arrival in Eldorado county. She was a native of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Crow have no children. Politically Mr. Crow supports the Democratic party. Both are esteemed residents of the community in which they have made their home for so many years, and in comfort and plenty, the result of economy and good business ability, they are passing their declining years. Surrounded by hosts of friends, they are familiarly known as Uncle Ben and Aunt Emma, and by all who share their acquaintance are loved and revered. The story of their lives, with its lessons of honesty, frugality and high principles, will be read with interest by coming generations.

J. WARREN ALCORN. An enterprising, practical and thriving agriculturist, living one and one-half miles east of Traver, J. W. Alcorn holds an assured position among the prominent husbandmen of this section of Tulare county, being the leading dairyman and poultry raiser and dealer. A son of Hamlet Alcorn, he was born November 1, 1859, in Pochontas, Randolph county, Ark. On both sides of the house he came of pioneer ancestry, both his paternal and his maternal grandfathers having been early settlers and well-to-do farmers of Arkansas. Hamlet Alcorn chose the occupation to which he was bred, and during his brief life was engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native state, carrying on general farming until his death, about 1869. Although a strong Union man, he was forced to serve in the Confederate army during the Civil war. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Ann Stubblefield, died in 1862, leaving six children, of whom J. W. was the fourth child in order of birth.

Left an orphan at the age of nine years, J. W. Alcorn was brought up by his Uncle Dalton, with whom he lived until attaining his majority. In 1881, thinking to improve his chances for making a fortune, he came to Tulare county, Cal., locating in Hanford, where his uncle, I. P. Alcorn, resided, and there he worked as a farmer for a couple of years, during the winter seasons attending school. He subsequently spent a brief time in Nevada, but returned to this county, living first in Hanford, his old home, and then in Tulare. In the spring of 1884 Mr. Alcorn settled in Traver, and being very much pleased with its many advantages decided to locate here permanently. With that end in view he purchased from Thomas Fowler, in the spring of 1885, a timber claim, from which, by close application to his chosen industry, he has improved his present valuable ranch. At first Mr. Alcorn used the land mostly for a sheep range, but he subsequently broke it up, and for many years was prosperously engaged in raising wheat. In the spring of 1896 he started a dairy, putting in a good stock of Holstein cows, and devoting about eighty acres of his ranch, which contains one hundred and forty acres, to alfalfa. One of the foremost dairy farmers of this section, Mr. Alcorn has done much towards advancing the dairy interests of this section, and was one of the organizers of the Traver Co-operative Creamery Association, in which he is a director, and is also a shareholder in the Selma Co-operative Creamery Association. He makes somewhat a specialty of the raising of poultry, in which he has had praiseworthy success. He keeps a fine grade of hens, preferring Leghorns and Minorcas, having now over three hundred birds in his hennery. The eggs he ships to Oakland, and the sale of these in September, 1904, amounted to $83.65, a fine profit for the labor involved and the small expense connected with it.

In Visalia, Cal., Mr. Alcorn married Cynthia Kenner, who was born and reared in Mendocino county. He has but little time to devote to public office, but is now serving as trustee of the Traver school district. He joined Traver Lodge, I. O. O. F., which he served three different times as grand, and is now a member of Dinuba Lodge, I. O. O. F. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

HANS HANSEN. Noteworthy among the skillful and thriving ranchmen of Merced county is Hans Hansen, proprietor of a highly improved farm, lying in Ingomar. Born and bred on the farther side of the broad Atlantic, he became master of the various branches of agriculture when young, and since coming to this country has followed the occupation to which he was reared. Energetic and ambitious, he has never been satisfied with anything less than the highest possible results in his agricultural labors, and having added substantial improvements to his valuable farm, he is now carrying on a most successful business in general ranching, raising large crops of hay and grain, and growing some stock. He was born December 19, 1861, in Denmark, a son of Peter and Anna Christina (Johnson) Hansen. His father spent his entire life in Denmark, being engaged in farming, and his mother still resides in her native country.

Brought up on the home farm, and obtaining his education in the common schools, Hans Hansen remained at home until eighteen years of age. Seeing but little opportunity to accumulate much wealth in his native land, he immigrated to the United States in 1879, coming directly to Alameda county, Cal., where he secured work on a ranch. Going from there to Benicia, he was in the employ of Baker & Hamilton, manufacturers of implements, for two years. Resuming work as a ranchman, he lived at Crows Landing for awhile, and then settled in Merced county, where, from 1890 until 1892, he was employed in farming near his present home estate. Prudent and thrifty, Mr. Hansen accumulated considerable money during these years, and in 1892 bought his present farm of six hundred and forty acres, of which two hundred and twenty acres are under the ditch. Embarking in general agriculture, he has met with eminent success in his labors, his homestead property being now one of the finest and most valuable in the vicinity, well supplied with all the necessary buildings and appliances for carrying on his work after the most approved modern methods.

In San Francisco Mr. Hansen married Christina Schmidt, a native of Denmark, and into their household five children have been born, namely: Peter, Hans, Christina, Lillie and Mabel. A loyal and trusted citizen of his adopted country, Mr. Hansen is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and is a valued member of the Lutheran Church, toward the support of which he contributes generously.

WILLIAM H. RICHEY. The truth of the old maxim, "success is built on a foundation of hard work," is exemplified by Mr. Richey, who has applied himself with uncomplaining and whole-hearted industry to his duties as a general farmer and stockman, his life-long occupation. Since the early '80s, he has been a resident of the old Wheat ranch in the British colony, three miles west of Merced, Cal. Considerable attention is given to raising dairy stock and hogs upon this place, and some grain is also raised. The greater part of Mr. Richey's time is given to raising alfalfa. He has upon this place a twelve-inch, sixty-foot well, and in connection a fifteen-horse-power gasoline engine with which he irrigates one hundred acres of alfalfa, one of the most profitable products of this section of the state.

Being a native of California, born in Amador county, March 4, 1860, Mr. Richey was reared and educated in the locality of his birth, and, arriving at manhood's estate, he took up the occupation of farming, which he followed in his home locality until 1883. He is the eldest of seven children born to William C. and Minerva A. (Dillian) Richey, the former a native of Illinois. He left that state when a young man for a home in California, crossed the plains with the customary ox teams, and assisted in driving a large herd of cattle across. The party of which he was a member experienced some little trouble with the Indians and lost a part of their stock, but suffered no fatalities among its numbers, arriving safely at their destination. In Amador county, Mr. Richey engaged in mining for a short time prior to engaging in a mercantile business. Opening a general store in proximity to the mines, he carried on a successful business there for a number of years. In looking about for a safe investment and a desirable place for a permanent home, Mr. Richey was attracted by the conditions in Merced county, whither he went in 1881. Leasing land near Snelling he carried on ranching pursuits there for fifteen years. He is now living retired from active business, a respected resident of Merced, being now seventy-four years old. In 1904 he was deprived of his beloved companion, who died, aged sixty-four years. The seven children born to them are as follows: W. H., John C., Nancy, James, Anna, Samuel and Lula.

In 1883, two years after his father left Amador county, W. H. Richey became a resident of Merced county and for a short time he followed agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Atwater. At that time the finest land in this section could be purchased for $5 per acre. Mr. Richey subsequently removed to the old Wheat ranch, where he still lives (so called from being first entered by the late John Wheat, who was an early settler in the valley, raising sheep quite extensively). By his marriage, Mr. Richey was united with Miss Johanna Wheat, a daughter of this worthy pioneer, who was born on the old ranch which has ever been her home. This union has been blessed by the birth of four children, named Ella M., Everett, Nellie, and William C. Politically, Mr. Richey is an adherent of the Democratic party and he affiliates with the Woodmen of the World. He is highly esteemed and is entitled to be classed among the progressive and practical farmers of his district.

LOUIS P. RAVEN. When Louis P. Raven arrived in Los Banos in 1889, he was thirteen years old, having been born in Cedarfalls, Blackhawk county, Iowa, October 1, 1876. His family was the first to think sufficiently well of the locality to make it their permanent home. His parents, Iver and Mary (Lorentzen) Raven, were born in Denmark, and upon arriving in Blackhawk county, Iowa, engaged in farming there, coming to Watsonville, Cal., in the fall of 1884. Mr. Raven entered the employ of Miller & Lux, on the west side of Merced county, in 1885, taking charge as foreman of the Centenella ranch until 1889. He then took his family to Los Banos, built the first house in the settlement, opened the first restaurant and served the first meals, also engaged in carpentering and building. The Railroad house, the first hotel in town, was built and maintained by him, his wife becoming his able assistant in all his pioneer undertakings. Five children came to this worthy couple, of whom Hans is superintendent of cattle on the Santa Rita ranch; Gertrude and Annie are in San Francisco, and Carle is in business with his brother.

Louis P. Raven attended school at old Central Point, and in 1890 went to Watsonville to learn the blacksmith business with Jensen & Lorentzen. Three years later he moved to Salinas and worked at his trade for a couple of years, making a specialty of horseshoeing, then entering the employ of O'Day & Son, at 114 Geary street, San Francisco, as a horseshoer. In 1897 he came to Los Banos, built and started a small shop, and prospered so well that in 1901 he leased his present shop, known as the old Sullivan shop, in which he has since plied his trade. Here he makes a specialty of horseshoeing, but does much fine repairing, for he is a thorough mechanic, understanding everything pertaining to his line of work. Mr. Raven is frugal and enterprising, and has invested in a twenty-seven-acre ranch two miles south of Los Banos, which is devoted to alfalfa and dairying. Adjoining Los Banos he bought a fine home, surrounded by two acres of land. His wife was formerly Bertha Hardman, a native of Volta, and daughter of W. B. Hardman, a stockman and rancher of that vicinity. The home is brightened by the presence of a little daughter, Icie Gertrude. Mr. Raven is popular with his fellow townsmen, is generous and public-spirited, and is a valued member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

ELMER T. KOOKEN. Eleven miles south of Bakersfield, Kern county, in the Shafter district, is located the ranch of Elmer T. Kooken, consisting of ninety acres, for which he paid $50 per acre in December, 1902. He is a native of Nebraska, his birth having occurred in Richardson county, near Falls City, February 10, 1870. When only four years old he removed with his parents to Kansas, locating in Crawford county, eighteen miles from Fort Scott, where the father engaged in farming and reared his family to a practical agricultural life. In 1890 Mr. Kooken decided to try his fortunes on the Pacific slope. He accordingly came to California, locating in Los Angeles county, and took up a homestead near Neenach. This property remained his home until he had proved up on his claim, when he sold out and in 1899 came to Kern county. Upon locating here he purchased two different farms in the county, but his first year's work was in the oil regions, after which he became the owner of his present property and engaged in general ranching. The farm is located on Union avenue on the Kern Island canal. He has met with success in his agricultural ventures and has acquired a competence in the new location he sought for his home when removing from the middle west.

In 1892 Mr. Kooken was united in marriage with Miss Lulu Brown, a native of Hamptonville, Yuba county, Cal., and they are the parents of one daughter, Irva, who was born in November, 1899. Fraternally Mr. Kooken is identified with the Woodmen of the World, and politically casts his ballot with the Republican party, in the interests of which he has always been active.

SHERMAN J. SCOTT. Although a resident of Visalia but a few years Sherman J. Scott has won a place of prominence among the business men of the place, both for the ability which has distinguished his efforts and the character of his citizenship. He is identified with several of the most important industries of the city, being manager of the Valley Condensed Milk & Cream Company and Visalia Manufacturing Company, and is secretary of the Visalia Soda Works. Born in Chautauqua county, N. Y., March 29, 1865, he is a son of Calvin L. Scott, also a native of the same locality.

Calvin L. Scott is a carpenter and builder by trade and has followed this occupation throughout his entire life. He now makes his home in Westfield, N. Y., at the age of sixty-eight years. His father, Merrick Scott, was also born in New York state, where he engaged as a farmer until his death. The wife of Calvin L. Scott was in maidenhood Mary E. Porter, also a native of Chautauqua county, N. Y., where her death occurred. Out of a family of four children two sons and one daughter are living. The second child in this family, Sherman J. Scott received his preliminary education in the common school in the vicinity of his home, after which he attended business college at Mansfield, Pa. In 1885 he went to Devils Lake, N. Dak., and also to the Mouse river country, where he engaged in ranching until 1887, in which year he went to Montana and located at Great Falls. He there joined a railway surveying party and helped build the Montana Central Railway, after which, in 1888, he was associated with the Northern Pacific Railway system, receiving a promotion in his line. In December, 1888, he went to Ashland, Ore., as clerk in a men's furnishing and clothing establishment, remaining a year and a half, following which he engaged in private work in surveying in Portland, Ore. In 1891 he held the position of city engineer of Albina, now a part of the city of Portland. In 1892 he was appointed to the position of deputy street superintendent and held the same until 1894, when he returned to New York and spent the following year at home. Returning west in February, 1895, he located in Visalia, Cal., engaging as a surveyor in private work for about four and a half years. In 1899 he became associated with the Visalia Manufacturing Company in the capacity of manager, he being one of the original stockholders. This company manufacture ice and maintain a cold storage plant. The business has grown to remunerative proportions in the short time it has been established and gives promise of a future success which shall place the owners among the successful business men of the San Joaquin valley. Mr. Scott discharges his duties of manager in an efficient and praiseworthy manner.

In Oregon Mr. Scott was united in marriage with May Pennebaker, a native of Visalia, and to them the following children have been born: Rodney (deceased), Fred, Richard and Mary. Fraternaly Mr. Scott became an Odd Fellow in Albina, Ore., and politically he is a staunch Republican and active in his efforts to advance the cause of the party whose principles he endorses.

WILLIAM YANCEY HULEN. Occupying a substantial position among the prosperous and progressive agriculturists of Merced county is William Yancey Hulen, a dairyman, stockman and general farmer, owning six hundred and forty acres of land near Volta. His ranch is well located, receiving water from both canals, and is highly productive, yielding him rich returns for the labor expended on it, it being one of the best in point of improvements in the Pacheco Pass section. A son of Woodson Clark Hulen, he was born, July 26, 1847, in Schuyler county, Mo. His grandfather, William Hulen, was born in Boone county, Ky., and was among the pioneer farmers of Boone county, Mo., where he lived a number of years. In 1864 he removed to Bakersville, Cal., and there spent the remainder of his life.

A native of Boone county, Mo., Woodson Clark Hulen was reared to agricultural pursuits, and having purchased land in Schuyler county, was there engaged in farming until 1852, when he started for California. However, he got no further than Marion county, Iowa, where he purchased land and carried on farming until his death, February 17, 1864. He married Margaret Battern, who was born in Terre Haute, Ind., a daughter of William Battern, who removed from that place to Boone county, Mo., and died in Iowa. Her death occurred at Willows, Cal., January 26, 1896. She bore her husband five children, all of whom are living, four of them being residents of California.

When a boy William Yancey Hulen removed with his parents to Marion county, Iowa, where he completed his early education, attending the short sessions of school held in a rude log cabin, the pioneer schoolhouse of the district. As soon as old enough to manage a team he began to assist his father in improving a homestead, breaking up the wild prairie land, using five or six yoke of oxen in plowing. During the harvest seasons he used the scythe and cradle, and binding up the shocks of grain by hand. Beginning life for himself when eighteen years old, Mr. Hulen spent a year in the vicinity of Keokuk, Iowa, and then returned to Marion county, where he continued farming another twelve months. Removing to Kansas in 1860, he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land in Republic county, and was there engaged in farming four years. Selling out in the fall of 1873, he returned to Iowa, remaining there a year, when, in March, 1875, he came to California, locating in Solano county.

Removing to Fall River valley, Shasta county, in 1877, Mr. Hulen was settled there as a lumberman and farmer until the big snow storm nearly ruined his business. Going thence to Colusa county, he worked on a ranch for three years, from 1880 until 1883, when he went to Los Angeles county, locating at Anaheim, which is now included within the limits of Orange county. A year later he made another removal, going to Fresno county, where he spent a year, after which he traveled through Monterey, Santa Cruz and San Luis Obispo counties, in each one of the changes that he made seeking to find a climate that would alleviate the sufferings of his wife, who was troubled with asthma. Locating on the west side of the San Joaquin valley, near Hills Ferry, in the fall of 1885, Mr. Hulen followed farming there until the fall of 1888, when he settled east of Cottonwood. From there he removed to the mouth of the Pacheco Pass, where he engaged in general farming and grain raising, carrying on from four to six sections of land, running six ten-mule teams, and in the gathering in of his enormous crops of wheat and barley wearing out two combined harvesters. His wife's health was excellent after locating at Pacheco Pass, and he continued his agricultural operations in that locality from the fall of 1888 until the fall of 1903. Purchasing then his present farm of six hundred and forty acres, lying in section 10, township 9, range 9, east, Mr. Hulen has since continued in his chosen occupation with eminent success. Receiving water from the two canals, he has four hundred acres of his farm under irrigation, and already has planted one hundred and seventy-five acres of alfalfa.

He sows about one hundred and sixty acres of grain annually, and also carries on a large and remunerative dairy business. His ranch, located about three and one-fourth miles from Volta, is finely improved, and bears speaking evidence of the thrift, intelligence and wise management of the owner.

In Fairfield, Cal., July 23, 1876, Mr. Hulen married Bethana E. Fairbanks, who was born March 11, 1855, in Yuba county, and reared in Grass valley. She was a daughter of Wilson Fairbanks, and a cousin of Charles Warren Fairbanks, vice-president of the United States. Her grandfather, William Fairbanks, the descendant of a New England Puritan settler, was a pioneer farmer of Indiana. Wilson Fairbanks was born on a farm near Terre Haute, Ind., and there grew to manhood. Crossing the plains with ox teams in 1854, he arrived in Marysville, Cal., in the fall of that year with a herd of cattle, which he sold at a good price. Turning his attention then to mining, Mr. Fairbanks was first located at Round Tent House, and afterward in Grass valley, where he remained until his death, March 26, 1867, in the thirty-fourth year of his age. He married Mary Ann Wayman, who was born at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, the daughter of William Wayman, who was born either in Kentucky or Virginia, and was a pioneer of Iowa. She survived her husband, dying in Reno, Nev., December 10, 1890, in the fifty-fourth year of her age. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hulen six children have been born, namely: Birdie Pearl, wife of J. E. Jeffers, of Oakland; John W., engaged in the dairy business with his father; Dock O.; Rosa C.; Lillie L.; and Henry K. Politically Mr. Hulen is identified with the Republican party, and for eleven years rendered good service as school trustee. Fraternally he belongs to Monroe Lodge No. 289, I. O. O. F., at Willows; and to Newman Lodge No. 238, K. of P. He is broad in his religious views, leaning toward the faith of the Presbyterians.

FRANK C. BAKER. Nine miles south of Bakersfield, Kern county, and in the Shafter district, is located the ranch which belongs to Frank C. Baker, consisting of twenty acres devoted formerly to the cultivation of prunes. This ranch, which is on the Kern Island canal, is all leveled so that every foot can be irrigated, and it is justly classed among the valuable ranches of this section of the country. A native Californian, Mr. Baker was born in Dixon, Solano county, December 22, 1867.

Roland T. Baker, the father of Frank C., was a native of Clark county, Ill., where he made his home until nineteen years old. In 1857 he came to California in the western tide of emigration, taking up a ranch in Solano county, where he followed farming until 1900. Coming south in that year he located in Kern county, purchasing twenty acres of land in Greenfield district. The boyhood of Frank C. Baker was passed upon the paternal farm in Solano county, where he was trained in the practical life of a farmer. At the age of twenty-two years he took up the work for himself, in addition to ranching interests carrying on carpenter work, being located near Gorman Station, Los Angeles county. He then came to Kern county and rented land near Rosedale, where he remained until 1902, in that year purchasing his present ranch. Since locating upon this property he has taken up the prune trees and is now devoting the land to alfalfa and general farming.

In Solano county Mr. Baker was married to Louise Crow, also a native of that locality, and they are the parents of four children, Violet, Henry, Roland and Roy M. In national politics Mr. Baker is a Republican, but in all local affairs he reserves the right to cast his vote for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. He is now serving efficiently as school trustee. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World.

JULES CAIN. The business house of Jules Cain & Co. is not only well known in Newman and the San Joaquin valley, but throughout this portion of California, where the principal member of the firm has a reputation for remarkable business sagacity. Under his capable management the firm has attained dimensions ten times as great as in former years, their connections now extending more than fifty miles on the west side of the San Joaquin among farmers, dairymen and stockmen of that region. The building occupied by their general mercantile business is a large store one hundred feet long, and is stocked with a full assortment of merchandise of every kind. In addition they carry a varied assortment of hardware and agricultural implements, also deal largely in lands, cattle and grain, for the latter purpose having warehouses in close proximity to the railroad. In a large degree the company has been and still is a contributor to the commercial prestige of Newman.

Of French nativity and lineage, Mr. Cain was born in the city of Paris, April 17, 1870, and is the son of Sincere Cain, now a retired merchant residing in the famous French city. In boyhood he was the recipient of fair advantages, and gained a good education in the Paris high school.

Three months after Mr. Cain landed in California the store was moved from Hill's Ferry to Newman, then just founded, and a building was erected on the corner still occupied by the company. In 1892 Mr. Cain became manager of the business, but resigned four years later and returned to Paris. After a visit of three months with his parents, in the fall of 1896 he returned to California, spending the winter in San Francisco and returning to Newman in June of 1897. At that time he purchased the business which he had formerly managed and established the firm of Jules Cain & Co., which has since acquired a wide reputation for successful mercantile transactions. Besides managing the interests of the firm he owns and superintends several thousand acres of grain and stock land, with facilities for irrigation. In addition he platted seven hundred acres, known as Acme colony, situated two miles north of Newman under the canal, and a portion of this property he still owns. In business circles he commands the respect to which his success entitles him and is uniformly recognized as one of the most progressive merchants of the San Joaquin valley.

H. E. KINKADE. Although the period of Mr. Kinkade's residence in Stanislaus county has not been of sufficiently long duration to place him among the pioneers of this portion of California, nevertheless he has become thoroughly identified with the agricultural interests of this region, and is intimately associated with movements tending to promote the welfare of the people, particularly the farming class. The ranch which he has occupied since 1895 is situated three miles west of Newman and consists of three hundred and twenty acres of tillable land, especially adapted to the raising of grain. In addition he owns a quarter section of wheat land on Garcia creek, and tills an adjoining grain farm of eight hundred acres, thus giving him altogether the control of a large acreage of plow land.

On the paternal side Mr. Kinkade is of Virginia extraction. From the Old Dominion his grandfather, Samuel, removed to Kentucky, and settled upon a plantation in the blue grass region. The father, Christopher Ross Kinkade, was born near Lexington, Ky., and in young manhood settled in Wapello county, Iowa, where he followed the plasterer's trade at Eddyville. At the outbreak of the Civil war his sympathies were in behalf of the Union, and he enlisted in the Thirtieth Iowa Cavalry, in which he was commissioned a sergeant. While participating in a skirmish in Tennessee he was killed on the battlefield, in 1863. His widow, who survives him and resides at the old homestead, was Armilda Nosler, a native of Indiana, her father, Dr. James Nosler, having been a physician, first in Indiana and later in Iowa.

In a family consisting of two sons, of whom G. T. is engaged in the oil business at McKittrick, Kern county, Cal., H. E. Kinkade was the elder, and was born at Eddyville, Iowa, February 2, 1862. After having completed the studies at the public schools of his home town, at eighteen years of age he went to Des Moines, where he entered the employ of the United States Express Company. Later he was made express messenger on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad between Davenport and Council Bluffs, Iowa, a distance of three hundred and twenty-two miles. In 1889 he resigned that position and came to California, where the spring of 1890 found him embarking in agricultural pursuits as manager of a farm of fourteen hundred acres. Five years later he left that place and removed to the farm he still owns and operates. Since coming west he has met with success in his farming ventures and has every reason to be grateful for the influences that led him to become an agriculturist in California. Before leaving Eddyville he married Miss Lillie Totman, who was born and reared in that town, her father, S. P. Totman, a native of Ohio, having been for a considerable period engaged in farm pursuits in Iowa. During the Civil war Mr. Totman served as a member of an Iowa regiment of infantry. In 1891 he removed from Iowa to the coast country and settled on a farm near Newman, where he remained until death. Since then his widow, who was Christine Oldham, a native of Ohio, has made her home with her daughter near Newman. In her family there were five children, of whom Mrs. Kinkade was next to the youngest. In their religious affiliations Mr. and Mrs. Kinkade are associated with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Kinkade has officiated as a ruling elder in the congregation. The Republican party has always received his staunch support, both in local and national elections. Fraternally he holds membership with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Woodmen of the World and Degree of Honor.

PETER H. LOINAZ. One of the most popular and successful hotel men of Fresno county is P. H. Loinaz, the genial and accommodating proprietor of the Firebaugh hotel, whose services as a host are appreciated by the traveling public. A native-born son of California, his birth occurred September 9, 1873, in San Francisco, where his father, P. Loinaz, settled on coming to the Pacific coast from Spain.

Emigrating from Spain to California about 1856, P. Loinaz was associated with the installation of the first water system in San Francisco. He subsequently removed to the San Joaquin valley, locating on the west side, where he was successfully engaged in sheep raising for a few years. Investing his money then in land in Madera county, he improved a valuable ranch, and has since been profitably employed in grain and stock raising, being one of the leading farmers of that section, and a citizen of much prominence and influence.

Spending his earlier years principally in Madera county, P. H. Loinaz was educated under a private instructor, the school system in that then sparsely settled section being primitive and limited, afterwards being graduated from the Chestnutwood Business College, in Santa Cruz. Going then to San Francisco, Mr. Loinaz was for five years bookkeeper in the Palace hotel. Returning to Madera county, he was for eight years a resident of Berendo, serving the first three years as clerk in a mercantile establishment, and the last five as proprietor of the Berendo hotel. Coming to Firebaugh in 1898, Mr. Loinaz purchased the Firebaugh hotel, which he has since conducted in a noteworthy manner, winning an extensive and lucrative patronage. The house is large, attractive, and well arranged, and under the genial management of Mr. Loinaz presents to its guests a homelike feeling that is ever appreciated.

Mr. Loinaz married, in Firebaugh, Miss Emilie C. Idiart, who was born and bred in San Francisco, and they have one child, Juanita. Politically Mr. Loinaz casts his vote in favor of the Republican party.

JOHN WILLIAM FRASER. Conspicuous among the successful horticulturists of Tulare county is John W. Fraser, whose finely improved fruit ranch lies four miles southeast of Dinuba. Born of Scotch ancestry, August 20, 1856, in Mansfield, Mass., he is the son of the late Robert John and Anna (Forbes) Fraser. Further history of his parents and ancestors may be found elsewhere in this historical work, in connection with the sketch of his brother, Abner Fraser.

Coming from Omaha, Neb., to California in 1870, he completed his education, which was begun in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, and continued in Omaha, in the public schools of Visalia. Beginning life for himself at the age of twenty-one years, he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land on section 22, and took up a timber claim equally as large in the same section. Proving up on the pre-emption, and homesteading the timber claim, Mr. Fraser became owner of three hundred and twenty acres of good land in the east half of the section on which he settled, and for a number of seasons was successfully employed in raising grain. As soon as the ditch was put through, Mr. Fraser took advantage of the irrigation furnished, and began the growing of fruit. In 1890 he set out an orchard, later improved a vineyard, sowing the remainder to alfalfa. He subsequently sold a part of his ranch, and now has one hundred and thirty acres of land, thirty of which is in orchard, eighty acres are devoted to the culture of grapes of various kinds, and twenty acres are sowed to alfalfa. On his ranch he has made excellent improvements, including the erection of a fine residence and substantial farm buildings, which, with their pleasant environments, invariably attract the attention of the passing traveler, winning from him words of praise and admiration.

In Tulare county, not far from Dinuba, Mr. Fraser married Allie Rook, who was born near Visalia, a daughter of the late Thomas Rook, a pioneer farmer of this county. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Fraser two children have been born, Warren J. and Grace, both of whom are at home. Politically Mr. Fraser is identified with the Republican party, which he supports by voice and vote.

A. E. CLARY. The farm property occupied and operated by Mr. Clary lies near Newman, his residence being one and one-half miles west of that town, while in the immediate vicinity he superintends more than twenty-three hundred acres devoted to grain and stock-raising purposes. Mr. Clary is a California pioneer of 1864, and by birth a Missourian, descended through his paternal grandfather, a Revolutionary patriot, from Scotch forefathers. His father, Daniel, who was born near Frostburg, Md., in early life settled near Louisville, Ky., and there married Rachel Llewellyn, a native of that locality, of Welsh extraction. Accompanied by his family, in 1836 he removed to Pike county, Mo., and from virgin soil developed a fine stock and grain farm in the vicinity of Louisiana, that county. During the spring of 1852 he disposed of his landed possessions there and removed to Montgomery county, Mo., where he bought raw land and again developed a valuable farm. At a time when his neighbors held slaves he refused to follow the universal custom, believing that the institution of slavery should be abolished. It was his privilege to survive the period of the Civil war and to witness the extermination of slavery from the entire country. In religion he was a devout Baptist and in politics voted with the Democratic party. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1868, he was seventy-two years of age. His wife passed away in Montgomery county, Mo., on the last day of January, 1864. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom four sons and four daughters attained mature years. One of the sons, J. A., died at Livermore, this state. At this writing one son and three daughters survive, among the latter being Mrs. Smith, a resident of Kern county, this state.

The youngest son in the family, A. E. Clary, was born in Pike county, Mo., July 22, 1842, and at ten years of age accompanied his parents to Montgomery county, where, as he grew old enough to work, he assisted in the cultivation of the home farm. Habits of industry were inculcated in him at an early age and thus became fixed in his character. Self-reliance, too, was developed by the necessity of assisting in the management of the farm. In March of 1864 he married Miss Joanna Smith, who was born in Pike county, Mo., her parents, Felix and Barbara (Dismuth) Smith, having removed to that state from Kentucky. The month after their marriage Mr. Clary and his wife started for California in a train composed of horse teams. The journey was made up the North Platte, through Wyoming, down the Humboldt river and along the Carson route to Sacramento, where they arrived September 16, 1864. With an energy characteristic of him, Mr. Clary immediately began farming, which occupation he followed in Colusa, Yolo and Sutter counties until 1871. During the latter year he was elected county assessor by a majority of forty-four. Shortly afterward the legislature passed a law extending the length of assessors' tenure of office to four years, and in accordance therewith he served until 1875. During the latter year he was elected for another term of four years, receiving a majority of seven hundred and five votes, and continuing in office until January of 1880.

On the expiration of his second term as assessor Mr. Clary removed to Nevada City, where he engaged in the mercantile business. In the fall of 1881 he settled near Sunol Glen, Alameda county, and there engaged in agricultural pursuits for four years. The year 1885 found him a resident of Stanislaus county, where he first raised stock and grain on property near Crow's Landing, and now cultivates a large tract near Newman. Since coming to this county he has for twelve years served as deputy assessor under Assessors Tullock and Campbell, and in 1900 he was elected without opposition to the board of county supervisors, whereupon he resigned as deputy assessor. In national politics he favors Democratic principles, but in local matters has never displayed a spirit of partisanship. Fraternally he is associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and in religion worships with the Christian Church. In his family there are four sons and three daughters. The eldest and youngest sons, C. M. and E. F., are engaged in the mercantile business at Modesto, and the other sons, J. E. and W. E., have adopted their father's calling of agriculturist. The daughters are Mrs. Belle Hiatt, of Sutter county, Mrs. Lulu Schoaff, of Gilroy, and Pearl, who is with her parents.

JAMES CULVER MOSIER. A conservative yet progressive stockman, James Culver Mosier is numbered among the successful business men of Tulare county. He has been engaged in this line of work for about twenty years and has brought to bear the experience which the years have given him in his methods of today, and combined with ability and energy he has met with a success which places him among the first ranchmen of the county. He is now located upon a tract of four hundred and eighty acres, five miles south of Visalia, on the Santa Fe Railroad, where his specialties are hogs and cattle, which he sells in the local markets.

A native of Louisiana, Pike county, Mo., he was born January 25, 1851, a son of Henry Mosier, who was employed in a grist mill in that town, where his death eventually occurred. His wife, formerly Nancy Zumwalt, was a native of Missouri, in which state she died in 1862. Of her family of three sons and three daughters, one son and one daughter are now deceased. The oldest of this family, James Culver Mosier was reared in his native state, receiving a limited education in the common school in the vicinity of his home. At eleven years of age he was apprenticed to learn the trade of miller, working two years in Louisiana, after which he went to Alton, Ill., and engaged in the same occupation there for four years. Returning to his native town he spent the ensuing year, when he went to Deer Lodge, Mont., traveling by stage, as there were no railroads at that time. Upon locating in that state he at first followed the precarious life of a miner, continuing so occupied for two winters. Entering then upon the milling business he had charge of the first water-power mill in Deer Lodge. After some time he returned to Missouri and spent one year. In 1882 he came to California, locating at Grand Island, Colusa county, where he found employment on a ranch for two years. In Lassen county he had charge of a stock business for himself, remaining there for two years, when he went to Crook county, Ore., still engaged in the stock business. On a small scale he and a partner opened up a business in the same line, which increased to such proportions that in 1888 they sold out for $30,000. Returning east to his old home in Louisiana, Mo., he married, April 18, 1888, Mary Elizabeth Suda, a native of that place, and two months later brought her to California. They located on his present property, which consisted originally of three hundred and twenty acres which he had purchased just previous to returning east. This property he has cultivated and improved, adding to his original purchase until now he owns four hundred and eighty acres, upon which he engages in the raising of hogs, cattle and grain.

Mr. and Mrs. Mosier are the parents of one daughter, Katie Irene, who is at home. In his political affiliations Mr. Mosier is a Democrat, but has never desired official honors, as his life has been too full of personal duties.

LOUIS P. WERNER. The establishment of creameries and the development of dairy interests have rendered possible for the farmers of Stanislaus county the attainment of a success seldom witnessed in the early days of the county's history. Among the agriculturists who have been quick to avail themselves of this new avenue for their energetic efforts, mention should be made of Mr. Werner, who owns and manages a dairy farm four miles southwest of Newman. The original purchase made by him in this neighborhood comprised twelve acres, which he acquired by purchase in 1885, and later he bought an adjoining tract, so that at this writing he owns twenty-five acres under the canal. The land is in alfalfa, which he uses for feed for his dairy of sixteen cows. Since coming here he has made a specialty of dairying, disposing of the cream to the New Era Creamery, in which he is a stockholder.

Though of German parentage, Mr. Werner is a native of California. He was born in San Francisco July 20, 1855, and is a son of Christian and Gesina (Becker) Werner, natives respectively of Hesse-Darmstadt, and Oldenburg, Germany. His father learned the locksmith trade as an apprentice in his native land, and after crossing the ocean followed the barber's trade in New Orleans and other towns, at the same time having other interests that assisted him in earning a livelihood. In 1852 he left the south and by way of Panama came to San Francisco, where he opened a barber shop. While conducting that business he made investments in property, built business and residence structures, and by reason of advances in valuations of land became well-to-do. Though now seventy-five years of age (having been born in 1820) he still superintends his varied interests and manages his properties in San Francisco, where he makes his home. In religion both he and his wife are of the Lutheran faith.

In a family of eight children Louis P. Werner is the sole survivor. He was reared principally in San Francisco, where he attended a grammar school and Heald's Business College. For the purpose of gaining a German education his parents sent him to Hesse-Darmstadt in 1869, and for some time he had the advantage to study in Schmitz Institute at Darmstadt. Returning to San Francisco after two years abroad, he continued his business studies at Heald's Business College for a time. On taking up an occupation he entered the carpenter's trade, but soon abandoned it for real estate matters in company with his father. In 1885 he left his native city and removed to Stanislaus county, where he has by reason of energy, perseverance and good management worked his way to a position among the honored dairymen in his section. To such an extent has his attention been given to personal affairs that he has not had leisure to participate in local politics, and takes no part in the same aside from voting the Republican ticket. Under the careful training of his parents, in his boyhood he became a believer in the Lutheran Church, and this religion he now supports. While a resident of San Francisco he was united in marriage with Miss Louisa Kricke, a native of Germany. In their family are three daughters, namely: Ida, wife of Peter Hansen, of Merced county; Alice, wife of William Brough, manager of the skimming station of the New Era Creamery; and Mabel, who resides with her parents.

VICTOR R. NELSON. Among the self-made men of Tulare county, and the active, energetic, go-ahead business men of Visalia is Victor R. Nelson, widely and favorably known as manager of the Visalia Steam Laundry, and one of its stockholders. Like many of California's most prosperous citizens, he was born across the seas, his birth having occurred in Smoland, Kalmar Län, near Oscarshamn, Sweden, January 23, 1871. His father, Nels Nelson, was an extensive landholder, for many years owning and managing the farming estate "Granholt," a valuable and attractive place. Retiring from agricultural pursuits in 1901, he has since been engaged in the manufacture of lumber in a nearby city, being now a hale and hearty man of sixty-five years. He is a man of great integrity, and a member of the Mission Church. His wife, Hannah Nelson, died in 1883, leaving five sons and one daughter. The sons are all residents of California, namely: Charles, a farmer near Fresno; Oscar, engaged in agricultural pursuits near Visalia; Victor; Axel, a farmer, living in San Jose; and Herman, of San Jose, interested in the National Laundry of that city.

Brought up on the old home farm, "Granholt," Victor R. Nelson obtained a practical education in the public schools of his native town. Enterprising and venturesome, he immigrated to this country when but fifteen years old, and for a year worked on a farm in Allen county, Kans. In 1887 he came from there to Visalia, Cal., where he first found employment in a lumber camp. The ensuing five winters Mr. Nelson was engaged in buying and selling lumber, and also cutting and shipping wood, carrying on an extensive business, while during the summer seasons he was employed in logging. In 1867, when the unprecedented rush to the Klondike was at its height, he started for the distant gold fields, going to Dyea, thence over the Chilkoot Pass, being but one day behind those unfortunate ones caught at Sheep Camp in the great slide. Making his own boat, Mr. Nelson proceeded down the Yukon, at White Horse running both rapids, and nearly losing his cargo and his life. Arriving safely, however, in Dawson, he gave $1,500 for fifteen claims that proved worthless. The next two years Mr. Nelson engaged in mining, the last year running a mine as a working partner, and meeting with excellent pecuniary success.

In 1900 Mr. Nelson returned to Visalia, and in 1901 purchased an interest in the Visalia Steam Laundry, an incorporated company, and has since served as its manager. This is the only steam laundry in Tulare county, and is admirably equipped, being fitted with all the modern appliances and conveniences for operating it satisfactorily. He has built up a large and prosperous business, his patronage extending over a wide territory in either direction from its location, on Cottonwood street, near Main street.

Mr. Nelson married, in Fresno, Cal., Hannah Anderson, a native of Dolarne, Sweden, and they have one child, Edwin Nelson. Politically Mr. Nelson unhesitatingly supports the principles of the Republican party.

UPTON DANIEL SWITZER. Though interested in general farming of a diversified nature, Mr. Switzer has found one department of agriculture in which his success has been especially noteworthy and his reputation widespread. For years he has made a specialty of raising potatoes and plants from fifteen to thirty acres to this product. In an effort to introduce the very choicest varieties of potatoes he has paid as much as $1 per pound for seed and then, with a generosity characteristic of him in all transactions, after finding the variety to be adapted to the climate and soil, he has in turn sold seed to neighbors at the regular price. So well known are his potatoes that in the market they bring twenty-five cents per bushel more than those from other sources. Throughout his locality he is regarded as an authority on the subject, and those wishing to plant new varieties are accustomed to consult him before making any ventures with unknown varieties.

Mr. Switzer is a descendant of German ancestors. His father, J. J. Switzer, was born in old Virginia in 1800 and after removing to Linnville, Licking county, Ohio, followed the blacksmith's trade, also carried on a hotel. In 1859 he removed to Peoria county, Ill., and settled on a farm near Edwards, where he also followed blacksmithing. From there he went to Missouri in 1866 and settled four miles north of Brunswick, Chariton county, where he supplemented farming with work at the blacksmith's trade. At the age of eighty-four he died on his homestead in that county. During his active years he was a leading worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically gave his support to the Republican party after its organization. His wife, Mary Ellen Dawson, was a member of an old Maryland family, and was born in that state, thence removed to Ohio, and at the age of fifty-six years died in Missouri. Of her seven children all but one are still living and Upton Daniel is the youngest of the family. During the residence of his parents in Linnville, Licking county, Ohio, he was born June 25, 1856, and at three years of age accompanied the family to Missouri, where he received his education and early acquired a thorough knowledge of farming and blacksmithing.

The fact that a sister, Mrs. E. A. Laird, had taken up her residence in Visalia and wrote favorable impressions of the country to her eastern relatives, led Mr. Switzer to come to this place in 1877. For eight months he was employed in a dairy, after which he aided in the construction of a tramway and mill site on the Mineral King road, and in the fall of 1879 became an employe of L. Van Tassel, with whom he continued for three years. His next venture was the homesteading of one hundred and sixty acres of government land near Orosi, which property he utilized for grain-raising until he disposed of it in 1888. Thereupon he returned to the farm where he had been an employe in earlier days, the same being eighty acres of the old Frans homestead, and inherited by his wife from her father. The land is sub-irrigated from the St. John's river and can be flooded as occasion demands. A larger part of the property is under alfalfa, but, as already stated, a considerable acreage is devoted to potatoes and there is also a small orchard. On the place may be found a fine herd of dairy cows and good breeds of hogs. Besides taking the active management of the farm he has other interests, notably in irrigation matters, being vice president and superintendent of the Visalia and Kaweah Water Company, also president and superintendent of the Fleming Ditch Company.

On the old Frans homestead occurred the marriage of Mr. Switzer and Miss Sarah Elizabeth Frans, a native of Tulare county and a sister of Thomas H. Franz, in whose sketch the family history appears. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Switzer comprises the following children: Ada Lillian, Lelia Winnifred, Roy Daniel, John Earl, Thomas Wayne, Walter Alva and Carl Madison. Mrs. Switzer is a member of the Christian Church and a contributor to its maintenance. In political matters Mr. Switzer gives staunch allegiance to the Republican party, while fraternally he is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of the World. For more than ten years he has officiated as clerk of the Elbow school district and in that capacity has done much to promote the educational interests of this district.

JAMES H. FREW. While the period of Mr. Frew's identification with the people of Tulare county has been comparatively brief, by his successful prosecution of the creamery business he has been of great benefit to the dairymen of the county through the increase in the price of butter brought about under his energetic management. He came to this state from Iowa, where he was born near Lamotte, Jackson county, April 7, 1862, being a son of John and Eliza Ann (Gregg) Frew, natives respectively of Allegheny and Washington counties, Pa. The father, who was a son of James Frew, early acquired a thorough knowledge of agriculture, which he followed under pioneer conditions both in Iowa and Nebraska. On removing to Nebraska in 1869 he settled on a farm in Cass county, but later removed to the vicinity of York, Neb., where during his last years he lived in retirement from active cares. At the time of his death he was visiting relatives in Iowa. His wife is still living and makes her home with her children, of whom five out of the nine now survive. One of the sons, Will L., is principal of the public schools of Compton, Cal. The next to the youngest of the children was James H. Frew, who was a boy of seven years when the family settled on a tract of raw land in Nebraska. Though educational advantages were meagre, he eagerly availed himself of such as were offered, and for some terms was a student in York College.

On the completion of his collegiate course Mr. Frew took up the occupation of teaching school, and was engaged successively as principal of the Bradshaw, Benedict, Arborville and Arcadia schools, in York and Valley counties, Neb. After having taught for eleven years in all, he decided to enter another occupation and in 1900 established himself in Iowa, where he embarked in the dairy business at Shady Grove, Buchanan county. It was not long before he had an industry established upon a firm basis. With an ability that qualified him for thorough work in any line, he yet seemed especially qualified for the dairy business, and time has proved that he made no mistake in selecting it for his occupation. In many respects he felt dissatisfied with his location in Iowa and after a few years he determined to try his fortune in the far west. During 1903 he came to California and settled at Tulare, where he engaged in the creamery business with such success that after five months the farmers formed a co-operative company and bought him out. Soon afterward he resigned the management of that creamery and December 20, 1903, he started the Good Luck creamery, putting in a new plant operated by electricity and containing modern butter-making apparatus, with the aid of which fifteen hundred pounds of butter can be made in one day. Shipments are made to Pasadena and Long Beach, where the splendid quality of the butter brings for its maker the highest market prices. Indeed, as a rule his butter commands a higher price than that from other creameries, and it may be said that he originated high prices for butter fat in Tulare, his product bringing thirty-five cents per pound in January, 1904. Good Luck creamery butter is most aptly named, for it has brought the best of luck to its maker, and its buyers are always the creamery's solicitors.

In Buchanan county, Iowa, Mr. Frew married Miss Lydia A. Houck, who was born and reared there. They became the parents of three children, of whom two are living, Myron and Bula. The family are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church of Tulare and Mr. Frew is a regular contributor to its support. While a resident of Nebraska he was associated with the Royal Highlanders. In national politics he votes the Republican ticket, but in local affairs gives his support to the men whom he deems best qualified to promote the welfare of the people of the community. As a member of the Tulare Board of Trade, he is associated with an organization designed to advance the business interests of the city, and in its progressive enterprises he is always a staunch supporter.

WALTER LEE MUNCY. A prominent business man of Dinuba, Walter Lee Muncy is widely known and esteemed for the sterling traits of character which distinguish his citizenship. A native of California, he was born near Stockton June 1, 1863, the sixth in order of birth in a family of six sons and four daughters, all of whom are living. His father, J. S. Muncy, was born in East Tennessee of Virginian ancestors. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California, where he first engaged in mining, and afterward teamed to the southern mines from Stockton. Eventually locating on a farm in

John C. Middleton

San Joaquin county, he followed agricultural pursuits for a time, then purchased a farm of sixteen hundred acres in Stanislaus county, just south of Modesto, which he devoted to the raising of grain. He now makes his home in Modesto, retired from the active cares of life. In Tuolumne county, Cal., he was united in marriage with Juliette Squires, a native of St. Louis, Mo., who is still sharing with him the fruits of his years of industry and energy.

Reared to young manhood upon the paternal farm, Walter Lee Muncy attended the district school, while at the same time he received the practical training which has formed no unimportant part in his subsequent career. He remained at home until he was twenty-six years old, when he sought independent ventures, locating in 1890 in Dinuba (which then consisted of but eight houses and one store), and here established the first hardware store. He continued successfully in its management for two years, when he established a blacksmith business on Main street. This remained his chief interest until 1901, when he once more gave impetus to the business activity by establishing a plumbing and tinning business, now manufacturing everything in his line, such as tanks, towers, the Sampson windmill, gasoline engines, etc., as well as everything in a plumbing line. In December, 1902, he formed a partnership with Zenas E. Thorp, a practical plumber. Mr. Muncy has made a success of every enterprise undertaken and has proven himself an important factor in the upbuilding of the town.

Near Modesto Mr. Muncy was united in marriage with Lulu May, a native of that city, and they are the parents of two sons, Leonard Glenn and Irwin. Mr. Muncy is prominent in fraternal orders, being a member of the Odd Fellows' lodge of this place, of which he is past grand, having served two terms; Woodmen of the World, of which he was second-counselor commander, and both himself and wife are members of the Rebekahs and Women of Woodcraft. Politically he is a staunch Democrat.

JOHN CHANCEY MIDDLETON. Prominent among the most substantial and respected residents of Stanislaus county is John Chancey Middleton, a successful dairyman and stock-raiser, and an extensive landholder, residing about three miles southwest of Newman, although a large part of his real estate is within the limits of Merced county. A son of the late Robert S. Middleton, he was born May 20, 1861, at the foot of Pike's Peak, in Colorado.

A native of St. Louis, Mo., Robert S. Middleton was of Scotch-Irish descent, his grandfather Stinson, who emigrated to this country, settling first in Missouri and later in Illinois, having been born in Ireland of Scotch ancestors. Removing with his parents from St. Louis to Illinois, he was brought up in the Prairie State. Migrating to California in 1852, he intended to settle here as a miner, but being disappointed in the results of his labors with pickaxe and shovel, he returned to Illinois, settling in Hancock county, near Nauvoo, where he was employed in farming for a number of years. Coming again to the Pacific coast in 1872, he located in Santa Cruz county, where his family joined him in 1875. Coming to Stanislaus county three years later, he took up land on the western border, and was here employed in stock-raising until his death in 1892. He was an active and capable business man and a faithful supporter of the principles of the Democratic party. He married Emma Caroline Robison, who was born in Nauvoo, Ill., a daughter of James Robison, a farmer, who removed there from Pennsylvania. Eight children were born of their union, six of whom are living, namely: Mary S., wife of James Rogers, a dairyman in Merced county; James S., a hotel keeper in Fresno; John C., the special subject of this sketch; Mrs. Julia Dunningan of Cottonwood Grove; George C., a barber in Newman; and Mrs. Cibba A. Hill of Merced county, wife of a dairyman. The mother is still living, making her home with her son, John C.

Remaining in Illinois throughout his boyhood, John C. Middleton obtained a practical education in the district schools of Hancock county. Coming with his mother and the family to Santa Cruz in 1875, he worked for three years in the lumber camps and sawmills. In 1878 he removed to Stanislaus county, and was subsequently engaged in the cattle business with his father, and also raised stock to some extent on his own account. Renting a ranch below the ditch in 1900, Mr. Middleton embarked in the dairy business and has since been very successful. He is now located on the Creamery road, where he keeps a dairy consisting of forty Durham and Holstein cows, and runs his own separator, delivering the cream to the nearby creamery. He raises many Poland China hogs and is still engaged in the cattle business, his range being in the foothills. Mr. Middleton owns about one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of land on the Quinto, all of which is fenced, and has running water upon it, and is stocked with one hundred and fifty head of cattle. He likewise has thirty-three acres of land sowed with alfalfa near Dos Palos, Merced county.

In Merced Mr. Middleton married Elma E. Weaver, a native of Pennsylvania, where her father, William L. Weaver, was born and reared.

A carpenter by trade, Mr. Weaver came with his family to California in 1873, locating first in Stockton, but subsequently removing to Livingston, Merced county, where he followed farming for a few years. He is now a resident of Merced, where he is engaged in business as a dairyman and vineyardist. He married Annie Stoner, who was born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Christian Stoner, and they became the parents of nine children, all of whom are now living, Mrs. Middleton being the second child in order of birth. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Middleton two children have been born, but neither are living, both having died in childhood. Politically Mr. Middleton is identified with the Democratic party. Fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and to the Woodmen of the World, of which he is past consul commander. Both Mr. and Mrs. Middleton are members of the Degree of Honor, and of the Women of Woodcraft. Mrs. Middleton belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

AMAZIAH W. CLARK. As far back as the records of the Clark family can be traced its members were residents of New England, where they led quiet, industrious lives as tillers of the soil. Samuel Clark, who was a native of New Hampshire and a farmer in Maine, rendered his country faithful service as a soldier in the war of 1812. Lorenzo, a son of Samuel, was born in Maine and there passed his entire life, devoting himself to the cultivation of a farm near Albion, where he died. By his marriage to Hannah Mitchell, who was born at Freedom, Waldo county, and died at Albion, he had five children, of whom a son and daughter now survive. Two sons, Samuel and James, came to California in early manhood, gave their attention to agricultural pursuits, cultivated large tracts of land, and while still in middle age died near Hanford. The youngest of the family, A. W., was born at Albion, Me., April 8, 1859, and passed his early youth upon a New England farm, where a livelihood was earned only by the most arduous effort. Not wishing to settle permanently in a land where the climate and soil were so inhospitable, in November of 1875 he came to California whither his brothers had preceded him. Immediately after his arrival he began to work on the ranch of Dewey & Applegarth in Merced county. During 1878 he removed to the vicinity of Hanford and engaged in grain and stock-raising seven miles northeast of the town, forming a partnership with his brother, James, with whom he cultivated about six thousand acres. Included in their possessions was a section of land in Mussel Slough, purchased from the railroad and duly paid for, but on account of the land troubles that arose at a later date, paid for a second time. After the death of the older brother, James, the partnership was dissolved, A. W. Clark retaining the Tulare county property, and the heirs of James Clark the Kings county property. In the raising and threshing of grain they used from twelve to sixteen mule teams, and all their farm work was conducted upon an extensive scale.

Some years after coming west Mr. Clark was married in Fresno to Miss Marion Kennedy, who was born in Tulare county and died here January 10, 1901. In life she had been her husband's efficient helpmate and affectionate companion, and her death was the deepest sorrow of his life. For one term Mr. Clark officiated as a director of the Alta irrigation district, and in other movements of public benefit he has been equally interested and helpful. Politically he supports the Republican party. His farm interests are large. In addition to superintending his own estate, comprising sixteen hundred acres of choice land, he has charge of twenty-four hundred acres of land owned by his father-in-law, Robert Kennedy, the well-known and honored pioneer of the northern part of Tulare county. In the cultivating of the four thousand acres he employs about six eight-mule teams. One thousand acres of the tract are in alfalfa, a similar amount is in grain, and an equal acreage in summer fallow. The entire place is under irrigation and furnishes exceptional advantages for the raising of cattle and sheep, which are among his specialties, and there are perhaps no herds of Shorthorn Durhams in the entire county that present a finer appearance than those on his farm. When it is remembered that he came to the west a mere boy, without experience or means, the large property he now owns proves him to be a man of exceptional capabilities.

WALTER BILLINGSLEA. A prominent fruit grower, owning two vineyards and an orchard near Dinuba, Walter Billingslea has performed his full share in developing and promoting the horticultural interests of this part of Tulare county, and is widely known as one of the directors of the Alta Irrigation District. Liberal and public-spirited, he has always been the supporter and encourager of everything calculated to benefit the community, intellectually, socially and morally, and is greatly esteemed for his integrity and stability. The descendant of a Maryland family of prominence, he was born July 20, 1852, in Harford county, Md., near Belair, where his father, James Billingslea, was also born and bred.

Left fatherless when a young child, James Billingslea, or Billingsley, as he always spelled the surname, served an apprenticeship at the saddler and harnessmaker's trade, which he followed west of Belair until his early death, in 1852. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary J. Brian, was born in Baltimore county, Md. Her father, Joseph Brian, emigrated from Bordeaux, France, to America and settled in Baltimore. Mrs. Mary J. Billingslea survived her husband and died in Baltimore aged about seventy years. She bore her husband six children, five of whom are living. The oldest son, Thomas Billingslea, is a merchant in San Francisco.

Brought up on a farm in Harford county, Md., Walter Billingslea attended the district school when young, completing his studies by one term's attendance at the Presbyterian Academy near his home. In 1872 he began journeying westward, going as far as Butler county, Ohio, where for three years or more he followed the occupation to which he was reared, being engaged in farming near Hamilton. Migrating still farther westward in 1876, Mr. Billingslea was engaged in agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Atchison, Kans., for two years. Again taking up the line of march in 1878, he continued his journey to the coast, and for awhile was employed in grain raising at Wild Flower, Fresno county, Cal. He was subsequently similarly employed on land lying north of Selma for a few seasons, after which he was for two years engaged in horticultural pursuits in the Scandinavian Colony, Fresno county. Coming to Tulare county in 1890, Mr. Billingslea located near Dinuba, on his present home ranch. Buying first a grain field of thirty acres, he set out a vineyard and orchard, and in their care and management met with such satisfactory results that he bought thirty acres of adjoining land, and enlarged his operations, having now a magnificent vineyard of forty acres, in which he raises grapes of different kinds, including Muscat, Sultanas and Malaga, and a small orchard, the remainder of his ranch being alfalfa land. As a vineyardist and orchardist he is considered an expert, his crops being fine in quantity and quality, and yielding him a handsome annual income. He is intimately acquainted with fruit culture in its various phases, and for six years was raisin inspector at this point for the California Raisin Growers' Association.

In Fresno county, Mr. Billingslea married Nancy Isabelle Miller, who was born in Missouri, and came with her parents to California when six years old. She died in March, 1898, leaving two children, James William, and Ina Lee. Mrs. Billingslea was a woman of superior character, estimable and amiable, and a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Billingslea is one of the leading Democrats of the county, active in his party, being an influential member of the Democratic county central committee, and having served as a delegate to the state convention held at Santa Cruz. Fraternally he belongs to the Woodmen of the World. For about ten years he was a member and the clerk of the District School Board, and was also a member of the Dinuba Union High School Board. In February, 1899, he was elected a director of the Alta Irrigation District for a term of four years, and in February, 1903, was re-elected for another term of equal length.

FRANK ALBERT GOBIN. The thriving city of Tulare has a full quota of live, energetic and progressive business men, prominent among whom is Frank Albert Gobin, who, as a buyer and shipper of green and dried fruits of all kinds, is carrying on a large and substantial trade. A man of ability, tact and keen foresight, he is intimately associated with the industrial and commercial prosperity of Tulare county, and in the advancement of its welfare lends material assistance. A native of Indiana, and the descendant of a pioneer family of influence, he was born June 17, 1868, in Carlisle, Sullivan county, which was also the birthplace of both his father, John Lindsay Gobin, and of his grandfather, James Gobin. The latter, a farmer by occupation, served in the Civil war, belonging to an Indiana regiment.

After leaving the ancestral farm, John Lindsay Gobin engaged in mercantile pursuits, and for many years was one of the leading druggists of Carlisle, Ind. By good management and wise judgment he accumulated considerable property, and is now living in that city, retired from the activities of business. He married Margaret Hall, who was born in Carlisle, Ind., the daughter of Thomas Hall, a pioneer farmer of that place, who is now living at Hall's Corner, Erie county, N. Y., enjoying the large wealth which he has accumulated by means of industry and thrift. Of the six children born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gobin, four are living, namely: R. D., of Fort Scott, Kans., a railroad man; James M., of Fresno, Cal.; Pauline I., wife of Dr. J. R. Whalen of Carlisle, Ind.; and Frank Albert. The mother passed to the higher life in 1874.

Frank A. Gobin was brought up and educated in Carlisle, Ind. After his graduation from the high school he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for a few years in his native state. With a desire to broaden his field of action, he came to the Pacific coast in 1891, and for a year resided in Los Angeles. Taking unto himself a wife in 1892, Mr. Gobin settled in Tulare, and at once embarked in the fruit business. He buys green and dried fruits of every variety, and these he sells at local points and ships to New York City, where he has established a market. He also carries on an excellent business as a commission merchant, and is agent for the California Wine Association, for which he buys the grapes. In 1902 Mr. Gobin shipped from Tulare forty-four hundred tons of wine grapes, an immense quantity to send from one place. He also represents, in the trade of green fruits, Simpson Hack of Los Angeles.

February 6, 1892, in Pasadena, Cal., Mr. Gobin married Hattie Carpenter, who was born in Petaluma. Her father, William Carpenter, was a wheelwright and a pioneer settler of Tulare. Mr. and Mrs. Gobin have one child, Ramona Tressa. Politically Mr. Gobin is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he has served three terms as chief ranger of Court Mount Whitney No. 211, F. of A., and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, of which he is one of the board of managers.

BENJAMIN SNOW. A skillful and thorough-going farmer and dairyman, Benjamin Snow, residing three miles south of Dinuba, is actively identified with the advancement and development of the agricultural prosperity of this section of Tulare county, and holds high rank among the prosperous and substantial citizens of his neighborhood. A son of Edmund Snow, he was born, November 13, 1847, in Scotland county, Mo., where he lived until after his marriage. A native of North Carolina, Edmund Snow was there reared and educated. Subsequently following the tide of emigration across the Alleghenies, he came as far westward as Missouri, bringing with him his little family. He located first in Howard county, but soon removed to Scotland county, where he was engaged in tilling the soil until his death, in 1871, at the age of sixty-seven years. His wife, whose maiden name was Hannah Riggs, was born in North Carolina, and died in Missouri, in 1886, aged seventy-five years. Of the eight sons and three daughters born of their marriage, three sons and three daughters survive, the oldest daughter, Mrs. Louisa Wylie, residing in Nevada county, Cal.

Brought up on the home farm, near Memphis, Mo., Benjamin Snow acquired his rudimentary education in the district school, and under his father's tuition early became familiar with the science and art of agriculture as then and there practiced. He subsequently engaged in farming on his own account, having eighty acres of land. In 1881, three years after his marriage, Mr. Snow disposed of his interests in that locality, and came with his family to the sunny state of California, locating on his present farm on July 5 of that year. Buying out a homesteader, he proved up his claim, and embarked in grain raising, in which he was quite successful. He continually added to the improvements on his estate, in 1889 getting the first ditch put through his land and that in the vicinity. That very season Mr. Snow put in his first crop of alfalfa, sowing eighteen acres, and since then he has levelled and checked ninety acres for alfalfa. In his home ranch Mr. Snow has one hundred and twenty acres, five acres of which is planted to fruit trees and vines, the remainder being alfalfa land, on forty-five acres of which he raises excellent crops by sub-irrigation only. In addition to general farming he carries on a profitable stock and dairy business, keeping about one hundred and eighty head of cattle, and a good herd of graded cows.

In 1878, in Missouri, Mr. Snow married Mary A. Hicks, who was born in that state, a daughter of William Hicks. Mr. Hicks, a native of Tennessee, settled in Missouri when a young man, and from there, in 1881, came to Hanford, Cal., where he resided until his death, in 1885. Into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Snow nine children have been born, five of whom are living, namely: Nannie, John H., Minnie, Lillie and Bryan. A man of strong convictions, Mr. Snow has taken an active part in the Democratic politics of the town and county, and is a member of its county central committee, and one of its executive board. Mrs. Snow is a valued member of the Baptist Church.

SAMUEL MORTON BRISCOE. Born in Missouri, where he was reared chiefly, for years a resident of Texas, Colorado and New Mexico, it is but fitting that Samuel Morton Briscoe, in his search for the best, should at last reach the goal of his ambitions by turning to Fresno county, Cal. In 1889 Mr. Briscoe moved to this county, and in 1899 purchased eighty acres one and a half miles west of Fresno, on California avenue, extending back to Kearney avenue, and here he engaged in raising the muscat or raisin grape. His place now contains many fine improvements, and fifty acres are devoted to the culture of this grape alone.

In reviewing the history of the Briscoe family, it will be found that many of its members were noted for their fighting proclivities and for their longevity. The grandfather, Walter Briscoe, was a native of the Keystone State, which he left for a home in Kentucky at an early date in the history of that section, when the country was unsettled. A farmer by occupation, he rendered valiant service to the country by participating in all of the early Indian wars throughout that state. In 1832 he removed with his family to Missouri, locating in Lewis county, where he died in 1855, aged about ninety-two years. Merritt Craig Briscoe, the father of S. M. Briscoe, was born at Elizabethtown, Ky., April 25, 1818. In his youth he accompanied his parents to Missouri, and for many years thereafter his life history is closely interwoven with the history of Lewis and Marion counties of that state, his early manhood having been spent in the former county. He was joined in marriage with Alzada Morton, a native of Owensboro, Ky., and a daughter of Samuel Morton, also a Kentuckian. In 1831 Mr. Morton moved to Missouri, locating in Marion county, and at Palmyra, the county-seat, he engaged in a general merchandise business, and for years was among the most successful merchants of that place. He was an old line Whig in his political views, and like the majority of the early settlers, he took an active part in the Indian disturbances. Mrs. Briscoe still survives her husband, and although she was born May 10, 1823, she is still hale and hearty and resides with her son, S. M., near Fresno. Mr. and Mrs. Briscoe were blessed with four children, only one of whom is now living, and he was the eldest child of the family.

Samuel Morton Briscoe was born April 5, 1840, at Palmyra, Marion county, Mo., and it was in that state that his boyhood days were spent. During the gold fever of 1849, his father left the family in Missouri and crossed the plains, being en route from March 31 to August. Arriving safely in California, he followed mining near Red Bluffs for a few months, but subsequently engaged in freighting between Sacramento and the mining camps, following this somewhat hazardous occupation until 1851, when he returned home by way of the Isthmus. During the same year he moved his family to Lewis county and remained at home occupied in farm pursuits until 1854, when he again came to California with a herd of cattle, accompanied by his son, S. M., who was then but fifteen years old. From this time on the lives of father and son were closely interwoven.

Arriving in Sacramento, August 10, 1854, together the father and son engaged in the butcher business at Colusa, in Colusa county, soon after their arrival. The following year the son returned home, but the father continued in this business until 1856, when he, too, returned to Missouri. Farm pursuits occupied the attention of both in Lewis county for several years thereafter, and their next location was Dallas, Tex. In 1861 the father entered the Confederate army under General McCullough, and served as a private for three years, mostly in the Western Army Corps. The son also enlisted the same year, and for four years served as a private messenger for Gen. Kirby Smith between Dallas and New Orleans. He served throughout the war, being mustered out of service in 1865, when he returned to Dallas.

After the close of the war, in 1866, the family returned to Lewis county, Mo., and there both father and son carried on farm pursuits until 1873. At that time the son moved to Colorado Springs, Colo., where he followed both dairy farming and mining, and the next year he was joined by his parents. This continued to be their home until 1887, when a new location was sought, this time at Las Vegas, N. Mex., where dairy farming occupied their attention for a couple of years. It was not until 1889 that the family went to California to reside, and for several years thereafter they lived in Madera county, but in 1893 took up their abode in Fresno county. January 28, 1898, the father passed away, lacking but three months of being eighty years old.

The marriage of Mr. Briscoe in Marion county, Mo., April 26, 1859, united him with Elizabeth Fisher, who was born near Palmyra, Mo., April 27, 1849. Four children blessed this union—Zada Belle, Florence, Merritt C. (deceased), and Thomas M. Zada Belle married Isaac Erickson, who died in 1902. Florence married M. D. Young and resides in St. Joseph, Mo.; and Thomas M. is still at home. Politically Mr. Briscoe is an adherent of the Democratic party, but is not an office-seeker, nor can he be termed an active politician.

ROYAL R. FOWLER. A native son of the state and a prominent rancher of Merced county, Royal R. Fowler was born in San Joaquin county March 12, 1861. His father, Joseph M. Fowler, was a native of Massachusetts, born near Westfield on a farm, where he was reared to manhood. Upon leaving the paternal home he went to Northampton, where he joined the soldiers, thence to New York. In 1849 he went with the company intending to go to the southwest to enlist in the Mexican war, but as the war ended in that year they decided to come on to California. Leaving New York City they took passage on a steamer bound for Mexico, and crossing to the Pacific they completed their voyage and safely reached San Francisco. Mr. Fowler went at once to the mines at Horseshoe Bend and for the ensuing seven years followed the life of a miner in northern California. Needless to say his success justified a continuance in the work, and during this time he made several trips back to his eastern home. Upon deciding to take up other work he came south to San Joaquin county and in company with his brother, William P. Fowler, bought six hundred and forty acres of land, which was devoted to general ranching and stock-raising. He remained so engaged until his death in 1896, at the age of seventy-two years. His wife, formerly Eliza Bromley, of Massachusetts, still survives him, and has six living children.

Reared upon his father's ranch in San Joaquin county, Royal R. Fowler remained at home until attaining manhood, when he came to Merced county, and locating near Atwater raised wheat for a short time. In 1886 he located upon his present property, which consists of fourteen hundred and forty acres of fine farming land five and a half miles east of Merced. This property is given over entirely to the cultivation of wheat and barley, while in addition to this he rents a thousand acres. Upon his own property he has erected a beautiful two-story frame house, consisting of nine rooms, finished in a modern and approved style, and provided with a telephone. In addition to his ranching interests Mr. Fowler is proprietor of the Cerealis Warehouse at Turner Station, which adjoins his ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Fowler occurred in 1885 and united him with Miss Mary McCutley, a native of Tiffin, Ohio. In his political convictions Mr. Fowler is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of Foresters and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

HON. R. LINDER. The advancement of the San Joaquin valley and the upbuilding of the city of Tulare have had a progressive promoter in ex-Senator Linder, whose name is synonymous with many of the influences and movements tending to the development of local industries. Viewing the growth of Tulare he might truthfully say: "All of which I saw and part of which I was." The credit for the beautifying of the city belongs largely to him. In the heart of the town he laid out and since has kept up two small parks. In one of these he built a thatched pavilion where during the summer entertainments and Sunday religious services are held and band concerts are given. The other park is stocked with deer and elk and contains an aviary with an interesting collection of fine birds. All of this work he has accomplished individually without financial aid from others. Nor does this represent the limit of his work toward the permanent prosperity of Tulare. The business block which he erected in 1902 on the corner of K and Kern streets is commodious, well-appointed and conveniently arranged, and adds much to the appearance of the business section of the place, besides providing adequate facilities for the stock carried by the Linder Hardware Company, of which he is president.

Of German birth and ancestry, Mr. Linder is the only representative of his father's family in the United States. He was born at Solingen, near Dusseldorf, Rhenish Prussia, April 25, 1854, and is a son of August Linder, a hardware merchant. After completing his gymnasium studies, at seventeen years of age he came to the United States and settled in San Francisco, where he secured employment with Treadwell & Co., wholesale hardware merchants, on Market and Fremont streets. After thirteen years with this house he became connected with D. M. Osborne & Co., dealers in agricultural implements, with whom he remained for four years. Meanwhile, in 1886, he purchased an interest in an agricultural implement business at Tulare, whither he moved in 1888, at the same time starting the firm of Linder & Grace. In 1900 the Linder Hardware Company was incorporated with himself as president, and soon after the incorporation a general stock of hardware was added. The Linder block, 75 x 150 feet, and two stories high, was erected in 1902, and afforded the company facilities for a grocery department, which is now one of the principal features of the business. Besides groceries the firm carries in stock stoves, cutlery, glassware, tin and agate ware, paints, oils, varnishes, iron, steel and pipe, sporting goods, wagons, carriages, buggies and agricultural implements.

Notwithstanding the pressure of business responsibilities Mr. Linder has contributed largely to the movements for the benefit of his town and county and has been especially prominent in irrigation matters. Individually he built for the Tulare irrigation district one hundred and twenty-five miles of canals and ditches from the Kaweah and St. Johns rivers, thus bringing under irrigation more than twenty-five thousand acres in the immediate vicinity of Tulare. While living in San Francisco he married Miss Addie L. Palmer, who was born in that city, her father, Samuel Palmer, having been an early settler there. They are the parents of three children, George, Gracie and Edyth, all at home, the son being engaged as secretary of the Linder Hardware Company.

As a member of the Tulare Board of Trade and the executive committee thereof, Mr. Linder has been identified with an organization whose aim is the advancement of the commercial prosperity of the town and surrounding country. Fraternally he is associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Fresno. Ever since becoming a voter he has supported Republican principles. In recognition of his able and faithful services for the party, in 1894 the Republican senatorial convention placed his name in nomination for the office of state senator. His popularity is proved by the fact that he was elected, in a Democratic district, by a majority of about two hundred. While serving in the sessions of 1895 and 1897 he acted as chairman of the irrigation committee and the committee on county and county boundaries, in both of which responsible positions he gained the esteem of co-workers and a reputation for ability and fine character. In the contest for the United States senatorship he gave his support to Senator Perkins, both for the short term and the long term. On his retirement from office he resumed business affairs. Both in official positions and commercial pursuits his reputation is that of a man of brilliant attainments, shrewd foresight, keen discrimination, a man who seldom makes mistakes, yet, having made them, is quick to make amends. It is to such citizens as he that Tulare county and the San Joaquin valley owe their increasing importance and growing prestige as profitable places for investment. Whatever of prosperity they may attain in the future and whatever of prominence is their good fortune to enjoy, due credit should be given to the philanthropic work and public-spirited efforts of ex-Senator Linder.

PETER JORGENSEN. Holding a good position among the prosperous agriculturists and respected citizens of Merced county is Peter Jorgensen, whose ranch is advantageously situated about four miles north of Volta. Since assuming its possession he has labored industriously, improving and beautifying the property by the erection of buildings, and the setting out of shade, ornamental and fruit trees. A native of Denmark, he was born on the Island of Fyen, near Faaborg, December 20, 1835. His father, Hans Jorgensen, a life-long resident of Fyen, was a farmer by occupation, and died in January, 1836, while in the prime of life. His wife, Margaret Jorgensen, died in Fyen, on the old homestead.

The youngest child in a family of nine children, Peter Jorgensen obtained a practical common school education in his native town, and during his youthful days was well drilled in the various branches of agriculture as pursued in his Danish home. Entering the Fifth Battalion, Danish Infantry, in 1864, he served in the Schleswig-Holstein war, taking part in many important engagements. Returning home at the close of the conflict, Mr. Jorgensen was foreman on a large farm for two or three years. Immigrating to America in 1868, he came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California, and subsequently made a trip to British Columbia, where he was engaged in mining for six months. Not satisfied with the results of his labor at the mines he came back to California, and in San Francisco for a while followed the carpenter's trade, with which he had become familiar in his native country. Going thence to Inyo county, Cal., he continued there as a miner three years, and the following year worked at his trade in San Francisco.

In 1879, desirous of resuming the free and independent occupation to which he was brought up, Mr. Jorgensen came to the San Joaquin valley, locating at Hills Ferry, where for seven years he worked for J. L. Crittenden, being foreman of his large ranch, which was devoted to the raising of alfalfa and grain. Removing then to the east side of the valley, he took charge of the Stephenson ranch as foreman, remaining thus employed two years. With wise foresight and enterprise, Mr. Jorgensen had previously, in 1884, purchased his present ranch of one hundred and twenty acres, four miles north of Volta, and in 1891 he located on it, and has since been actively engaged in its care and management, adding from year to year to its improvements and value. He has erected buildings, bored an artesian well, and irrigated the land, and has forty acres of his ranch planted to alfalfa. Although he is a general farmer, he makes a specialty of raising beef cattle, in which he is very successful, his favorite breed being the Durham.

In his political affiliation Mr. Jorgensen is a true blue Republican, and though not an aspirant for official favors has served for the past ten years as school trustee in the Ingomar district. Fraternally he is past grand of Newman Lodge, I. O. O. F., and also a member of the Grand Lodge. He was brought up a Lutheran, but in his religious views is broad and liberal, following as far as possible in his every-day life the Golden Rule.

FRANK H. STILES. Upon the foundation laid by the brave and resolute pioneers of the west their sons have builded wisely and well, and it may be said with justice that the development of the present era is due not less to the enterprise of the second generation than to the courageous spirit of their predecessors. Representative of the keen and capable young farmers of the twentieth century is Frank H. Stiles, while his father, Pascal P., furnishes a typical example of the pioneer who followed the overland trail amid dangers from Indians and innumerable perils seen and unseen. Father and son now reside a few miles from Tulare, the son energetically cultivating a farm and developing an orchard and vineyard, the father somewhat retired from active labors that once engrossed his attention and crowded his days.

From Vermont, where he was born in 1826, P. P. Stiles early followed the drift of emigration toward the Mississippi valley, and in search of a satisfactory location he experimented with farming in Illinois and Minnesota, then returned to Illinois, and in 1863 came with wagon and horses, in company with a large train, across the plains to California, settling near Stockton in the San Joaquin valley. Later he removed to Paradise, Stanislaus county, and about 1889 bought farm land in what is now Kings county, near Lemoore, but in 1892 came to his present location near Tulare. By his marriage to Caroline Brown, a native of New York state, he had five children, of whom three survive, namely: Catherine, wife of Thomas J. Mull, who occupies a farm adjoining the Stiles homestead; Myra, wife of Dr. A. M. Field; and Frank H., who was born at old Paradise, Stanislaus county, December 28, 1874, and passed his boyhood days mainly in the San Joaquin valley. Primarily educated in district schools, he later attended the schools of Modesto and Lemoore, and since leaving school has engaged in farm work. When he came to Tulare county in 1892 he set about the task of improving the home farm of eighty acres, then a raw wheat field. The irrigation facilities from the Tulare ditch were inadequate to his needs and prevented him from making the improvements necessary to the highest development of the land. In order to secure an abundance of water, he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Thomas J. Mull, in the establishment of a private irrigating plant, the same consisting of a well four hundred and thirty feet deep, from which water can be secured night and day by means of a pump operated by an electric motor. In connection with the plant is a reservoir covering one-half acre. The Mull and Stiles farms are irrigated from this plant and in addition the flow of water is sufficient to furnish irrigation facilities for a few neighbors. Since securing the needed supply of water Mr. Stiles has found no obstacle to the development of his land, and now has forty acres under alfalfa, which enables him to carry on a dairy business; seventeen acres in an orchard of peaches and plums; and seventeen acres in a vineyard of the choicest varieties of grapes, his specialties being the muscat and Thompson seedless.

The wife of Mr. Stiles was Eleanor Besse, a native of South Dakota, but a resident of Tulare for some time prior to their marriage. Both are active members of the First Baptist Church of Tulare and Mr. Stiles holds the office of treasurer of the congregation. Politically he votes the Republican ticket in national issues, but in local matters maintains an independent spirit, supporting the men whom he considers best qualified to serve the people, irrespective of their views concerning governmental problems. The only organization of a fraternal nature to which he has given his active support is the Patrons of Husbandry No. 198, of Tulare, and of it he was master from 1900 to January, 1905, devoting meanwhile considerable thought and time to the promotion of its interests and the enlarging of its avenues of usefulness.

ORIGEN ABBEY WILCOX. A pioneer of the early days, Origen Abbey Wilcox recalls the foundation of the statehood of California and the years of effort and energy which have transformed the wilderness of the San Joaquin valley into its present prosperous condition. He is located on a ranch of seven hundred and eighty acres within the vicinity of Portersville, Tulare county, a portion of which he homesteaded and pre-empted, the balance he bought. A native of Erie county, N. Y., he was born December 1, 1840, a son of John Wilcox, who was born in Cattaraugus county, same state. His grandfather, Jerry Wilcox, was a native of Vermont and a patriot in the Revolutionary war, in an early day locating in the state of New York. John Wilcox came to California in 1850, crossing the plains after wintering at Council Bluffs. The train in which he traveled had considerable trouble with the Indians, he and his brother, Alfred, being taken prisoner by the Sioux. They were bound and lying on a rock ready for the torture of burning, when Mr. Wilcox made the Masonic sign. They were immediately liberated and permitted to join their friends. Arriving in California in 1852 he located at Fiddler's Green, afterward called Hangtown until it came to be known by the name of Placerville. He engaged in mining until 1854, when he went to Los Angeles and followed the stock business for two years. In 1856 he came to the place now occupied by his son, seven miles east of Portersville, where he remained for two years, then returned to the middle west and followed saw milling and stock-raising in Taylors Falls, Minn. His death occurred in that locality in 1862. His wife, formerly Fannie Manters, was a native of the Mohawk valley, and her death occurred in Erie county, N. Y. They had two children, the oldest, a daughter, being deceased.

W. J. Dechman

Origen Abbey Wilcox was reared to boyhood in his native place, receiving a very limited education through an attendance of the common schools up to the age of eight years. In 1854 he shipped from New Bedford on a whaling cruise, being absent from home for three years. The ship was wrecked on its way to the north seas, and afterward its course was changed to the south coast of Africa, in the vicinity of Cape Town. In six months the vessel was filled with oil and whale bone, after which they returned to New York. Mr. Wilcox then returned home, having run away to make his first business venture in the world. He worked on a farm until he had saved $160, when he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama. He located with his father on his present place, homesteaded and pre-empted another tract, until at the present time he owns seven hundred and eighty acres of land, given over to general farming and stock-raising, the latter occupation claiming the greater part of his time and attention. For one year after arriving in California Mr. Wilcox owned and drove the stage from Visalia to Quartzburg, when he sold out and devoted his entire time to farming and stock-raising.

In 1868, while on a trip to New York, Mr. Wilcox married Clara J. Emerson, a native of New York state, and a daughter of William Lewis and Maria (Chase) Emerson, who were natives of Massachusetts, but who were reared in Vermont. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox: Mamie J., the wife of James Putnam, of Portersville; John A.; Fred E., of Portersville; Harry, also of Portersville; Alice; Guy F.; and Grace E., the last three and the second being still members of their parents' home. Politically Mr. Wilcox is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the Republican party, and has served in its interests as constable for two terms, and has been school director for many years.

WILLIAM JAMES DECHMAN. Closely allied with the history and growth of Dinuba during the last decade or more is the name of William James Dechman, cashier and treasurer of the Bank of Dinuba, also a member of the board of directors of this substantial institution. Since coming to this place he has built up an attractive suburban homestead, situated one and one-fourth miles south of Dinuba, where he has a commodious two-story residence, surrounded by a vineyard of thirty-five acres and a large orchard, the entire place, covering two small ranches, embracing forty-eight acres of valuable land. In selecting this community for his home he chose a climate radically different from the bleak and stormy land of Nova Scotia, whence he came. Born near Halifax, November 6, 1864, he was a son of John and Margaret (Logan) Dechman, and a grandson of John Dechman and Robert Logan, all of whom were natives of Nova Scotia. The ancestry of the Dechman family is traced to Germany, while the Logans originally came from Scotland. During all of his active life John Dechman has engaged in farm pursuits near Halifax and he still makes that place his home; his wife died in May, 1904, and of their six children William James, the third in order of birth, is the only one to settle on the coast. Until nineteen years of age he remained on the home farm, attending school as opportunity offered. On leaving home he went to Boston and in that vicinity secured work on a farm.

After six months spent in Minneapolis, in 1886 William James Dechman came to California and secured employment on a fruit ranch near Santa Clara, where he remained less than one year. In January, 1887, he took up telegraphy with the Southern Pacific Railroad at Santa Clara, and later was appointed assistant agent and operator at Newhall, afterward serving in a similar capacity at Madera and other places as vacancies occurred. In 1888 he was transferred to the Tucson division of the Southern Pacific Railroad and became station agent at Pantano, Pima county, Ariz., where he remained for five years, and then returned to California as operator at Lathrop, San Joaquin county. After seven months at the latter place, August 10, 1893, he became station agent for the Southern Pacific at Dinuba, and that position he continued to fill until October 25, 1902, when he resigned to accept the post of cashier in the Bank of Dinuba, a flourishing concern that had been organized in the preceding February as a state institution. As a financier he has the reputation of being progressive yet conservative, keen yet tactful and accommodating yet ever regardful of the bank's interests. He is a member of the State and American Bankers' Associations and maintains a deep interest in the world of finance and investment. Besides his other work he finds time to discharge the duties of his position as treasurer of the Alta irrigation district. Though not active in politics, he is a pronounced Republican. In religion he is of the Presbyterian faith and officiates as a trustee in the Dinuba Church. While employed in Arizona he met and married Miss Jennie Carnichael, of Tucson, a native of Bob-abeck, New Brunswick, and of this union there is a son, Charles Stanley. Fraternal he has been associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at Fresno, while after coming to Dinuba he was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he is past grand. Though business matters have engrossed his attention, he has displayed a keen interest in fruit-growing and has maintained his orchard and vineyard under the highest state of improvement, also has taken a warm interest in the work of the Raisin Growers' Association as well as in other movements for the promoting of the valuable fruit interests of this locality.

THOMAS HOUSE. An old-time agriculturist of large experience, and a successful stock-raiser of early days, Thomas House, now living with his daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. John Fox, near Dinuba, is numbered among the venerable residents of that community, and by its people is held in that reverence and respect tacitly accorded to those whose lives have been distinguished by integrity and usefulness. A man of strong personality, upright and strictly honest in all of his dealings, he is a worthy representative of the pioneer element which laid the foundations for the present and future prosperity of our great and undivided country, rendering it one of the recognized powers of the world. Born and bred in Illinois, through the days of his boyhood and youth he suffered all the privations and hardships of life in a new and uncivilized country. Migrating to Missouri, then the extreme western frontier, in November, 1830, he rendered efficient service in transforming the primeval forest into tillable land, while during the Civil war he served with distinction, offering his life if need be for his country. During the quarter of a century that he has resided in California he has been an important factor in advancing its farming interests, and in the march of progress, wherever he has lived has kept in the front rank. No more pleasant hour can be passed than in listening to the reminiscences of Mr. House, who has witnessed the wonderful changes that in the last half century have been wrought in all lines of industry and science, bringing the Atlantic and Pacific shores into close contact, and placing both in touch with all parts of the earth. Within his remembrance the rude trails and foot-paths have developed into broad, well-traveled thoroughfares; dense forests and waste prairies and deserts have blossomed into large, well-tilled fields of hay and grain; modern machinery has replaced the rude implements formerly used on the farm and in the house, the combined harvester taking the place of the sickle and cradle, and the immense cotton and woolen factories rendering useless the old spinning wheel and hand loom. From the home-made candle dip to the evolution of the electric light plant has been but a few short steps, while our superior system of railway communication, our telegraph, telephone and postal facilities have added an important impetus to the growth, population, wealth and intelligence of the country, and given us close connection with the entire nation. Of pioneer ancestry, Mr. House was born, February 2, 1823, in Edgar county, Ill., a son of John House. His grandfather, John Joseph Anderson House, a Virginian by birth, served in the Revolutionary war, after which he settled in Ohio, where he cleared and improved a farm, on which he resided until his death.

Born on the Ohio homestead, John House spent his earlier years in his native state. In 1819 he removed to Edgar county, Ill., locating eight miles from Paris. Engaging in river pursuits, he did a good deal of trading in New Orleans, taking produce down the Mississippi in flat boats. On one occasion the children remember that he brought back calico enough to make his wife a dress, paying six bits, or seventy-five cents, per yard for it, that being the first piece of calico the family had ever seen. On one of his trips, he died of cholera in New Orleans. He married Margaret Foster, who was born in Kentucky, a daughter of Thomas Foster. Mr. Foster was born of Scotch-Irish ancestors, in Pennsylvania. He settled first in Kentucky, from there removing, in 1819, to Edgar county, Ill., becoming a pioneer farmer of that place. He served in the war of 1812. In 1836 he migrated with his family to Missouri, and there spent his remaining years. His wife, whose maiden name was Catherine Harbaugh, was of German descent. After Mr. Foster's death, Mrs. Foster returned to Illinois, where she subsequently passed the remainder of her life. Mrs. House survived her husband, and married in due course of time Thomas Martin, of Indiana, with whom, in 1839, she removed to Missouri, where both resided until their deaths, hers occurring when she was seventy-eight years of age. Eight children, all boys, blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. John House, and of them we make the following mention: Thomas, the subject of this sketch; Joseph Anderson, a soldier in the Mexican war, died in Gilroy, Cal.; Samuel, who lost his health while in the Mexican war, died soon after its close in Edgar county, Ill.; Ezekiel is a farmer near Gilroy, Cal.; John, who served in a Missouri regiment in the Union Army during the Civil war, died in Texas; Francis Marion, now operating a small ranch near Traver, Cal., rendered the Union brave service during the Civil war as a member of the Twelfth Missouri Cavalry, in which he enlisted in spite of a lameness caused by hip disease that was brought on from abuse by the people to whom he was bound out after his father's death; Emanuel died near Gilroy, Cal.; and Arthur died in Ray county, Mo., in 1866. Arthur, the youngest son, served in the Union Army during the Civil war, belonging to the Eighth Kansas Volunteer Infantry. On one occasion, while he and a comrade, George Metcalf, were home on a furlough, the rebels hounded them, and finally sent for them to come out of the house. The two brave boys came out back to back, and as soon as they appeared the rebels began firing, Metcalf returning the first shot. The horses becoming frightened, turned about, thus giving Arthur House an opportunity to take better aim at his assailant, whom he killed. George Metcalf put nine buckshot into one of the rebel's shoulders. The boys fought their way through the rebel line, and in their stocking feet, reached a camp of state militia. Soon afterward the militia was attacked by Bill Anderson and his followers near Richmond, Mo., and these boys were in the thickest of the fight. Arthur was lying upon the ground when he saw Bill Anderson aim at Metcalf. Seizing his musket, Arthur House fired, and Bill Anderson, who at the time had the scalps of seventeen white men on his bridle, fell from his horse dead. Arthur never told this tale until lying on his death-bed, fearing that his mother and sister might be made to suffer for the act.

When a boy Thomas House obtained his first knowledge of the three "R's" in the rude log schoolhouse, with its dirt floor and slab benches, but acquired the greater part of his education after his marriage by reading. In November, 1839, he went with the family to Ray county, Mo., moving across the country with teams. He subsequently worked for two years at the blacksmith's trade, after which he located in Carroll county, near Norborne, where he carried on farming for many years. Possessing great physical strength and endurance, Mr. House did many a hard day's work. On the day that Lincoln was inaugurated he broke four hundred pounds of hemp, which was four times the amount expected of a slave, and he at one time maulled and split four hundred and thirty-five ten-foot rails in one day. In those pioneer times produce of all kinds was very cheap. In 1842 and 1843 bacon was hauled to the Missouri river and sold for one and one-fourth cents per pound; it took six bushels of corn to buy a yard of calico; forty bushels of wheat to purchase a pair of boots; while sheep sold for $1.50 a dozen. Each merchant in those days had a list of all the banks, and the value of wild cat money was kept. This bank list was reviewed from time to time, and was called a detective. At one time Mr. House received several months pay for labor, but before he could get to town to purchase the clothes, boots and provisions that he really required the money was worthless, the bank which issued it having become defunct.

An outspoken Union man, Mr. House enlisted at Chillicothe, Mo., July 17, 1861, in Company D of the famous Merrill's Horse. Later on January 8, 1864, he re-enlisted as a veteran at Brownville, in the same company and regiment. He took part in many different battles and skirmishes, and followed the bushwhackers through Missouri and Arkansas. He was in the battle at Little Rock, and at Mer de Changnes when Marmaduke and Cabell were captured. Gen. John McNeil had given the command to "trot, gallop, gallop like hell." Besides capturing Generals Marmaduke and Cabell they took nine cannons and twenty-two hundred prisoners. Mr. House served until the close of the war, when he was discharged as sergeant of his company. Prior to the breaking out of hostilities he had two hundred acres of land, and at the end he had but eighty acres, and was in debt for that. He suffered a good deal during the war from the southern sympathizers. At one time the rebels threatened to burn out his family, but Mr. House sent word in a letter to them through his family physician, who was a rebel, that if such a thing was attempted he would sweep the valley, leaving not one of their houses standing, as he had Colonel Merrill's permission to pick out fifteen men to help him do it. The rebels knowing full well that Thomas House would do as he promised left him and his family unmolested.

Leaving Missouri in 1881 Mr. House came to California, locating in Hanford, on April 1. Subsequently buying land on the San Joaquin river, in Fresno county, two and one-half miles south of the San Joaquin power house, he improved a fine ranch, which is well located, being two thousand, five hundred feet above the sea. Since 1902 Mr. House has rented this ranch, and has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Fox.

Mr. House married first, in Norborne, Mo., Hannah Coleman, who was born in Ray county, Mo., and died in Carroll county, Mo. She bore him four children, one of whom is living, Joseph A. House. September 12, 1854, in Ray county, Mo., he married for his second wife Sarah Ann Clark, a daughter of John Clark, who was born in Pennsylvania, and died in Missouri. She died on the home ranch, in Tulare county, Cal., in September, 1891, aged fifty-eight years. By this marriage Mr. House has five children, of whom we mention the following: Georgia A. married, April 17, 1873, John Fox, who was born near Norborne, Mo., a son of John and Elizabeth (Tiner) Fox, and is now employed in agricultural pursuits in Tulare county, his ranch of one hundred and thirty-four and one-half acres lying four miles southwest of Dinuba; Mrs. Mary Beaty, lives near Sanger, Cal.; Mrs. Fannie Caeser, lives near Reedley; Mrs. Emeline Root is a resident of Sanger; and Mrs. Caroline Dailey resides in Coalinga, Cal. A man of true Christian piety and devotion, Mr. House united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in January, 1844, and has since been a consistent member, as was his wife during her life. He was a charter member of McPherson Post, G. A. R., and now belongs to the Dick Yates Post, G. A. R. Politically he was a Whig until the formation of the Republican party, and has since been one of its most zealous supporters. He has cast his vote for the presidential candidates in the order named, voting first for Clay, then Taylor, Scott, Fremont, Lincoln, Lincoln, Grant, Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur, Blaine, Harrison, Harrison, McKinley, McKinley and Roosevelt, and lastly for Roosevelt.

FRANKLIN WILLIAMS. For more than half a century a resident of California, Franklin Williams, a well-known horticulturist, living three miles southeast of Dinuba, is a worthy representative of the early pioneers of the state, and in the development and promotion of its industrial and agricultural prosperity has been active and influential. In his career he has been financially prosperous, acquiring a comfortable competency, and as an intelligent, honorable and well-disposed citizen has won the regard and respect of his neighbors and friends. A son of Jedediah Williams, he was born, February 22, 1830, in Jackson county, Mo., near Independence. His grandfather, Thomas Williams, a Virginian by birth and breeding, served in the war of 1812. He afterward farmed for a few years in Tennessee, from there removing to Missouri. In 1853 he started with the family across the plains for California, via the Carson route, going as far as Summit, where he was taken ill, and died very suddenly, being then seventy-six years old.

Born in Tennessee, Jedediah Williams went with the family to Missouri, and for several years was employed in general farming in Jackson county. In 1853 he came with a large party to California, crossing the plains with oxen, and located in Solano county, near Vacaville, where he was in business as a stock-raiser and dealer until his death. He married Mary G. Lewis, who was born in North Carolina, and died in Solano county, Cal. They became the parents of thirteen children, all of whom grew to years of maturity, became residents of California, and of these four are now living.

The third child of his parents, Franklin Williams was brought up on a farm, and while young attended the subscription school held in the little log house with its puncheon floor and slab benches. At the age of nineteen years, he and his brother Jefferson, now a resident of Santa Ana, were seized by the gold fever then epidemic throughout the country, and started for California, joining a company in which were two of their cousins, Richard Lewis and Joshua Lewis. The wagons were drawn by oxen, four yoke to each, and there were besides three driving horses. This train, the noted Hedgepath train, well provisioned, left Missouri April 24, 1849, followed the old trail, taking the Sublette cut-off, traveling through Goose Lake country, and arriving in California on September 15, 1849. Going directly to Placerville, Mr. Williams worked in the mines until the spring of 1850, when he went to Downieville to try his luck. From there he proceeded to Nevada City, where he continued mining for awhile. In 1851, having been successful, he returned east by way of Panama, and in 1852 came back across the plains with a large drove of cattle. Disposing of these at an advantage, he made another trip to the east, going, in February, 1853, by way of Panama, and the following April piloted his father across the plains, coming by the same old route, and locating in Solano county, about four miles from Vacaville, where he had previously purchased a ranch.

In the fall of 1853 Mr. Williams journeyed eastward by way of the Isthmus of Panama for the third time, and on his return across the plains with the inevitable ox team train, in April, 1854, brought with him a bride, who for many years presided over his household with rare skill and ability. At that time Mr. Williams also drove a large herd of cattle, but many of these he lost while traveling through the alkali district. Settling on his ranch, near Vacaville, he improved the land, and for forty-one consecutive years was there prosperously engaged in general farming and stock-raising. Selling out in 1895, he bought his present home farm, near Dinuba, having fifty-five acres of choice land, which he devotes principally to the culture of vines and fruits, having a large vineyard and orchard.

Mr. Williams married first, February 17, 1854, in Jackson county, Mo., Mary Jane Morgan, who was born in Sangamon county, Ill., and died in Solano county, Cal. Six children were born of their union, namely: Oliver Cromwell, engaged in farming near Sultana; Rufus L., deceased; Cornelius E., of Vacaville; Claudius, of Dinuba; Everett, of Vacaville; and Eulalia, deceased. For his second wife Mr. Williams married, in Yolo county, Cal., Sarah Catherine Stark, who was born in Hannibal, Mo., and came across the plains with her father and family in 1853, he, Ambrose Stark, settling near Vaca-ville. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have two children born of their marriage, Raleigh F., at Berkeley, attending the University of California; and Wert, a student in the San Francisco School of Pharmacy. Politically Mr. Williams is a staunch Democrat. Fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and is a member of the California Pioneer Association of San Francisco. He is a prominent member of the Christian Church, in which he is an elder, and for many years was superintendent of its Sunday School.

J. G. Rudolph

JAMES G. RUDDLE. The Merced River Roller Mills, two and a half miles from Snelling, are owned and operated by James G. Ruddle, one of the popular and successful farmers and millers of this section. He was born in Merced county January 7, 1862, and represents one of the pioneer families of '49. His parents, John and Anna E. (Hardwick) Ruddle, came from Missouri during that memorable year, the father attaining to prominence as an agriculturist and stock-raiser, and accumulating a competence which enables him to live a comfortable retired life.

James G. Ruddle has spent his entire life on a farm, and has been independent of the paternal resources since completing his education in the public school of Merced county. His commodious house is located on a hill above the Merced river, from which one can gain a view of this entire part of the valley. He owns four thousand acres devoted to stock and grain, and his mill, fitted with modern roller machinery, has a daily output of one hundred barrels. Mr. Ruddle has the latest and most practical improvements on his farm, and mill and farm constitute one of the finest and most paying combinations in Merced county. He installed the electric light plant at Merced Falls, the first water power plant in the county, and was one of the organizers of the Merced Falls Electric Company. Since his boyhood days he has been a constant and hard worker, careful and conscientious in the performance of whatever tasks came his way. Generous and public-spirited, his interests have by no means been confined within the borders of his valuable property, but have extended to the political and general upbuilding of his native county, and have brought him the good-will and appreciation of his fellow townsmen.

Mr. Ruddle is an honored member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge, and in politics is a Democrat. He married into another pioneer family of the coast, his wife being Annette, daughter of John Stockard, a California settler of 1852. The children of the Ruddle household are: John, Allen, Edwin, Annette and Alice.

HENRY FURTNEY, M. D. Since 1888 Dr. Furtney has been a resident of Tulare county and has built up a liberal patronage among the citizens. He was born in Lee county, Iowa, November 4, 1856, the youngest in a family of seven children, five of whom are living, three in California. His parents, George and Margaret (Shettler) Furtney, were both natives of Pennsylvania, who settled in Iowa in 1845, where the father engaged as a blacksmith and farmer and in which state the death of both occurred. Henry Furtney was reared to young manhood upon the paternal farm in Lee county, attending the district schools while he also engaged in farming pursuits. On deciding to take up a profession he studied medicine with Dr. C. F. Wahrer, of Mt. Hamill, Iowa. Later entering the College of Physicians and Surgeons, in Keokuk, Iowa, he was graduated from the same in March, 1888, with the degree of M. D. Starting at once for California he located first in Orosi, Tulare county, where he engaged in a practice of medicine and surgery for the period of three years. In March of 1891 he removed to Dinuba and with the exception of nine months spent in Alaska, where he prospected and mined, going there in the spring of 1898, he has made this place the scene of his labors ever since. In 1900 he went to San Francisco and in the College of Physicians and Surgeons took a seven months' course in post-graduate work, hospital, etc. He is well posted on every branch of his profession, keeping well abreast of the times, and thoroughly in touch with every advance made in the science of medicine or surgery.

Dr. Furtney has been married twice, the first ceremony being performed in Lee county Iowa, March 4, 1885, and uniting him with Mary Brown, a native of that county. She died in Orosi, leaving two children, Lester and Edna. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was an active worker in all its branches. The doctor was married December 16, 1894, to Mrs. Mattie J. Shoemaker, a native of Iowa, and her death occurred in Dinuba June 13, 1898. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and at the time of her death was serving as noble grand of Rebekah Lodge No. 203. The doctor has been a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for twenty years, joining the order in Mt. Hamill Lodge, Iowa. He is now a charter member of Dinuba Lodge No. 381, of which he is past grand, having served for two terms, and has also served as district deputy grand master. He is also identified with the Rebekahs; Woodmen of the World, of which he is examining physician; Women of Woodcraft, in which he is also examining physician; and Fraternal Brotherhood. In the line of his profession he belongs to the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society, of which he is second vice-president. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically is a staunch Republican.

STEPHEN Q. SIMPSON. Prominent in the annals of Tulare county are the representative business men, among whom Stephen Q. Simpson, a wide-awake, enterprising merchant of Monson and the postmaster of this place, holds an honored position. He is a man of worth and promise, exemplary in his habits, strictly upright in his dealings with his fellow-men, and is deservedly esteemed and respected throughout the community. A son of John Crittenden Simpson, he was born August 12, 1871, in Scotland county, Mo., near Memphis. His grandfather, James Simpson, a native of North Carolina, settled as a pioneer of Greene county, Tenn., and after farming there for a time removed with his family to Scotland county, Mo., where he spent his declining years.

Born in Greene county, Tenn., John Crittenden Simpson accompanied the family to Missouri, where, following in the footsteps of his progenitors, he engaged in agricultural pursuits, clearing and improving a farm in Scotland county. Taking advantage of the country being opened up by agriculturists in California, he came here with his family in 1875, and for five years lived at Mussel Slough, near old Grangeville. Locating on the plains in 1880, he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres one-half mile south of Monson, built a residence, made valuable improvements and began raising grain. Successful in his undertakings, he has resided there since, and is now largely engaged in stock raising and dairying. Patriotic and energetic, he served in the state militia while a resident of Missouri. He married Sarah Hicks, who was born in Schuyler county, Mo., a daughter of William Hicks and a sister of Stephen Hicks, in whose sketch, which may be found on another page of this volume, further history of her parents and ancestors is given. Of the five children born of their marriage, three are living. Stephen Q. being the second in order of birth.

Passing the days of his boyhood and youth in California, principally in the northern part of Tulare county, Stephen Q. Simpson received his elementary education in the Monson district school, completing it at Washington College, in Irvington, where he was graduated in 1892. For five years thereafter he was actively employed in agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Monson, meeting with reasonable success. Wishing to change his occupation, he embarked in mercantile pursuits in 1897, opening a store of general merchandise in Monson, and has since built up a large and lucrative trade, his store being well stocked with a fine class of goods of all the kinds usually found in an establishment of that kind. In December, 1897, Mr. Simpson was appointed postmaster by President McKinley, and has since served most satisfactorily to all concerned.

In Delano, Cal., November 16, 1899, Mr. Simpson married Rachael Hubbard, who was born in Yolo county, Cal., a daughter of William and Nancy (McBride) Hubbard, both natives of Ohio, her mother being a daughter of the late Samuel McBride, who died in California. William Hubbard came across the plains to California in 1864, with his father, Nelson Hubbard. He engaged in farming, being first located in Stanislaus county, then in Fresno county. He subsequently bought land near Delano, Kern county, where he is carrying on general farming and grain raising. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard became the parents of six children, all of whom are living, Mrs. Simpson being the third child. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Simpson two children have been born, Bertha and Edna. Politically Mr. Simpson is a straightforward Republican, ever loyal to the interests of his party. Religiously he and his wife are active members of the Christian Church, in which he is an elder, and the superintendent of the Sunday-school.

ISAAC COX. Besides the priceless heritage of a good name, and the example of work well done, Isaac Cox left to Merced county three sturdy sons, who conduct his well-appointed dairy, and maintain the kind of character and effort which has laid the foundation of the civilization of the west. Isaac Cox, one of the up-builders of the western part of Merced county, came of rugged English ancestry, and was born October 11, 1845, in Cambridgeshire, on the farm of his father, William Cox. He was educated in the national schools of England, and came to America in 1865, locating in Wisconsin, where he succeeded at farming and stock-raising. His brother William Cox died after extended service in the Civil war. Another brother, Daniel Cox, came to California about 1860, and resides in Pacific Grove.

Shortly after arriving in California in 1871, Mr. Cox engaged in farming in Los Banos valley. He later purchased eighty acres of land now owned and occupied by his widow and sons, and until starting his dairy made a specialty of grain and stock. His death occurred January 12, 1903, in the fifty-eighth year of his age; his passing from the field of activity which had known him so well caused profound sorrow in the hearts of his many friends. He was a man of sterling worth, of great industry and practical business shrewdness. A staunch upholder of Republicanism, he never sought or was willing to accept any office save that of school director. He was fraternally connected with the Foresters.

Mrs. Cox, who is recognized as one of the ideal women and mothers of the county, was formerly Caroline Birchall, and was born in Manchester, England, in 1849. Her father, Joseph, and her mother, Sarah Ann (Ginn) Birchall, were also born in England, the former in Northampton, and the latter in Wakefield. Joseph Birchall was a bookkeeper and expert accountant, and his services were in demand in several cities in England, his death occurring in Leeds. Abram Ginn, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Cox, was an oldtime character in Wakefield, and for many years owned and operated a flouring mill in town. Mrs. Cox is the fourth child in a family of nine children, seven of whom are living, and is the only one in California. Mr. and Mrs. Cox were married in Leeds, England, April 19, 1881, while Mr. Cox was on a visit to his home, and their married life was a particularly happy and contented one. With her sons, William, Joe Benton and George W., she manages her well tilled farm, superintends a model dairy and raises fine stock and poultry. Her white Leghorns are not only many but famous, and a considerable income is derived from her extensive poultry operations. She is a genial and sympathetic woman, and a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Her sons are men of high ideals, excellent morals, and practical worth, and their standing in the community is unexcelled.

WILLIAM PIKE EACHUS. One of the intelligent, extensive and prosperous agriculturists of Merced county is Maj. William P. Eachus, who owns and occupies a valuable homestead near Ingomar. He is familiarly known as Major, a title that was bestowed upon him while he was journeying with a large company across the plains, when he was but eighteen years old, and by which he is still affectionately called. A man of ability and strong individuality, he is held in high esteem, and is in all respects a valuable citizen of the county, fulfilling his duties and obligations as such with fidelity. A son of David Eachus, he was born March 13, 1849, in Henry county, Iowa, where the earlier years of his life were passed.

Born and educated in the Shenandoah valley, in Virginia, David Eachus learned the miller's trade in his native town, and subsequently followed his chosen occupation in Cairo, Ill., or near there, for three years. Leaving the Prairie state in 1847, he located at Deedsville, now Merrimac, Iowa, on the Skunk river, where he was employed as a miller for a number of years. Coming across the plains to Tehama county, Cal., in 1865, he operated a mill near Redbluff for four years, and was afterward engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his active life. He lived to the ripe old age of eighty-three years, dying at Brentwood, this state. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Pike, was born in Tennessee, and also died at Brentwood, at the age of eighty-two years. They were the parents of eight children, four boys and four girls, William Pike, the subject of this sketch, being the third child.

Brought up in Iowa, William Pike Eachus received a limited education in the common schools, and in 1865 came with his parents to California, following the wagon trail across the plains. Beginning the battle of life on his own account soon after coming to this state, he worked as a farm laborer on different ranches in the San Joaquin valley, at one time being employed on the ranch that he now owns. Going from there to Butte county, Major Eachus, as he was always called, leased land near Oroville, and was there successfully engaged in raising wheat and barley for more than a score of years. Returning to the San Joaquin valley in 1892, the Major continued his agricultural operations with characteristic skill and success. In 1903, with the money that he had accumulated, he purchased his present valuable ranch, lying in Ingomar, about ten miles southwest of Newman, and is pursuing his free and independent occupation with excellent results. In his home farm he has four hundred and eighty acres of fine land, which he devotes to the culture of wheat and barley, and also rents nine hundred and sixty acres on Garzos creek for the same purpose, raising large crops, which bring him in a good annual income.

In Merced county, Cal., December 25, 1870, Major Eachus married Sophia Jane Bradley, a native of Contra Costa county, being the daughter of one of its earliest pioneer settlers, Thomas Wesley Bradley. A native of Tennessee, Mr. Bradley migrated first as far westward as Missouri, from there coming overland to California in 1843. Locating first in Napa county, he engaged in general farming and cattle raising. Moving then to Contra Costa county, he erected the first hotel in Martinez, and remained as its landlord for many years. After spending a short time in Lafayette, he came from that county to the San Joaquin valley, locating near Newman, where he was engaged in general farming until his death, which occurred while he was visiting friends in Tulare county. Of the union of Major and Mrs. Eachus nine children have been born, one of whom, a daughter, Gladys, died when young, and eight are living, namely: Albert J., of Newman; Maud, wife of R. Trefts, of Newman; Harry B., at home; Della, wife of Leonard Ball, of Oroville; Kittie, the wife of Louis Pfitzer; Edward P., at home; Nola Butte and Ray, at home. Politically Major Eachus is an earnest advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and while a resident of Butte county served as school director.

GEORGE HORACE RUSSELL. During the quarter of a century that George Horace Russell has been a resident of Tulare county, he has been associated with its advancement, and has watched with pride and pleasure the onward march of progress and civilization throughout its borders. He owns a fine orange grove near Plano, his place of residence, and in the care and management of his estate is meeting with success. A son of the late Phillip James Russell, he was born, April 4, 1848, in Fremont, Ohio.

Born in New York, Phillip James Russell was brought up in Ohio, whither his parents removed when he was a child. For several years he was engaged in nautical pursuits, sailing on the Great Lakes. Migrating with his family to California in 1874, he settled in Tulare county. Buying six hundred and forty acres of land near White river, he was here engaged in cultivating the soil until his death, in 1896, at the age of three score and ten years. He married Sarah Tilton, who was born in New Jersey, and now resides in Plano, making her home with her son George H., being a bright and active woman of eighty years. Two children were born of their union, George H., and John H., of Sacramento.

After receiving a good common school education in Ohio, George Horace Russell served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade in Fremont. In 1879 he came to California, and for several years thereafter carried on a successful business as a general merchant at Plano. Selling out in 1896, Mr. Russell purchased the Portersville steam feed mill, in Portersville, and having rebuilt and refurbished the plant, operated it successfully for seven years. In the summer of 1903 he gave the entire business to his son, George E. Russell, as a wedding present, a gift that was highly appreciated. Mr. Russell owns a half-section of land along the foothills, near Plano, and carries on general farming and fruit growing, raising oranges especially, and in his agricultural and horticultural undertakings is quite prosperous.

Mr. Russell has been twice married. His first marriage occurred in Wyandot county, Ohio, and united him with Emma Tillison, who was born in that state, and came with him to Plano. Being taken ill here she returned to her old home in Ohio, and died while visiting friends. Their only child, Frank W., died when young. In Plano, Cal., Mr. Russell married Permelia Sorrels, a native of Eldorado county, Cal., and of this union seven children have been born, namely: Ralph Ray (engaged in farming with his father), George Earl (proprietor of the Portersville Feed Mill), Rosie, John, Philip Joseph, Frank and Lillian. Politically Mr. Russell is one of the leading Republicans of Plano, where for eight years he served as postmaster, and was also school trustee of the Vandalia district. Fraternally he is a member of Portersville Camp, W. O. W. In 1900 his residence was totally destroyed by fire, but he soon rebuilt, and has now a most pleasant and attractive home, where he and his hospitable family delight in entertaining their many friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM M. MARLOW. Among the progressive farmers and fruit-growers who have made a splendid record for successful work in agricultural lines and who are an honor alike to their county and their country as representatives of the best class of citizens, we may appropriately mention William M. Marlow, who for the past nineteen years has been a resident of Hanford district, Kings county, and one of her most successful fruit-growers. Although justly considered a pioneer of California, where he located as early as 1859, it was not until 1885 that he came to Kings county, having devoted the early part of his residence in this state to mining pursuits. In 1885 he purchased ten acres of land at Grangeville, Kings county, all planted to fruit, and until 1902 he devoted his energies to fruit culture, easily ranking among the most successful fruit-growers in his locality. Upon selling his place in that year, he removed to his present location in the Hanford district, purchasing thirty-five acres of alfalfa land. Although practically retired on account of poor health, Mr. Marlow is still able to oversee the work done on his place.

In tracing the ancestry of Mr. Marlow, we find him to be a descendant of an old southern family. His father, McKinsey Marlow, was born in Virginia and spent his entire life within the borders of that state in agricultural pursuits, dying at the advanced age of ninety years.

J. W. VAN BENSCHOTEN

It was in Pittsylvania county, Va., that William M. Marlow was born April 14, 1832, spending his boyhood days on his father's ranch, and receiving his education in the subscription schools. At the age of twenty-three he took up the occupation of his father in his native locality, where until 1859 he followed farming. In that year he left home and went to Missouri, but a few months later joined a party en route to California and arriving in this state engaged in mining pursuits in Gibsonville, Sierra county, where for a period of ten years he was fairly successful.

Returning to Missouri with the means which he had accumulated, Mr. Marlow, with a partner, built and conducted a distillery for about a year. The venture proved an unprofitable one, for, besides losing the distillery, Mr. Marlow lost nearly all the money he had invested in the business. Again turning his attention to farm pursuits, he gave his entire time to this calling for fifteen years, and once more success crowned his efforts and he retrieved his lost fortune. Selling out about 1885, he came to California, as previously mentioned, and the farm which is his home to-day is worth perhaps $300 per acre and adjoins the city limits. By his marriage in Missouri Mr. Marlow was united with Polly Ann Gaer, who was born in Iowa, and they have one son, Claude. In his political inclinations Mr. Marlow has ever been a staunch Republican, but he has never possessed any political aspirations. Fraternally he is a valued member of Lemore Lodge No. 255, F. & A. M., and as a citizen he is highly esteemed in his community.

JOHN WESLEY VAN BENSCHOTEN.

The name of John Wesley Van Benschoten must ever be enrolled with the comparatively few brave men who founded towns and started communities on the western slope. As the owner of the land which he eventually laid out for the convenience of settlers in 1850, and as the creator of its first public and other buildings at great cost and personal sacrifice, he stands forth as the father of Grayson, now the center of educational, commercial and industrial promise. His services on the coast, however, antedate this historical occurrence, for he came here in 1846 with the noted explorer, general and politician, John Charles Fremont, surnamed the Pathfinder, in the capacity of meat supply for the United States troops. To do this he left a lucrative butchering business in New York City, and undoubtedly regarded his contract as a temporary one, leading to temporary association with the untutored west.

The meat tradesman was evidently a man of discernment, for he tarried when his government task was done, and for some time operated a pick in the gold mines near Jamestown. Before Grayson was ever thought of he came here from Stockton, purchased a large ranch, and in time recognized its adaptability to community interests. After it was laid out he named it after General Grayson, a personal friend, and proceeded to erect the first hotel from materials which he had sent around the Horn from New York at great expense and inconvenience. As a farmer he was prominent and influential, retaining for his own all but the land comprising the town site, and operating extensively in grain and cattle. His death, in January, 1886, at the age of seventy, was as regrettable as it was untimely and tragic, for he was drowned in the San Joaquin river while crossing the ferry, through losing his balance. He left a wife to mourn his loss, and was followed to his last resting place by an army of friends and loyal associates. He married in San Francisco, in September, 1872, Mrs. Mary A. (Cameron) Gunn, who was born in Picton, Nova Scotia, and who came to the United States when eighteen years old, settling with a sister in Providence, R. I. While there Miss Cameron became the wife of John G. Gunn, who came to California in 1851, settling in the mining regions, where his death occurred ere he had realized a tittle of his ambitions. Mrs. Mary A. Gunn, as she was then known, came to California in 1856, to visit her brother, Daniel L. Mr. Van Benschoten was a member of the Pioneer Association, and was identified with the Masonic fraternity. With his wife he found a religious home in the Presbyterian Church. He was a man of strong convictions, of great strength of character, and of impressive and winning personality. He won the respect of all men with whom he had aught to do, and lived to realize finer expectations than his start in life would seem to suggest. By a former marriage he had one son, Charles Wesley Van Benschoten, who resides near his mother. He married Mattie Belle Cameron, a native of Ohio, and she is the mother of three children: Madeline, John Wesley, and Irene. C. W. Van Benschoten at one time owned six hundred and forty acres of land upon which the town of Grayson was laid out.

CLEMENT D. OLDERSHAW. The ranch of C. D. Oldershaw, located in the Greenfield district, ten miles south of Bakersfield, Kern county, is numbered among the model farms of this section of country, the improvements and cultivation which have made it so being entirely the result of the efforts of its enterprising owner. When he purchased the property in 1898 there were no improvements of any kind, and though thirty acres were under the plow he has set out the fruit which since that time has brought him so large an income. Besides small fruits he is interested in bee culture, having an apiary of two hundred colonies, and in his various lines has met with a success which rarely fails to attend concentrated effort.

In London, England, Mr. Oldershaw was born October 24, 1864, and in his native city and the vicinity was reared and educated. His father, Francis P. Oldershaw, an accountant by occupation, was also a native of London, and in that location his death occurred in 1870. Until he was twenty years old Mr. Oldershaw remained at home, when he decided to emigrate, and taking passage for America he landed in New York City March 22, 1885. Coming direct to California he took up a homestead in Antelope valley, Los Angeles county, where he engaged in farming for some time. Disposing of that property he came to Kern county in 1898, and as before mentioned purchased the ranch upon which he has since made his home. Eight acres of his ranch are devoted to small fruits, and the remaining twenty-two acres are devoted to general farming. His ranch is entirely level, and being located on the Kern Island canal he can irrigate every foot of the land.

In 1898 Mr. Oldershaw married Miss Anna Long, a native of Ireland, and they are the parents of the following children: Minna, Basil and Percy. In national politics a Democrat Mr. Oldershaw reserves the right to cast his ballot for that man whom he knows to be best equipped for official service in all local affairs. Fraternally he is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Woodmen of the World.

EDWARD ROSCOE HOLTON. Although for more than half a century a resident of California, where he located as early as 1852, it was many years later when Mr. Holton removed to his present home in Selma, Fresno county, and during this time he has followed successively the occupation of a miner, a carpenter, a farmer and a fruit-grower, and in placing before the public a review of his life history, we but relate briefly the story of his individual success, particularly in and about Selma, with its many resources and wonderful opportunities for the newcomer. He is a descendant of a worthy Vermont family. The father of E. R. Holton was born in Brattleboro, Vt., and was by trade a carpenter and builder, being quite an expert at this business. Removing west to Illinois in early manhood he married and his wife died there a few years later, leaving four sons. Of these sons, the youngest but one was Edward Roscoe, who was but four years old at the time of her death. He was born in Tazewell county, Ill., March 4, 1837. Some time after the death of his first wife, the father married Mrs. Lizzie Moody, and of this union two children were born, one son and one daughter. In 1852 the family became a part of Captain Barber's immigration train en route to California, the trip being made overland with ox teams. Six or eight yoke of oxen were hitched to each wagon, and after a six months' journey the party arrived safely at Marysville, Cal. After a six months' stay in this place they pushed on to Martinez, in Contra Costa county, which was their home for one year. Their next location was Wisconsin Hill, in Placer county, where the father followed mining pursuits with fair success until 1856. He then purchased land in Yolo county near Cache creek, at what is now Madison, and spent the latter years of his life there, dying in 1868.

Edward Roscoe Holton received but little schooling in his boyhood days, attending school but six months in Tazewell county, Ill. He learned the carpenter's trade of his father, and after the removal of the family to California, he followed mining for awhile, and while engaged in this manner, he had a number of thrilling experiences. Upon one occasion in 1856, in Placer county, while working in an open cut fifteen feet deep, with another man, the side caved in and Mr. Holton was buried under four feet of debris; the other man went for assistance and he was dug out, but at first was supposed to be dead, as he was unconscious. In relating his experience Mr. Holton testifies that he thinks death in this manner is singularly free from pain. In 1879 while Mr. Holton was a passenger on the steamship The Great Republic, bound from San Francisco to Portland, Ore., the steamer foundered on a sandbar at the mouth of the Columbia river, and in reaching land in a lifeboat he had a narrow escape from death.

Inheriting from his father one-half section of land in Yolo county, Mr. Holton removed to this place, continuing to remain there until 1879. He then went to Berkeley, Cal., and followed carpenter work there for a time. It was in 1880 that he first became interested in farming pursuits in Fresno county, purchasing a quarter section of land near Wild Flower, in the vicinity of Selma. Putting out a forty acre vineyard, he returned to Berkeley for a time but subsequently moved upon his place with his family and carried on farm pursuits for a number of years. Having purchased a thirteen acre tract, half of which is in the town limits of Selma, Mr. Holton removed to this place March 4, 1902, and still resides here, and he has seven acres of this tract in orchards. He still retains the ownership of his farm at Wild Flower, which has been added to until it now contains three hundred and twenty acres, which he leases. Although well advanced in years, Mr. Holton, besides caring for his place, does carpenter work to some extent. By his marriage in Napa valley, Cal., he was joined in matrimony with Sarah Owsley, who was born in that vicinity in 1849. They have reared a family of three children, one son and two daughters. They are Charles Roscoe, an attorney-at-law in San Francisco; Nellie, the wife of W. E. Walker, of Selma; and Grace, who lives at home with her parents. Mr. Holton is a Republican in his political views, but not very active. Fraternaly he is a valued member of the Grange society, and of the Good Templars.

ELIJAH HENRY PERKINS. The earliest recollections of Mr. Perkins are associated with frontier scenes in California, for he was only two years of age when in 1852 the family left their Missouri home and traveled across the plains in a wagon drawn by oxen, arriving in Contra Costa county after a tedious journey of six months. Now, by virtue of large landed possessions, high principles of honor and progressive spirit, he ranks among the leading farmers of Tulare county, where he makes his home two miles south of Dinuba, in a residence erected under his supervision in 1901 and on a farm of fifty acres largely in alfalfa. A native of Missouri, he was born April 20, 1850, being a son of S. D. and Susan E. (Asherbraner) Perkins, natives of Missouri. The Perkins family was established in Missouri by his grandfather, Jacob Perkins, a Kentuckian by birth, but for many years and until death a resident of Missouri. After his demise his widow, who was Sarah Bollinger of Kentucky, came to California and continued in this state until her death at seventy-five years.

Agricultural pursuits and merchandising occupied the attention of S. D. Perkins in his native county of Stoddard, but when the tide of emigration began to drift toward the gold-mines of California he decided to try his fortunes on the Pacific coast. Accompanied by his family, in 1852 he made the long journey across mountains and over deserts until finally he landed at Kirk's Pass, ten miles from Martinez, where he made his first stopping place. His tastes did not lie in the direction of mining and he turned to agriculture as a more congenial occupation. For a time he experimented with farm pursuits in Morgan Canon. During one winter he killed eight large grizzly bears on Mount Diablo, and other wild animals also abounded. In 1859 he established his home in the San Ramon valley and at the same time brought his cattle to the range on the Tule river in Tulare county. In 1863 he moved to Lake county. The drought of 1864 caused the loss of his entire herd of cattle, and he then opened a general store in a brick building at Yountville, Napa county.

After a short sojourn in Los Angeles, during the fall of 1868, S. D. Perkins followed the old Soledad trail to the Tule river and bought land three miles below Portersville. In 1871 he sold his two farms there and removed to San Bernardino county, but in 1872 went to Ventura county and the next year returned to the foothills of Tulare county, and bought a farm near Auckland in Wilcox Canon. There he died in 1882 at the age of fifty-eight years. His wife survived him until 1902, dying at Visalia, aged sixty years. They were the parents of two sons and four daughters and of these one son and two daughters are now living. The eldest of the family, Elijah Henry, was, as previously stated, only two years of age when the family settled in California. Upon starting to school in Contra Costa county, he had the only book among all the pupils, this having been brought from the east by his parents. Rather from observation than from the study of text-books he has acquired a broad fund of information, which gives added value to his citizenship. In 1873 he came with his father to Tulare county and settled in Wilcox Canon, where he engaged in raising grain and stock. After the death of his father he purchased the interests of the other heirs in the estate, and by subsequent purchases has added to the original property until he now owns two thousand acres in one ranch, situated fourteen miles east of Dinuba. The land is improved with the necessary buildings and is in excellent condition under his keen supervision. For twenty-six years or more he has operated a threshing machine and during that time has worn out three separators and steam engines. Now, as in past years, a specialty is made of the stock business, although grain is also raised on a considerable acreage. While he still superintends this property, since 1901 he has made his home on his small farm near Dinuba.

The first marriage of Mr. Perkins was solemnized in Tulare county and united him with Miss Mary Rutherford, who was born in Sacramento county and died on the home farm in Wilcox Canon. Six sons and one daughter were born of this union, five of whom are living, namely: W. H., who is engaged in the real-estate business at Dinuba; E. O., who lives on the home ranch in Wilcox Canon; Forest C., a real estate agent in Visalia; Ross L. and Burt, who are with their father. At Visalia, February 1, 1896, occurred the marriage of Mr. Perkins and Miss Mary L. Osborn, who was born in that city in December, 1868, and was next to the eldest among ten children, six of whom are now living. Her father, William T. Osborn, was born in South Carolina and reared in Georgia, where his father, Jesse, followed farm pursuits. During the eventful year 1849 he crossed the plains and settled in California. While Tulare county still had few inhabitants he engaged in the saw-mill and lumber business here, and for eight years served as a supervisor of this county. His death occurred in Isham valley, where he owned a stock farm. Surviving him, and residing at the old home in Visalia, is his widow, who was Lavenia Smith, a native of West Virginia, and an orphan from the age of seventeen years. Her father, John Smith, was born and reared in Germany, and came to America at an early age, settling in West Virginia, where he died. Mrs. Perkins was reared in Isham valley and attended the Visalia Normal, also was a student in the San Jose State Normal until the senior year. A lady of excellent education and culture, she stands high in the Woman's Club of Dinuba and in other social organizations with which she is identified. Of her marriage, there is one son, Clarence Osborn. In politics Mr. Perkins gives his support to the Democratic party. Interested in securing educational advantages for the young, he helped to organize the Elder school district, gave the land on which the schoolhouse was built, and for seventeen or more years officiated as director of the school. In other ways he has proved a valuable citizen to his county, where for so many years he has been actively and successfully connected with local agricultural interests.

WILLIAM E. BURCH. Ranking high among the energetic and substantial citizens of Merced County is W. E. Burch, who, as manager for Miller & Lux, of the Los Banos Lumber Yards, is intimately associated with the industrial and mercantile prosperity of this section of the state. Wideawake and enterprising, ever ready to take advantage of favorable opportunities for extending his operations, he has built up a large and lucrative trade as a lumber dealer and manufacturer, while as a grain merchant he is carrying on a prosperous business. A Kentuckian by birth and breeding, he was born, December 25, 1866, in Nicholasville, Jessamine county, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, R. M. Burch. He comes of Revolutionary stock, his great-grandfather Burch, a pioneer of Kentucky, having served in the grand struggle for independence. His grandfather, Ezekiel

Burch, spent his entire life in Kentucky, being engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Soon after attaining his majority, R. M. Burch settled as a merchant in Nicholasville, his native city, and was there engaged in mercantile business until 1899, for four years being government storekeeper. During the Civil war he served for a time as a soldier in the Federal army. Now a hale and hearty man of three-score years, he is engaged in farming in Nicholasville. He comes of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and is a consistent member of the Christian Church. He married Mattie Hill, who was born, in 1850, in Nicholasville, Ky., a daughter of W. S. Hill, who came from English ancestors. W. S. Hill, and his father, William Hill, were natives of Fayette county, Ky., and both removed to Jessamine county, that state, where they followed farming. W. S. Hill also worked as a machinist, and during the Civil war served in the Federal army, belonging to a Kentucky regiment. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Burch, two children were born, namely: Mrs. Nellie Canery, of Nicholasville, Ky., and W. E., the special subject of this sketch.

Brought up in Nicholasville, Ky., W. E. Burch acquired a practical education in the public schools of that city. Striking out for himself when but fifteen years old, his inclinations led him to try railroading, and for several years he was an employe on the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway, serving first as fireman, and from 1886 until 1888 being stationary engineer. Giving up his position in the latter year, Mr. Burch came to California in search of more congenial pursuits. Locating in Fresno, he had charge of a vineyard in that place for one year. He subsequently was employed in the lumber business at Ben Lomond, after which he resided for twelve months in Humboldt county. Accepting a position with Miller & Lux in 1892, Mr. Burch took charge of their lumber yard at Los Banos, and in the years that have since intervened has built up an immense business for the firm. Under his judicious management the trade of the Los Banos Lumber Yards has assumed large proportions. The yards, which are the largest retail yards in the San Joaquin valley, were equipped with a new side-track in 1903, and are well stocked with lumber of all kinds. In 1902 Mr. Burch erected a planing mill, and in the shipping of its manufactures, which include everything in planing-mill goods, he has a large trade throughout the west. Mr. Burch is likewise manager of the grain business established by Miller & Lux, and in its transaction has two large warehouses, one 48x400 feet, in Los Banos, and one 48x300 feet at Volta.

By dint of thrift and able business tact, Mr. Burch has accumulated a good property. Adjoining the city he has a productive ranch of ten acres, which he devotes to the raising of alfalfa, and on which he has a small apiary, in the care of which he finds pleasure and profit. Here he has a pleasant residence, in which he and his family find great enjoyment, and gladly welcome their many friends.

In Lexington, Ky., Mr. Burch married Sallie Frost Dishman, who was born in that city, a daughter of Addison Dishman. They have two children, namely: Marguerite and William Addison. Politically Mr. Burch is a sound Republican. Fraternally he belongs to the Odd Fellows and the Rebekahs. Mrs. Burch is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOSEPH LA MARCHE. The name La Marche indicates the French extraction of the family. Early in the nineteenth century they were transplanted to Canadian soil, and John, who was a son of the original immigrant, claimed Ontario as his native land, enlisting from there in 1837 as a MacKenzie supporter in the Canadian rebellion. Joseph, son of John, was born near Montreal, Canada, in 1823, and received better educational advantages than usually fall to the lot of the sons of pioneer farmers, being a graduate of a Canadian college. In early life a farmer at La Clinte Mills, he later turned his attention to merchandising and at the same time filled the office of magistrate. At the time of his death in 1900 he had attained the age of sixty-seven years. The lady whom he married bore the maiden name of Julia La Marc and, while a native of Ontario, like himself descended from French ancestors, her paternal grandfather having founded the family in Canada. Death claimed her after seventy busy years. Of her thirteen children all but three lived to maturity and still survive, the second of these being Joseph, an influential and prominent citizen of Tulare and the only representative of the family on the Pacific coast. On the home farm near Montreal, where he was born March 1, 1853, he passed the years of early boyhood. The nearest school was five miles distant, and thither he walked whenever the weather permitted and the work of the farm allowed sufficient leisure for study.

Leaving home at fourteen years of age Mr. La Marche went to Upper Canada and engaged in logging and lumbering on the Ottawa river, but after a year returned on a raft to Quebec and from there went to the Lake Superior region. For two years he was employed at teaming in the charcoal furnace region near Marquette. During 1871 he came west as far as Nevada and followed teaming in the lumbering district near Carson. The year 1874 found him a resident of California and he has since been a loyal citizen of this state, enthusiastic in behalf of its opportunities and attributing to its openings for prosperous work the success he has here experienced. For three years he engaged as a ranch hand near Princeton, Colusa county, and thus earned an amount sufficient to enable him to undertake independent farming. His first venture was as a grain raiser on a rented farm. Upon coming to Tulare county in 1883 he began as a renter, but soon began to buy land and at this writing owns about six thousand acres situated seven miles southwest of Tulare. Of this tract five hundred or more acres are under alfalfa and the balance is utilized for grain raising and stock pasturage. The Tule and Elk bayou rivers pass through the land, and further irrigation facilities are furnished by the Elk bayou ditch, which was constructed under his supervision as president of the company. On his large ranch the baling of hay is a special feature and every year he ships hundreds of tons to the markets. In stock he makes a specialty of graded Short-horns and has altogether about eight hundred head of cattle.

The management of his large landed possessions by no means represents the limit of Mr. La Marche's activities, for in addition he acts as a director of the Bank of Tulare, the Rochdale Company, the Tulare Creamery Company and the Tulare Gas Company which furnishes the electricity used in lighting the streets and houses of Tulare. Through his membership in the Tulare Board of Trade he is connected with many enterprises for the commercial growth of the city. In politics he favors Democratic principles and at one time served on the county central committee of his party. While in Colusa county he became identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and since coming to Tulare he has transferred his membership to the lodge at this point, besides being active in the work of the encampment.

Since establishing his home in Tulare, in 1898, Mr. La Marche has owned and occupied a comfortable dwelling on West Inyo street. His family consists of his wife and their two children, Joseph (now a student in the Santa Clara College) and Bernie. Mrs. La Marche bore the maiden name of Mary Le Clert and was born at Portsmouth, England, being a daughter of Theodore and Mary (Simms) Le Clert, natives respectively of France and England, and members of old-established families of their respective countries. When Mr. Le Clert settled in England he followed the brick mason's trade at Portsmouth. Later he crossed the ocean to America and secured work at Albion, N. Y., coming from the east to California in 1856 via the Horn and following the miner's occupation at Knight's Ferry, later removing to Copperopolis, Calaveras county, and eventually settling upon a ranch. His death occurred at Oakdale, Stanislaus county, where also his wife spent her last days. They were the parents of three daughters and two sons, all now living. Of these Mrs. La Marche was second in order of birth. In 1861 she accompanied other members of the family to California and joined her father at Knight's Ferry, where she became the wife of Melvin Howard, a native of New York state, and an orchardist at Sonora, Tuolumne county, where he died. Some time afterward she was united with John M. Creighton and in 1876 they settled on the Creighton ranch in Tulare county. A few years later Mr. Creighton died at Byron Hot Springs, and on the 7th of August, 1886, at Tipton, Tulare county, she was married to Mr. La Marche, since which time they have made their home in Tulare county. In the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union she has been warmly interested and the local organization owes much to her enthusiastic co-operation in its philanthropies. Other movements of undoubted merit have received constant and helpful support from both Mr. and Mrs. La Marche, who, having accumulated ample means by years of persevering industry and sagacious judgment, now respond generously to calls for aid, whether in behalf of the needy or in benevolences affecting the general welfare of the community.

LANE SCOTT HARMAN. A successful rancher, Lane Scott Harman is located upon his property of forty acres, in Kern county, Cal., having made this his home since 1890. In addition to grapes, he raises various other fruits and alfalfa, having transformed his land from a wild state into its present prosperous condition. Born near Wellsville, York county, Pa., March 24, 1854, he is a son of Ross L., also a native of that state and the representative of an old Pennsylvania family. The latter was born in 1818, and during his youth and young manhood he learned the trade of carpenter, also owning and conducting a small farm. In 1877 he removed to Ohio with a view to bettering his condition, there working at his trade for a short time, when he retired from active duties. Later he returned to Pennsylvania, but went back to Ohio, his death occurring in Mansfield at the age of eighty-one years. During the Civil war he enlisted and was made captain of Company H, Eighty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment, serving for twenty-eight months, mostly in West Virginia, though not participating in any notable battle. He married Frances Bradford, also a native of Pennsylvania, and her death occurred at the age of seventy-eight years. Both herself and husband were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

They were the parents of three children, of whom one died in infancy.

The boyhood years of Lane Scott Harman were spent in his native state, where he received his education in the public schools and at Mt. Union College, which he attended for a short time. After his removal to Ohio in 1877 he was employed as shipping clerk in a wholesale grocery firm for a time, after which he traveled for a plow company for ten years, through the states of Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Subsequently he became connected with a newspaper in Mansfield, Ohio, having charge of the business department of the Mansfield Daily News for two years. Following this he was again employed as traveling salesman for an implement firm, handling reapers and mowers, his route being in southwestern Ohio. During the two years in which he was thus engaged he made his home at Columbus, Ohio. In 1890 he came to California and locating in Kern county, purchased forty acres of barren land. He has in the meantime brought it to a fine state of cultivation and made many valuable improvements. He has a water franchise and his place is well ditched in order that it may be thoroughly irrigated.

On the 9th of September, 1880, Mr. Harman was united in marriage with Ada E. Carpenter, who was born in Richland county, Ohio, a daughter of William B. and Emeline (Grove) Carpenter. Mr. Carpenter is also a native of Ohio, is a farmer by occupation, and at one time owned a tannery at Mansfield, where he now makes his home, at the age of seventy-eight years. His wife, a native of Pennsylvania, died in Mansfield at the age of seventy-four years. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as is also her husband. To Mr. and Mrs. Harman were born the following children: Emrie L.; William C., now attending high school; Jeanette E.; Frances; Jo; Helen; Ada; and Monroe. In his political convictions Mr. Harman is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Prohibition party, and has been quite active in the work, serving as clerk of the school board ever since the district was organized. Fraternally he is a member of the Good Templars. Mrs. Harman is a member of the Methodist Church.

MARTIN CHRISTIAN. Numbered among the successful business men and esteemed residents of Dos Palos is Martin Christian, one of the most active and enterprising citizens of Merced county. He has performed his full part in the advancement of the agricultural and mercantile interests of the county, and since becoming a resident of Dos Palos has been one of its leading merchants, and has become generally and favorably known to the traveling public as proprietor of the Hotel Dos Palos. Beginning life as a poor boy, he has been in truth the architect of his own fortunes, by strenuous effort, ability and prudent management acquiring an honored position in financial and social circles. A native of Denmark, he was born, October 25, 1851, in Jutland, being the only child born of the union of George and Annie (David) Christian. His parents spent their entire lives in Denmark, the father dying, while yet in manhood's prime, in 1861, and the mother in 1896.

Growing to manhood in his native land, Martin Christian received such educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools, in the meantime being well drilled in agricultural pursuits. In 1871, desirous of taking advantage of the opportunities offered to young men of energy and enterprise in America, he immigrated to the United States, and after spending a year in Toledo, Ohio, came to San Francisco. Entering the employ of Hiram Scott, he drove a coach for awhile, after which he traveled extensively in the state, visiting many different places, and being variously employed. Locating at Hills Ferry in 1877, Mr. Christian kept a hotel for a short time, and then removed to the west side of Merced county, where he carried on general farming and stock raising, operating five thousand acres of land, and making a specialty of grain raising until selling out his interests in that locality.

Coming to Dos Palos in 1891, Mr. Christian purchased the Hotel Dos Palos, which had then been running but nine months, and has since been very successful in its management. As his patronage increased, he has twice enlarged the house to meet the demands upon his hospitality. In connection with his hotel, Mr. Christian also runs a livery business, and has a well-patronized stage line to Mercy Hot Springs, which is fast becoming a popular resort. In 1894 he erected a store, and has since carried on a very successful mercantile trade, being in partnership with his son George, and for four years he was also postmaster at Dos Palos. With characteristic enterprise, he opened a store of general merchandise in Los Banos in 1900, where, as junior member of the firm of Place & Christian, he has built up an extensive and lucrative business.

In Sacramento, Cal., Mr. Christian married Caroline Kair, who was born in Denmark, and they are the parents of seven children, namely: Annie, wife of Franz Misch, foreman at Miller & Lux; George, in partnership with his father; Hedrig; Mabel; Clarence; Thomas and Alice. Politically Mr. Christian is a straightforward Republican, and active in party ranks. He is an ex-member of the county central committee, and for many years served as school trustee and as constable. Fraternally he belongs to the Ancient Order of Druids.

ALLEN J. WOODY. The supervisor of Kern county, Allen J. Woody, is a man well known throughout this part of the country for the excellent qualities which have marked his citizenship, and, coupled with the ability with which he has discharged his official duties, has won for him the esteem and regard of his fellow townsmen. Although not a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in Christian county, Mo., on the Wilson Creek battle ground, December 4, 1866, Mr. Woody came to the west at so youthful an age that he has spent practically his entire life among the scenes of his adopted state, and to the advancement of every movement calculated to increase the prosperity of whatever community he chanced to make his home he has given his best efforts and strongest influence.

Mr. Woody's father, John H. Woody, was also a native of Missouri, where in manhood he engaged as a farmer and stockman. In 1859 he came to California, following the precarious fortunes of a miner for some time, but returned east upon the death of his father and settled up the latter's estate. For ten years following his return to Missouri he engaged in farming in that state, but in 1874 he came again to California, locating near Stockton, where he engaged in ranching until 1883. Going to Tulare county he engaged in farming and stock-raising until he moved into Tulare, where he now makes his home at the age of sixty-six years. He married Hester E. Wills, who was born in Tennessee and reared in Missouri, and is now sixty-two years old.

Of the six children born to his parents Allen J. Woody was the eldest, and was seven years old when he came to California with the family. His boyhood years were spent on the paternal ranch, where he combined the practical duties of a farmer with the studies which he followed in the public school in the vicinity of his home. After completing the course of the common schools he attended the University of California for one year, then entered Woodbury's Commercial College, of Los Angeles, where he fitted himself for a business career. Upon attaining his majority he became superintendent of a sawmill in Tulare county, in which he had one-fourth interest. Two years later, when the firm failed, he entered the court house at Visalia as deputy assessor and tax collector, filling these positions for one year. Subsequently he filled a clerkship in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for eleven years. A staunch Democrat, and one always interested in the advancement of the principles he endorsed, he was chosen by his party for the nomination of supervisor in 1902. In the election that followed his popularity was attested by the large majority which brought him success, and on the 1st of January, 1903, he entered upon the duties of his position.

In San Francisco Mr. Woody was united in marriage with Rose Clarridge, a native of Rio Vista, Cal., and they have two children, Allen George and Geneva. Besides the official capacity in which Mr. Woody is now serving he acted as town clerk of Kern for four years. Fraternaly he is identified with Sumner Lodge No. 143, K. P., of Kern.

ARTEMUS J. BAKER. In tracing the family history of this citizen of Newman we find that he is a member of an eastern family established in Ohio by his grandfather, a Pennsylvanian by birth and parentage. Survived by his wife for many years, the grandfather passed away on his Ohio farm and subsequently the widow came to California, dying near Riverside when one hundred and four years of age.

The father, Emmaus Baker, a native of Richland county, Ohio, took up agricultural work in early life and continued to earn his livelihood from the tilling of the soil until his death, which occurred in Ohio at the age of more than four score years. By his marriage to Matilda Dunlop he was united with an old Virginian family numbered among the pioneers of Ohio, where she was born in Morrow county. Her father, James, removed from the Old Dominion to Ohio, and thence to Des Moines, Iowa, where his death occurred.

In the family of Emmaus Baker there were three sons, namely: Artemus J., of Newman; Frank, who makes his home near Turlock, Cal.; and W. C., who died at Stockton, this state. The eldest son, Artemus J., was born near Mansfield, Ohio, September 24, 1849, and received a district school education. In the spring of 1864, when fourteen years of age, he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Ohio Infantry, and was mustered into the service at Mount Gilead, Ohio. At the expiration of his time he was honorably discharged, in September, 1864, a short time before the fiftieth anniversary of his birth. After a short sojourn at his old home he went to the vicinity of Muncie, Ind., thence returned to Ohio, from there went to Missouri and settled on land near Taberville, St. Clair county, where he engaged in ranching until 1874. During the spring of that year he came to California and settled on a ranch near Modesto, where he was employed until 1879. Later he followed the raising of grain and operating of a threshing machine.

Since 1888 Mr. Baker has been connected with the Southern Pacific Railroad, his first position with the company being that of pumper at Fresno. Next he was placed in the construction department as foreman and extra pumper, and in 1891 was given charge of the pump at Bakersfield. During July of 1893 he was given his present position at Newman, where he has charge of the pumps (operated by gasoline engine), as well as those at Firebaugh, Fresno county (run by steam engine). In this particular work he has had long experience and stands high with the company. A portion of his savings he invested in an alfalfa farm of twenty-two acres, and he also built the residence which he occupies in Newman. His first wife was Miss Maggie Dimmick, who was born in Germany and died in Merced. At Newman, August 1, 1894, Mr. Baker was united with Mrs. Maggie McGuire, who was born in Yarmouth, Ontario, being a daughter of James and Nancy J. (Minard) Dunn, natives of Ontario. By trade a builder, her father followed that occupation in addition to farming after his removal to the vicinity of Wellington, Kan. During a visit to his old home in Ontario he died, and his body was laid to rest amid scenes familiar to him in early life. His wife passed away in Kansas. She was a member of a family characterized by longevity, her mother having attained the age of more than one hundred years. Among nine children, eight of whom attained mature years, seven are now living, and all but one of these in California, Mrs. Baker was next to the eldest. Her first marriage was solemnized in Kansas, and united her with Charles Geoffroy, a native of France. Four children were born of that union, namely: Mrs. Adell Fisher, Mrs. Josie Huber and Mrs. Pearl Gray, all of Newman; and Maude, who died at four years of age. After the death of her first husband she was married to James McGuire, of Ohio, and one child, Leslie McGuire Baker, was born of that union.

Politically Mr. Baker always gives his support to the Republican party. In matters fraternal Mrs. Baker is a past officer in the Degree of Honor; Mr. Baker is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; past chancellor commander of Newman Lodge No. 139, K. of P., member of the Grand Lodge, and second lieutenant of the Uniform Rank No. 47, of the same order. At the annual inspection of pumping plants of the Southern Pacific System, Mr. Baker was awarded a medal from the company for having the most perfect pump house on the Southern Pacific System of 5,833 miles. A board saying, "Premium Pump House, Pacific System, 5,833 Miles," adorns the top of the pump house.

JOHN F. JORDAN. While the abstract business has engaged the attention of Mr. Jordan during a large portion of the time since he settled in Visalia, his work as secretary and manager of this enterprise by no means represents the limits of his activities. As evidence of his varied interests it may be mentioned that he assisted in the organization of the Kaweah Lemon Company, Incorporated, of which he is now secretary and which owns two hundred and fifty acres in the foothills east of Visalia. As a director of the Encina Fruit Company he is closely connected with the development of the company's property, embracing four hundred and forty acres two miles north of Visalia. In addition he holds the office of secretary of the Lemon Cove Ditch Company and is secretary of the Queen Oil Company, in the establishment of which he took an active part. Ever since the organization of the Acme Oil Company, in which he assisted, he has been a member of its board of directors, and he was also a prominent worker in organizing the Visalia Fruit and Land Company. It will be readily understood that the management of these important interests requires a versatile mind, keen reasoning faculties, indomitable energy and force of will, all of which qualities Mr. Jordan possesses.

In the eastern part of Texas, December 10, 1850, occurred the birth of John F. Jordan, son of Frank and Alabama (McMicken) Jordan, natives respectively of Illinois and Alabama. His father removed to Texas in an early day and lived there for some time, also owned and managed a plantation near Shreveport, La. When he came to California in 1854 he made the trip overland as captain of a train comprising seventy-four families. Settling in Monterey county, in what is now San Benito county, he took up the hotel business, and began to raise and deal in stock. In 1858 he came to Tulare county and two years later brought his family to Visalia, which he afterward considered his home, although the buying and selling of stock frequently required his presence in other places for considerable periods. His death occurred in Visalia in 1878, when he was fifty-nine years of age, he having survived his wife, who passed away in San Benito county. In politics he was a Democrat, always a staunch supporter of party principles. Notwithstanding the fact that he came to California entirely without means, he accumulated considerable property and was considered one of the successful men of his day.

Among four sons and three daughters comprising the parental family (of whom three sons and one daughter are living), John F. Jordan was fifth in order of birth. The trip across the plains occurred when he was a child of four years, hence the greater part of his life has been passed in California. After completing the studies of the Visalia public school he took a commercial course in Heald's Business College at San Francisco, from which he was graduated in February of 1875. On his return to Tulare county he was appointed deputy postmaster and the following year (1876) received the appointment of deputy sheriff. In 1879 he was elected county auditor and served in that capacity during the five ensuing years. On retiring from office he turned his attention to the abstract business, which he started in 1884 and in 1892 incorporated as the Visalia Abstract Company, he being secretary, manager and a director. Under his supervision a large business has been established in the bringing down of abstracts and perfecting of titles, and no one is recognized as a more accurate judge of titles than he. The knowledge he has acquired along this line represents years of study as well as actual experience and makes his advice concerning titles of the greatest value.

After coming to Visalia and taking up active business duties, Mr. Jordan established domestic ties through his marriage to Alice L. Neil, a native of California. They are the parents of three children: Ethel V., Roy F., and Neil J., all of whom are at home. In Masonry, Mr. Jordan ranks high, being a member of Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M., at Visalia; Chapter No. 44, R. A. M.; Commandery No. 26, K. T., of which he acts as recorder; Scottish Rite No. 9, of which he is treasurer; and Islam Temple, N. M. S., San Francisco. Always a pronounced Democrat, he has been a local leader of his party, at one time served on the county central committee, in 1904 acted as delegate to the state convention, and in other ways has manifested his interest in the progress of the party.

URIAH WOOD. More than fifty years have come and gone since Mr. Wood became associated with the then frontier state of California. When he crossed the plains he was a young man, full of ambition, courage and perseverance, yet so destitute of capital that he was obliged to borrow from a brother-in-law the means necessary to defray the expenses of the trip. Bravely enduring the hardships of a pioneer existence, cheerfully accepting the privations consequent to the environment, and persistently pushing his way forward in the face of discouragement and occasional reverses, he has now reached a position where, with an abundance of means and with the record of a well-spent life, he wields the influence and commands the prestige born of material success.

Many of the traits noticeable in the character of Mr. Wood are his by inheritance from an honorable ancestry, of remote German extraction, but long identified with the United States. His grandfather, David Wood, who was a native of New York, suffered the terror of being taken captive by the Indians when a boy, but made his escape and reached home in safety. Some years afterwards, when he had grown to man's estate, he became a soldier in the Revolutionary war and fought for independence with a bravery characteristic of his race. Uriah D., son of this Revolutionary veteran, was born and reared in New York, and in early manhood engaged in lumbering in the Allegheny mountains. While the Mississippi valley was still an unknown region and its wealth of fertile soil unrealized, he took his family from New York to Illinois in 1830, making the trip with horses through Ohio and Indiana. In Chicago they stopped only long enough to visit a drug store and purchase a remedy for ague, the prevailing disease of those days. Arriving in Whiteside county, he settled near Portland, where he took up land, turned the first furrow in the soil and (being a carpenter) erected all of his buildings without aid. In 1841 he removed to LaSalle county, where he devoted himself to agricultural pursuits through the balance of his active life. In politics he was a Whig, while in religion he upheld the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. At the time of his death he had reached the age of eighty years. His wife, Anna (Cline) Wood, was born in New York of Mohawk-Dutch ancestry, and died in Illinois. Of her marriage eight children were born. One son, David, was a pioneer of 1849 in California and continued to make this state his home until he died, at Gilroy, about 1891.

While the family were living in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., Uriah Wood was born September 5, 1820. He was ten years of age when he accompanied his parents to Illinois. In their new home schools were so uncommon that he had no opportunity to study under teachers, yet by self-culture he acquired a fund of information, of a different nature from that gained in text-books, but none the less valuable. Possessed of a robust constitution, excellent health and unusual capability, his services were eagerly sought by farmers. At the age of seventeen he received $15 per month, this being the highest wages paid any man in all that country. Half of his wages was given to his father each month, and the remainder applied to the purchase of the necessities of life. With four yoke of oxen and a breaking plow he turned the furrows in many acres of primitive soil, his work being always carefully and successfully done. His employer said that he was the best teamster in the entire neighborhood. Sometimes he drove to Chicago with his father, hauling wheat to the market, but he found little in that then swampy village to impress him favorably. During the fall of 1850 he began to work for a man in Arkansas and while with him made two trips to New Orleans on large flat boats, returning on a steamer. On his return to Illinois, he worked in a brickyard at Earlville, and while there began to make preparations for a trip to the coast.

There were three young men in the party that started for the west in 1852. Their ox-teams were shipped to St. Joseph, Mo., where they were taken out of the cars and hitched to wagons. However, the animals were so stiff from being inactive that they could not be used, and were put in a corral. A Missouri man, seeing the difficulty, suggested that the oxen be started without whipping and used just a little each day, until they gradually regained their normal condition. This advice was followed successfully. Soon the emigrants had left all traces of civilization behind them. In company with an expedition from Ray county, Mo., the Illinois boys pursued the difficult journey over plains and mountains, across rivers and through deserts, down the Humboldt river and on to Hangtown, where they arrived in September of 1852. The journey was much less arduous for them than for many emigrants, for the Indians did not molest them, nor were they sufferers from lack of provisions.

After a short experience as a miner in Calaveras county Mr. Wood went to Spanish Flats and in the fall of 1853 tried his luck on the middle fork of the American river. In no place, however, did he meet with the success he had anticipated. Learning that it was possible to earn $50 per month on the ranches in the valley, he decided to change his occupation, and went to Coloma, thence to Sacramento, where he was paid $50 a month for driving a team. In the spring of 1854 he came via San Jose to Gilroy, Santa Clara county, and buying two yoke of oxen and a wagon, he engaged in teaming in the redwoods. Money being scarce he accepted as payment horses and cattle. In this way he accumulated one hundred head of cattle, which he sold, buying about the same time eight hundred and forty-two head of sheep. For eighteen months he herded his flock in the Pacheco mountains and then moved them into Merced county, establishing a sheep ranch at Los Banos, ten miles from his nearest neighbor. After investigating land in various parts of the state and finding nothing better suited to his purpose than the land he occupied, he bought the property.

Each year his flock was almost doubled. At first he was obliged to pump all the water needed by the flock, but after some years the canal was built through his land. During the dry year (1863) he managed to keep his flock almost intact, although many sheep-raisers suffered heavy losses, but in 1864 he suffered heavy losses, losing over three thousand sheep.

Adding to his original purchase year by year, Mr. Wood finally acquired five thousand acres, the larger part of which was good land. Much of this was rented to tenants, as many as fifteen operating different parts of the ranch. When he first began to sell, he received $30 per acre, but afterward was paid as much as $125 an acre. In 1898 he owned thirty-five hundred acres of farm land in Merced county, operated by two tenants, and principally under grain and hay. In addition he owned the San Felipe ranch of two hundred and forty acres near Gilroy, Santa Clara county. All of his real estate is incorporated under the title of the Uriah Wood Company, he being president and each of his four sons a director in the organization. In 1885 he came to San Jose and erected the beautiful residence where he now makes his home. Various enterprises of this and other cities have engaged his attention and co-operation, included among these being the Farmers' Union, in which he is a director, the Garden City Bank and the Bank of San Jose. He is also a director of the Bank of Hollister, of which he was one of the founders, and the same can be said of the San Benito County Savings Bank. He is also a stockholder in the Salinas City Bank of Salinas, Cal. He is a member of the Santa Clara County Pioneer Association, fraternally is identified with the Odd Fellows and in politics gives his influence and vote to Republican candidates and measures. During 1862 he returned to Illinois and in Earlville married Miss Phoebe L. Smith, who was born in Ohio and grew to womanhood in Illinois. They are the parents of four sons, Chester W., Walter H., Ralph W. and Louis E., all of whom are successful land-owners and agriculturists, the last mentioned residing in San Jose.

Notwithstanding the vicissitudes which have more than once thrust discouragements upon him and notwithstanding the hardships incident to pioneer existence, Mr. Wood retains the robust constitution of his youth. With his erect carriage and fine physique he gives to a stranger the impression of being in life's prime, and subsequent companionship, exhibiting the resourcefulness and activity of his mind, but deepens the first impression. He belongs to that class of "young old" pioneers to whom the state owes a debt of gratitude, men who gave the best that was within them to aid in the development of the state and the expansion of her interests. It is to the patient, persistent efforts of such as he that the prosperity of the state may be attributed.

DAVID J. TOOMEY. In various lines of business—farming, stock-raising and the management of a butcher shop in Visalia—Mr. Toomey has proved his ability and is numbered among the successful citizens of the place. He is a native of Richmond, Va., and was born October 16, 1867. His father, David Toomey, a resident of that state, served through the Civil war, and in 1872 came to California and located on Dry creek. Later he removed to the vicinity of Lodi and engaged in farming. In 1882 he went to Woodbridge, and in 1885 located one mile east of Visalia, Tulare county, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. His death occurred in 1892. His wife, formerly Margaret A. Witten, a native of Virginia, survives him and now makes her home in San Francisco. The children born of this union are as follows: Richard Edward, David J., of this review; James, employed by Wells-Fargo & Co., express, of San Francisco; Elizabeth, in San Francisco; Elenore, the wife of E. D. Vogel-sang of Fresno; Charles, a butcher of San Francisco; and Thomas, also in that city.

David J. Toomey was but five years old when he accompanied his parents to California. He received a limited education in the district schools of San Joaquin county, the greater part of his training lying in the cornfields, while he graduated between plow handles, as he quaintly puts it. When seventeen years old he went to Visalia and attended school for six weeks. He remained at home and assisted in the farm work until the death of his father, after which he engaged in the stock business for himself. He was located in Old Round valley, eighteen miles southeast of Visalia, where he operated a ranch of two thousand acres, engaged in wheat raising, conducting four eight-horse teams. He was very successful in this work, in which he engaged from 1885 to 1892; a man of energy and ability, and with proper ideas of handling the men who worked under him, he made a success financially. Returning in 1892 to the home place, he engaged in the raising of hay and threshing, and in September, 1900, with G. B. Simpson, bought out the Pioneer market in Visalia and has since been engaged in the butcher business. They later took in another partner, the firm being then known as Toomey & Co. In April, 1904, Mr. Toomey bought out his partners and has since continued the business alone, in the meantime having purchased two other markets, one in Visalia and the other in Exeter. The Pioneer market, located on East Main street, has recently been built, a new and modern plant for butchering installed, a new cold storage plant of three-ton capacity having also been built. He has a slaughter house on his ranch three miles east of Visalia, where he owns forty acres. He makes his home on the old home ranch one mile east of Visalia.

In Los Angeles Mr. Toomey married Clara C. Hinds, who was born near Exeter, Tulare county, a daughter of Archibald Y. Hinds, a pioneer of this section. They are the parents of two children, Catherine Maurine and Kenneth David. Fraternally Mr. Toomey is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Interested in all local affairs, he has taken an interest in educational matters, having served as a trustee of the East Lynne district. Politically he is a staunch Democrat and is a member of the county central committee.

FRANK ELLIOTT ANDERSON. Prominent among the enterprising and wide-awake business men of Tulare is Frank Elliott Anderson, who through his own efforts has risen to his present position among the leading citizens of his adopted city. Endowed with good business judgment and tact, he has been uniformly successful in life, and is now carrying on a large and successful mercantile trade as head of the well known firm of Anderson & Scranton. A son of the late J. N. Anderson, he was born in Fairbury, Ill., October 17, 1867.

A native of Ohio, J. N. Anderson was born near Hillsboro, Highland county, and was there reared to agricultural pursuits. He was a lover of fine horses from his boyhood, and when a young man, about 1860, removed to Fairbury, Ill., where he embarked in business as a horse-man, importing horses, and breeding much fine stock. Settling in Holden, Johnson county, Mo., in 1870, he continued there for a few years as a horse breeder, raising draft and coach horses, making a specialty of Morgan horses. Coming from there to California in 1888, he was engaged in the same business in Tulare until his death, in 1890, being successful in his operations. He was a man of sterling worth, and a valued member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He married Columbia Morrow, who was born in Ohio, the daughter of James Morrow, a merchant, established first in Ohio, and later in McLean county, Ill. She survived her husband, and now makes her home with her son, Frank, in Tulare. Four children blessed their union, namely: James Morrow, a druggist in Tulare; Frank Elliott, the special subject of this sketch; Grace, wife of Z. S. Cather, of San Francisco; and one that died in childhood. Col. James E.

Morrow, a brother of Mrs. J. N. Anderson, served as colonel of an Illinois regiment during the Civil war, and was subsequently a banker in Pontiac, Ill., until his death.

James Morrow Anderson, the eldest son of the parental household, was born in Pontiac, Ill., October 1, 1862. In March, 1886, he located in Tulare, and for nearly four years afterward worked at the carriage maker's trade with A. G. Woodward. In 1890 he purchased a half interest in R. L. Reid's pharmacy, which was established about the time that Tulare was incorporated, being one of the pioneer business houses of the place. In 1892 Frank E. Anderson bought out Mr. Reid's share of the business, which has since been continued successfully by the two brothers. James Morrow Anderson is also proprietor of the California Gypsum & Mineral Company, and manufactures the Diamond fertilizer and plaster, and is likewise president of the Tulare Oil Company. He married Lulu Schlageter, and they have one child, Morrow J. He is prominent in the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar.

His parents removing to Holden, Johnson county, Mo., when he was but three years old, Frank Elliott Anderson was there brought up and educated. At the age of fifteen he began learning the dry goods business, for four years being in the employ of W. H. Etter, proprietor of a One Price Cash House. Coming to the Pacific coast in 1886, he was for four years engaged as a clerk for F. M. Schultz, in Tulare, the following ten years being similarly employed in the dry goods department of the store of J. Goldman & Co. Resigning the position in 1900, Mr. Anderson formed a co-partnership with Mr. Scranton, as senior member of the firm of Anderson & Scranton, and March 15 of that year opened a store on the corner of K and Kern streets. The business of the firm increased so rapidly that new quarters were demanded, and February 4, 1904, Messrs. Anderson & Scranton removed into their present store, which is 41x80 feet, with three floors. This enterprising firm carries a complete stock of up-to-date goods, including dry goods of all kinds, furs, and ladies' and children's shoes. As above stated, Mr. Anderson also has a half interest in the Anderson Pharmacy, owning it with his brother, James Morrow. He belongs to the Tulare Board of Trade; is a stockholder in the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank; and is a charter member and a director of the Tulare Building and Loan Association.

In Tulare, Cal., Mr. Anderson married Selina R. Belfils, who was born in Roseburg, Ore., a daughter of Lewis Belfils, a jeweler, who settled in Tulare in 1897. Politically Mr. Anderson is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he is a member of Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M.; of Tulare Chapter No. 71, R. A. M.; and belongs to the Independent Order of Foresters. Mr. Anderson is a talented musician, and a clarinet player of note. For many years he was leader of the Tulare Band, and still leads the Tulare Orchestra. He formerly taught clarinet playing, but of late years has confined himself to orchestral work.

JOSHUA LINDSEY was born near South Bend, Ind., May 18, 1818, a son of John and Nancy (Shields) Lindsey, the former born in Scotland and the latter in Indiana. John Lindsey served in the war of 1812 and engaged in farming in Indiana until his death.

Joshua Lindsey, who was the eldest of five sons, was reared on a farm and educated in the pioneer subscription schools of his native state, that were held in the log houses and furnished with slab benches. As a young man he learned the blacksmith's trade, following it in Indiana and Iowa, to which latter state he removed in 1843. Settling in Muscatine county, he continued his trade until April 15, 1855, at which time he started to cross the plains to California in wagons drawn by oxen and horses, and arrived at Downieville in October of that year. In the spring of 1856 Mr. Lindsey located in Gilroy and remained until 1859. Locating then on one hundred and sixty acres of land that he entered, five miles west of Visalia, he remained there six years, then purchased a ranch at Rocky Ford, on the St. Johns river, now owned by his widow. There he engaged in the sheep business, meeting with success and acquiring a competency, and remained there until his death, which occurred September 13, 1887.

In an early day Mr. Lindsey, with two others, built the ditch known as the Moffett, Curtis and Lindsey ditch and when this was acquired by the Wutchumna Ditch Company they gave him a perpetual water right, free from assessment, for granting the company the right of way through his farm.

In 1844, at Moscow, Muscatine county, Iowa, Mr. Lindsey was united in marriage with Sarah Jane Hughes, who was born in Lawrence county, Ohio, October 30, 1826, daughter of Asa and Sarah (Smith) Hughes, both natives of Kentucky. Asa Hughes followed farming in Indiana and Michigan and he and his wife were early settlers of Moscow, Muscatine county, Iowa. From there they removed to a place near Ft. Des Moines. The Indians were hostile and it was nearly two years before they could safely locate on their farm. There the father died, and the mother came to California and spent the remainder of her life, dying in her eightieth year.

They had twelve children, eight of whom grew to maturity, Mrs. Lindsey being the eldest daughter. She was reared to frontier life and early experienced the hardships of pioneer existence. She became the mother of ten children, nine of whom are living, viz.: Asa Wayne, of Nome, Alaska; Sarah J., Mrs. Sterling, of Portland, Ore.; Amanda E., Mrs. Eledge, of Visalia; Mary D., Mrs. Baker, of Los Angeles; Clara Alice, Mrs. DeLong, of Visalia; Lucy, Mrs. Mathias, of Los Angeles; William Mark, of San Francisco; Dora, Mrs. Lee, of Mountainview; and John, of Visalia. After the death of Mr. Lindsey his widow remained on the home ranch engaged in the stock business and in the management of her six hundred and forty-acre ranch until 1901, when she located in Visalia, where she is surrounded by a host of loving friends.

In religious matters Mrs. Lindsey adheres to the doctrines of the Christian Church, and in politics, though not able to cast a vote, wields an influence with those who are, in the support of the Republican party's principles.

Mr. Lindsey was a Mason and a Republican. He met with success in his various business ventures, was much respected for his sterling qualities and did much to improve the county he selected for his home. In all matters that he thought would advance the moral, social and industrial welfare of the county, he always gave his liberal support. At his death Tulare county lost one of her progressive supporters.

HENRY S. GOLDSTEIN. Among the prominent business men of Visalia, Henry S. Goldstein occupies a place of importance, in connection with Leon Goldstein and M. E. Iseman following a mercantile line in this city. A native of Visalia, he was born June 8, 1869, the oldest in a family of six living children. His father, Isaac Goldstein, a native of Nuremberg, Bavaria, was the son of Simon Goldstein, an extensive cattle dealer, his birth having occurred November 17, 1839. Until he was twelve years old he remained a resident of his native country, at which time he removed to Connecticut and entered school. Four years later he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, in company with United States Senator John B. Weller, who later became governor of California. Upon his arrival in San Francisco, Mr. Goldstein engaged as a clerk in the mercantile establishment of Ackerman Brothers, later following the same line in the employ of Godchaux. In 1858 he went to the Fraser river mines, and three years later to the Salmon river mines, this last trip being memorable for the hardships and privations endured. Returning to San Francisco, he remained there until 1862, in which year he located in Visalia, Tulare county, entering the general merchandise establishment of S. Sweet. Four years later, in partnership with D. R. Douglas and Marshall Johnson, he opened a general merchandise business on the corner where the Gray Horse harness shop is now located. Later he was associated with Mr. Sweet for one year on the same corner, then for a time conducted a general merchandise business alone where the Visalia hotel now stands. Returning to his first location, he was associated with S. H. Collins and S. Reinstein, under the firm name of Goldstein & Co. In 1876 the firm dissolved partnership and disposed of their business interests, when Mr. Goldstein engaged in the stock business, being located in various parts of the San Joaquin valley, from which location he shipped cattle and hogs, principally to San Francisco and Los Angeles. In Visalia he married Rebecca Abrams, a native of London, England, and they have six living children.

Reared in Visalia, Henry S. Goldstein attended the public schools in pursuit of an education, eventually entering Heald's Business College of San Francisco, from which he was graduated in 1890. Returning to Visalia, he entered the employ of Sweet & Co. in the capacity of clerk, retaining the position until his location in Santa Barbara. He remained a resident of that city for a short time, when he returned to Visalia and found employment with Wilzinsky Brothers. In 1896 he opened a grocery, queensware and crockery business in partnership with M. E. Iseman, under the firm name of Goldstein & Iseman. Later they took into partnership Leon Goldstein, and have since added hardware, now carrying a full line of groceries, stoves, agricultural implements and general hardware. They have a double store, 60 x 125 feet in dimensions, and a large warehouse on the Santa Fe Railroad, and carry on an extensive wholesale and retail business throughout Tulare county.

Mr. Goldstein is prominent in the public affairs of Visalia, being a member of the Board of Trade, and in various ways indicates his public spirit. Politically he is a Republican in national issues, and fraternally is associated with Visalia Parlor No. 19, N. S. G. W. For the past fifteen years he has been a member of the volunteer fire department of Visalia.

ALEXANDER WOODFALL WHEELER.

As president of the Tulare Building and Loan Association, president of the Petrolia Oil Company, owning land on the west side, and proprietor of the oldest and largest exclusive furniture establishment in Tulare, Mr. Wheeler has an influential position in the commercial circles of Tulare county. His father, William Wheeler, was born in London, England, in April, 1824, and received superior educational advantages, being sent to Oriole College, Oxford, England, and after graduation from that institution he traveled over Europe, completing his education with Sir Montague Barnard. His step-father, Thomas Giles, was a man of prominence in London.

After his marriage to Elizabeth Ellen Brown, a native of Ross, England, during the early '50s William Wheeler came to America and for two years followed the ship-building business at Hoboken, N. J., thence went to Chicago as an employe of the McCormick Company, and about 1857 settled in Ottawa, Ill., where he was employed as a stationary engineer for many years. After coming to California in 1884 he engaged with the Southern Pacific Railroad as a stationary engineer in Tulare and later went to Bakersfield, where he died January 26, 1895. In his native land he had been a communicant of the Church of England and during his residence in America attended the Episcopal Church. On gaining citizenship in the United States he became a student of governmental policies and gave his support to Republican principles. His wife, who died in Tulare, was a daughter of William Brown, an Englishman, who for years and until his death followed the trade of a pattern-maker in Chicago.

The family of William and Elizabeth E. Wheeler consisted of four sons and one daughter, the latter now deceased. The sons are named as follows: Fred W., of Oakland, Cal.; A. W., of Tulare; M. J., of Los Angeles; and Frank H., of Los Angeles. During the residence of the family in Ottawa, Ill., A. W. Wheeler was born October 17, 1859. When only nine years of age he secured employment on a farm and ever afterward made his own way. For six years he clerked in a news store in Ottawa and then returned to farm work for a year. In 1880 he came to California and for a time was employed as an orchardist in San Leandro, Alameda county, later visiting Benicia, where he worked for Baker and Hamilton. During 1882 he came to Tulare, where, with his brother, Fred W., he embarked in the carriage manufacturing business, but after eighteen months gave up his interest in the business in order to homestead a tract of farm land twelve miles south of Tulare. During the nine years of his residence on this property he bored one of the first artesian wells in the county and by this means secured an abundance of water for the carrying on of his grain farm of three hundred and twenty acres. Eventually the land was sold and he returned to Tulare, where after a year with the Southern Pacific Railroad, in January, 1893, he bought the furniture business owned by T. C.

Carruthers, the oldest enterprise of the kind in the town, and the largest exclusive furniture business in the entire county, the stock filling two stories of a building, 50x90 feet in dimensions.

The marriage of Mr. Wheeler united him with Miss Mattie B. Holcomb, who was born at Ravenna, Ohio, and in girlhood came to Tulare with her father, Samuel Holcomb, a mason and builder in this city. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler is a daughter, Claire J. For years Mr. Wheeler has been a participant in local Republican affairs and during 1896 officiated as president of the McKinley Club. Through his connection with the Tulare Board of Trade he has fostered measures for the progress of the city and the development of its business resources. Since coming to this city he has been made a Mason in Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M.; raised to the Royal Arch degree in Tulare Chapter No. 71, and is also identified with the Order of Eastern Star. The Independent Order of Odd Fellows have the benefit of his active work as a member and past grand of Lodge No. 306, at Tulare. In the Encampment he is past chief patriarch, four times was honored by being chosen delegate to the Grand Encampment, and is also past district deputy. In his possession, a most valued relic received from his forefathers, is a Bible, bearing the date of 1700. Although the book was seriously injured in a fire, he still has the larger part of it, and from this may be seen the exquisite care with which the words were printed and pictures drawn by hand, machines not having been invented for that purpose. The family which he represents is an old English race, many of whose members in past generations attained positions of distinction. By his honorable character, commercial enterprise, progressive spirit and upright life he has added honor to an old family name.

REV. W. A. NEVIN. Remote from the stately missions sleeping in the shadows of the past and eloquently bespeaking the guidance of priests and prelates in the dreamy Spanish days, Stanislaus county has pursued her individual spiritual upbuilding, and at a later day reared her props for a strong religious foundation. Fifty years ago the old French miners of French Bar, temporarily forgetting the vices of the rough camps, turned in their sleep to dream again of the teachings of their priests and parents in the land beyond the sea, and awoke to give shape and tangibility to their needs, erecting the little church of St. Louis at La Grange, and assisting at the sacrifice of the mass. The chant from the windowless edifice reverberated through the wilderness, faintly perhaps, but with persistence; and could he foresee the miner might realize the extent of his influence, and behold the near approach of the ideal community, with its many church edifices, its parochial schools, its charities arising to extend their protecting wings over the unfortunate and friendless, its homes for the aged, hospitals, houses of providence for young women, orphan and foundling asylums, and industrial training schools. All these advancements are suggested if not realized by the Catholic church in Stanislaus county to-day, and the zeal, piety and spirit of self sacrifice of her teachers and leaders fill with hope the hearts of her many hundreds of children.

Till 1899 St. Mary's Church of Oakdale was a mission of Modesto, with a small congregation and little actual stimulus for the energies of its members. In that year Rev. W. A. Nevin became the first resident priest, and the mission took on a dignity and importance hitherto impossible. A change has taken place such as one would expect from a man of great culture, learning and large heart, and the church has been added to and improved, a new parish house in mission style has been erected, and surrounding it are luxuriant vegetation, roses, palms, orange and lemon trees, which in itself is one of the crowning glories of California. Different societies have been organized to stimulate the activities of the congregation, many members have been added, and the parish is a vital center of religious and humanitarian zeal. In addition to this responsibility, Rev. Mr. Nevin has charge of St. Joseph's Church at the Twenty-six Mile House, which also has been greatly improved, and which is now one of the prettiest little churches in the county. Under the jurisdiction of Father Nevin also is the old church of St. Louis, LaGrange, which bears well the distinction of being the oldest church building in Stanislaus county, and one of the oldest in the state. Under his devotion and assiduous superintendence, new life has been infused into all of these churches, and his efforts to strengthen Catholicism within his jurisdiction has met with the happiest results. The situation demanded great energy of action and wisdom of administration, but it has been met unflinchingly, and the church's financial and spiritual interests have been directed with prudence and discretion.

The career of Father Nevin presents an unbroken chain of earnest endeavor to live according to his highest light and inspiration. He was born in Rochester, N. Y., December 1, 1856, and is the seventh of fourteen children, thirteen of whom attained maturity, but only two of whom are on the Pacific coast. Besides adorning the ministry, the family contributes to the civic usefulness of the west, and one of the sons, James Nevin, is at present chief of detectives of Portland, Ore. At the age of fifteen he enlisted in Reynolds' Light Artillery and served until the close of the war. He took part in the second battle of Bull Run and in the decisive battle of Gettysburg he stood at one of the guns stationed in the now famous cemetery whence went many a hot and telling shot. Brian and Kate (Kilroy) Nevin, the parents of this large family, were born in County Mayo, Ireland, the former in Castlebar and the latter in Newport. The paternal grandfather, Patrick Nevin, was also born in County Mayo, and his oldest son, James, came to America in 1841, settling in New York state, while the grandfather himself came later, and died in Peterboro, Ontario. Brian learned his trade in his native land, and after his marriage came to Rochester, N. Y., in 1846, remaining there until his removal to Saginaw, Mich., in 1864. In both of these towns he plied his useful trade, and died in the latter in 1874, at the age of fifty-seven. His wife survived him until the spring of 1894, when she was sixty-six years old.

At an early age Father Nevin evidenced a predilection for the priesthood. His education in the public schools of Rochester and Saginaw was supplemented by private instruction relative to his vocation, and at eleven he began the study of the Latin classics and French. In the summer of 1872 he entered St. Mary's College in Cincinnati, Ohio, completing the classics in 1876, and thereafter studying philosophy and theology in the school of St. Francis at Milwaukee, Wis. He was ordained in Detroit, Mich., by Bishop Borgess in February, 1880, for the diocese of Detroit, and ten days later became pastor of the church at Monroe, Mich., continuing thus until his health broke down and necessitated an all around change. Rest was found in extended travel in northern and continental Europe, and upon his return he held a minor position until fully restored to health. The little church at Tawas City, Mich., proved a pleasant and not too arduous responsibility, and in 1896 he came to California as assistant of the church at Oakland. Three years of residence converted him into an ardent enthusiast of the climate and resources of this western state, and his appointment to his present charge in 1899 afforded the field for Christian work since proved of infinite possibility.

ANDREW J. HARRELL. The success which has followed the efforts of Andrew J. Harrell is the result of well-directed ability, coupled with an indomitable will which admits of no defeat. He has established his business life in the lines followed by his father, the late

Jasper Harrell, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume, being variously interested in the commercial activity of Visalia and the stock business in this state and Nevada. Upon the death of his father he assumed control of the vast family estate, bringing to bear in its management the same ability, judgment and energy which have characterized all his independent effort.

Born May 5, 1861, near Visalia, Tulare county, Andrew J. Harrell is the son of Jasper and Martha E. (Bacon) Harrell. The father was one of the foremost citizens of Tulare county, active in its development and upbuilding and the promotion of various important enterprises. Andrew J. Harrell was reared in the vicinity of Visalia, receiving his preliminary education in the public schools, after which he took a commercial course in Heald's Business College of San Francisco. Previous to this he had attended the high school in that city, completing the course with honors, after which he went to Nevada to learn stock raising, which was occupying the greater part of the attention of his father. Shortly afterward he assumed charge of the Jasper Harrell cattle ranch, a position which he held until 1883, when the property was sold to Sparks and Timmin. Returning to California, he located in Los Angeles, where his father owned considerable property, and here he made his home in a residence built by his father, and gave his attention to the supervision of all the family interests in that city. In 1889 his father established the firm of Harrell & Son, Bankers, of Visalia, and he became manager of the same. Two years later a half-interest was purchased in the ranch, which was afterward known as the Sparks-Harrell Company, and as the attention of this vast property occupied so much time, the banking interests were sold, the Producers' Bank being incorporated to succeed them. From that time on Mr. Harrell gave his entire time and attention to the cattle business in Nevada. In 1901 the entire property was purchased, when he assumed control of the large ranch, and after the death of his father took charge of the estate for the family. They still own the Nevada ranch, consisting of one hundred and seventy thousand acres of grazing land and about three million acres of range. They also own the Harrell ranch on Cross creek in this county, consisting of ten thousand acres, where the mother still resides. Mr. Harrell is still a stockholder in the First National Bank of Visalia, in which he is a director.

In San Francisco Mr. Harrell was united in marriage with Ella Crofton, a native of Stockton, Cal., and they are the parents of two children, Andrew Jasper and Elinore Crofton Harrell. In 1899 Mr. Harrell located with his family in Palo Alto, where they have a comfortable home and pleasant surroundings, although he still retains many interests in the city where his business activities lay for so long. Fraternally he is a member of Visalia Parlor No. 19, N. S. G. W.

J. E. Denny

JAMES EDWARD DENNY. The name of James Edward Denny is well known throughout Tulare county, where he has been identified with the business, political and social life for about forty years, and he holds a place of especial prominence among the citizens of Visalia. A native of Bond county, Ill., he was born June 1, 1838, a son of James Denny. The latter, a native of Maryland, immigrated to Illinois before its admission as a state, and in Bond county carried on farming until his death. His wife, formerly Mary White, of North Carolina, also died in the same locality. They were the parents of nine children, eight sons and one daughter.

The fifth child in the family of his parents, James Edward Denny received his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home and in McDonough College, in Macomb, Ill., attending the latter institution two terms. In April, 1854, he started for California, making the perilous trip across the plains by ox-team and being six months en route. Arriving in the state in September, he located near Forest, Sierra county, Cal., where he was employed in the mines until 1860. In partnership with W. G. Sanderson he then bought a ferry (cable power) on the King's river, San Joaquin valley, and conducted the same successfully for four years. In 1864 he came to Visalia, Tulare county, and purchased the Overland livery stables, finding profitable employment until 1866, when he removed to Milerton, then the county seat of Fresno county, where he built a store and established a general merchandise business under the firm name of J. E. Denny & Co. This prospered until 1868, when the entire town was washed away by an overflow. Returning to Visalia Mr. Denny engaged as a clerk in the dry goods establishment of R. E. Hyde for one year, when he entered the hotel business by leasing the Visalia house, under the firm name of Dincker & Denny, who remained the proprietors for about two years. Disposing of his interests Mr. Denny went to Illinois and spent some time in his home in Bond county. Returning to Visalia in the spring of 1872 he was appointed deputy assessor, which office he held until July, when he went into the employ of D. R. Douglass in charge of a general merchandise store in Portersville, Tulare county. In the fall of 1873 he was elected to the combined offices of county clerk, auditor and recorder, serving creditably for a term of two years. Following this he was elected county recorder and auditor for one term; in 1876 was made deputy treasurer for one term; and in 1878 was elected county recorder for one term, discharging the duties incumbent upon him in a capable and efficient manner, and winning commendation from all citizens. In 1880 he returned to the general merchandise business which was conducted under the firm name of Crowley, Denny & Co., for two years, when it was closed out on account of the death of the partner. Mr. Denny then conducted a drug business under the name of Griggs & Denny until 1884, when he bought a tract of land (eleven hundred and eighty acres) in Tulare county and engaged in farming. This, perhaps, was the one exception in the life of Mr. Denny where he did not meet with the expected success. In 1893 he was elected county recorder, and upon the expiration of his term engaged in the real estate business. This latter occupation was interrupted in 1898, when he was elected county treasurer for a term of four years. Since 1902 he has engaged exclusively in the real estate and insurance business, handling property, collecting rents, etc. He is also identified with the development of oil wells, acting as vice-president of the Diana Oil Company (incorporated), of Visalia, and is a stockholder in the Devil's Den Oil Company (incorporated), also of this city.

In Visalia Mr. Denny was united in marriage with Jennie Drouillard, a native of Iowa, whose death occurred in 1882. She left two children. Mabel married C. D. Rogers, of Monterey, Cal., and Lawrence is a freight clerk in the Southern Pacific Railway, located in San Francisco. Fraternally Mr. Denny is prominent in this section. He belongs to Blue Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M., Visalia Chapter No. 44, R. A. M., and Visalia Commandery No. 26, K. T., all of Visalia, and holds the office of treasurer in the Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery. He is also a member of Islam Temple No. 429, N. M. S., of San Francisco. He joined this organization in Forest City in 1860, becoming a member in Forest City Lodge No. 66. He is also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In his political convictions Mr. Denny is a staunch Republican and an active and influential member of the party's counsels. Although a resident in a Democratic county Mr. Denny has held many offices, his personal popularity winning him much support. In 1886 he was nominated on the Republican ticket for state comptroller and although defeated he still ran far ahead of his ticket, even the candidate for governor. He has taken an active and intelligent interest in all public movements and has given his support to those he considered best calculated to advance the general welfare of the community. He was one of the assessors of the Income Tax law of the state in 1864-66. Mr. Denny is representative of the best in American citizenship and among all who know him holds a high place in their regard.

EDWARD STRACHEY PHILLIPPS. To the discernment and far-sighted judgment of Edward Strachey Phillipps is due the establishment and upbuilding of the town of Sultana, Tulare county. After a comprehensive study of the conditions of the county and particularly of this section of it, he foresaw the need of a settlement at this point (then Alta Station, a point on the Santa Fe Railroad), and also the opportunity for advancement of the interests located here. He first purchased one acre of Hugh Logan, which was planted to orange trees, and on the site of the present mercantile establishment of Sultana built the first store which he opened December 25, 1899. The town he named in honor of the Sultana grapes which grow so prolifically in this section. Shortly afterward he secured a postoffice for the town and was named its first postmaster, which office he has held continuously since. In addition to his own home he built three other residences and another store building, and in various ways has added to the improvement and upbuilding of the best interests of the place.

Born in London, Canada, January 12, 1868, he was the son of Capt. J. J. Winsloe Phillipps, a native of England. He held the office of captain in the Sixtieth Rifles (King's Corps), serving in India, and also in Canada during the Fenian excitement. On account of ill health he resigned from the army, and until his death made his home in Torquay, Devonshire, England, on his country place. His wife, formerly Margaret Strachey, was born in England, where her death also occurred. Of their three sons, Ralph K. was a civil officer in Borneo, where his death occurred; Paul W. is located in London; and Edward Strachey is the subject of this review. He was reared to young manhood in Devonshire, England, receiving his education in St. Mark's College, at Windsor. In 1891 he decided to locate in the United States and accordingly came to Iowa, and engaged in farming near Cedar Rapids. During the three years in which he was a resident of that state he made two trips back to his old home in England. In 1894 he came to California and in Auckland engaged in a mercantile enterprise, and shortly afterward secured the appointment of postmaster. He remained in that city until May, 1899, when, with his wife, he took a trip back to England. On their return to America their ship was wrecked on the rocks of Belle Island, in the Straits of Belle Isle, upon which they spent four nights and five days before being rescued. They finally signaled a cattle boat, which took them into Montreal. Many of the passengers perished and all suffered untold horrors during that time. Upon his return to California he established Sultana, and since that time has made his home in this section. A short distance north of Sultana he owns forty acres of land devoted to alfalfa, fifteen acres east of Sultana, in vineyard and alfalfa; forty acres at Orosi, principally in vines, while the balance of his land is devoted to orchard fruits. Through his own success he has induced others to seek a home here, many being willing to profit by his efforts. In addition to all that he has done for the commercial growth of Sultana, he has given his best efforts along educational lines, assisting in securing a school for the Sultana district, and always taking an active interest in the progress and welfare of the community. In 1902 he disposed of his interest in the store to a cousin, L. G. Uniacke.

In Hanford, Kings county, Mr. Phillipps was united in marriage with Leora Campbell, who was born near Visalia, this county, a daughter of H. Campbell and Elizabeth (Bacon) Campbell. They are the parents of one child, Edward Strachey, Jr. In their religious affiliations the family are members of the Episcopal Church.

FRANK L. ALLEN. As a successful rancher Frank L. Allen is located two miles south of Sultana, Tulare county, engaged in the cultivation and improvement of his farm of sixty acres, which is devoted to alfalfa, with the exception of six acres given over to a vineyard and orchard. In addition to his ranching interests he is also engaged in the dairy business, having a herd of thirty Holstein cows, carrying on the work in a modern and up-to-date manner and with every modern equipment, being supplied with a separator, etc. He also raises stock generally, works with poultry and has a fine apiary, combining his interest in such a manner as to bring about the best results from his labor.

Born in Lincoln county, Mo., October 8, 1859, Frank L. Allen was the youngest in a family of eleven children, of whom nine attained maturity and eight are now living. His father, Robert B. Allen, was a native of West Virginia and an early settler in Missouri, becoming a farmer in Lincoln county, where his death occurred. He married Louisa J. Chambers, a native of St. Clair county, Mo. On the paternal farm Frank L. Allen grew to young manhood, attending the public schools until the fall he was eighteen years old, when he entered the Troy high school. The following year (in 1878) he went to Leadville, Colo., during the excitement at that place, and for three and a half years engaged in mining and prospecting. Returning to his home in Missouri he remained there until 1883, when he came to California and locating at Lemoore, Kings county, became manager for the Dave Brownstones' warehouses. This position he retained until 1886, when he accepted a like position in the Jacobs warehouse. The following year he went to Kern county and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres near Delano and improved and cultivated it for five years. Disposing of that property in 1892 he came to Tulare county and in the vicinity of Traver purchased a tract of forty acres. Through a defective title he subsequently lost this property, and in November, 1898, he located upon his present property two miles south of Sultana, which he has since made his home and the scene of his labors. It was formerly a wheat field, but he has since changed the crop to alfalfa and fruit, and by combining with the cultivation his various other interests he has made an unqualified success of his efforts. In 1904 he built an addition to his residence and in many other ways has added to the value of his property.

In Lincoln county, Mo., Mr. Allen was united in marriage with Lucy E. Anderson, a native of Montgomery county, that state. They have one child, Paul E. Active in all matters pertaining to the advancement of the community, Mr. Allen has acted as school trustee and in many other ways has shown his interest and ability.

JOHN C. HODGES, a successful stockman of Tulare county, is a native of the state, his birth having occurred in Tulare county, near Mountain View, April 16, 1876. His father, Charles Hodges, was a native of Virginia and the descendant of a fine southern family. He became a sailor in manhood, his first trip to California being made around the Horn. This trip was made twice before he finally located in California, which he did about 1860, seeking the mines of Eldorado and Placer county immediately after his arrival. For some years he was located in Idaho, Montana and Oregon, where he followed mining for a livelihood. Returning to California he located in Tulare county, first near Lindsay and afterward in the vicinity of Mountain View. He then went to Frazier valley and followed farming and stock-raising until his death, which occurred January 20, 1904. His wife, formerly Josephine Ballard, a native of San Jose, Cal., survives him, now making her home on the old place in Frazier valley.

Of the five sons and four daughters born to his parents, John C. Hodges was the second in order of birth. He received a limited education in the public schools in Tulare county, and in manhood he followed the training of his youth and engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He remained in Tulare county, which place has always been his home, carrying on his operations in Pleasant valley, Frazier valley and the vicinity of Visalia, and in 1902 he located in the mountains in the vicinity of Mountain View, where he became the owner of one thousand acres. He is now engaged extensively in the raising of stock, while he also carries on agricultural pursuits to a limited extent.

In Frazier valley Mr. Hodges was united in marriage with Proda May Gill, a native of Yokohl valley, Cal., and they are the parents of one daughter, Itha Marie, who is at home. In his political convictions Mr. Hodges is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

VICTOR ELSWORTH SLOAN. The ability which Mr. Sloan has evidenced in his work as a horticulturist since locating in Tulare county has won for him the respect of his fellow citizens as well as a competence, the result of energy and industry. He is located near Orosi engaged in the cultivation of a twenty-acre vineyard, as well as having considerable land devoted to the raising of peaches. Born August 31, 1863, in Canton, Mo., he is the second child in the family of his parents, George W. and Margaret (Hodges) Sloan, the former of whom now resides in Newark, Mo., while the latter died when her son was ten years old. George W. Sloan was a native of Indianapolis, Ind., removing in manhood to Canton, Mo., where he engaged as a manufacturing cooper. During the Civil war he served as a member of the Thirteenth Illinois Regiment of Infantry. Of the four children born to himself and wife three are now living.

Victor Elsworth Sloan is the only one of this family who has sought a home in California. He was reared in his native state, receiving his education principally in the public schools of Newark. In 1882 he came west, first finding employment in Santa Clara in orchard work, remaining so occupied for one year. Following this he located in Pleasanton, Alameda county, and engaged in the same employment for seven years, in 1890 coming to Orosi, Tulare county. He purchased the twenty acres upon which he now resides, planting it to vineyard, and also engaging in the nursery business, raising fifteen thousand Muir peach trees. Since that time he has purchased other property, having a twenty-acre tract about a mile from his home given over to the cultivation of Muir peaches, while he has also improved a tract of thirty-seven acres one mile north of this place, which he has also planted to Muir peaches.

In Orosi Mr. Sloan was united in marriage with Mary Sallee, a native of Knox county, Mo., and they are now the parents of four children, namely: Myrtle, Clarence, Clifford and Arthur. In his political affiliations Mr. Sloan is a Republican and is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he has officiated as trustee, and also as superintendent of the Sunday-school. He takes an active interest in all matters pertaining to the general welfare of the community and especially in educational movements, having acted for some time as school trustee. Fraternally he is quite prominent, being identified with the Woodmen of the World, and formerly with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias.

G. L. LONG, M. D., was born in Mercer county, Pa., July 31, 1858. His residence in California dates from September, 1882.

WILLIAM GILL. An intelligent, prosperous and enterprising stockman, William Gill, of Tulare county, enjoys a wide popularity both for his business ability and his personality. He is a native of Ringgold county, Iowa, where he was born May 14, 1870, a son of Samuel Gill. The family history will be found more at length in the biographical sketch of L. L. Gill, on another page of this volume. William Gill received his education in the common schools of Iowa and California, whither his father removed when he was a lad. He engaged in the stock business with his father until 1893, when he entered upon independent operations. Later he located in the foothills back of Portersville, Tulare county, and engaged in the buying, selling and raising of stock. In 1899 he began buying land in partnership with his brother and they now own thirty thousand acres, all given over to the raising of stock. His home, which is eleven miles east of Portersville, is presided over by his wife, formerly Josephine Adeline McKiernan, a native of the state, to whom he was united in marriage in Visalia. She is a daughter of John M. and Nancy (Dunn) McKiernan, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Arkansas, who came overland to California. Mr. and Mrs. Gill are the parents of three children, all of whom are at home, namely: Effie Inez, Ralph and Ernest.

In his political convictions Mr. Gill is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is a man of energy and unusual ability, inheriting the talent which has been demonstrated in his work as a stockman. Broad-minded and liberal, he is also a citizen who ranks with those upon whom the honor of the public may safely rest, and to whom much credit is due for the force he exerts for the moral welfare of the community.

EDWARD STEPHEN O'BRIEN, M. D. Occupying a position of prominence among the successful and best-known physicians of Merced county is Edward S. O'Brien, M. D., who has been in almost continuous practice in the city of Merced since 1881. Bringing to his professional work a well-trained mind, enthusiastic zeal, and a sympathetic nature, he has met with rare success in his labors, and has won the respect and esteem of his numerous patrons, and of the community in which he resides. A son of the late Bernard O'Brien, he was born February 24, 1854, in Boston, Mass.

A native of Ireland, Bernard O'Brien was born in the city of Waterford, of excellent ancestry, his mother, whose maiden name was Power, belonging to one of the most noted families of county Waterford. Emigrating to this country when young, he was prosperously engaged in mercantile pursuits in Boston until the breaking out of the Civil war. In 1861, selling his store in Boston, he enlisted in Company A, First Maine Cavalry, under Captain Thaxter, and at once went to the front. During Banks' retreat, in the Shenandoah valley, he was severely wounded, receiving two saber cuts, one over the head and the other across the right side of his face, inflicting such serious wounds that he was soon honorably discharged from the army on account of physical disability. Coming by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California in 1863, he located in Mendocino county, where he engaged in stock-raising and subsequently became identified with the transportation of lumber, being financially interested in several schooners employed in the lumber trade. On retiring from business pursuits, he removed to San Francisco, where he resided until his death, at the age of seventy-three years. His wife, whose maiden name was Margaret Walsh, survived him, and is now a resident of San Francisco. He was a true blue Republican in politics, and a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Of the nine children born of their union, five are living, Edward Stephen being the only resident, however, of the San Joaquin valley.

At the age of eleven years Edward S. O'Brien left Boston, and came by way of Panama, on the ship Golden Gate, to San Francisco, from there joining his father in Mendocino county. After attending the Mendocino schools for awhile he completed his early education in the public schools of San Francisco. For two years thereafter he was in the employ of the J. G. Jackson Company, in which his father had an interest, going as a sailor on board a schooner engaged in the coasting trade, running from Coos Bay to San Diego. Becoming interested then in the study of medicine, Mr. O'Brien spent a year in the office of Dr. W. A. McCornack, in Mendocino, after which he continued his studies under Dr. C. G. Kenyon, of San Francisco. Subsequently entering the medical department of the College of the Pacific, which was afterward merged in the Cooper Medical College, he was graduated from there in November, 1879, with the degree of M. D. During the last two years of his college course, Dr. O'Brien, with his classmates, Dr. George Adams and Dr. John F. Dillon, were internes at the United States Marine Hospital, securing the position by competitive examination, and being the first board of internes appointed in San Francisco.

Alfred Gray

After his graduation Dr. O'Brien continued his studies for a year with his former tutor, Dr. Kenyon. In 1881 he began the practice of his profession in Merced, and has been here most of the time since, being the longest-established physician in the city. He has built up an extensive practice in medicine and surgery, his office being now located in the Packer Building, on Main street, and by his professional knowledge and skill has won the respect and esteem of the medical fraternity and of the community. The doctor is now serving as county health officer, and for many years has been county physician. For four terms, from 1885 until 1893, he was county coroner. In 1897, Dr. O'Brien was appointed, by Governor Budd, superintendent of the Lone Reform School, in Amador county, but at the end of a year in that capacity resigned the position, and resumed his practice in Merced. By thrift, sound financial judgment and keen foresight, the doctor has accumulated a fine estate, and in addition to owning a valuable residence in the city has good business property. He was one of the organizers, and one of the first presidents, of the Merced Milling Company, which erected the Merced Flour Mill, with a capacity of one hundred and fifty barrels a day, and a large warehouse, and is still a director, and a large stockholder in the plant. The doctor also has large mining interests in Mariposa county, owning the Mabel and Ethel quartz mines, which are rich in mineral ores.

Dr. O'Brien married, in San Francisco, Mary Ragesdale, who was born in California, a daughter of John Ragesdale, who came here in 1849, and was engaged in mining and stock-raising for many years, and was also an educator of some note. He spent his last years in Nevada. The doctor and Mrs. O'Brien have two children, namely: Mabel Genevieve, a graduate of the high school, is now attending the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, being a member of the class of 1906; and Ethel, a pupil in the Merced high school, belonging to the class of 1906. The doctor is surgeon for the Merced district of the Santa Fe Railway, and is a member of the Pacific Coast Railroad Surgeons' Association. He is also a member of the American and State Medical associations, and of the San Joaquin Valley and the Merced County Medical societies, being also president of the latter society. He belongs to the Cooper Medical College Alumni Association, and is an active member and ex-president of the Merced Board of Trade. Politically Dr. O'Brien is a steadfast Democrat, and served as chairman of the Democratic county central committee. Fraternally the doctor is a member and past master of LaGrange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M.; of Merced Chapter No. 9, R. A. M.; a member and past grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; and of the Woodmen of the World.

ALFRED FAY. Not only is Mr. Fay a pioneer of California, but as a child he saw much of frontier life in different sections of the east. His experiences have been many and varied. Hardships not a few have impeded his progress. Discouragements have thwarted his plans more than once. In spite of these, however, with a courage and optimism that seem part of his nature, he pursued his way quietly and with unwearied perseverance, and now, in the twilight of a busy life, he can enjoy the fruits of his labors in the possession of a competency sufficient for all needs, and in the possession also of that which is more desirable than wealth, the esteem of associates and affectionate regard of friends.

In the town of Tully, county of Onondaga, N. Y., Mr. Fay was born May 13, 1827, being a son of David and Lucretia (Farr) Fay, natives respectively of Springfield, Mass., and Onondaga county, N. Y. His father, who throughout life followed farming as a means of livelihood, in 1843 moved by wagon to Illinois, passing through Ohio over the corduroy roads and stopping for the winter in Indiana four miles from Laporte. The spring of 1844 found the family at their new location in McHenry county, Ill., where the father entered a tract of government land and improved a farm. His wife died in Wisconsin, where he also passed away, having married again. In his family there were ten children and all attained mature years, but only four are now living. One of the sons, David, came to California in 1861, and now resides in Los Angeles. Another son, Alvin, who came in 1865, is also living in Los Angeles.

In order of birth Alfred Fay was the second among the ten children. When sixteen years of age he accompanied his parents by wagon to Illinois. While they were traveling through Ohio they met the family of Ichabod Paddock, who also were removing to the newer regions of the west. Mr. Fay's mother soon found that she had known Mrs. Paddock when they were girls in the same neighborhood, and the acquaintance of their childhood was gladly renewed, the two families traveling together as far as Laporte, Ind. From there the Fay family went to Illinois. The Paddocks stayed in Indiana for a time, then removed to Lafayette county, Wis. Among the children of Ichabod and Mary Ann Paddock was a daughter, Elsie, a native of Catteraugus, N. Y., and about twelve years old when the two families met. The youth of sixteen was pleasantly impressed, but the two drifted apart. Some years later, when he was peddling, he accidentally met one of her brothers and learned that the family were living near Darlington, Wis. Thus he was given an opportunity to renew his acquaintance with the young lady, and on New Year's day of 1852 they were married at her home in Wisconsin.

Prior to this Mr. Fay had experienced many of the hardships of frontier existence. When he commenced to work on an Illinois farm, in the spring of 1844, he used ten oxen in breaking the prairie, plowing a furrow of twenty-six inches. All around was open prairie, on which scarcely an attempt had been made at cultivation. For many miles in every direction not a furrow had been turned in the soil, and the country remained in the primeval condition of nature. Chicago was forty-five miles distant and there were but two houses in all the intervening space. When he was twenty-two he started a peddling wagon and traveled through Boone, Winnebago, Stephenson and Jo Daviess counties, Ill., and Rock, Green, Lafayette and Grant counties, Wis. After four years of this work he opened a general store at Darlington, where, under the firm title of A. Fay & Co., he built up the largest mercantile business in the entire county, also erected the best brick store in the county. In 1860 he sold his property there and came via New York and Panama to California, being a passenger on the North Star from New York, and on the T. C. Twichell up the Pacific ocean, landing at San Francisco November 14, 1860. During his first two years in the state he carried on farm pursuits in Napa county. From there he moved to San Mateo county, thirty miles south of San Francisco, where he bought four hundred and eighty acres of raw land and developed it into a fine farm, with substantial residence, and all equipments for the raising of stock and grain, together with the carrying on of a large dairy business.

Meanwhile Mr. Fay had made occasional trips to the San Joaquin valley, where his wife had relatives living near Hanford. On one of these visits he purchased one hundred and sixty acres on section 21, four miles northwest of Tulare. November 30, 1884, he settled on this property and took up the task of making improvements. On Tuesday he began to build a barn and by Friday the structure was enclosed and roofed so that he could store his hay within. Other buildings were erected, an orchard of trees for family use was planted, the facilities for a dairy business were introduced, also the necessary equipment for raising horses, cattle and hogs. Since 1864 he has engaged in raising standard horses and few men are more familiar with the good points in horses than is he. As a judge of such stock he has few superiors. Of his quarter section he has put sixty-six acres into alfalfa, all of which can be irrigated from the People's ditch. In every respect the place is one of the best improved homesteads of Tulare county and its hospitable owner and his wife join in welcoming beneath their roof those whom business relations or the ties of friendship bring to their home. For many years Mr. Fay officiated as a school director and his interest in educational affairs has been continuous and strong. Many years ago he was made a Mason in Redwood City Lodge, and now has his membership in Olive Branch Lodge No. 269, F. & A. M., also, with his wife, belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star, and in religious connections affiliates with the Baptist Church.

CARLETON JAMES SHANNON. Well and favorably known throughout Tulare county, where he has been a resident since 1880, Carleton James Shannon is prominently mentioned among the representative citizens of this section. He was born in Colborne, Ontario, June 9, 1870, the second in a family of four sons and one daughter, of whom all are living. His parents, Robert and Deborah (Richardson) Shannon, left their farm in Ontario and came to California in 1891, locating on a farm near Visalia, where Mr. Shannon's death occurred. His widow survives him and now makes her home in Farmersville.

Carleton James Shannon was reared in Ontario on the parental farm until he was sixteen years old, attending the public schools in pursuit of an education. When sixteen he became dependent upon his own resources, finding employment for three years in the vicinity of his home. At the end of that time he was making only $15 per month and he concluded to try his fortunes in the west. He accordingly came to California in 1880, reaching Tulare county with but $20 left of all he had saved. He at once found employment with J. R. Robinson, remaining with him for twenty months, after which he rented a farm of John Frans and engaged in stock raising for two years. He then rented the R. H. Stevens ranch in the vicinity of his present farm, upon which he remained for five years, then returned to the ranch of Mr. Frans, with whom he worked in partnership in feeding and selling stock. Through good management he acquired sufficient means to purchase a farm of one hundred and forty acres in 1807, the nucleus of his present ranch, in 1900 purchasing two hundred and forty acres more, and in 1902 another hundred acres, making in all owned at present four hundred and eighty acres located on sections 32 and 33, of township 19, range 25, located five miles northeast of Tulare. He has improved and cultivated the property to the best advantage, taking a pride in bringing the ranch to rank with the best in the county. Seventy acres are devoted to Muscat grapes, the balance being in alfalfa, grain and pasture, all under the Farmers' ditch, of which company Mr. Shannon is a director. He also feeds cattle and hogs, while he raises a large number. The summer of 1903 he spent at Santa Cruz for recreation, and in the fall of the year engaged in general farming and stock raising on his home place.

In Fresno Mr. Shannon married Mrs. Lulu B. (Jordan) Smith, who was born near Visalia, a daughter of James B. Jordan. By her former marriage Mrs. Shannon had one son, Leslie Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Shannon have one son, Gordon. Fraternaly Mr. Shannon belongs to Four Creeks Lodge No. 92, I. O. O. F., of Visalia, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

ROBERT WEST MCFARLAND. Self-made, in the best sense implied by the term, Robert West McFarland enjoys to an unusual degree the confidence and esteem of all who have come to know him. Both as a farmer and in his active participation in public affairs in Tulare county, Mr. McFarland has shown himself to be possessed of unusual ability, energy and foresight, and with a personality which wins him friends wherever he goes he has made a success in his life work. In 1900 he located on his present property, eight miles east of Portersville, the thousand acres of land in this tract belonging to his wife and daughter.

Born in Macoupin county, Ill., June 3, 1837, Mr. McFarland is a son of James McFarland, who was born in Christian county, Ky., May 25, 1810. In 1835 the elder man removed to Macoupin county, Ill., and there engaged as a merchant for a time, and later conducted a drovers' market. He was located in this work at St. Louis and finally he went to Henry county, Mo., and engaged in farming and stock-raising. In Jasper county, where he afterward removed, he followed the same occupation. Upon the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in a Kansas troop and after the close of hostilities resumed his peaceful life in Jasper county. He had become a prominent man in the county, however, and in 1865 was elected to the state legislature on the Republican ticket, having gone into the war a Democrat and come out a Republican. Until his death he remained active in this party, and was also active in the Grand Army of the Republic. His death occurred in Jasper county at the age of eighty-seven years. Previous to his enlistment for service in the Civil war, Mr. McFarland had been attacked by bushwhackers and hung, but was cut down, after which he immediately entered the army under General Blunt. He was the descendant of an old southern family, his grandfather, James, of North Carolina, having served in the Revolutionary war, entering at the age of seventeen years, and serving until the close of hostilities, after which he removed to Kentucky and died in that state. His father, Robert, was a native of Halifax county, Va., in manhood becoming a resident of Kentucky, where he also died. James McFarland married in manhood Sarah E. Maze, a native of Tennessee, who died in Missouri. They were the parents of three children, of whom Robert West McFarland was the oldest.

Mr. McFarland was educated in the primitive schools of Missouri, and began farming in Jasper county in young manhood. He bought land and continued his operations there until 1860, when he located in Henry county. There he farmed until 1879, after which he engaged in a mercantile enterprise for ten years. He became active in public affairs, taking a prominent part in the township organization of the county and holding many offices of trust and responsibility. Deciding to locate in the more remote west he came to California in 1889, settling in Portersville, where he engaged as a merchant until 1899. He then closed out his business and the following year removed to his present location, where he is engaged in carrying on farming operations.

In Missouri Mr. McFarland married Sarah E. Dunning, a native of Henry county, Mo., and a daughter of Shadrach and Adah (Morris) Dunning, the former a native of Kentucky, and the latter of North Carolina, but reared and married in Kentucky. They died in Henry county, Mo. Mr. and Mrs. McFarland have five living children, namely: J. A. S., located on the home ranch; Ada B., at home; Martha, the wife of O. L. Brough, of Portersville; and Chester A. and Archie A., both at home. One son, John H., died at the age of twenty-nine years. He was associated with his father in the mercantile business at Portersville. Politically Mr. McFarland was a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, but was a member of the Populist party from 1892 to 1896. He has always taken an active interest in public affairs, and in 1900 was elected supervisor of District No. 1, by the Democratic party, and re-elected by a large majority in 1904. Fraternally he is a member of Portersville Lodge No. 303, F. & A. M., and also belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star.

N. J. WESTMAN. An important place in the community is invariably won by representatives of certain European countries, not the least of which is Sweden. From this country of sturdy citizens has come many residents of California, of whom N. J. Westman, of Orosi, Tulare county, is named as representative of the best class. He was born in Sweden, September 6, 1870, the youngest in a family of three children, two of whom are located in America. His father, N. O. Westman, was born, reared and educated in Sweden, in manhood becoming a farmer and owning today a comfortable home, known as the Knoll Farm. He still survives his wife, formerly Anna Margareta Larson, also a native of that country, who died in 1874.

The boyhood of N. J. Westman was passed upon the paternal farm, and while attending the public schools he also received the practical training which has contributed no little to his successful career. Upon attaining the age of sixteen years he left school and gave his entire attention to work on his father's farm, remaining so occupied for two years. In 1889 he came to the United States, and immediately after landing in New York City he crossed the continent to Nebraska, where, in Wahoo, Saunders county, he found employment on a farm at $12 per month. To make this trip he had gone in debt $152.85, and to the payment of this sum he devoted his wages. For three years he remained in that location, coming to California in 1892. In Tehama county, near Red Bluff, he found employment on a farm, in the fall of the same year finding work on an extensive ranch, helping on a thrasher. In the same year he located in Oakland and there followed a prosecution of the carpenter's trade, remaining so occupied until June, 1893, after which he worked for J. W. Phillips, of that city. In 1897 he went to Malaga and bought a tract of twenty acres, which he planted to vineyard and alfalfa, erecting buildings and making that his home for two years. On account of so much alkali in the ground he was not satisfied with his location, and accordingly sold out in 1899, when he came to Orosi, Tulare county, here purchasing another twenty acres. This was only slightly improved at the time of his purchase, since which time he has given his best efforts to make of it a comfortable home and a credit to the ranches of the section. For a time he conducted a vineyard of forty acres near Tulare, meeting with the same success which has characterized his entire career. Returning to his own farm he has since given his entire time and attention to its improvement and cultivation. He has put up comfortable and substantial buildings, has a five-acre orchard and an eight-acre vineyard, the rest of the property being devoted to alfalfa. He has all modern improvements, having a railroad from his drying grounds to the sulphur houses. In partnership with his brother he also owns twenty acres in Orosi, all devoted to vineyard, and also owns ten lots in the same town. Mr. Westman has proved himself one of the most substantial men of the town, giving material assistance in its upbuilding by a prosecution, to some extent, of his trade.

In Oakland Mr. Westman was united in marriage with Anne Hegstrom, a native of Westmanland, Sweden, and they have one daughter, Edith Violet. Fraternally Mr. Westman is associated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Beavers. Politically he is a staunch Republican. A member of the Baptist Church, he has been active in its support, having served as trustee for some time.

ALMOND B. CLEMENT. The extensive farming interests of Almond B. Clement justly place him among the representative men of that class in this section of Tulare county. He is now engaged in the cultivation and improvement of nine hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity of Springville, where he carries on principally the raising of stock and hay. A native of Barry county, Mich., he was born July 23, 1856, a son of Isaac Clement. The elder man was a native of New York state, who located in Barry county, Mich., in 1870, and engaged as a pioneer farmer. Later he removed to Floyd county, Iowa, and followed the same occupation in that locality; then, in 1873, settled near Lincoln, Neb., from there removing to Ada county, Idaho, in 1881, where he engaged in fruit growing and general farming. Three years later he came to California and located near Springville, Tulare county, and later near Globe, and in 1902 sold out and now resides with his daughter in the vicinity of Springville at the age of seventy-four years. His wife, formerly Savilla M. Clark, was born in New York state and died in California, leaving a family of three sons and three daughters. One son and two daughters were by a former marriage.

The eldest in his father's family, Almond B. Clement was reared in the various localities where his parents lived, receiving his education in the public schools of Michigan, Iowa and Nebraska. He began farming in Nebraska but removed with his father to Idaho and also came to California with him in 1884. He located upon the place where he now lives, owning nine hundred and sixty acres, of which he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres. His property is three miles north of Springville in the mountains, and is principally devoted to stock-raising. In Idaho he married Sarah A. Wittel, a native of Shelby county, Ohio, and the daughter of John Wittel, of Pennsylvania, who came to Idaho in 1884 and to California ten years later, locating near Chico, Butte county, where he is now engaged in farming and fruit-raising. Mr. and Mrs. Clement have two children, Elzie F. and Alpha M., both at home. Politically Mr. Clement is a Democrat, and in the interests of this party has served in various offices, at present filling that of clerk of the school board of the Mountain View district.

MILES J. NIGHTINGALE. There is no such word as luck in the lexicon of business men, for experience has taught them most convincingly that success is the result of persistent application of intelligent methods that demand time for their development. To executive ability and organized sense must be added public confidence and a thorough knowledge of the field to be occupied, which latter can be gained only by steady approaches. Sudden acquisition of wealth is of rare occurrence and usually followed by speedy and irremediable collapse. In any event, one would never intimate that Miles J. Nightingale, the popular proprietor of the largest and finest mercantile establishment in Oakdale, owes his success to any adventitious aid. His present enviable position is due to an inheritance of English thrift, manly energy, sterling honesty, inflexible sense of justice, tireless energy and intimate acquaintance with business methods. He had the patience to wait when he started out in life, and he never spent any time in watching the clock.

Mr. Nightingale was born in Philadelphia, Pa., August 10, 1843, and is the only son in a family of three children. His parents, John and Sarah (Grime) Nightingale, and his paternal grandfather, Miles, were born in Bolton, Lancashire, England, and both his father and grandfather were bleachers in cotton mills in England. John Nightingale followed his trade after immigrating to Philadelphia, and when Miles J. was nine years old, in 1852, came to California, walking across the Isthmus, and disembarking on the west side of San Francisco. At first his field of activity was a farm in San Joaquin county, and he later lived near Stockton, in time following teaming and farming and mining in Calaveras county. His death occurred in Stockton about 1807, when between seventy-seven and eighty years of age. When Miles J. was thirteen his mother and sister came with him to California, sailing on the steamer Illinois to Aspinwall, and from Panama to San Francisco on the steamer Sonora, being on the way twenty-four days. He was a strong and rugged lad, and immediately went to work on a farm near Linden, at the age of twenty apprenticing to a blacksmith named William P. Miller, of Stockton, for three years. Possessing mechanical ingenuity, he made an excellent workman, and after finishing his apprenticeship remained with his employer for eighteen years, making in all a business association of twenty-one years. From 1872 until 1884 he had charge of the works as superintendent, and during the latter year stepped out of the business in order to purchase his father's old farm of one hundred and sixty acres near Linden, which he operated four years, and then rented to a tenant. This farm remained in his possession until 1902.

In the meantime, in 1888, Mr. Nightingale located in Oakdale and bought an interest in a carriage shop, operating the same under the firm name of Nightingale & Stearne for six years. Disposing of his interest to J. M. Harray, he entered mercantile ranks by buying the small tinshop of A. S. Dingley, shortly after the election of the latter to the office of county treasurer. The small shop was soon enlarged and started on a more ambitious career, finally taking on the dignity of a hardware establishment, and eventually graduating into a general merchandising business. At the present time the concern occupies space covering 50x200 feet, and a basement, besides warehouses for the storage of heavy agricultural implements, windmills, plumbing apparatus, and all requirements which come under the head of hardware. The general merchandise includes everything which comes under that head, selected with due regard to the size and requirements of the town, the status of its citizens, and its prestige as a leading mercantile center. His rise has been gradual, steady and substantial, and backed by the confidence of men who have known him as a blacksmith and small merchant, and who repose unlimited faith in his maintenance of the high standard established in his youth. His influence is nowhere more apparent than with the people who serve his interests as clerks and assistants, and who look to him as an example of well won and substantial success. He has the faculty of securing from them their best possible efforts, and of inducing a co-operative feeling beneficial alike to employe and employer. If he preaches the gospel of industry and application, he carries out in his own life an example of its application. He is as faithful to the best interests of his employes as he expects them to be to his interests.

In Alpine county, Cal., Mr. Nightingale married Florence Mercer, a native of Calaveras county, and daughter of William Mercer, a native of England, and a pioneer miner of Calaveras and Nevada counties, Cal. The only child of this union, John Mercer Nightingale, is a student at the University of California, and will graduate in the class of 1905. The political opinions held by Mr. Nightingale are grounded in a faith that comes of much thought and study, and he is from conviction a Republican, although taking no open or active part in election campaigns. The mercantile career of Mr. Nightingale leaves him strong and alert, with faith unshaken in humanity and with heart untainted by avarice. He is devotedly attached to his family, and the same good fellowship extends to all his relations, and is manifested in unostentatious aid to those requiring it, and affection and sympathy for all.

SETH SMITH. Among the men who have been largely instrumental in developing the rich resources of central California is Seth Smith of Visalia, a skillful civil engineer, who has, mayhap, done more surveying throughout Tulare county than any other one person. An expert in his line of industry, he has been professionally connected with the establishment of many of the leading projects of the county, working for the government, for incorporated companies and for private individuals, his knowledge, experience and judgment rendering him especially competent as a surveyor. Of good old New England stock, he was born April 19, 1846, near Chatham, Columbia county, N. Y., which was also the birthplace of his father, David Smith. His grandfather, Seth Smith, was born in Massachusetts, where his parents settled on coming to the United States from England, but died in Columbia county, N. Y., where he carried on farming for many years. He was the representative of one of the early Quaker families of New England.

Brought up in Columbia county, N. Y., David

Smith followed the free and independent calling in which he was reared, and was also actively engaged in business near Chatham. He married Lovisa Palmer, who was born in Columbia county, N. Y., the daughter of Asa P. Palmer, a farmer, who removed there from Rhode Island. The Palmers, who were of Scotch-Irish descent and prominent Baptists, came from England to America, the emigrant ancestor locating in Rhode Island. Of the union of David and Lovisa (Palmer) Smith nine children were born, all of whom grew to years of maturity, and two are still living, namely: Emma J., wife of P. H. Pultz of Chatham, N. Y., and Seth.

Having acquired a practical education in the public schools of his native town, Seth Smith remained at home until the fall of 1864, when, in the employ of the government, he went south, and at Alexandria, Va., served in the quartermaster's department until after the surrender of Richmond. Returning north to New York City, he remained in the employ of Leeds & Minor, commission merchants, for nearly two years. Going to Louisville, Pottawatomie county, Kans., Mr. Smith worked for a year, from January, 1867, until January, 1868, in the office of the county surveyor. The following year he served as deputy county surveyor under P. Y. Baker. He was subsequently elected county surveyor, and was afterward re-elected, serving in that capacity until 1874, when he resigned. Coming then to the Pacific coast, Mr. Smith began surveying with his brother George, then county surveyor of Tulare county, serving as deputy county surveyor and civil engineer. Subsequently being elected county surveyor, he held the position from March, 1879, until January, 1883. Becoming the Democratic candidate for county assessor in 1882, he was elected by a majority of six hundred and seven, and in 1886 was re-elected by an increased majority, serving from January, 1883, until January, 1891. Mr. Smith afterward continued as surveyor and civil engineer for several years, surveying canals and ditches, being during the time in the employ of nearly every ditch company in the county, his skill and knowledge rendering his services of inestimable value. In 1898 Mr. Smith was elected county surveyor, and in 1902 was re-elected to the same position by a handsome majority for another term of four years, the first term extending from January, 1899, until January, 1903, and the present term from the latter date until January, 1907. He is also deputy United States mineral surveyor. He is a man of excellent business tact and ability. He is interested in the Jennings Ditch Water Company, of which he is director and president, and owns a good ranch of thirty-five acres, all under the ditch, on which he raises alfalfa and keeps a fine herd of full-blooded Jersey cattle. On Grove street, Visalia, Mr. Smith has a fine residence, which he and his family occupy.

In Pottawatomie county, Kans., Mr. Smith married Mary L. Anderson, a native of Washington, Ohio, by whom he has had six children, three of whom grew to years of maturity; George D., graduate of a business college, is deputy county surveyor; LeRoy G., a graduate of the University of California and of the Hastings Law School, is engaged in the practice of his profession at Dinuba, Cal.; and Oscar C., a student at the University of California, died in Oakland in August, 1904. Politically Mr. Smith is actively identified with the Democratic party, sustaining its principles by voice and vote. Fraternally he is a member of Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M.; of Visalia Chapter, R. A. M.; and of the Scottish Rite. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS MARTIN came to California in 1875, and for a number of years followed various pursuits in counties along the coast. It was not until 1882 that he purchased land in Fresno county, four miles west of Selma, and the following year he took up his residence here, and has made it his home ever since. Upon his fine six hundred and sixty acre ranch Mr. Martin is engaged in stock-raising and general farm pursuits, about two hundred acres of his land being devoted to the raising of alfalfa, which yields enormous returns.

A descendant of a well-known Canadian family, and born in the city of Ontario, May 7, 1852, Mr. Martin is a son of Hugh and Margaret (Kirkwood) Martin, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Canada, where she is still living at the advanced age of eighty-five years. When twelve years old, Hugh Martin accompanied his father, William Martin, from Ireland to Canada, and settled in Ontario, in which locality the whole of his after-life was spent. When grown to manhood he followed the occupation of teaching for a number of years, afterward turning his attention to farm pursuits in the neighborhood of Campbell, and it was there that he died at the age of seventy. Ten children were born to him and his wife as follows: Robert and William, deceased; John, a resident of Dakota; Mary Jane and Joseph, also deceased; Thomas; George, a contractor and builder of Yolo county, Cal.; Maggie, a resident of Canada; Hugh, also a contractor and builder, residing at Berkeley, Cal.; and Annie, deceased.

The recipient of but a limited education, gleaned from the common schools of his native place, Mr. Martin, during his youth and early manhood, assisted his father in farm pursuits, but in 1875 he followed the tide of immigration to the westward coast of the United States, locating in Sonoma county, Cal., where he rented land and followed dairy farming for five years near Petaluma. In 1881 he discontinued this business and went into Yolo county, where he purchased a half interest in a threshing machine, but the following year (1882), in looking about for a good investment, he was attracted by the favorable outlook in Fresno county and purchased land near Selma. Returning to Yolo county, he remained there long enough to dispose of his interests to advantage, and in 1883 proceeded to his recently acquired land, which he has improved and cultivated ever since. By additional purchases made from time to time, his ranch has grown to its present proportions—six hundred and sixty acres—and to-day he has one of the finest farms in this vicinity.

The political preference of Mr. Martin is given to the Democratic party, and in 1898 he was the choice of his party for county supervisor, being re-elected to this office in 1902 from the fourth district of Fresno county. He was also chosen director of the Selma irrigation district and his interest in educational affairs is evinced by his excellent services as a member of the local school board. He is allied with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World of Selma. He married Mrs. Maud Jackson, a native of Missouri, who had two children, Clarence and Nina, by her former marriage.

CHARLES CAMPBELL. The ranch of Charles Campbell, consisting of twenty acres located in the vicinity of Orosi, Tulare county, and devoted to the cultivation of a vineyard and orchard fruits, is an evidence of the ability and energy which distinguishes this citizen. He was born in Boston, Mass., April 7, 1856, inheriting from New England ancestors the sturdy qualities which have contributed to his success. His father, W. H. Campbell, was born in Nova Scotia, of Scotch parentage, and in manhood he became a contractor and builder. He married Jessie Miller, also of Nova Scotia and of Scotch ancestry, and of this union were born nine children, of whom Charles Campbell is the eighth child.

Reared to young manhood in Boston, Charles Campbell found employment in maturity as a clerk. This position he retained until October, 1879, when he came as far west as Denver, Colo., and entered the employ of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad as baggage master. Four years later he resigned this position, and, locating in Montrose county, same state, engaged in farming and stock raising, meeting with a success which justified his continuance in the same for eight years. Deciding to settle in California on account of his wife's health, in May, 1893, he came to Orosi, and the following year bought the twenty acres which now form his ranch. This property had but few improvements, but since his purchase he has transformed it into a comfortable home, and has cultivated the land in such a way as to make it very profitable. He has ten acres planted to vineyard, while the balance is given over to orchard and alfalfa. He has built a comfortable residence, new barns and outbuildings, and his drying ground and packing house are connected by a short railroad. In every respect his property is modern and up to date, and is a credit to the horticultural interests of the section.

In Boston, Mass., Mr. Campbell was united in marriage with Elizabeth McDonald, a native of Nova Scotia, and they are now the parents of three children, namely: Chester, a student in Ayres Business College in San Francisco; Jennie, and Frank. Both himself and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, and also of the Order of the Eastern Star. Politically he is a staunch Republican. Fraternally Mr. Campbell is quite prominent, having been made a Mason in Montrose Lodge No. 63, and now belongs to Montrose Lodge, R. A. M., and the Montrose Commandery; is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World.

WILLIAM FRANCIS TOOMEY. The magnitude of the fruit industry in the San Joaquin valley has caused a number of men to devote their entire attention to the packing and shipping of the products for which this region is famous. Among those who have a thorough knowledge of the business and a wide acquaintance among fruit-growers, mention belongs to W. F. Toomey, the Fresno local manager of Guggenheim & Co., packers and shippers of dried fruits, raisins, nuts and honey. Under his supervision has been erected one of the most modern packing plants in the state, and its capacity of one hundred and fifty thousand cases enables the manager to control a large portion of the output of the vicinity. Under his supervision as manager is embraced the territory lying between Merced and Bakersfield, including the branch house at Selma. The company which he represents has its headquarters in San Francisco, with packing houses and representatives in Woodland, Fresno, Santa Ana and Selma.

By birth Mr. Toomey is a Californian. His father, Michael J. Toomey, who was a native of Limerick, Ireland, settled in San Francisco about 1869 and embarked in the dairy business, establishing the Mount View dairy with a Mr. Green, and building up a large business. In 1877, while driving a team, his wagon was hit by a train on Fourth and Townsend streets, San Francisco, and he was thrown from the wagon and killed. Before coming to California and when a resident of the south, he joined the Union army at the outbreak of the Civil war and remained at the front until seriously wounded in battle. During the same war his brother, J. J. Toomey, also fought on the Union side, while his wife, Mary J. Heartnett, a native of Ballybingen, Ireland, had one brother in the Federal army. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Toomey has continued to make her home in San Francisco. Of her five sons and one daughter all are living but one son. The third in order of birth was William Francis, who was born in San Francisco April 10, 1870. At the age of ten years he left the grammar school and began to earn his own livelihood. During September of 1886 he came to Fresno and secured employment on a ranch, where he studied the raising and curing of fruits until he was familiar with every detail, from the planting of the tree to the shipping of the fruit. During much of the time for seven years he was interested in fruit-raising, and in packing seasons worked for the Curtis Fruit Company of New York. In 1891 he was appointed superintendent of the Producers' Co-operating Company, with which he remained for two years. For the ensuing two years he acted as superintendent and buyer for Castle Brothers, and then for three seasons represented the Earl Fruit Company as manager, meanwhile establishing their interests in excellent condition. As assistant manager for Porter Brothers from 1897 to 1902 he traveled in every part of the San Joaquin valley in their interests, resigning from their employ to form his present association. Many of the seasons between 1886 and 1897 were spent, the summers in the San Joaquin valley and the winters in Southern California, where he became familiar with the handling of oranges and lemons, but since 1897 the dried fruit interests in Fresno have assumed such magnitude that he has necessarily spent the entire year in this valley. In addition to his many responsibilities as manager, he has interests in orchards and vineyards near Fresno.

The marriage of Mr. Toomey united him with Miss Callie J. Ferrel, of Fresno, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of Marion Ferrel, who was among the pioneers of Des Moines, Iowa, and is now a contractor and builder in Los Angeles. During the entire period of the Civil war he served at the front with an Iowa regiment as first lieutenant of his company and to this day he carries the ball that he received in a battle during 1863. Three of his brothers were also participants in the war. When a child

Henry Meyer

Mrs. Toomey accompanied her parents to Fresno, where she was reared and educated. Of her marriage there are two sons, Irving Francis and Lloyd Ferrel. Mr. Toomey is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and an enthusiastic supporter of every movement that promises to promote the material welfare of his adopted city. Although reared in the Democratic faith, he now gives his allegiance to the Republican party. On the organization of Fresno Parlor No. 25, Native Sons of the Golden West, he became a charter member and was elected one of its first officers. The Woodmen of the World and Knights of Pythias also receive his support, through his membership in local organizations of the orders. While Mr. Toomey is still a young man, scarcely yet in the prime of life, he has gained a success that entitles him to mention among the representative men of the valley, while his thorough knowledge of every detail of the packing business makes his services of value to the company with which he is associated.

HENRY MEYER. A man of broad principles, of an earnest nature and upright life, Henry Meyer is one of the substantial and progressive citizens of Tulare county and one who commands the respect and esteem of all who have come in contact with him, either in a business or social way. He owns and is operating one of the finest farms in the Yokohl valley, adding by his efforts to his competence acquired in the pioneer days of the state, and at the same time making it a part of his duty to give employment of all kinds to those who need it, his Christian motto being "Live and let live."

A native of Germany, Henry Meyer was born in Wilhelmsburg November 23, 1823, a son of Peter C. Meyer, a carpenter and millwright of Hanover, where he was born, reared and died. His mother, Catherine (Benke) Meyer, was born in Hanover, where she also died. Of the two children Henry Meyer is the only one living. He was reared in Hanover and attended school until he was fourteen years old, when he was apprenticed for five years to learn the ship carpenter's trade. He went to sea as ship carpenter on the brig Johanna, plying between Hamburg and Marseilles, on a nine months' trip. The following fall he was employed on the brig Elbe, making a trip around the Horn and putting in at Valparaiso, where the vessel was sold. This was in 1849. Imbibing the spirit of excitement which was leading so many to cast in their lot with the pioneers of California, he came to San Francisco on the brig Aurora, arriving October 15. Going at once to the mines he worked at Mokelumne Hill, which was the beginning of eighteen years spent in the mines, engaging in placer, drift and quartz mining, in all of which he met with a success which justified his long continuance in the work. Receiving a letter finally from his friend, William Mehrrens, he was induced to come to Tulare county and settle down to a more peaceful if less exciting life than the one he had led so long. In 1866 he settled on the land which now forms a part of his home, "squattin'" on the land until the survey, when he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres on section 8, township 19, range 27. He immediately began improvements, adding to his property by homesteading another one hundred and sixty acres on the same section and buying railroad land adjoining on section 9, township 19, range 27, owning then six hundred and forty acres. Eventually he sold off ten acres for the granite quarry and eighty acres more to the proprietors of the quarry, now owning five hundred and twenty acres in the Yokohl valley. This property is all under fence, and is principally devoted to the raising of grain, cattle and hogs, having among his stock some very fine Durham cattle. He is now devoting some time and attention to the cultivation of figs, which trees are now about the largest in the valley, measuring over two feet in diameter. He is very successful in his work and prominent among the agriculturists and stockmen of the county.

Mr. Meyer has been twice married, his first wife being Sophia Mehrrens, of Hanover, who died in Tulare county at the age of seventy-two years. She was a Lutheran in religion. Mr. Meyer's second marriage occurred December 29, 1902, uniting him with Mary Jane (Jamison) Starnes. She was born in Indiana and came to California with her mother in 1852 and has since been a resident of the state. Mr. Meyer is a Democrat in his political affiliations.

JOSEPH HENRY SNODGRASS was born in Glade Spring, Va., February 20, 1858, a son of Joseph and Annie C. (Edmondson) Snodgrass. Glade Spring was also the birthplace of his grandfather, David, and his great-grandfather, also named David. Both of these men, as well as the father, Joseph, were farmers and all died where they had lived for so many years.

Annie C. Edmondson, the mother, was a native of Glade Spring, being a daughter of Andrew Edmondson, a farmer. Her grandfather Edmondson was a soldier and served in the Revolutionary war. As a result of her union with Joseph Snodgrass she became the mother of nine children, five of whom are living. Four of the sons were in the Confederate army, two of them being officers.

Joseph H. Snodgrass was reared on the home farm, attending the district school when the work of the farm allowed such a luxury. At the age of fifteen years he took charge of the home place and continued to conduct the farm until 1885, when he removed to Hawkins county, Tenn., where he purchased a stock farm and continued in business until 1900. In December of the same year he came to California and located in Exeter. He soon after purchased his present ranch of forty acres, adjoining the town on the east. Many improvements were made the first year and in February, 1901, he began setting out his vineyard. His grapes are all Emperors and each year he ships his product to the eastern markets direct, not dealing with the jobbers. Each year sees some new improvement and he now has an irrigation plant with a sixty-inch capacity which is run with a fifteen-horse power electric motor.

In Washington county, Va., he was united in marriage with Miss Robinson, who was born at Glade Spring, a daughter of James and Mary (McKee) Robinson, both of whom were born at Glade Spring. Mrs. Snodgrass is the fifth in a family of six children, all of whom are living. To Mr. and Mrs. Snodgrass have been born three children, as follows: Flora, Mary, now Mrs. Irving Jordan, of Exeter, and Mabel.

Mr. Snodgrass takes a deep interest in church work, being a member and steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

In politics he is a Democrat, but never takes an active part in political matters. He belongs to the Exeter board of trade and can always be counted on to put his shoulder to the wheel when there is any movement on foot calculated to be of benefit to his town or county. With such men in a community the future of that particular locality is assured. Mr. Snodgrass has a host of warm personal friends, all of whom will be pleased to hear of his continued success. Both he and his wife are most estimable people and are very popular wherever known.

FREDERICK J. WILLIAMS. The Central California Planing Mill Company, of which Mr. Williams is president and manager, is one of the recent organizations established in Fresno, its mill at the Santa Fe depot, corner of Tulare and P streets, having been erected in November of 1903. The machinery is modern and substantial, and the equipment is such as to guarantee the successful manufacture of everything in the building line. Power is furnished by a seventy-five horse engine of substantial and modern pattern. The mill is large, being 80x150 feet in dimensions, with a capacity sufficient to insure the prompt filling of orders, even during the busiest seasons of the year. To facilitate the conduct of the business the company was incorporated in October, 1903.

Referring to the history of the Williams family, we find that the subject of this narrative is a son of John J. Williams, a native of Portugal, and in boyhood an assistant on his father's farm. With a taste for adventure and a love for the sea, he shipped as a sailor and during his voyages visited almost every prominent port in the world. The rumor of discovery of gold led him to California, and after anchoring at San Francisco in 1850 he went to the mines of Placer county. For about twenty years he followed mining, meanwhile working in the principal mines throughout the northern counties of California. When weary of the occupation, he abandoned it for a more settled pursuit in life, and purchased a farm at San Leandro, Alameda county, where the latter part of his eventful career was passed in quiet. At the time of his death, in 1896, he had reached the age of eighty-two years. His wife, Mary Williams, was born in Portugal and died in San Leandro when fifty years of age. Of their three sons, Frederick J. resides in Fresno; John W. is a contractor and builder in San Leandro; and Joseph, a carpenter by trade, assists his brother in the mill at Fresno.

While the family were making their home at Auburn, Placer county, Cal., Frederick J. Williams was born April 16, 1865. At seven years of age he removed with his parents to San Leandro, where he received his education in the public school. For four years he served an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade, after which he took up contracting and building in Berkeley. During the following years he had contracts for numerous business houses and private residences in Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda and San Francisco. His first settlement at Fresno occurred during 1888, when he began contracting and building in that city, but after two years he purchased land fifteen miles west of the city and turned his attention to farming. Forty-four acres were placed under irrigation and set out in an orchard and vineyard, the improvement greatly enhancing the value of the property, which remained in his possession until recently. In connection with its cultivation he rented three thousand acres, on which he engaged in raising wheat and barley. About 1900 he returned to Fresno to take up the building business again, and continued thus occupied until he purchased the planing mill, meanwhile having the contract for several business houses, residences and the Catholic Church.

While residing in Berkeley Mr. Williams married Miss Mary G. Ramos, who was born in Yolo county, this state. They are the parents of three children, namely: Frederick, who assists his father in the mill; Lena, who is a student in the Fresno high school; and Mary. The interest which Mr. Williams feels in the public school question was shown through his long and efficient service in the capacity of school trustee. While holding the office he did much to promote the welfare of the school under his especial charge. As a member of the Chamber of Commerce he is connected with an association largely contributory to the present progress and high standing of Fresno. In fraternal relations he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Improved Order of Red Men and Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOSEPH G. MARTIN. Familiarity with the lumber business in all of its details and through a long period of years qualifies J. G. Martin successfully to discharge his duties as secretary and manager of the Fresno Lumber Company, which has its yards on I and Ventura streets, Fresno, occupying about a block of ground for the storage of lumber. Mr. Martin has been a resident of California since 1889, but is of eastern birth, a native of Waterbury, Vt. His father, Philip, who was born in Ireland, crossed the ocean to Ontario and from there removed to a farm in Vermont. The latter part of his life was spent in that state, and there also occurred the death of his wife, Mary (Tusau) Martin, who was born in Canada, of French descent. Of their six sons and six daughters, three sons and four daughters are now living. Three of the oldest sons were soldiers of the Federal army during the Civil war, namely: William H., now of Hanford, Cal.; Dennis, who died in Vermont; and Philip, who came to California and died at Stockton. All were members of a Vermont regiment.

At Waterbury, Vt., where he was born February 17, 1854, J. G. Martin grew to manhood and received a fair education. On starting out for himself he took up farm pursuits, being thus engaged in Vermont for a few years. In 1879 he settled on a farm in Monona county, Iowa, but after two years abandoned agriculture and moved to Mapleton, that county, where he engaged in the sale of hardware, agricultural implements and lumber. When he came to California in 1889 he first settled in Hanford, which then boasted of only a few shanties, giving no indication of the prosperity it has since enjoyed. Securing employment as foreman of a lumberyard, he soon proved his thorough knowledge of the business, and was then made manager of the company's yard at Lemoore. He assisted in the incorporation of the Central Lumber Company, of which he was chosen vice-president and a director, at the same time being appointed manager of the company's yard at Visalia. In the latter town he remained until 1902, when he disposed of his stock in the company and resigned his office. The following year he removed to Fresno, purchased an interest in the Fresno Lumber Company's business and assumed the management. Since locating in Fresno he has identified himself with the Chamber of Commerce and Builders' Exchange.

Politically Mr. Martin is a Republican, and during his residence in Visalia was elected on that ticket to the city council. While living in Hanford he met and married Grace Turner, who was born in Illinois, but has spent her life principally in California. In religion she is associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Mr. Martin is a contributor. Both are connected with the Order of the Eastern Star, and at Visalia Mr. Martin was honored with the office of worthy patron of Martha Washington chapter, and prior to this of Lucerne Chapter at Hanford. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World and the Masons. His connection with the latter fraternity began in Mapleton, Iowa, where he was master of Quarry Lodge. After coming to California he placed his membership in Hanford Lodge No. 279, F. & A. M., and in the latter city he was raised to the Royal Arch degree in Hanford Chapter No. 74. At Visalia he was knighted in Visalia Commandery No. 26, K. T., in which he is past eminent commander. He is further connected with Perfection Lodge No. 9 at Visalia, the Council and Consistory at Oakland and Islam Temple, N. M. S., of San Francisco. Through his activity in Masonry he has been brought into contact with many of the leaders of that fraternity in California, among whom he has a number of warm friends. A believer in the lofty principles of philanthropy for which the order stands, he has never allowed his interest in its work to languish, but has contributed thereto generously of his time, means and influence, and has given his sympathy and co-operation to all of its charities.

JOHN FRANS. A successful stockman of Tulare county is named in the person of John Frans, who is now located at No. 609 South Court street, Visalia, while he operates his extensive ranch just north of the city, consisting of over one thousand acres. He began farming operations in 1886 independently, having previously purchased (in 1884) a small tract of land. With the passing years he has continued in the raising of stock and general farming operations and has added to his original purchase until he is now the owner of a large and valuable property. A native of the state, he was born in Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, January 11, 1850, a son of John B. Frans, who was born in Kentucky.

Until reaching young manhood, John B. Frans made his home in Kentucky, and then removed to Missouri, becoming a farmer in the neighborhood of St. Joseph. While in that state he served as a volunteer in the Mexican war under General Price. In 1853 he crossed the plains with ox teams, and upon his arrival in California located in San Jose. Several years later he located in Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, where he engaged in farming until 1863. In the last named year he removed to Tulare county and three and a half miles east of Visalia bought a ranch of four hundred and twenty acres, where he continued in general farming operations until his death in 1870, at the age of fifty-two years. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Fulton, was a native of Indiana, and she also died in this state.

John Frans was the fourth child and the youngest son in a family of three sons and five daughters. He received his education in the common schools of California, after which in 1878 he engaged in farming on the home place in partnership with his brothers, Thomas H. and James Madison, the latter of whom died in 1880, aged twenty-five years. In 1886 John Frans entered upon farming operations alone, on property which he had purchased two years previously, and is now classed among the prominent business men of the county. In Visalia he married Miss Dora Jones, also a native of Santa Rosa, Cal., and they have one son, John B., who is at home with his parents. Politically Mr. Frans adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and is a public-spirited and enterprising citizen. Mrs. Frans is a member of the Society of Native Daughters.

JAMES W. CATE. A pioneer of California and for many years connected with the business life of Fresno county, James W. Cate is remembered throughout this part of the country as a man of ability, energy and executive force, and one who made his influence felt throughout the industrial circles of the community. A native of New Hampshire, he was born in 1828, a son of Walter and Mary P. (Wiggins) Cate, residents of Stafford county, N. H., and also natives of the same state, both descendants of old New England families of worth and prominence. In 1838 the father located in Adams county, Ill., where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising. James W. Cate remained at home until he was twenty-four years of age, at which time he bought land and entered into independent operations. In 1864 he came overland to California, traveling by the customary ox-teams, at

Salt Lake deciding to enter the state by the southern route. In the fall of the same year he arrived in Los Angeles county, and after stopping a short time in El Monte leased land near Downey, where he engaged in farming for three years. Purchasing one hundred and fifty-five acres of land in the Ranchoito school district, between the old and new San Gabriel rivers, he became the first white settler of that region, where he devoted his time to agricultural and horticultural pursuits for many years following. Thirty acres of his land was devoted to a fine walnut grove, the profits for one year amounting to $200 per acre. He had also a vineyard of twelve acres, on eleven cultivating the Berger and on one the Zinfandel grape, the yield in 1888 being seventeen tons per acre. Two and a half acres were devoted to various fruits, while the remainder of the land was given over to alfalfa, corn, hay and grain. In addition to this property he became the owner of one hundred acres of grain land six miles west of Los Angeles, twenty acres of improved land at Monrovia, and eighteen hundred acres in Fresno county, ten miles northeast of Fresno. Success accompanied him in all his efforts; he became a wealthy man, a prominent and influential citizen, and a factor in the business world of his adopted state, making his influence felt in whatever line of activity his energies were directed. His death occurred in March, 1900, after a long life of usefulness among the scenes of his adopted state. He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and for twenty years a school trustee. Politically he was a staunch adherent of the principles advocated by the Democratic party.

In 1856 Mr. Cate was united in marriage with Eliza Henderson, a native of Indiana, and a daughter of William and Anna (McConnell) Henderson, both of whom were born in the state of Pennsylvania. Of this union were born five children, of whom the following are now living: Daniel Webster, who married Emma Pierce; Dallas Mason; and James Wilbur, a sketch of whom also appears in this volume. The third child, Hayden, died in 1878, at the age of twenty years, while the fifth child, Louise Olive, died in 1888, at the age of twenty-two years. Mrs. Cate survives her husband and now makes her home in Los Angeles.

HON. JOHN M. MONTGOMERY. Numbered among the pioneers of Merced county is Hon. John M. Montgomery, whose death May 4, 1891, removed from the community a public spirited and enterprising citizen, and one whose best interests have always lain parallel with those of his adopted state. Born in Hardin county, Ky., September 18, 1816, he spent the years to manhood in his native state. On removing from the scenes of his boyhood years he located in Missouri, where he remained until the spring of 1847; following then the westward trend of civilization, he crossed the plains to California, and entered into business life in Monterey, where he was located at the time of the discovery of gold. Instead of engaging in the precarious fortunes of a miner he found profitable employment in hauling freight to the new diggings, having immediately fitted up his old ox team with which he had crossed the plains. In the fall of 1849 Mr. Montgomery, with Samuel Scott, located in probably the first settlement in what is now Merced county, being but a short distance below the present site of Snelling. He engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and continued so engaged for many years.

W. E. Green

In 1852 Mr. Montgomery returned to his old home in Missouri, and was there united in marriage with Elizabeth Armstrong. Together they made the trip back to California and located in the home on Bear creek six miles east of Merced, which Mr. Montgomery had prepared before going east. Born of this union were the following children: Mary, the wife of I. Jay Buckley; Jennie, the wife of H. K. Huls; Ella, the widow of E. L. Smith, of Merced county; John A., deceased; Robert H., of Snelling; William S., of Merced; Katie and Lizzie, both deceased. In his political preference Mr. Montgomery was active in the counsels of the Democratic party, and was often called upon to fill positions of trust and honor. In 1861 he was elected a member of the board of supervisors, which office he filled with efficiency. In 1875 he was elected to the state senate from his district, and in the sessions that followed gave efficient and valuable service. One of the broadest acts in the life of Mr. Montgomery occurred in connection with this election to the senate: his seat was hotly contested and rather than allow the state to meet this expense he paid it himself. He was considered by all who knew him a man of splendid ability, a manly and upright character, a firm friend and a patriotic citizen, and left to his children the inheritance of an honored name.

WILLIAM EDGAR GREEN. During the past twenty years Tulare city and county have made a rapid and healthful growth, and in their upbuilding and advancement no man has taken a keener interest than William Edgar Green, a well-known business man of Tulare. Energetic, enterprising and progressive, he is actively identified with the industrial, agricultural and financial prosperity of this section of the state, and in their development has spared neither time nor expense. A son of the late William Green, he was born in April, 1849, in Oneida county, N. Y., near Rome.

The descendant of an old and prominent New England family, William Green was born and reared in Massachusetts, his birth occurring in 1799. Following the march of civilization westward, when a young man he settled in Oneida county, N. Y., buying a farm twelve miles from the city of Rome, and was there engaged in tilling the soil until his death in 1861 at the age of sixty-two years. He married Catherine Highland, who was born in Ireland, and came with an uncle to New York state when a girl. She survived her husband many years, and died, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, in Kansas, at the home of a daughter. She bore him twelve children, of whom one son and three daughters are living, William Edgar, the youngest child, being the only California resident. One son, Benjamin, served in the Civil war, and died while in service. Judge Sanford M. Green, a brother of William Green, was for many years a prominent judge in Michigan, and in that capacity was instrumental in having the law prohibiting hanging passed, being at that time a resident of the city of Flint. He subsequently removed to Pontiac, Mich., where he engaged in business as a banker.

Brought up on the homestead, receiving his early education in the district school, William Edgar Green became familiar with the various branches of general agriculture while young. Being the only son at home when his father died, he subsequently assisted his mother in the care of the farm, remaining with her until 1868. Coming then as far west as Kansas, he settled about five miles north of Lawrence, near the home of Gov. Charles Robinson. Investing all the money he received from his father's estate, Mr. Green bought a farm and embarked in agricultural pursuits on his own account. During the next four or five years the grasshoppers entirely destroyed the Kansas crops, and he lost all of his property. Discouraged with the outlook in that section of the country, Mr. Green, in 1875, migrated to California, locating in Santa Clara county, near Alviso, where he worked eight months as a farm hand for Martin French, subsequently being employed by S. B. Emerson. Going thence to Redwood City, Mr. Green remained there four years, the first half of the time running a grocery, and the last two years keeping a hotel. His first wife dying in Redwood, Mr. Green returned to Kansas, residing there two years. Dissatisfied, however, he came back to California, and in 1884 established himself in the liquor business in Tulare. He is also extensively engaged in stock-raising, owning a ranch of five hundred and twenty acres, lying five miles southwest of the city. In addition Mr. Green leases seven hundred and forty acres of land, operating in all more than twelve hundred acres. A large part of this is under irrigation, well adapted for stock-raising and dairying, in both of which he is especially interested. He raises large quantities of grain, and has one hundred and fifty acres sowed to alfalfa, the remainder of the land being devoted to grazing purposes. He has two artesian wells on his estate, and in the management of his dairy has the latest improvements. Taking an intelligent interest in the establishment of beneficial enterprises, Mr. Green is one of the stockholders of the Tulare Creamery Association; of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, of Tulare; and was one of the promoters of the Tulare County Live Stock Show and Race Meet, being treasurer of the association, and one of the four proprietors of the Tulare Fair Grounds; also a shareholder in the Co-operative Milling Association of Tulare and vicinity.

Mr. Green has been twice married. He married first, in Kansas, near Lawrence, Lizzie Wood, who died in Redwood, Cal. She bore him three children, of whom two are living, Oren, living at home; and Mrs. Nellie Garrish, of Alameda. Near Lawrence, Kans., he married Rose Burgan, who was born near Lawrence, Douglas county, Kans., a daughter of Samuel Burgan, now a resident of Tulare. Mr. and Mrs. Green are the parents of three children, Mabel, Ida and Alta. Politically Mr. Green is an active member of the Democratic party, and takes an intelligent interest in all things pertaining to the welfare of city and county. For three terms, from 1892 until 1904, he represented the first ward of Tulare in the city council, for ten years of the time serving as chairman of the finance committee, and for two years being president pro tem. of the board. Mrs. Green is a most estimable woman and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

THOMAS J. KEATON. Not alone in the dairy industry, which has been an important feature of the recent development of Stanislaus county, but also in the raising of grain, which for years has been a leading occupation of the people, Mr. Keaton has met with a gratifying degree of success. The dairy farm which occupies most of his time comprises eighty-seven acres, and since it came into his possession, in 1897, has been improved by a neat residence and a set of dairy buildings. The land is under alfalfa, which is used for feed for his milch cows. While the management of the home place necessitates careful attention, he finds leisure for other interests, and at this writing raises grain on about one thousand acres of rented land at different places on the west side, using for the purpose three teams of horses.

Of southern birth and ancestry, Mr. Keaton was born in Camden county, N. C., July 27, 1852, and in a family of three sons and one daughter he alone attained mature years. His parents, Dempsey and Clarke (Brown) Keaton, were natives of North Carolina, and spent their entire lives in that state, the father being a farmer by occupation. Owing to the limited means of the family Mr. Keaton had few advantages aside from those offered by district schools. When a mere boy he began to plan for the future, and soon decided that other states presented better opportunities for advancement than did his own. As early as 1866 he started out in the world to earn his own livelihood. In 1866 he went to Illinois and secured work in Lee county, near Dixon, where he spent a few years as a farm-hand. For a time he also worked in Ogle county.

When a young man of twenty-two years Mr. Keaton came to California for the first time, and for four months he worked at Bakersfield in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railway Company. At the expiration of that time he returned to Illinois, but soon became dissatisfied, and in December of the same year (1874) he came to California as a permanent settler. After working on a ranch at Chico for a short time he secured employment in the lumbering business at Susanville, and from there went back to Chico. During June of 1876 he established himself in Merced county, where he worked as a farm-hand for three years on the west side. The savings of these years enabled him to start out independently. In 1879 he rented a grain farm of eight hundred acres near Hill's Ferry, and there he remained many years. During a part of this time he had charge of lands aggregating twenty-seven hundred acres. On leaving that property he moved to the farm he has since owned and managed. As a dairyman and grain-raiser he is quick to adopt methods calculated to increase profits and reduce expenses. Personally he is a man of firm will, self-reliance, persevering industry and excellent judgment, and in character is eminently worthy of the prosperity he is gaining.

The marriage of Mr. Keaton took place in Modesto, Cal., and united him with Mrs. E. S. Parsons, nee Weddle, a daughter of William Hall Weddle and Elizabeth Weddle, both natives of Missouri, where they were married April 4, 1852, and the next month started for California across the plains. They settled first in Napa county, Cal., Mr. Weddle died in Mariposa county, but Mrs. Weddle is still living in San Diego. Mrs. Keaton is next to the youngest of five children. Mrs. Keaton is the mother of two daughters and one son, namely: Mrs. Mabel Wilkes, who lives in Bishop, Inyo county; and Edna and Dempsey, who reside with their parents at the homestead four miles southwest of Newman. The family are believers in the Cumberland Presbyterian doctrines, and Mr. Keaton has been a contributor to the maintenance and progress of this denomination. In fraternal connections he is identified with the United Artisans. As a citizen he is esteemed for the possession of honorable traits of character, and as a farmer he has won recognition through his progressive spirit and resourcefulness.

O. BURTON DOYLE, M. D. The genealogy of the Doyle family is traced back to the colonial history of the south, where its representatives bore an honorable part in public and commercial affairs. Dr. Doyle is a son of John F. Doyle, M. D., whose father for years held a leading position among the people of Dyer county, Tenn. For one term he held the office of county sheriff, for a similar period served as county clerk, owned and conducted a hotel and also had general mercantile interests, but finally settled upon a cotton plantation in Dyer county, where he remained until his death. Born and reared in Dyer county, Dr. John F. Doyle was given excellent educational advantages, and after completing his classical studies he matriculated in the McDowell Medical College of St. Louis, from which he received the degree of M. D. During all of his active professional career he had his office in Kuttawa, Lyon county, Ky. In 1898 he retired from practice and in 1902 came to California, since which time he has made his home with his son, Dr. O. B. Doyle, in Fresno. His wife, who died in 1898, was Laura Gray Rucker, a native of Kentucky, and a daughter of Isaac B. Rucker, also a native Kentuckian and a lifelong farmer.

In the family of Dr. John F. Doyle there are four children, of whom O. B. was the first-born. Ernest M., a graduate of dental surgery, is engaged in practice at Fresno; Earl P. is an employe on the Southern Pacific Railroad at Fresno; and King V., an eleven-year-old boy, is a student in the Fresno schools. Dr. O. B. Doyle was born in Kuttawa, Lyon county, Ky., November 2, 1875. During boyhood years he attended the public schools of his home town. Later he was a student in the Princeton Collegiate Institute, after which he entered a drug store and studied pharmacy for two years. His next employment was as a clerk in the freight office of the Illinois Central Railroad at Paducah, Ky. It was his ambition to become a physician and his earnings were carefully saved with this object in view. The hope he had cherished found its fruition in his matriculation, January 1, 1896, in the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville, and he continued a student in that institution until he received the degree of M. D., at the time of his graduation, in June of 1898.

A month after completing his medical studies Dr. Doyle came to Fresno county. In October of the same year he was appointed physician and surgeon to the Fresno Flumé & Irrigating Company at Shaver and continued in that capacity until December 1, 1902, meanwhile spending the summer months at Shaver and during winters residing in Fresno. In January, 1903, he established himself in Fresno, where he has since spent his entire time, engaging in a general practice of medicine and surgery. Everything pertaining to his profession receives his thoughtful attention. The developments constantly being made in the science of materia medica are carefully studied by him and, when feasible, adopted in his own practice. Various associations of a professional nature receive his support and encouragement. Numbered among these is the Fresno County Medical Society, of which at one time he acted as first vice-president. He is further connected with the San Joaquin Valley Medical Society, California State Medical Society and the American Medical Associations. Among organizations more strictly commercial receiving the benefit of his support may be mentioned the Chamber of Commerce. In fraternal relations he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

May 10, 1904, Dr. Doyle was united in marriage with Ruby H. Perkins, of Visalia, Cal., a daughter of Henry P. Perkins, a pioneer of Tulare county.

JOHN HENRY DANKER. Well known as a pioneer settler of California, and as the owner of a finely improved ranch, which is located two miles southeast of Newman, John Henry Danker is especially deserving of personal mention in this biographical volume. One of the foremost agriculturists of this part of the San Joaquin valley, he has accumulated much wealth in his chosen vocation, his homestead property, with its substantial and convenient buildings, and its large dairy, from which he derives a good annual income, giving visible evidence of his industry, good management and success. A native of Germany, he was born August 3, 1837, in Elmshorn in the Duchy of Holstein, which was also the birthplace of his parents, John and Ann (Munster) Danker, being the youngest of a family of twelve children, eleven of whom grew to years of maturity.

Brought up in his native town, John Henry

Danker began life for himself at the age of eleven years, herding cattle during the summer seasons, and attending school winters. Subsequently engaging in seafaring pursuits, he was employed in foreign trade for two years, and for one year hunted seals off the coast of Greenland. Sailing from Hamburg August 5, 1855, Mr. Danker started for America. Off Cape Horn the vessel was for six weeks and three days in a terrible gale, and driven seven hundred miles out of its course. They stopped four weeks in Valparaiso, arriving in San Francisco March 8, 1856, having been more than seven months on the ocean. Securing work on a ranch, Mr. Danker mowed hay and milked cows in that section of the city that is now built up with substantial brick houses. Subsequently removing to Contra Costa county, he worked as a farm laborer in San Ramon from 1860 until 1879. Coming then to the San Joaquin valley, he rented land on the west side, prior to the building of the canal, and engaged in farming on his own account.

Purchasing his present farm of one hundred and sixty acres in 1879, he worked hard to improve it, succeeding so well that it was soon numbered among the most valuable estates in this part of the county. For many years he carried on general farming, raising large crops of hay and grain, by thrift and judicious management accumulating a large share of this world's goods. He is now living somewhat retired from active pursuits, renting his ranch, which is sowed mostly to alfalfa, for dairy purposes. Mr. Danker is a man of keen foresight and sound judgment, and occupies a secure position in the consideration and respect of his fellowmen. In his political views he is a staunch Republican, and in his religious beliefs is a Lutheran.

JONATHAN WARD MAY. The May family is descended from New England ancestry prominent in the early history of our country. The name flourished first in Massachusetts, where Philip May served in the Revolutionary war and later in the war of 1812. He located in Alabama in manhood, finally removing to Kemper county, Miss., where he became an extensive planter and slave owner. There his death occurred, removing from the midst of his adopted community a citizen of ability, patriotism and sterling worth, whose best efforts were ever given toward all movements calculated to advance the general welfare. In his family was a son, William Curtis, who was born in North Carolina, the home of the family for a time. He followed the example of his father and engaged in farming in Mississippi until some time before the breaking out of the Mexican war. At that time he was residing near Dallas, Tex., and immediately sought service in the cause of his country. His death occurred near Dallas in 1852. His wife, formerly Mary Ann Ward of Alabama, died in Shreveport, La., in 1848, where her husband had settled on account of the hostility of the Indians. They were the parents of seven children, four sons and three daughters, of whom Jonathan Ward May, the eldest and only one now living, is the subject of this review, and was born in Kemper county, Miss., July 31, 1839.

Jonathan Ward May was reared in Shreveport, La., receiving his education in the common schools of that place. In young manhood he engaged in the stock business in Louisiana and Texas, in Shackelford county, Tex., handling as many as eighty thousand head of cattle. His stock-raising pursuits were interrupted by the breaking out of the Civil war, his enlistment in the Confederate army taking place in 1861. He served in the Trans-Mississippi army under General Maxey, of the Indian Department of Heavy Artillery. He enlisted as a private soldier and in the second year of his service was commissioned second lieutenant. He took part in the following engagements: Galveston and Yellow Bayou, Fort Smith, Sabine Creek, the scene of Bank's defeat; Mud Creek, Honey Creek, Mazard Prairie, Diamond Grove, Camden and Poison Springs, their company carrying sixty-four-pound marine guns. The ending of the war found many ruined homes and estates in the south and among them was that of Mr. May. He remained in his old home only long enough to raise a few crops of cotton, the first one following immediately upon the close of the war. Deciding to seek a home in the west, he came to California in 1871, arriving February 13, when he engaged in the San Joaquin valley in hauling lumber over the mountains with ox teams. Two years later he began farming on the Tule river at Pleasant Valley, on a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres. In 1880 he purchased another ranch near this one, and in the same year pre-empted a stock ranch on the middle fork of the Tule river. In the following year he removed to this ranch which adjoins the Indian Reservation, where he became the owner of eleven hundred acres. He held this in his possession until 1903, when he sold out and came to Springville, Tulare county, where he engaged in the livery business. This has since occupied his attention, and in the work he has met with the same success which has characterized his entire career. He owns his residence and six acres in town besides his stable, which is one of the principal business enterprises of the place.

In Texas Mr. May was united in marriage with Johanna Stanplill, a native of Missouri, who died in 1875. They became the parents of two children, John Benjamin, located near Springville, and Mattie, the wife of H. C. Talbot of Portersville. Mr. May was again married April 13, 1903, to Mrs. Anna Brown, a native of Louisiana, and the representative of an old pioneer family of California. Fraternally Mr. May is identified with the Woodmen of the World, and politically is a Democrat.

ROBERT R. FOWLER. The district attorney of Madera county, who is one of the rising young lawyers and influential Republicans of the city of Madera, is a member of a family that early became established in the commonwealth of Virginia and later settled in the blue-grass regions of Kentucky. Genealogical records show that his ancestors were people of unquestioned integrity and genuine worth of character. His parents, William F. and Elizabeth A. (Anderson) Fowler, are natives of Indiana and, after various changes of residence, have established themselves in the city of Madera, which place is the home of their only two living children, namely: David B., supervisor of the third district of Madera county; and Robert R., district attorney. The family history appears in the sketch of the older of these sons, presented on another page of this volume.

Near Table Rock, Pawnee county, Neb., Robert R. Fowler was born August 15, 1870. At an early age he accompanied the family to California and this state has since been his home. His education was primarily secured in the district schools of Tulare and Fresno counties. He then turned his attention to newspaper work, led in that decision not only by an opening that occurred, but also by the inclination of his mind toward journalism. One of his early experiences in this occupation was gained while editor of the Selma Irrigator. After coming to Madera in 1890 he secured a position on the Madera Mercury, where he proved himself to be an able newspaper man. His tastes have always been in the direction of literature. Many of his most enjoyable hours have been spent among his books. Possessing a wide command of language, versatile mind and resourceful wit, he has written articles for the press that have attracted attention by their depth and far-seeing intelligence.

Notwithstanding his love for the journalistic field, Mr. Fowler was led to enter the profession of law for his life-work, and in the fall of 1893 he began to study under Mr. Hargrove. June, 1895, he was admitted to the supreme court and at once began to practice in Madera. From the first he has been an enthusiastic supporter of Republican principles. The party in Madera county has had in him one of its most energetic champions. His services in behalf of the organization were fittingly recognized in 1898, when he was placed in nomination for the office of district attorney. Notwithstanding the fact that this is a Democratic county, he was elected by a majority of two hundred and sixteen. At the expiration of his term of four years, the Republicans again made him their choice for candidate, and this time he won the victory by two hundred and forty-eight majority. In his second term, as in his first, he is distinguished by faithful discharge of official duties and skill in the handling of the cases under his supervision. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

The lady who presides over Mr. Fowler's pleasant home and who became his wife in Oakland, was formerly Blanche Butler. She was born in Hastings, Nebr., and received excellent advantages in the schools of Tulare county. Reared in the faith of the Christian Church, she is connected with that organization in Madera. The family of which she is a member holds a high rank for mental attainments and statesmanship. One of her uncles, Hon. David Butler, at one time officiated as governor of Nebraska. Her father, the late Dr. A. B. Butler, was a man of broad professional ability, splendidly educated for his profession, and ranked high among the citizens of Tulare county. He removed to Madera and died in that city in 1904, after a residence of about one year. In public affairs he held a position of influence and at one time, while a resident of Tulare county, represented his district in the state legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler have a son, Robert Butler Fowler. The family ranks among the most popular in Madera and has a host of warm personal friends within the circle of its acquaintances.

H. R. McGEE. Born in Guelph, Ontario, December 22, 1864, H. R. McGee was the youngest child in a family of six children, of whom he is the only one now living. His father, Henry McGee, was a native of Northern Ireland, who settled in Canada at an early date, locating in Guelph, where he followed the work of a contractor and builder. About 1866 he located in Cedar Falls, Iowa, where he continued in the same occupation, making that location his home until 1878. In December of the last-named year he brought his family to California, locating in Tulare county nine miles north of Visalia. Until the following spring he made that place his home, when he went to Eastern Oregon and Washington, and engaged in building for one year. Returning to Tulare county he engaged in contracting and building until his death. In the meantime he purchased and improved a piece of property in Orosi, which continued to be his home until 1895, when his death occurred. He was married twice, his first wife being Rachel Bell, a native of London, England, and after her death in Iowa he married Mary E. Ledbetter, a native of New York and the daughter of James Ledbetter, an old settler of Orosi. She died in Orosi.

In Cedar Falls, Iowa, H. R. McGee spent his boyhood until he was fourteen years of age, attending the public schools. In December, 1878, in company with his father's family he came to California, where he has remained ever since. Thrown upon his own resources at an early age he has made his own way in the world and has met with the success which is the direct result of energy, industry and perseverance. He first found employment on neighboring farms, after which he drove teams to the mountains from the mills. Deciding to engage in farming he farmed his father's property of three hundred and eighty acres in Orosi, raising grain principally. He set out an orchard and has engaged in the cultivation of fruits and vineyard since 1892. He now owns twenty acres in Orosi, devoted principally to the cultivation of Muir peaches.

In Tulare county Mr. McGee was united in marriage with Nellie Combs, a daughter of B. C. Combs, a well-known citizen of Orosi. She died in Orosi in June, 1889, aged twenty-seven years. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church and the mother of three children: Oriva Marguerite, Rilma May and Robert Henry. Mr. McGee is Democratic in his political convictions, and in the interests of his party has served as constable and also as justice of the peace of Orosi for one term. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, being past councillor of his lodge, ex-representative to the Grand Lodge, and district deputy grand chancellor; Woodmen of the World, of which he is past officer, having served for four years; and also belongs to the Women of Woodcraft.

CHRISTIAN HAUSCH. To rise from a position of obscurity to influence, to surmount the obstacles confronting one who seeks to gain independence, to live at peace with fellow-citizens, and to gain a reputation for worth of character, this is a record of which one may well be proud, and in the attaining of such an ambition Mr. Hausch has merited and won the respect of associates and acquaintances. Many of the qualities noticeable in his character come to him from a line of worthy German ancestors, and he has added to the German characteristics of thrift and economy the American qualities of energy and resourcefulness. A native of Prussia, he was born at Hohenzollern, May 6, 1832, being the second in a family of five children, two sons and three daughters. His parents, John and Gertrude (Pflumm) Hausch, were natives of Prussia, and remained in that country until death, leading useful lives as members of a farming community. It was their aim to educate each child as well as their means permitted, and Christian was sent to the common schools until he reached the age of fourteen years, after which he assisted in the cultivation of the home farm. Believing that better opportunities awaited him in the new world than in the home land, he set sail for America in 1851, and for a year worked as an apprentice to the cooper's trade in Buffalo, N. Y., after which he labored as a journeyman at Cincinnati and Zanesville, Ohio, and Petersburg, Ky., going in 1855 to St. Joseph, Mo., where he worked at the same trade.

During the spring of 1856 Mr. Hausch came across the plains with ox teams and after a journey of six months landed at Healdsburg, Cal., in September of the same year. For a time he engaged at his trade in addition to working as a farmer, but in the spring of 1857 he went to the mines of Sierra county near Downieville and continued there for five years. No special good fortune crowned his labors in the mines, and he finally determined to seek a more certain means of livelihood. Returning to Sonoma county in 1863 he worked as a cooper at Healdsburg and later built a shop on his eight-acre farm one and one-half miles north of that town. On coming to Tulare county in 1874 Mr. Hausch settled three and one-half miles south of Goshen, where he bought six hundred and forty acres of railroad land, and began the tilling of the soil. As time passed by he gradually became interested in the stock business, and the raising of cattle became one of the special features of his farm work. The profits of his labors were invested in other lands until he had acquired, in addition to the original purchase, a tract of one hundred and sixty acres and another of eighty acres, all of which still remain in his possession. In 1903 he retired from agricultural pursuits and came to Visalia, where he now makes his home. Though retired from active labors he still superintends his lands, and takes an active interest in the improvement of the property. As a citizen he has neglected no duty falling to a public-spirited man, but he has been averse to office-holding and, aside from voting the Democratic ticket, has taken no part in politics.

The first marriage of Mr. Hausch occurred in Healdsburg, and united him with Eliza Jane Ireland, who was born in Ohio and died in Healdsburg in 1873. The children of their union are as follows: Anna Belle, now Mrs. Dye, a resident of Tulare county; Hannah May, wife of

H. A. Crowell, of Los Gatos; Mrs. Flora Middleton; Mrs. Henrietta Lamb, who lives on her father's ranch; Mrs. Elsie Christina Hayes, living near Goshen; and Charles Joseph, who resides in Tulare county. The present wife of Mr. Hausch was Catherine Plumm, a native of Prussia, but since 1882 a resident of Tulare county. The only child of this union, Catherine Gertrude, is with her parents. Fraternally Mr. Hausch for years has taken a deep interest in Masonry, holding membership in the Lodge of Perfection, of Visalia, and Islam Temple, N. M. S., of San Francisco, and is also identified with the Eastern Star.

STONEWALL JACKSON ALLEN.

Through his efficient service in public office Mr. Allen has gained the confidence of the people of Merced county, where he also has the good fortune to possess the warm friendship of men with whom he has associated for years before becoming a county official. Himself a lifelong resident of California and a native of Tuolumne county, he is of southern family, descended from Virginian ancestors of colonial fame. His father, James M. Allen, was born and reared in Tennessee and about 1850 came to California via the Panama route, settling in Tuolumne county and taking up the uncertain occupation of mining. During 1869 he removed to Stanislaus county and began to improve a farm on the San Joaquin river, but two years later he abandoned agriculture for the hotel business in Turlock, where he built the first hotel building in the village. At seventy-three years of age, in November, 1903, he died at the home of a daughter in Bakersfield. His wife was Eliza Ellen Bradford, a native of Missouri, whence she crossed the plains to California and settled in Tuolumne county. She is still proprietor of the old Turlock hotel, but makes her home in Modesto. In her family there are two daughters and a son, namely: Nettie, wife of C. F. Lander, of Bakersfield; Stonewall Jackson, of Merced; and Mattie, wife of Richard Wilhite, of Bakersfield.

The birth of Stonewall Jackson Allen occurred November 11, 1862, while his parents were living at Saw Mill Flat. He was seven years of age when the family removed to the San Joaquin valley, and in 1871 went with them to Turlock, where he attended the grammar school. Later he completed his education by taking a business course in a college at South San Francisco. On his return home he engaged in the hotel business for three years. Under appointment from President Cleveland he served as postmaster from 1894 to 1898. At the expiration of his term of office he removed to Atwater, Merced county, buying in 1899 twenty acres under ditch and engaging in raising sweet potatoes. During 1901 he sold the property and now makes his home in the city of Merced, where, since January of 1903, he has filled the office of county recorder, to which he was elected on the Democratic ticket by a majority of eighty-five. In the administration of his office he has proved himself to be tactful, energetic, reliable and painstaking, reflecting credit upon the party who selected him as their standard-bearer. While his attention is given to the proper management of the office, he has not neglected the amenities of life, but has maintained a constant interest in organizations of a fraternal and social nature. Some years ago he was an active worker in the Knights of Pythias, and now is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, Beavers and Merced Parlor No. 24, N. S. G. W.

The marriage of Mr. Allen occurred in Turlock and united him with Miss Annie Mitchell, by whom he had two children, Clayton and Nellis M.; the latter died at the age of two and one-half years. Mrs. Allen is a daughter of Samuel B. and Helen (McCulloch) Mitchell, her mother being a near relative of General McCulloch. Coming from Lexington, Ky., Mr. Mitchell migrated to California at the close of the Mexican war and settled in the San Joaquin valley, where he engaged in raising stock and conducting a meat business for many years. During the Mexican war he endured the hardships incident to forced marches and sharp skirmishes, and remained at the front until peace was declared. Of all the members of his company he alone survives. Retired from business cares, he makes his home in Modesto. Of his three children Mrs. Allen was the second in order of birth and the only daughter. The older son, Samuel, at this writing holds an appointment as deputy county clerk of Stanislaus county, and the younger, Benjamin, is engaged in raising stock in Merced county.

ANDREW F. THOMPSON.

Since 1882 Andrew F. Thompson has been located upon his present property in the vicinity of Portersville, Tulare county, during the years which have passed since his purchase of the same, devoting his time to various agricultural and horticultural pursuits. Previous to his locating here he was known in Visalia and throughout the county as the local editor of the Visalia Delta for one year (1877-78). A native of Peoria, Ill., he was born March 14, 1850, a son of Samuel Thompson. The latter was a native of Ayrshire, Scotland, from which country he emigrated to the United States when a young man. He was a pattern-maker by trade and located in Peoria, Ill., where he followed that occupation until his death in 1852, at the early age of thirty-three years. His wife, formerly Helen McCormack, a native of the same locality in Scotland, also died in Illinois. They were the parents of three children, two sons and one daughter, of whom Andrew F. was the youngest. He received his education in the common schools of Santa Cruz, Cal., to which state he came with his aunt, Mrs. Mary Fletcher. In 1873 he engaged in farming with his uncle in Pleasant valley, Tulare county, with whom he remained until 1877, when he accepted the position of book-keeper and local editor of the Visalia Delta. In 1882 he purchased his present property, adding by purchase until he owned considerable land, having sold off a part and now owning two hundred acres. He engaged for a time in the raising of deciduous fruits but did not meet with the desired results so now devotes his land to grain and alfalfa, while he also has three and a half acres in oranges.

In Tulare, September 4, 1884, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Priscilla Dunham, who was born in Mercer county, Pa., August 6, 1850. She was educated in Iowa, graduating from the high school of Maquoketa, after which she engaged in teaching for some years. She came to California in 1881 and taught four years in Tulare and San Luis Obispo counties. To Mr. and Mrs. Thompson were born the following children: William F., Clay, Mary, Helen, Walter and Ernest. Fraternal Mr. Thompson is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Porterville, and politically casts his ballot with the Republican party.

JAMES P. DALY. A native of California, James P. Daly has been one of the active men of the state, one who has at all times done his share toward the upbuilding of the community in which he has resided. Every movement calculated to be of material benefit to the state or county has received his support, and today he is one of the men who is honored and respected by all who know him.

Born in Lake county, near Lakeport, April 3, 1860, Mr. Daly is the son of Patrick and Mary (O'Hara) Daly. Patrick Daly was born in Ireland, where he resided until he had reached his fourteenth year. He then left his native land and finally made his way to California, reaching here in 1849, the year of the great gold excitement. Like thousands of others who came to the state at that time, he went to the mines where he engaged in the search for gold a short time. Tiring of this pursuit he located in Lake county. Here he became engaged in farming and later began raising stock. Finally he settled four miles southeast of Lakeport, where he became the owner of two hundred and fifteen acres of fine farming land. Although considerable of his time was devoted to agricultural pursuits, he was one of the leading stock men of the county, raising cattle for the market, also dealing in hogs, shipping them to San Francisco. For thirty-five years Mr. Daly resided on this farm, and during that time became one of the largest stock men of the county, but after all these years of active life, he sold his home and removed to San Francisco. After a short time he again returned to Lakeport, where he is now living, being engaged in shipping hogs to the San Francisco market.

Mrs. Daly, who in maidenhood was Mary O'Hara, was born in New York city. After her marriage with Mr. Daly she did much to make his business ventures a success and in all ways proved a most worthy helpmeet. She died at the age of forty years, leaving eight children to mourn her loss.

The fourth of this large family was James P. Like all farmers' sons of those days he was brought up on the farm, attending the district schools when the work of the farm would allow, but most of the time was spent in learning the lessons of real life, the book learning being left for the future.

Remaining at home until he was twenty-one Mr. Daly then struck out for himself and in 1888 located in the Yokohl Valley, where he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land. This he at once began to improve and also engaged in stock-raising, following this for three years or until 1891, when he purchased eighty acres of section 35 and eighteen of section 26. This he devoted to grain and at times he has had as high as seven hundred acres. At the present time he devotes three hundred acres to wheat and barley each year.

In Mr. Daly this state has a man who has done much toward the building and improvements of the public highways. For several years he has devoted much of his time to that work and has constructed many miles of road. He operates a fine road machine on which he works twelve horses, and also a road plow which requires from ten to twelve horses to haul it. With this outfit he has constructed one mile of completed road in five days. This road grader and plow are the property of Tulare county.

In 1883 Mr. Daly was united in marriage with Mattie Combs, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of John Cuthbert Combs, who came to California in 1875. Mr. Combs was born in Kentucky and is a brother of Dr. F. A. Combs of Visalia. On arrival in California Mr.

A. C. Hart

Combs settled in Lake county, where he engaged in farming. He died while living near Exeter at the age of sixty-two years. His wife, who in maidenhood was Fanny Shortridge, was also a native of the Bluegrass state. She died in California at the age of sixty-two years. Both were active and consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Daly, John, Frank and Mae.

In fraternal relations Mr. Daly is a member of the Woodmen of the World, while Mrs. Daly takes an active interest in the Women of Woodcraft. In politics, a Democrat, he has always taken a deep interest in the welfare of his party and can be depended on to do his part.

The Daly family have an assured position in this county. On every hand are scores of friends who have for them a deep and sincere affection. Mr. Daly is active in all public movements and when called upon by his neighbors he is never found lacking. Such families as this are the kind that make the social part of life so attractive. May both Mr. and Mrs. Daly live long to enjoy the pleasures of life, pleasures made possible by the keen business judgment of Mr. Daly.

CHARLES W. HART. Three miles southeast of Farmersville, Tulare county, is located the farm upon which Charles W. Hart is engaged in raising cattle, horses and mules, being one of the large stock dealers in this section of Tulare county. A native Californian, he was born in Gilroy, Santa Clara county, June 30, 1860, a son of Charles C. Hart, the representative of an old Connecticut family, born in Litchfield county, that state, in 1826. He married in Connecticut, and came to California by the Panama route about 1857, following a brother, John Hart, who made the trip west via the Horn in the days of '49. The brother had settled first in Gilroy, where he engaged in the dairy business, later located in Tulare county, and finally removed to Hanford, Kings county, where his death occurred. Charles C. Hart also located in Gilroy, where he followed the dairy business in old Gilroy until 1861. In January of that year he removed to Tulare county, locating three miles south of Visalia, where he bought a farm of one hundred and twenty acres and engaged in general farming and stock-raising. In 1865 he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, the property now owned by his widow, where he made all the improvements and worked to bring the land to a high state of cultivation. Later, in partnership with his son, Charles W., he bought six hundred and forty acres of undeveloped land a half mile from his home, and also eighty acres of timber land. With his son he engaged in farming until his death, which occurred July 18, 1891, at the age of sixty-five years. He was a man of strong principles, an advocate of progress and reform and took an active interest in all movements calculated to increase the prosperity of the country. In his political convictions he was a staunch Republican. His wife, formerly Helen Payne, of New York state, survives him, and now makes her home in Tulare county, a consistent member of the Baptist Church. They were the parents of five children, namely: Fred Miles, a resident of Kings county, Cal.; Charles Weston, of this review; John H., a farmer located near the old home; Carrie Ellen, the wife of H. T. Anderson; and Kittie A., who became the wife of J. L. Tuohy, and died in 1904.

From the age of six months Charles W. Hart was reared in Tulare county, receiving his education in the district school in the vicinity of his home. At fourteen years of age he began active farming on his father's place, exercising an ability and judgment which were the result of his early training. Upon attaining his majority he became his father's partner, engaging in the raising of grain and hogs. Together with his father he purchased six hundred and forty acres of railroad land, and they continued in partnership until the death of the elder man. Mr. Hart then purchased the farming outfit and stock and continued in the work, renting from one thousand to twenty-five hundred acres of land upon which to carry on his business. He now owns six hundred and forty acres on sections 20, 21 and 17, township 19, range 26, while he rents adjoining properties in three tracts, respectively, eight hundred and eighty acres, one hundred and twenty acres and one hundred and sixty acres, a total of eleven hundred and sixty acres for pasture and grain. He also owns six hundred and forty acres seven miles northwest of Visalia, where he runs stock, and twenty-two hundred and forty acres at Jordan Flat, on Horse and Jordan creeks, all fenced and supplied with water from running springs. He has a herd of about five hundred cattle, making a specialty of Durhams and Aberdeen Polled Angus, and he also raises hogs, making a specialty of Poland China, and has one hundred and fifty head of horses and mules. He has made a success in his efforts and is highly regarded both for his business ability and his personal integrity.

In Hanford, Cal., Mr. Hart was united in marriage with Lila Conlee, who was born in Morro, San Luis Obispo county, Cal. Her father, Frank Conlee, a native of Illinois, came to California in 1870, and engaged as a lumber manufacturer at Creston and in Tulare county. He is now located at Springville, where he follows general farming and horticulture. His wife, formerly Ella Robinson, is a native of Canada. In their religious beliefs they are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Hart is the third in a family of nine children. She is the mother of four children, namely: Weston C., Helen, Hazel Irene and Ethel C. In his political affiliations Mr. Hart is very liberal and broad-minded, preferring to reserve the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. Fraternally he is a member of the Fraternal Aid of Farmersville, and in his religious convictions is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is also a member.

IRWIN JAY BUCKLEY. On a farm of three hundred and fifteen acres located between Snelling and Merced Falls, Merced county, resides I. Jay Buckley, a progressive, practical and successful farmer. He was born November 17, 1845, in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and represents the eleventh generation from Peter Buckley (spelled by him Berkeley), who emigrated from England in 1635. In direct line of descent Sylvanus Buckley, father of I. J. Buckley, was born in Norwich, Otsego county, N. Y., and was reared on the farm owned by his father. He married Phoebe Merriman, also a native of that county, and a descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestors, who were soldiers in the Revolutionary war. She was also closely related to the Winchesters, who were the founders of the Universalist religion. Sylvanus Buckley was ambitious and energetic, and in his early life sought a location in various localities. In 1844 he removed to Iowa, and at Mt. Pleasant engaged in the manufacture of plows. While thus engaged he heard the glowing accounts of the discovery of gold on the Pacific coast, and accordingly closed up his business and started across the plains en route to California in 1849. Arriving at his destination, he mined in Placer county for a time with fair success, which enabled him to pay a visit to his family in Iowa in 1853, from whence he moved his family to his old home in Ostego county, N. Y. He came back to the mines and remained for another period, returning to New York in 1856, when he brought his family to California by way of the Nicaragua route, arriving in San Francisco July 20 of that year. From this time he turned his attention to farming, and unfortunately invested in what proved to be a part of a Spanish grant in Alameda county, near Alvarado. In 1861 he located in Merced county, and in the vicinity of Snelling embarked in the sheep business, and at the same time was interested in some mines in Nevada. He met with a fair degree of success in his stock business and became owner of about eighteen thousand acres of land. As a public spirited man he gave his best efforts toward the advancement of the community where he made his home. At the time of his death, 1888, he was seventy-nine years old. He was survived by his wife, who died in 1892, in her eighty-fourth year. There were six children in the family, viz: Henry A. (who died in 1872), Horace F., I. Jay, George W. (who died in 1902), S. P., and C. O. E.

I. Jay Buckley was reared under the parental roof, attended the public schools, and as soon as he was of age to be useful about the farm assisted his father with the duties incident to farm life. He was closely associated with his father's varied interests until the death of the latter. In 1887 he purchased his present ranch, made such improvements as were necessary and has followed diversified farming since that date, and has made this his residence with the exception of about three years spent in Merced.

In 1878 Mr. Buckley was united in marriage with Mary, a daughter of the late John M. Montgomery, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this volume. Of this union was born one child, a daughter, Irma, the wife of John Jardine, of San Francisco. Mr. Buckley is a staunch Republican and has served the party in various capacities in Merced county. He is unostentatious in manner, public spirited and well read, very fond of books, and at one time was the owner of one of the largest private libraries in the county, which unfortunately was destroyed by fire. He is one of the substantial citizens of Merced county, and his long years of association with its best interests have brought good results.

RICHARD HUGH OWEN. Among the enterprising and progressive citizens of Tulare county whose efforts have been productive of the growth and upbuilding of the Exeter section, prominent mention belongs to Richard Hugh Owen, a member of the firm which owns and controls the Rocky Point Granite Works. He was born in Anglesea, Wales, May 26, 1863, the fourth in a family of five children, all of whom are living. His parents, Hugh and Mary (Evans) Owen, were natives of the same place, where they spent their entire lives, dying at advanced ages. The father was employed in the slate quarries.

Richard Hugh Owen is the only member of his father's family who is located in California. He was reared on the home place in Wales, attending the public schools in boyhood. At thirteen years of age he began to work on the various farms in the vicinity of his home, and at sixteen found employment in the slate quarries. In March, 1882, he came to America, working, in the slate quarries in Fairhaven, Vt., until December of the following year, when he came to California. His first work in this state was at Penryn, Placer county, where he was apprenticed as a granite cutter. Three years later he began work at his trade in San Francisco, and in 1888 came to Tulare county, looking for a location which he soon found, then returned to San Francisco and interested Messrs. Hughes and Griffith in a quarry which they opened in the spring of 1889, near Exeter. After five years (during which time Mr. Hughes disposed of his interest to his partners), they bought ten acres of land and opened their present quarry, known as the Rocky Point Granite Works. They expect to have a spur of the proposed electric railway, leading from Visalia to Lemon Cove, run up to the quarry, when they can ship by car, and will also have their works operated by electricity. In addition to his interest in this business Mr. Owen also owns one hundred and six acres adjoining the Griffith property, on section 6, township 19, range 27, upon which he engages in stock-raising, while he also owns a fine pasture of forty acres near Farmersville and a farm of one hundred and sixty acres three miles southeast of Exeter, where he makes his home. He also owns a handsome residence in Exeter, and is interested in the People's Canal Ditch Company.

In Visalia Mr. Owen was united in marriage with Rose Ella Fly, who was born near Exeter, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Hugh, Leland, Oliver, Viola and Zylpha. Mr. Owen was made a Mason in Penryn and is now a member of Visalia Lodge No. 128, F. & A. M. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias, of Exeter, of which he is past chancellor, and the Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias. Religiously his wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while he is a Presbyterian. Politically he is a Republican.

FRED STURM. An upbuilder of this section and a successful orange grower, Fred Sturm is named among the representative men of this class. He was born in Illinois November 15, 1864, a son of John Sturin, a German emigrant whose biographical sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. He received his education in the common schools, after which he engaged as a painter and paper-hanger in Elgin, Ill. He became very successful in that line of work, taking big contracts and operating a large number of men in both city and country. Deciding to locate on the Pacific coast he came to California in 1896 and located on his present property, purchasing with his father two hundred acres at that time. They later added by purchase two hundred acres more, the property having since been divided. In his home place Mr. Sturm has twenty-five acres devoted to the cultivation of oranges and lemons. He has recently purchased a tract of thirty acres just west of his home, and also has forty acres of salt grass west of Portersville, as well as owning town lots, an interest in the Rochdale store, and town lots in Elgin, Ill. With the Sturm Brothers Company he was interested in a tract of eighty acres south of Plano, forty acres being planted to oranges, while they also owned other tracts in this section. He has made a success of his work and has a fine orange orchard.

In Portersville Mr. Sturm was united in marriage with Carrie Adams, a native of Visalia, Cal., and they have two children, Esther and Edwin, both at home. Mr. Sturm is a member of the Evangelical Church, and politically is a staunch Republican.

CHARLES W. SCHANK. Prominent among the enterprising and successful business men of Newman is Charles W. Schank, a man of marked ability and genuine worth. He is actively identified with the mercantile and industrial interests of the place as a hardware merchant and a plumber, and is also well known throughout this section of the county as an undertaker. A son of Charles W. Schank, Sr., he was born April 16, 1859, in Louisville, Ky.

A farmer by birth and breeding, Charles W. Schank, Sr., was born in Vanderburg county, Ky., and for several years of his earlier life was a resident of Louisville, Ky. He subsequently settled in Evansville, Ind., where he resided until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Robinson, spent her entire life in Kentucky, dying there in early womanhood. She bore him five children, one son and four daughters, Charles W., the special subject of this sketch, being the fourth child in succession of birth.

Removing to Evansville, Ind., with his father when a lad of seven years, Charles W. Schank there received a practical common school education. Beginning to learn the tinner's trade when fifteen years old, he served a full apprenticeship, becoming an expert tinner. Migrating to St. Louis, Mo., in 1879, he followed his trade in that city for a year, and then went to Topeka, Kan., where he was similarly employed for two years. In 1882 Mr. Schank located as a tinner in Silver City, N. M., and the following year came to California, where he worked at his trade for a year, living first in Los Angeles, and then in San Francisco and San Jose. Turning his face eastward in 1884, he was for three years located in Central City, Colo., where he was busily employed at his trade. Returning to California in 1887, Mr. Schank took up his residence in Newman, and worked for awhile for Mr. Green. He then accepted a position at Stockton, but owing to the urgent solicitation of Mr. Green, his former employer, returned very soon to Newman. Six months later, in 1891, Mr. Schank borrowed $600, and, with a partner, established himself in business as a dealer in hardware and tinware, and as a plumber. Succeeding well in his undertakings, Mr. Schank bought out his partner in 1893, and has since carried on the business alone, having a large and remunerative trade in his line of goods, his stock being varied and extensive, and his work always satisfactory. In 1897 he also established an undertaking establishment, which he is managing most successfully.

In Newman, Cal., Mr. Schank married Rose Mayland, a native of Germany. Politically Mr. Schank affiliates with the Democratic party. Fraternal he is identified with several of the leading secret organizations of this vicinity, including the following named: Newman Lodge, F. & A. M.; Stockton Commandery, K. T.; Order of the Eastern Star; Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Ancient Order of United Workmen; and the Knights of Pythias.

ROBERT GRACEY. The oldest financial institution in the county of Merced is the Security Savings Bank, which was organized for the purpose of conducting a general banking business in March, 1875, and during the period that has since elapsed, through the wise investments of its directors, has gained a reputation for soundness and reliability surpassed by none. With a capital stock of $100,000 and a surplus of $70,000, and with an efficient corps of officers under the executive oversight of Mr. Gracey as president, it affords exceptional facilities for the investments of savings and for the transaction of business of a general banking nature.

The Gracey family is of Scotch origin, but was established in Ireland prior to settlement in America in 1799. Robert Gracey was born near Newville, Pa., December 4, 1850, a son of John and Isabelle O. (Sharpe) Gracey. He passed the first fifteen years of his life on the home place, meanwhile receiving such advantages as the district schools afforded. When fifteen years old he went to Pittsburg, where he attended a private school for three years. At the expiration of that time he became a student in the Washington and Jefferson College in Pennsylvania, where he remained until the close of the sophomore year. Next he matriculated in Westminster (Pa.)

College, from which institution he was graduated in 1871 with the degree of A. B. On the completion of his college course he went to Indiana and for one year acted as an instructor in the Richland Academy. In September, 1872, he became a teacher in the college at Garnett, Kan., but the location did not prove desirable and he decided to come to the Pacific coast.

During April of 1873 Mr. Gracey arrived in California, where his first position was that of a teacher at San Luis Obispo. From there, in August, 1875, he came to Merced, his present home, and was thereafter engaged as principal of the city schools until his retirement from the profession in 1887.

In 1887 he took up the real estate and abstract business in Merced, as a member of the firm of Wood, Simonson & Gracey, and after dissolving that partnership continued alone in the buying and selling of city and country property, at the same time acquiring stock in the Security Savings Bank, of which he was elected a director. From 1899 to 1903 he made his home in Pennsylvania, but returned to California in May of the latter year, in order to enter upon the duties of president of the bank, to which position he had been elected in April. Now, as for years past, he retains important interests in farm and city property, mainly in this locality.

Such enterprises as are calculated to promote the material prosperity of Merced, or advance its educational and religious progress receive his co-operation and support. In view of his public spirit, he justly ranks among those men whose presence in Merced has been the chief factor in the growth and commercial development of the place.

WILLIAM WARREN GIDDINGS. A man of liberal views and of the greatest integrity, energetic and progressive, William Warren Giddings of Newman is held in high esteem throughout the community, and is prominently identified with the promotion of the business and financial activities of the city. A son of the late Elisha Giddings, he is a fine representative of the native-born citizens of Stanislaus county, his birth having occurred August 21, 1874, in Turlock. He comes from honored colonial stock, being a lineal descendant of George Giddings, who emigrated from Ipswich, England, to Massachusetts in 1630, and settled permanently in Ipswich, Essex county, where he became influential in public affairs. Mr. Giddings' paternal grandfather, Benjamin Giddings, a life-long resident of Hartford county, Conn., was for many years one of the leading citizens of the town of Hartland. A strong Republican, he was very active in public affairs, serving as selectman, as representative to the state legislature, as commissioner to the Superior Court, and as postmaster of Hartland.

A native of Hartland, Conn., Elisha Giddings was born September 6, 1829. A young man of great enterprise and shrewd business foresight, he early cast his lot with the brave pioneers of California, taking advantage of the great opportunities afforded the settlers of a new country. Crossing from the shores of the Atlantic to the Pacific in 1852, he located in Stanislaus county, opening a store of general merchandise in Turlock. In its management he was very successful, and as head of the firm of Giddings & Ward carried on an extensive business until his death, in 1879. He married Miss Cookson, who died in 1876. Two sons and one daughter were born of their union, William W., the special subject of this sketch, being the youngest child.

Left an orphan when but five years old, William Warren Giddings was brought up in the home of J. C. Green, one of the early pioneers of the county, receiving his education in the graded schools of Turlock and Newman. He was subsequently engaged in the hardware business as an employe of Mr. Green, first at Hill's Ferry, and later at Newman. From July 1, 1898, until August 1, 1903, he served as postmaster. Resigning that position, he accepted the cashiership of the Bank of Newman, in which he is a stockholder, and has since retained it, his qualifications for the office being recognized, and his services appreciated. Mr. Giddings has also other interests, being a stockholder in the Newman Realty Company, of which he is a charter member.

Mr. Giddings was married September 14, 1904, in Oakland, Cal., to Miss Julia V. Johnson, daughter of Captain James Johnson, a well-known resident of Oakland. Fraternaly he is an active member of the Knights of Pythias, and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. One of the foremost members of the Republican party, he is now a member of the State Central Committee, and has served on different occasions as a delegate to state and county conventions.

MRS. MARTHA ELIZABETH RICE. Coming with her husband to California in pioneer days, Mrs. Martha Elizabeth Rice experienced all the privations and hardships of frontier life, bravely performing her full share in the upbuilding and maintaining of a home in a new country. Through it all she kept up the remarkable womanly courage with which nature had endowed her, and is now living in ease and comfort, enjoying the fruits of those earlier years of toil, and feeling amply repaid for the discomforts of those darker times, the only bar to her happiness being the loss of her beloved husband, to whom she was always friend, companion and counsellor. A daughter of William Gardner, she was born, June 14, 1829, in James county, Ark., of English ancestry. Her paternal grandfather, a life-long resident of Virginia, was a large landholder, at the time of his death owning the land now occupied by the city of Richmond. He had no deed, however, to the property, and as his son William died while en route from Arkansas to Virginia to claim the land, and his son George, the next heir-at-law, was then in the Mexican war, the property was diverted from the family.

Born and reared in Virginia, William Gardner there learned the trades of carpenter and cabinet maker, which he followed in his earlier life. Turning his attention to agriculture, he migrated to Arkansas, where he followed farming for a number of years. He became a man of much influence in his new home, and was active in public life, serving as justice of the peace in Benton. While on his way to Virginia to settle his father's estate he died suddenly, his death occurring in Texas. He married Maria English, who was born in England, immigrated with her parents to Tennessee, and died in Benton county, Ark. Of the six children that blessed their union, five grew to years of maturity, and three are living, Martha Elizabeth, the special subject of this sketch, being the second child.

July 20, 1848, Martha Elizabeth Gardner became the wife of Isaac Rice, who was born in 1820, in McMinn county, Tenn., and was there brought up on a farm. His father, John Rice, born in Tennessee in 1800, married Tabitha Dodson, and settled on land from which they improved a fine homestead. Leaving his native state when twenty-eight years old, Isaac Rice went to Arkansas in pursuit of profitable employment, and after his marriage engaged in farming near Bentonville. In 1857 he started with his family across the plains, joining the ox-team train in which were the emigrants that were massacred at Mountain Meadows. Mr. and Mrs. Rice, and a few others, left the train before reaching Salt Lake, taking the northern trail, while the others kept on to Salt Lake, meeting their doom at the point mentioned. While crossing the mountains, Mr. Rice was taken ill, and Mrs. Rice assumed command of affairs and drove the stock, getting through with ninety-two head of cattle.

Settling in Suisun valley, Mr. Rice lived there a year, and was subsequently engaged in the dairy business at Clear Lake for four years. After spending eight years in Vacaville and one year in Antioch, he removed to Tulare county in 1872.

and took up a homestead claim three and one-half miles southeast of Dinuba, and from the wild plain and sheep pasture he improved a rich and valuable ranch. Erecting a dwelling house and farm buildings, he placed the land in a tillable condition, and was here profitably employed in wheat raising until his death, November 22, 1888. For twelve years after the death of her husband Mrs. Rice resided on the home farm, which has since been sold off in different lots, but since 1900 has resided in Dinuba. She is a woman of refinement and worth, and is highly esteemed and respected for her many virtues and sterling qualities. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Rice ten children were born, namely: John C., of Hanford; Mrs. Laura T. Edwards, of Arizona; Mrs. Melissa J. Lawrence, of Point Richmond; Mrs. Ella S. Bacon, of Tulare county; Thomas, of Arizona; Mrs. Mamie McCracken, of this county; Mrs. Jessie B. Ryce, of Selma; Charles G., in the ice business at Dinuba; Hattie B., wife of W. G. Hunter, of this county; and Frank E., of Dinuba. A strong Prohibitionist and an earnest worker in the temperance cause, Mrs. Rice is a valued member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She is also a faithful member of the Baptist Church, and is president of its Ladies' Aid Society.

JOHN STURM, JR., who was formerly a member of the firm of Sturm Brothers Company, which has recently been dissolved and the land divided among the members, is a son of John Sturm, the first of the name to settle in California. Unable to care for the land which he purchased the elder man induced his sons to come to California from the state of Illinois, where he had located the family upon his emigration from Alsace-Lorraine, his native land. John Sturm, Jr., is also a native of that country, where his birth occurred July 29, 1853. Brought to the United States in childhood he was reared in Illinois, receiving an education in the common schools. In 1873 he secured employment with Libby, McNeil & Libby Packing Company, as city salesman, being located in Chicago. After seven years he engaged in business for himself, becoming a retail coal dealer, and later engaged in the teaming business. Following his father and brother to California in 1868 he located in Portersville and purchased fifty acres which he finished planting to orchard, fourteen acres being in Washington navels and late Valencias, and also lemons. His property is located four miles east of Portersville, in which city he also owns some lots. In the same year in which he took up his work here Mr. Sturm returned to Chicago and brought his family to his ranch, where they have since made their home.

In Chicago Mr. Sturm married Ann Loehr, a native of that city, and they are the parents of the following children: Emma Grace, the wife of A. V. Chandler, of Chicago; Anna Mabel, the wife of W. R. Hattersley, of Chicago; Ellen Minnie; Ellen Pearl; John Lester; Walter Allen; Edith Philippine; and Genevieve Magdaline. Mr. Sturm is a member of the Evangelical Church, of which he is a trustee, and is also superintendent of the Sunday-school. Politically he is a staunch Republican. He is a director and president of the Campbell & Moreland Ditch Company, director of the Portersville Citrus Association, and director and vice-president of the Portersville Rochdale Company.

A. HAMMOND SCOFIELD. The thriving blacksmith shop and carriage manufactory conducted under the firm name of Scofield, Alvord & Co., have added considerably to the business activity of Merced, Cal., for the past twelve years. The senior member of the firm, A. H. Scofield, came to California in 1886, at which time he went to Stockton, and for one year was employed in a wheel manufactory there. His identification with Merced dates from 1887, from which time until 1890 he was in the employ of others as blacksmith and carriage-maker, trades with which he had become thoroughly familiar by intimate association with his father, who was an expert in these lines. Purchasing the carriage shop of Elgin Lewis in 1890, Mr. Scofield continued the business alone until September, 1892, at which time he took in as a partner E. R. Alvord, and in 1899 admitted his eldest son, Arthur L. Scofield. The business is now conducted under the name of Scofield, Alvord & Co., and compares favorably in both quality and scope with any like establishment to be found throughout the San Joaquin valley.

Born in Hamburg, Livingston county, Mich., August 7, 1836, Mr. Scofield is a son of Benjamin Ferris and Celestia (Wolcott) Scofield, the father born in Connecticut, and the mother a native of New York state. Her death occurred in Michigan. The Scofield family is of eastern origin, and as early as 1833 Benjamin F. located in Livingston county, Mich. His death occurred in 1863, in Howell, that county, where he had been the pioneer carriage-maker for many years. Of the nine children born to Benjamin F. and Celestia (Wolcott) Scofield, eight grew to years of maturity, and A. H. was the fifth child in order of birth. His training and education were received in Howell, Mich., and when he had reached an age when he could make himself useful, he went into his father's carriage shop to learn his trade. With his father before him an expert carriage-maker, it was but natural that he should grasp the details of the business readily. He continued with his father until 1862, in which year he started out independently in an establishment of his own, and for the following ten years carried on a successful business in Howell. Removing to Detroit in 1872, he varied his former life somewhat by becoming foreman in the street car shops. Four years later he resumed his trade in South Lyon, Oakland county, Mich., where as a manufacturer of carriages he conducted business until 1886. It was in the latter year that Mr. Scofield first touched California soil, and that his coming has worked to his advantage in various respects is evident.

The commodious family residence recently erected on Eighteenth street is presided over by Mrs. Scofield, who, before her marriage, was known as Harriet Emma Raywalt. She was born in Watkins Glen, Schuyler county, N. Y., a daughter of Isaac Raywalt, who in his later years became a hotel-keeper in Dexter, Washtenaw county, Mich. Mr. and Mrs. Scofield were united in marriage in Howell, Mich., and they have two children, the eldest of whom, Arthur Lane, is in partnership with his father, and Flossie Emma is at home with her parents. The family attend the services of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Scofield is a member. Politically Mr. Scofield is independent, voting for whomsoever in his opinion will best fill the position in question, irrespective of party name or creed. In Pinckney, Livingston county, Mich., Mr. Scofield was made a Mason, and is now a member of La Grange Lodge No. 99, F. & A. M. of Merced. While residing in South Lyon, Mich., he was made an Odd Fellow, and in the local lodge at Merced he is past grand.

JAMES GARRETT. A successful farmer of Tulare county, James Garrett is located sixteen miles northeast of Visalia, just west of Antelope valley. He came to California in 1867, from Australia, his native land being England, and his birth having occurred in Norfolk in 1837. He was reared in Northumberland, where he followed mining in young manhood. Deciding to visit the gold fields of Australia, he went to Melbourne at the age of twenty years, thence to the mines of Castlemaine, following the various excitements in that country for some time and engaging in both quartz and placer mining. Like all miners he had his times of success and of failure, but found a compensation in the work. In 1867 he came to California via Tahiti to San Francisco, and following his arrival found employment in the Mount Diablo coal mines, of Contra Costa county, where he remained for two and a half years. In September, 1869, he came to Kings county, and pre-empted a quarter section of land near the present site of Le-moore, then known as Mussel Slough. The country was practically a desert at that time, but with twenty-six of the settlers a company was formed, which built the Lower Kings river water ditch. Mr. Garrett's land is all under irrigation and he is engaged in general farming operations, having made many valuable improvements with the passing of the years. In 1885 he rented this farm and bought a farm in Townsend district, Tulare county, where he owns two hundred and forty acres on section 14, township 17, range 26. Here he is successfully engaged in raising grain, and is numbered among the prominent men of this section. In his religious convictions Mr. Garrett is a member of the Episcopal Church.

CHARLES HENRY MOSHER. A farm improved and made valuable by the energy and resource of a man who has depended solely upon his own efforts and to whom the country is both a profitable and pleasant place in which to dwell, is that of Charles Henry Mosher, who in 1890 became the owner of eighty acres five miles southeast of Visalia. Thirty-five acres of this ranch he put under peaches and prunes, and prepared them for market in a home dryer, and the balance he put in pasture and general farming, being equipped with substantial barns and buildings and needful agricultural implements.

Born in Tompkins county, N. Y., March 4, 1841, Mr. Mosher was six years old when his parents, Ambrose and Sarah (Castleine) Mosher, moved to Battle Creek, Mich., then offering superior facilities for lumbering and mercantile enterprises. Ambrose Mosher, who was a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., turned his attention to both lumbering and merchandising, owning sawmills and conducting a large and flourishing business. Eleven years after arriving in Michigan, in 1858, his death occurred after a slight illness, he being then but fifty-two years old, and seemingly in the prime of a vigorous manhood. His wife also died in Michigan, leaving two sons and two daughters, the youngest of whom is Charles Henry, who was educated in the common schools of Battle Creek. At an early day he moved to Wisconsin, where he became interested in lumbering and logging, and where he was sufficiently successful to warrant him in starting lumber yards in Minnesota and Iowa, his removal to the former state taking place in 1875. At Lanesboro, Minn., he engaged in business for two years, and upon returning to Wisconsin started a hotel at Wausau, which he operated with a partner, to whom he sold his interest at the end of two years. Locating in Centerville, Iowa, he carried on a retail lumber business for two years, and in 1888 took up his residence in Santa Cruz, Cal., and engaged in a livery business for a year and a half. In 1890 he moved to Tulare county and bought the property which he improved and which was his residence until December, 1904, when he sold out.

Since casting his first presidential vote Mr. Mosher has been loyal to the Republican party, but has never been willing to accept official honors from his fellow townsmen. His association with the Masonic fraternity dates from his residence in Wisconsin, from which lodge he was demitted. In Perry county, Ill., he married Gertrude Halsey, who was born in Vermont, and who has become the mother of the following children: William, of Visalia; Belle, at home; Charles, with the Ringling Brothers' circus; Gertrude, attending the State University at Berkeley; and Fred and Margaret, at home. The years have brought esteem and honor to Mr. Mosher, leaving him a typical representative of the substantial and successful western gentleman.

WALTER E. NETHERTON. One of the most prosperous and thriving agriculturists of either Stanislaus or Merced counties, Walter E. Netherton is conducting his ranch in keeping with the latest and most improved and approved methods, making a specialty of dairying. Residing three miles south of Newman, his land is within the limits of Merced county, and is especially adapted to the raising of alfalfa and hay, which are his staple crops. A native of Contra Costa county, he was born near Byron, September 28, 1874, a son of J. Smith Netherton.

The son of a farmer, J. Smith Netherton was born in Platte county, Mo., in 1835. In 1850 he came across the plains with an ox team train to California, being then fourteen years of age, and at first worked in the mines. He subsequently began farming in Lafayette, Cal., and afterward entered one hundred and sixty acres of land near Byron. Since that time he has been actively and prosperously engaged in farming and stock raising, being located in Merced county, where he has a valuable ranch of three hundred and twenty acres. He married Matilda Ann Estes, a native of Missouri. Her father, Joseph Estes, emigrated from England, his native land, to the United States, and located first in Missouri, from there coming with ox teams to California in pioneer times, and spending his remaining days as a farmer in Contra Costa county. Of the nine children born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. John Smith Netherton, five survive, namely: William P., an attorney in Santa Cruz county; Edward, a printer in San Francisco; George, connected with the Oakland Street Railway; Walter E., the special subject of this sketch; and Delbert, manager of the home ranch.

Having completed his studies in the district school, Walter E. Netherton grew to manhood on the home farm, becoming familiar with the various branches of agriculture. Assuming charge of a large ranch in Merced county in 1892, he labored diligently and effectively, meeting with deserved success in its management. In 1903, Mr. Netherton located on his present farm, and has since been actively engaged in the dairy business, keeping thirty-five cows, and having eighty head of cattle, mostly Holsteins, although he has a few choice Durhams. On his home farm he has forty acres of land in alfalfa, and also owns thirty-seven and three-tenths acres below the ditch, which he devotes to the same crop. Mr. Netherton's farm in point of improvements and equipments is one of the best in the vicinity, with its neat residence and ample barns and outbuildings being a credit to his energy and activity.

In Modesto, Cal., Mr. Netherton married Mrs. Mary Petersen, who was born in Denmark, a daughter of Albert Albertsen, a farmer and dairyman, and came with her parents to California when a year old. Mr. and Mrs. Netherton have one child, a daughter, named Mabel Ruth. Fraternaly Mr. Netherton is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and of the Uniformed Rank Knights of Pythias. He is a man of good business ability and judgment, and is one of the stockholders in the New Era Creamery Association.

ANDRES S. RAYNOR. Eight miles east of the town of Le Grand, on the old Raynor ranch, resides the gentleman named above, and without a doubt he is one of the most prominent and successful sheep and stock ranchers in Merced county. His home ranch contains seventeen hundred acres and in Mariposa county in partnership with his brother, W. N. Raynor, he has a two hundred and forty acre grain farm. He also rents eight thousand acres of the Raynor estate, which formerly contained fourteen thousand acres, located in Merced, Madera and Mariposa counties. It was on Long Island, New York, that Mr. Raynor was born, January 14, 1865, and he is one of three children born to William M. and Jennie (Carmen) Raynor and grandson of Micajah and Ruth (Baldwin) Raynor. His father, born at Hempstead, N. Y., in 1831 spent his boyhood and early youth on the farm of his father and at seventeen went to Richmond county to learn the baking business. While here several years later he made up his mind to go to California and accordingly embarked on the steamer Cherokee bound for Panama. After a rough trip, Aspinwall was reached and Mr. Raynor was five days traveling up the Chagres river, after which he took the steamer McKino for San Francisco. Bad weather delayed the steamer so long that the supply of coal and provisions gave out and after waiting several months he was at last obliged to take the coast steamer at San Simeon bay, reaching San Francisco after a journey of five months.

BENJAMIN HICKS

At Jamestown in Tuolumne county, he engaged in mining pursuits for several years, afterward returning to his home in New York. In 1861 he married Miss Jennie Carmen, who was born in the Empire state, the only child of Joseph Carmen, who died at Freeport, L. I., December 26, 1904, when eighty-five years of age. His daughter, Mrs. Jennie Raynor, died at San Jose, December 21, 1904, when fifty-nine years of age. In 1868, with his family, including Andres S., Mr. Raynor again went to California by the Panama route and in Tuolumne county he engaged in raising sheep, which occupied his attention up to 1871. In Mariposa county he followed a similar business the next year, afterward spending a short time in Fresno county. In 1872 he located on the place previously mentioned, known as the old Raynor ranch, and here for many years he engaged in raising sheep on an extensive scale. About 1884 he removed to San Jose, but it was in Fresno county that he died in 1893, aged sixty-two years. His children are Mrs. Addie Daulton, of Madera county; Andres S.; and William N., who follows ranching pursuits in Merced county.

Reared in California, Andres S. Raynor was the recipient of a very good education; his common school learning was supplemented by a complete course in the Garden City Business College and after leaving school he took up the life of a rancher, to which his subsequent years have been devoted. He is assisted by his brother, William N., who married Miss Sadie CleeK, a native of Merced county, Cal. It was in Santa Clara county that Andres S. Raynor married Miss Nellie McKee, who was born in San Jose, and they have three children, Howard, Ruth and Joseph. Like his father, Mr. Raynor is a staunch Republican but has never been active in political affairs. His father, however, while a resident of Fresno county, served as supervisor. Both brothers are public-spirited citizens, befitting their high standing in the community.

BENJAMIN HICKS. From the time of his original settlement in Tulare county until his death, a period of about twenty-five years, Mr. Hicks was intimately associated with the agricultural development of this part of California and by his judicious cultivation of the land accomplished much in assisting to place the farming interests of the locality upon a profitable basis. When he began to till the soil here little had been done in that direction and the fertility of the land was an unknown quantity, but he and other pioneers by their industrious efforts proved that grains can be raised profitably in this part of the state and likewise the stock business can be conducted on a remunerative basis.

Of Canadian birth and ancestry, Mr. Hicks was born in Toronto December 30, 1847, and grew to manhood in his home city. During 1869 he set out to seek a livelihood and at once came to the States, proceeding direct to California, where he rented farm land in Tulare county, four and one-half miles east of Visalia. After six years on that place he removed to a farm one and one-half miles north of Visalia, and from there in 1884 removed to a stock and grain farm of eight hundred acres. For nine years he cultivated that land, meanwhile accumulating considerable savings, a portion of which he invested in a tract of one hundred acres two miles north-east of Visalia, and in addition he bought an eighty-acre tract of grain land. When death came to him, June 9, 1900, he had attained a position of influence among the farmers of Tulare county and was held in the highest respect as a man of keen judgment, high honor and great energy. In all his dealings he proved honorable, doing unto others as he would be done by, and exemplifying in his life the teachings of the Christian Church, of which he was a devoted member. Loyal to his adopted country, he gave his support to all measures for the benefit of county and commonwealth. In political matters he believed the principles of the Republican party best adapted to promote the material prosperity of the nation and always supported them by voice and vote. Fraternally he was connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The free school system met with his cordial support and in his service as trustee of the Elbow creek school district he displayed a keen interest in securing for the children of the district the best advantages possible without unduly burdening the taxpayers.

Near Visalia, in 1871, occurred the marriage of Benjamin Hicks and Elizabeth A. March, a native of Merced, this state, and a daughter of Robert and Mary Jane (Holloway) March, natives of Kentucky. In an early day her parents settled in Missouri, and from there, accompanied by his young wife, Mr. March crossed the plains to California in 1849, settling in Mariposa county, later going to Merced county, and eventually locating in Tulare county, where he supplemented farm work by various mining interests. At the time of his death, which occurred in Tulare county in 1903, he had attained the age of seventy-eight years. His wife died in 1881, in Tulare county, aged fifty-six years. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Hicks consisted of seven children, but three are deceased. Those now living are Albert E., who has charge of the old home ranch; Mary Pearl and Jewel, who reside with their mother at No. 503 North Church street, Visalia; and Ruby Louise, who married A. E. Blair, and lives near Visalia. The family are identified with the Christian Church. Upon the death of Mr. Hicks his wife became administrator of the estate, which she has managed with a capability and wise judgment that mark her as a woman of unusual business talents.

CARL E. KOCHER. One of the intelligent, practical and energetic business men of the San Joaquin valley is C. E. Kocher, who is identified with the industrial interests of that section of the state. He is one of the leading hardware merchants of Merced, the president of the Merced Chamber of Commerce, one of the organizers and the secretary of the Pacific Slate Company, which is successfully operating slate mines that are located about fifteen miles from this city, across the line in Mariposa county. A son of the late Abraham Kocher, he was born in Hornitos, Mariposa county, December 9, 1867.

Born and brought up in the canton of Berne, Switzerland, Abraham Kocher, not satisfied with his future financial prospects in his native land, emigrated to the United States in 1852, and located in Mariposa county, Cal. Beginning his search for gold, he followed mining for a while, and then settled permanently in Hornitos, where he was engaged in business as a saddler and harness-maker until his death, in 1870. He was a man of irreproachable character, strictly honest in all of his dealings, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He married Catherine Hunziker, who was born in Berne, Switzerland, and now resides in Hornitos, where she is carrying on a successful dry goods and millinery business. Two children were born of their union, namely: Emma, of Hornitos; and Carl E., the subject of this sketch.

After completing the district school course, Carl E. Kocher pursued his studies in the San Jose high school, and then entered the Garden City Business College, where he was graduated in 1887. Coming then to Merced, he entered the employ of his uncle, J. Kocher, a hardware dealer, and remained with him as bookkeeper for ten years. In 1897 Mr. Kocher began business on his own account, locating on Front street, where he occupies a two-story building, 25x150 feet, carrying a complete stock of hardware of all kinds. He also deals in agricultural implements and tools of every description, and keeps on hand a full line of paints and oils. A man of decided push and ability, he has built up a large and remunerative business, his trade equaling that of other merchants engaged in his line of business, his store and warehouse being constantly replenished to satisfy the wants of his patrons. He resides in the Bradley addition to the city, on Central avenue, where he has erected a modern residence. By good management and wise investment he has acquired a good property, and in addition to his other interests has an orchard of twenty acres, and a vineyard, in the Yosemite colony.

In Mariposa county, Mr. Kocher married Miss Fay Craighan, a native of that county, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Catherine, Viola and John Edward. Politically Mr. Kocher is identified with the Democrats, and for eight years, from 1896 until 1904, he served as city treasurer, filling the position in an able and faithful manner.

HOMER DAILEY WOODARD. A successful farmer and stockman, Homer Dailey Woodard is numbered among the representative men of Tulare county and holds a prominent place as a citizen. He is a native of Wisconsin, having been born in Waukesha November 22, 1850, a son of Myron Woodard. The elder man was born near Rochester, N. Y., June 9, 1819, where the Woodard family had flourished for generations. An ancestor on his mother's side, William Williams, signed the Declaration of Independence, while his father served in the Revolutionary war. Myron Woodard was also a staunch citizen in time of need, having served under General Scott at the time of the trouble between Canada and the United States. He became an early settler of Waukesha county, Wis., where he cleared a farm of beech and maple trees and assisted materially in the development and upbuilding of the section in which he made his home. Deciding to become a pioneer in the more remote west, he crossed the plains in 1854 with the Hawkins boys, driving cattle, and upon his safe arrival in California he engaged in mining. Returning east in 1857 he spent one year in Wisconsin when he brought his family to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, after landing in San Francisco coming on to Woodbridge, San Joaquin county, which was then known as Knights Ferry. He there engaged in mining until 1862, when he went to Nevada and in Washoe valley occupied himself with farming and the wood business. In 1867 he returned to California, spending three months in Linden, San Joaquin county, when he went to Columbia, Tuolumne county, and followed mining. In 1870 he located at Badger, on the Mill road, where he organized the first school district and postoffice, accepting and filling the office of postmaster. He there farmed and engaged in the stock business, and also conducted a hotel. Upon his retirement he made his home with his son, H. D., where he died three years later, in 1886, at the age of sixty-seven years. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically cast his ballot with the Republican party. His wife, formerly Eunisa Dailey, was born in Rochester, N. Y., June 8, 1822. After the death of her husband she sold the Badger property and made her home on the farm in the Townsend district until her death October 4, 1899, at the age of seventy-seven years. She left four children, namely: Marvin W., in Tehama county; Melvin C., a farmer in this section; Homer Dailey; and H. P., employed by a railroad company in Arizona.

Homer Dailey Woodard was reared in his adopted western home, receiving his education in the district schools in California and Nevada. He remained at home until he was twenty years old, when he began railroading as a brakeman on the Southern Pacific, having a run between Fresno and Sacramento. After three years of this work he returned to his early training and began farming, having previously become interested in stock-raising. In the fall of 1876 he located upon his present property, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres on section 2, township 17, range 26, entering into the work of cultivation and improvement. In the intervening years he bought property until he now owns sixteen hundred acres here, a fifteen-hundred acre ranch in the foothills, one hundred and sixty acres near Tulare, and one hundred and sixty acres in Kings county. This extensive property he now devotes to the raising of stock and general farming operations. He has met with a gratifying success and is deservedly prominent among the successful agriculturists and stockmen of the county.

In Cricketville, Tulare county, May 24, 1876, Mr. Woodard was united in marriage with Susie F. Rook, who was born near Carrollton, Ark. Her father, Thomas Rook, was a native of Tennessee, who came to California in 1859, bringing his family in a large emigrant train over the southern route. He settled near Visalia and later in the vicinity of Cricketville, where he was one of the first settlers. He engaged in farming until his death, which occurred in that locality. His wife, formerly Mary Daniel, was a native of South Carolina, and the daughter of Abner Daniel, who died in that state. Mrs. Rook died in Fresno county in 1899. Of her thirteen children eleven attained maturity and five are now living. Mrs. Woodard is a representative woman, her education being received in the Visalia Seminary, after which she engaged in educational work, teaching for five years in Tulare county. To Mr. and Mrs. Woodard were born six children, namely: Flora, a graduate of the San Jose State Normal and a teacher in the schools of the state, is the wife of H. Swank, in the vicinity of Visalia; Orvis, is a graduate of the Pacific Business College, of San Jose, and was also a student at the Kings Conservatory of Music; Forrester, a graduate of the grammar schools and resides at home; Chester is attending the Pacific Business College of San Jose; Hazel and Myrtle are at home. Mr. Woodard is one of the most prominent men in this section and one who has been called upon to occupy positions of trust and responsibility. He was a member of the first board of directors for the Townsend district, and up to within three years ago acted either as clerk or trustee. It is worthy of mention that the school building occupies an acre of ground which he donated for the purpose. Fraternally he is associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Both himself and wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Antelope. Politically he is a staunch Republican and has always taken a keen interest in local affairs, serving at the present time as a member of the county central committee.

THOMAS E. AWBREY. In the above-named gentleman, Exeter has a man who has, by his own efforts worked his way from the bottom of the ladder to a position in the business world that is the envy of many who had much more flattering prospects at the start. As junior member of the firm of Kirkman & Awbrey, meat dealers, Mr. Awbrey is constantly coming in contact with the public and in this daily intercourse is winning friends and affluence.

Thomas E. Awbrey was born in St. Charles, Mo., June 5, 1867, a son of John and Josephine (Hutchinson) Awbrey. The father was also a native of Missouri, his father having migrated there from Virginia. At the outbreak of the Civil war John Awbrey was a young man and at the call for troops joined a Missouri regiment and fought on the Union side. After the close of hostilities he returned to his home near St. Charles, where he became one of the leading farmers of that section. He died on the home place in 1892. His wife, Josephine Hutchinson, was born in St. Louis, a daughter of John Hutchinson, who was also a native of the same city. He was a brick manufacturer and marble worker. Mrs. Awbrey is still living and makes her home in Exeter.

Thomas E. Awbrey was the second in a large family of children, and as soon as able was obliged to assist his father in the work of the farm. His education was limited to that afforded by a few terms in the district school. Remaining at home until he had reached his twenty-first year, he then took up the battle of life and in 1880 came to California, locating in Tulare county, where he followed farming until 1892, when he came to Exeter. At that time there was but one store in the town. Soon after arrival in this new western town, he entered the employ of T. E. Fridley, who at the time was conducting the meat market, now partly owned by our subject. Under the direction of Mr. Fridley he learned the meat business, continuing with him seven years and when Mr. Fridley sold the market to John Bernard, he continued with the successor until September, 1903, when in partnership with G. W. Kirkman he purchased a half interest in the business, since which time the market has been conducted under the firm name of Kirkman & Awbrey.

This firm, in addition to engaging in a general meat business, also raises and buys and sells cattle quite extensively. The market is modern in all its appointments and in the country there is a slaughter house where the meat is prepared for the market. Kirkman & Awbrey have met with success, and although but a few years have passed since Mr. Awbrey came to Exeter, he has improved the opportunities and today is considered one of the substantial men of the town.

In 1894 he married Lulu Barlow, a native of Saline county, Mo. Three children are the result of this union, as follows: Grace, Edward and Zayda.

Politically, Mr. Awbrey is an active Democrat and is now a member of the county central committee. He is also a member of the board of trustees, and although most of his time is devoted to his business, he still finds an opportunity to look after other matters, and may at all times be depended on to do his share toward the upbuilding of his town and county. In fraternal relations he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Awbrey has reason to feel proud over the success he has made in life, and while a young man he has attained that for which many an older man has striven in vain. Success be with him is the hearty wish of his large circle of friends.

HARLAND E. WRIGHT. Among the enterprising men of the younger generation in Kings county is Harland E. Wright, one of the organizers of the Hanford National Bank, and its present cashier and manager. Born in Wisconsin, Lincoln county, Me., May 22, 1863, he is the son of Sullivan Wright, also a native of that state and a jeweler by occupation. Sullivan Wright came of an old New England family, strong in patriotism and courage, and at the breaking out of the Civil war he endeavored to enlist as a soldier in the cause of the Union, but was rejected on account of physical disability. He lived to be only fifty-five years old. His wife, Maria L. Bailey, also born in Maine, of an old New England family, survives her husband and still makes her home in her native state.

The boyhood of Harland E. Wright was spent in the parental home, during which years he attended the public schools in the pursuit of an education. He lost his father at the age of nine years, and at thirteen, with the self-reliance inculcated into the character of the sons of New England, he became dependent upon his own resources. Learning telegraphy, he followed this pursuit for a number of years, working for the Western Union Telegraph Company in Boston and different parts of Maine until October, 1882, in which year the great strike occurred. With a natural taste and inclination for the work he became an expert operator. During the same year, 1882, he came to California, securing employment with George P. McNear, banker and grain dealer of Petaluma, as bookkeeper, remaining in that position until the fall of 1892, when he resigned and removed to Hanford, becoming assistant cashier in the Farmers & Merchants Bank. Eighteen months later he was made cashier, which position he retained until March, 1903. In the last named year he sold out his interest in this bank (being at the time the largest stockholder in the same), and in May organized the Hanford National Bank, opening for business on the 28th of July. This bank has a paid-up capital of $50,000, and a $5,000 surplus. November 1, 1903, a savings department was organized. Besides his interest in the bank Mr. Wright is the owner of a stock and dairy ranch of three hundred and twenty acres in Kings county, and also a fruit ranch of eighty acres six miles from Hanford. The success which has marked the career of Mr. Wright is due entirely to his own efforts, his native ability and inherited characteristics, supplemented by a practical training in the school of experience, where he early learned the lessons of self reliance, independence, honesty and earnestness.

November 15, 1888, Mr. Wright married Etta Ranard, a native of Sonoma county, Cal., and they have one child, Fae. Mr. Wright is a Republican in his political preference and gives his influence toward the advancement of the principles he endorses. He has never, however, accepted official recognition nor is desirous of a public career. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World.

LEWIS MORGAN HOWELL. Adjoining the town of Visalia on the west and included within the city limits lies the homestead of thirty-five acres where Mr. Howell resides, engaged in raising stock and such farm products as the size of the farm justifies. Long familiar with western scenes, not alone through his residence in California, but also by reason of previously making his home in Montana, he is a Missourian by birth and education, and was born in St. Charles county, August 19, 1831. His father, Thomas Howell, a native of North Carolina, settled in St. Louis, Mo., in early life, and from there went to St. Charles county, same state, where he remained until death, meanwhile not only engaging in farming, but also finding enjoyment and profit in hunting the wild game so plentiful in that region in those days. By marriage to Susanna Calloway, a native of Kentucky, he became connected with the famous pioneer and hunter, Daniel Boone, for Miss Calloway was a daughter of Boone's child, Jemima. Family history relates how, when Jemima was a young girl, she went rowing one afternoon on a Kentucky river with Elizabeth and Frances Calloway, girls about her own age, and to whose brother she was betrothed. After a pleasant afternoon on the river they started to get out of the boat when Indians sprang from the bushes and took them captive, hastily carrying them away on their horses. Knowing that friends would try to follow their trail the girls tore bits of cloth from their dresses and dropped them on the ground. Detected at this, they tried the plan of breaking branches of trees as they rode beneath the swaying boughs. The fathers and lovers of the girls were able to follow their course by reason of their ingenuity in marking their path, and they were soon rescued and borne back to their homes in great joy.

In a family consisting of seven sons and seven daughters, L. M. Howell was next to the youngest and is now the sole survivor. Under the supervision of an uncle he was educated in a private school in Missouri. For ten years he was a pilot on Missouri river steamboats, his route being between St. Louis and Omaha, and many of his happiest memories are associated with the care-free days when steamboating was the delight of the aristocratic classes and the popular mode of travel with all. On leaving the river, in 1864, he went to Montana and engaged in freighting in Gallatin county, where he purchased and operated the finest grist mill in the entire territory. During 1878 he came to California, and after six months spent in San Jose, removed to Healdsburg, remaining there three years, then returned to San Jose, and in 1885 moved to Visalia, where he engaged in farming. Of his first purchase of two hundred and forty acres he sold sixty-seven acres to the city of Visalia, but still retains one hundred and seventy-three acres, in addition to which he owns a timber claim of two hundred and forty acres in the mountains back from town.

While living in Missouri Mr. Howell married Elizabeth Jane Wallace, a native of that state. The children born of their union are named as follows: Maggie Susan, who is married and lives in Montana; James W., a miner making his home in Butte, Mont.; Lizzie L., wife of James M. Cann, of Sultana; Lewis Morgan, Jr., who is living at Sanger, Fresno county; Eliza Ann, who resides with her parents; Mary E., wife of Will Luce of Kern, and Charles R., who is still at home. In fraternal relations Mr. Howell is a Mason, in religion he supports the doctrines of the Church of Christ, and politically gives his influence and ballot to support the candidates of the Democratic party.

CHARLES F. FLEMMING. When Mr. Flemming came to Hanford in 1880 for the purpose of opening a blacksmith and wagon repairing shop he was master of the situation, as no one with like intentions had preceded him hither. With an anvil and a few tools which he brought from Stockton he opened an unpretentious little shop, the nucleus of what is to-day not only the leading establishment of the kind in Hanford, but which is not exceeded in size or quality of work turned out by any like establishment in Kings county. As the demands of the business made it necessary Mr. Flemming enlarged the original structure from time to time, and his present quarters measure 65 x 125 feet. He not only does repairing of all kinds, but also manufactures vehicles of all descriptions, and furnishes employment to from five to ten men.

Mr. Flemming is a native of California, born in Sonoma, Sonoma county, October 10, 1859, a son of William Flemming, who was born in Ireland in 1817. In 1825, when eight years old, he was brought to the United States, and was reared in New York City. When a young man he went to Rochester, N. Y., and learned the carriage maker's trade, which he followed until January, 1850, when he opened a shop at Sonoma. About 1861 he went to San Francisco and established a carriage and wagon factory, but after running this for several years he laid the business aside to work for the quicksilver mining company, becoming head boss of their shops as a millwright. About 1872 he removed to San Jose and began in business for himself once more, owning and conducting a shop up to the time of his death in 1900, when eighty-three years of age. His wife, Celia Doherty, was also a native of the Emerald Isle, and died when sixty years old.

There were two children in the parental family, the eldest of whom, Thomas, is now in San Jose, where he is successfully conducting two fruit ranches, carrying on an extensive business. The early boyhood years of Charles F. Flemming were spent in San Jose, where he attended the public schools until reaching his fifteenth year. At that age he went into his father's shop and learned the blacksmith's trade, applying himself diligently for the following six years in mastering the details of the business. In 1877 he went to Stockton and found employment in the Henderson carriage factory and later in William P. Miller's factory. Upon leaving the latter's employ three years later Mr. Flemming came to Hanford, and in the intervening years has built up a trade of no small proportions, which comes from all parts of the county.

The marriage of Mr. Flemming occurred in 1889 and united him with Mary E. Corum, whose birth occurred in Portland, Ore. Politically Mr. Flemming is a Democrat, voting for the candidates of that party upon all occasions, but he has steadily refused to accept any office at the hands of his party. His fraternal relations bind him to the Foresters, Woodmen of the World and Ancient Order of United Workmen, in all of which he is a valued member.

WILLIAM B. NICHOLS. The Nichols family, represented in Tulare county, Cal., by William B. Nichols, proprietor of the Sunset Ranch, has been prominent in the history of Vermont for generations. In Revolutionary days Ebenezer Nichols and his son, William, fought for American independence, giving up the peaceful pursuits of a New England farm to follow the martial fortunes of Washington. William Nichols, born in Braintree, Orange county, Vt., married Betsey White, a daughter of Ebenezer White, also a patriot in the Revolutionary war. Their son, William H., also born in Braintree, grew to manhood and married Ann Eliza Bates, a native of Salisbury, Vt. Her father, William Atwell Bates, was a New England farmer, who became a pioneer of Tabor, Iowa. William H. Nichols still owns the old homestead in Vermont, making his home in Randolph, although he became a resident of Cedar Falls, Iowa, after his admission to the bar in 1860, practicing law until the first call for volunteers. Responding at once he served as a brevet captain throughout the entire war. He was wounded twice during his service, the first time at the battle of Shiloh and the second time at Corinth. Upon the close of the war he returned to Randolph and there began a successful practice of his profession. In 1870 he was elected to the state legislature, serving one term, and two years later was a member of the Constitutional Convention. In 1874 he was elected probate judge, which office he has held by re-election ever since. He is a Republican in his political convictions, and fraternally is identified with the Masons. He is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife died in Vermont in 1886, leaving a family of four children, three sons and one daughter, namely: Benito, in London, England; William B., of this review; Edward H., located on the old homestead in Vermont; and Anna, the wife of David R. Bosworth, of Bristol, Vt.

Born in Braintree, Orange county, Vt., December 4, 1858, William B. Nichols received his education in the Randolph Academy and the state Normal School, located in Randolph, graduating from the latter institution in 1878. For one year following he read law in his father's office, after which, in 1880, he went to Jamestown (now in North Dakota), where he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of his profession. He also engaged in the real estate business and met with success in his work, being a resident of that place when the Northern Pacific Railroad was completed about 1885. Later he removed to Duluth, Minn., and engaged in silver mining on the north shore, after two years locating in Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, where he became superintendent of mines, assisting materially in the upbuilding of the Brookfield Company. Afterward he accepted the position of superintendent of the Malaga Lake Mining Company, with whom he remained connected for a period of two years. Going to South America he became interested in placer mining in the interior of Dutch Guiana, after one year returning to Nova Scotia to accept again the position of superintendent. After seven months he went to Mexico, and in Jalisco was associated with the La Cumbria Mining Company. In July, 1892, he came to California, stopping first in Fresno, but in November of the same year coming to Tulare county and purchasing the ranch upon which he is now located. This consists of two hundred and forty acres three and a half miles southeast of Dinuba. At the time of his purchase but twenty acres was planted to fruit, since which time he has set out ten acres additional, devoted principally to the cultivation of peaches and olives; one hundred and twenty acres is in vineyard; ten acres in alfalfa; and of the eighty-acre piece across the road from the main ranch, forty acres is devoted to alfalfa and forty is in the process of setting to vineyard. Besides this Mr. Nichols has set out eighty acres additional of vineyard, which he has sold. His chief interest is in the olive cultivation, raising it both for pickling and the making of olive oil, having put up a pickling plant and an oil mill, the output for a year being thirteen thousand gallons of olives and fifteen hundred gallons of pure olive oil, sold under the Sunset Brand, which has won for itself a recognition based upon its quality. Mr. Nichols has made of his property, which is known as the Sunset Ranch, one of the finest farms in this section, both as to production and appearance, erecting modern buildings in keeping with the times of progress.

In Duluth, Minn., Mr. Nichols married Emma Heimbach, a native of Walworth county, Wis., and the daughter of Daniel Heimbach, a farmer in that section. They are the parents of one child, Gretchen. By a former marriage Mr. Nichols has a daughter, Josephine Mattie Nichols, who resides in Vermont.

Fraternally Mr. Nichols was made a Mason in Randolph, Vt., and politically is a staunch Republican, having served as a member of the county central committee.

CHARLES H. COE. In the management of his warehouse and in the business ability displayed in the conduct of his hay, grain and general produce establishment in Hanford Mr. Coe shows inborn tact and a thorough understanding of his calling. Mr. Coe is of eastern birth and the first fourteen years of his life were spent amid his native surroundings in Jefferson county, N. Y., where his birth occurred June 21, 1860. His grandfather, Henry Coe, who claimed Holland-Dutch antecedents, was also a native of New York state. His father, Julius T., was born in Fulton county, N. Y., where he carried on farming during his early life, and subsequently engaged in the manufacture of gloves. In 1874 he was attracted to California as offering a field for larger opportunity, and with his family located on a farm near Vacaville, Solano county. Two years later he came to what is now Kings county and settled on government land two miles south of Hanford, although at that time the town was not in existence. His government claim consisted of one hundred and sixty acres of land, but he continually added to it until he became the owner of two hundred and forty acres, in the cultivation and management of which he was fairly successful, making it his home until his death in 1884, when sixty-four years of age. Politically he allied himself with the Republican party, and in religious belief he was a Presbyterian. His wife, formerly Catherine Simpson, was also born in Fulton county, N. Y., and now makes her home in Hanford at the age of seventy-five years.

At the time of the removal of the family to California Charles H. Coe was fourteen years old, so the greater part of his life has been spent in the Golden state. Brought up on a farm, it was but natural that he should assist in the duties that fall to the farmer's lot, and until twenty-one years old worked side by side with his father. Branching out for himself at that age, he purchased eighty acres adjoining his father's home, and in addition to managing his own farm, also had charge of the home place until 1891, when it was cut up into five and ten acre tracts and sold, and was afterwards known as the Coe Colony. The next year Mr. Coe was employed in a warehouse for a short time, and for the following seven years was engaged in the same line of industry in Hanford, Armona and Lemoore. In 1903 he erected a warehouse, 56 x 200 feet, which he occupies to-day and which is one of the finest brick structures in Hanford. In addition to his other business Mr. Coe writes fire insurance, doing considerable business in this line.

In 1884 Mr. Coe was married to Lizzie Manning, who was born in Oakland, Cal., and they have become the parents of four children, named as follows: Adaline, Myra, Bernard and Bernice, all at home with their parents. As an interested ally of the Republican party Mr. Coe has been chosen to represent his party in the county conventions of that body and has also assisted at elections, but he has at no time had aspirations for public office, finding private life more suited to his tastes. But one fraternal organization claims Mr. Coe's membership, that being Hanford Court, I. O. F.

HENRY EICHHOFF. The fact that Henry Eichhoff inherited the ranch upon which he now lives, two miles from Ripon, and which, according to popular belief, is one of the best managed and most valuable in San Joaquin county, in no way detracts from the credit due him as a thoroughly intelligent and up-to-date young farmer. He is a native of this county, having been born on a ranch near Ripon, October 31, 1872, and as his name indicates, he is of German extraction. His father, Gustave Eichhoff, was born in Germany April 10, 1830, and after several years on the paternal farm became dissatisfied with his prospects and determined to immigrate to the United States. The step was taken after mature reflection, for he was a man of thirty when he arrived in New York, and was perfectly capable of judging for himself. Coming at once to San Joaquin county, he soon afterward married Melinda Winacia, a native of Germany, who is now deceased. Mr. Eichhoff settled on the farm now owned by his son in 1888, remaining here until his death, February 23, 1893. He was progressive and resourceful, and in time had fifteen hundred and fifty-four acres under grain, at the same time raising large numbers of stock. He was successful and prominent and was one of the best illustrations of Teutonic perseverance and pluck vouchsafed the earlier years of this county.

Henry Eichhoff came to his present farm with his father in 1888, and now owns a one-half interest in nine hundred and fourteen acres of land, chiefly under grain and alfalfa. His place is under a high state of cultivation, and under his ownership improvements have been made of which the original owner never dreamed, so persistent and rapid have been the advances along agricultural lines during the past few years. Mr. Eichhoff is a large, strong man, with a sunny nature, and the ability to make and retain steadfast friends. He is well posted on current events, and believes in surrounding himself and family with all the comforts and diversions possible to those who live beyond the borders of cities, and who, by their toil, lay the foundation for almost every line of occupation known to civilized man. Mr. Eichhoff married Emma Wille, a native of this county, and daughter of Joseph Wille, a prominent rancher near Ripon. Mr. Eichhoff is a Republican in politics, and is fraternally connected with the Woodmen of America. He is popular and influential, and stands high in the business and social life of the community.

HENRY GRIES. Descended from a line of rugged and upright ancestry, Henry Gries represents that class of citizens who gives strength and stability to the community. For many years he followed the life of a sailor, and has made the trip from his native country, Germany, around Cape Horn, five times. Born August 10, 1846, a son of Claus Gries, he spent his early boyhood days in his native land and received the best school training available to the citizens of the moderate class in those days, remaining at home until he attained the age of sixteen years. He then chose a sea-faring life and became a sailor, and on one of his trips around Cape Horn went north as far as San Francisco, landing on California soil in 1868. During the following two years he served in the capacity of a sailor on the revenue cutter Reliance, which plied along the Pacific coast.

Discontinuing sea life in 1870, Mr. Gries made his home in San Francisco until 1886, and during that time was engaged in various pursuits, in the meantime saving enough to warrant an investment in land. Being attracted by the special inducements offered to settlers in the San Joaquin valley, he purchased land in Fresno county in 1887, and has been a resident of the county ever since. His productive farm contains eighty acres in Bethel school district, near Del Rey, thirty-five acres of this being in vineyards, eight acres in orchards, the balance being utilized for general farming.

Mr. Gries attributes his success in a large measure to his untiring efforts, as the property he has acquired is the fruit of his own exertions and sacrifices. He is unmarried. In his political convictions he is a follower of the precepts of the Republican party.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN TEAGUE. Prominent among the successful business men of Exeter is Benjamin Franklin Teague, the owner of the Exeter water works and through his real estate operations one of the material up-builders of this section of the county. He was born in Fort Scott, Kans., December 1, 1864, a son of Joab Teague. The latter was a native of Lincoln county, N. C., from which place his father, William, took his family as far west as Morgan county, Ind., in the pioneer days of the state. William Teague was a soldier in the war of 1812 and a substantial citizen of the community which knew him as a resident. Joab Teague taught school in Indiana until his removal to Osage, Mo., where he followed farming for some years. In 1857 he located in Fort Scott, Kans., and was a farmer and pioneer stockman of that section. He became a prominent man in the community, holding various public offices, among them that of justice of the peace, serving also as county treasurer of Bourbon county for one term. In 1888 Mr. Teague came to California, locating near Farmersville, Tulare county, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1891, at the age of seventy-eight years. He was a member of the Baptist Church. His wife, formerly Mary Rebecca Wood, was born in Clarksburg, W. Va., a daughter of William Wood, a native of the same place, and a descendant of English ancestry. He died in Virginia. Mrs. Teague died in Exeter in 1902 at the age of seventy-eight years. In her religious convictions she was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Teague was married twice, by his first wife having five sons and one daughter, of whom five children are now living: John, a resident of Exeter; Calvin, a resident of southern California; Monroe, now located near Fort Scott, Kans.; Jesse, who died in California; Logan, residing near Lemoore, Kings county, Cal.; and Eliza, the wife of A. B. Gardner, of Idaho. The four sons first mentioned were soldiers in the Civil war. By his second marriage Mr. Teague had two children: Benjamin Franklin, of this review, and Sherman, a farmer near Exeter.

Benjamin Franklin Teague was reared on a farm in the vicinity of Fort Scott, Kans., receiving his education in the public schools and the Kansas Normal College at Fort Scott. He taught school until he was twenty-four years of age, when he became a clerk in a general merchandise establishment in Uniontown, Kans. In 1880 he came to California and purchased a farm located one mile south of Farmersville, Tulare county, and in conjunction with his brother Sherman, farmed for several years, at the same time clerking in a store in Farmersville. In 1892 he removed to Exeter and engaged as a clerk for H. R. Stephens. Two years later he established a general merchandise store on the west side. Purchasing the stock of G. W. Kirkman, he continued alone in the business until 1897, when he removed to the east side, and a year later the firm became known as that of Teague & Miles. Continuing in the business until 1902, he then sold out to Charles Fitzsimons, when he engaged in the real estate and insurance business. Later, in partnership with Mr. Miles, Mr. Teague bought the old water plant of Exeter. He subsequently became sole owner of the plant, since which time he has rebuilt the works, putting down a new well which produces fine water, and installing a pumping plant with an electric motor and a capacity of one hundred and fifty thousand gallons per day.

Mr. Teague is also interested in horticultural pursuits, owning sixty-two and a half acres adjoining Exeter on the south, thirty acres of which are given over to vines, two and a half acres to apricots, and ten acres to alfalfa. Twenty-five acres which he formerly owned he set out to oranges and later sold the same profitably. He was also interested with C. H. Congdon and G. B. Landers of Bakersfield in the location of the talc mines, about ten miles from Exeter, in the Yokohl valley. This is now incorporated as the California Talc and Soapstone Company, with a capitalization of $100,000, Mr. Teague acting as secretary. They have opened quarries and have erected a mill for manufacture and grinding. Their deposit is large and shows exceptionally fine specimens.

Mr. Teague was united in marriage with Nannie Fife, a native of Cambridge, Ohio. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Teague is associated fraternally with Exeter Lodge No. 308, I. O. O. F., in which he has served as noble grand two terms, and also belongs to the Encampment, of Visalia. He is also associated with the Woodmen of the World, the Modern Woodmen of America and Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Unitarian Club, and politically is a staunch Republican, for six years having served as a member of the county central committee. He is a member of the Board of Trade of Exeter, and gives of his best efforts to the upbuilding of the city and the promotion of all worthy enterprises.

ELMER H. BALDWIN. With him to the coast in historic '49 R. O. Baldwin brought well-formulated ideas, and the grit and determination to overcome whatever obstacles fate might place in his way. Transmitting these desirable traits to his son, Elmer H., the latter has become one of the leading agriculturists and grain raisers of Stanislaus county, and one of its enterprising and influential promoters. The elder Baldwin was living on a farm near Des Moines, Iowa, when the gold excitement broke out, and he gladly added his contribution of physical and moral strength to a band of emigrants bound for the coast, equipped with ox teams and the wherewithal to start housekeeping on a small scale. In the mines of Placerville he experienced fair success, and with the proceeds of his labor came to Contra Costa county in 1852, investing in a small body of land which formed the nucleus of his present large possessions. The years have dealt kindly with him and left him hale and hearty at the age of seventy-six, while around him is stretched for his enjoyment and comfort a farm of one thousand acres, one and a half miles south of Danville, made profitable and valuable by his unremitting industry. Surviving the trials of her position as a pioneer woman of the west, his wife is still a sharer of his home, having reared to maturity four sons and two daughters, the oldest of whom is Elmer H.

Educated in the public schools, and for the years preceding his majority a resident of the farm upon which he was born near Danville, September 16, 1861, Elmer H. Baldwin had also the advantage of a two years' course in the McClure Academy of Oakland, after which he worked the home place with his father. Embarking on an independent career, he located near Grayson, Stanislaus county, on a farm of four hundred and eighty acres, devoting it to grain and general produce, and succeeded as became a youth richly endowed with ambition and practical common sense. In time his farm proved too small for his operations, and he leased three hundred and twenty acres near by, and this also is largely under wheat and other grains. He has a fine home, substantial barns and outhouses, well kept fences, and the method and system, without which farming degenerates into hard and unremunerative work. In Cambria, Cal., he married Zoe A. Kemp, a native of Missouri, and the mother of two daughters, Wenona and Helen. Mrs. Baldwin has been interested in educational matters for many years, and at present is a trustee of her home district. Mr. Baldwin is a Republican, and in religion finds a home in the Presbyterian Church, in which he has held office, and toward the support of which he is a liberal contributor.

WILLIAM WILLSHIER HENRY. In the death of W. W. Henry, which occurred November 3, 1902, Tulare county lost from her list of representative men a citizen whose best efforts had always been given toward the advancement and upbuilding of this section. A native of South Milford, La Grange county, Ind., he was born in 1858, the eldest child and only son in the family of his parents. His father, Oliver O. Henry (of whom an extended mention is made elsewhere in this work), was one of the pioneers of Tulare county. Until he was seventeen years old W. Willshier Henry made his home in his native state, largely by his own efforts receiving an education, which enabled him to teach in the public schools at the age of sixteen years. Deciding to locate in California, he came west, arriving in Santa Cruz with only seventy-five cents as the nucleus of the fortune which he hoped to make in this western state, rich in promises of prosperity. For two years he remained in Santa Cruz, engaged in work of various kinds, when he came to Portersville, Tulare county, where an uncle, Albert Henry, had previously located. Later he went to Kern county and found employment in the Long Tom mine, remaining so engaged until he returned to Portersville and became interested in horticultural pursuits. For a time he engaged in the nursery business for his father (who, in the meantime had come to California and located in Tulare county), and in 1889 set out an orange grove upon the place now owned by his widow. He continued to improve and cultivate his property, meeting with a success in his efforts and becoming widely known as one of the prominent horticulturists of the county. This property consists of thirty-seven acres a half mile east of Portersville, while he also owned fifteen acres at Westfield, both properties being now in the possession of his widow. He died November 3, 1902, in his home near Portersville. Politically he was a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party on national issues, and locally gave his support to the candidate whom he considered best qualified for public office.

Mrs. Henry was formerly Lana B. Taylor, a native of Kendallville, Ind. She is the adopted daughter of the Hon. O. B. Taylor, a farmer and merchant of Wolcottville, La Grange county, and for several terms a member of the state legislature. In 1884 he came to California and bought a ranch near Tulare, where he lived retired. He eventually returned to Indiana, where he now makes his home. Mrs. Henry's father was Dr. Leonard Barber, a native of Stark county, Ohio. He graduated in medicine from Jefferson Medical College, practicing his profession in Kendallville and later in Wolcottville, where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Adeline Alleman, a native of Waterloo, N. Y., survives him, making her home in Indiana. There were nine children in the Barber family, of whom S. A. Barber, M. D., of Portersville, is a member. Mrs. Henry grew to young womanhood in her home in the middle west and Tulare county, and in addition to a classic education received the best of training in the Ft. Wayne Conservatory of Music, where she was graduated. She was married in Portersville April 22, 1891, and ever since that time has been a resident of this locality. After her husband's death she continued to engage in the work of horticulture, which had engrossed his attention for so long a time, meeting with a success which has given her no little prestige among the horticulturists of Tulare county. She is a woman suffragist, giving her adherence to the principles of the Republican party, and is a prominent member of the Order of the Eastern Star. She is the mother of four children, namely: Helen Lucile, Leonard Willshier, Schuyler Barber and Anne Mitchell.

JOHN L. McFARLANE. Fifty years have brought a more than average realization of expectations to John L. McFarlane, a pioneer of 1849, and the owner of twelve hundred and forty acres six miles northeast of Snelling. With the satisfaction resulting from ownership of a fine property has come an appreciation of his integrity and industry on the part of his fellow-townsmen, and of his ability to fittingly represent the broad-minded and progressive farmers of the west.

Mr. McFarlane was born in Jackson county, Ala., December 25, 1826, but previous to the establishment of his family in that state his parents, Robert and Mary C. (Hobbs) McFarlane, had lived in Tennessee, to which state they removed from their native state of Virginia. His father, a planter, died at the age of fifty, and in 1843 John L. and his mother moved overland to Arkansas, where the latter died at an advanced age. His life was uneventful until men began to forsake their farms and industries for the quicker road to fortune pictured by returned emigrants from the west, and in the spring of 1849 he joined an ox train and crossed the plains by way of the southern route, reaching Los Angeles in October, 1849. Remaining in San Francisco until the spring of 1850, he went to Stanislaus county and afterward to Merced county, in 1854 purchasing his present ranch of twelve hundred and forty acres. For years he tilled its soil and rejoiced at his abundant harvests, and as the mile posts of his life grew more numerous determined to lay aside the cares of the farm, and hand its governing over to the younger members of his household. Today his sons, John and Nathan, attend to all affairs around the place, although the genial owner is still hale and bright, and takes a keen interest in everything around him. Mr. McFarlane has three hundred head of cattle, three hundred head of hogs, and besides general produce, raises wheat and barley in large quantities.

In California Mr. McFarlane married Hannah Peeler, who was born in Randolph county, Mo., in 1830. She crossed the plains with her parents in 1854, settling in Merced county. Mr. and Mrs. McFarlane became the parents of five children, namely: John, Nathan, Robert L., George L. (the latter a resident of Fresno), and Laura, the wife of William Duncan, of San Francisco. Mr. McFarlane is independent in politics, and at no time in his life has he been an office-seeker. He is a straight-forward, earnest and high-minded man, fair in all of his business dealings, and popular among his fellow-citizens.

HON. JOSEPH TALBERT McJUNKIN, of Hanford, Kings county, Cal., was born in Centreville, Washington county, Pa., March 6, 1832, and died in Hanford Cal., November 15, 1901. He was widely known as one of the most prominent and successful growers of raisin grapes, other fruits and alfalfa in Kings county, where he had resided since 1873, with the exception of eight years. Removing in that year to what is known as the Mussel Slough district of Tulare county, but which has since become a part of Kings county, he purchased land two miles northwest of Hanford. This he devoted to the raising of sheep, having brought a large band of sheep with him from Yolo county with that idea in view. For twenty-five years he devoted himself to this industry, but sold his sheep in 1883, and from that time forward was engaged chiefly in the cultivation of raisin grapes. In 1882 he removed to Oakland, two and a half years later removed to San Jose, and in 1890 returned to Hanford, where the remainder of his life was spent.

The need of irrigation for the Mussel Slough district had early impressed itself upon Mr. McJunkin's mind, and he took advantage of every means possible to have ditches constructed throughout the territory. In educational matters he also took advanced steps, and in the matter of good government firmly believed in the enforcement of law. He took an active interest in politics, and at one time received the Republican nomination for the office of member of the assembly, and although he was defeated, the returns were gratifying, coming as they did from a purely Democratic locality. In 1898 he was elected supervisor for the Fifth district, and at the time of his death had served but little more than half of his term. His work on the board was characterized by careful attention to the public welfare, and by honest intention according to his own best judgment.

Mr. McJunkin was a son of James and Maria (Rogers) McJunkin, both of whom were born in Washington county, Pa. His father, who was a surveyor by occupation, became a man of note in his community. His father's parents came from Ireland in 1795, while his mother's parents emigrated from Wales in their youth. At the age of five years Mr. McJunkin was taken to Ohio, and in that state received his early education and training. The death of his father made it necessary for him to look about for means of self-support, and his first attempt in this direction was as a clerk in the store of his uncle at Brownsville, Fayette county, Pa. Subsequently he served an apprenticeship at the ship-builder's trade at Brownsville, a business which he mastered in every detail in four years' time. In 1854 he came to California, and in Sacramento saw an opportunity to turn his knowledge of mechanics to good account by engaging in the manufacture of sash and doors. At the time of the Fraser river gold excitement in 1857 he joined the emigration thither and found profitable occupation in the manufacture of rockers used by the miners. In this work he met with unusual success, due no doubt to his thorough understanding of mechanics, as well as to his determination to succeed, no matter what discouraging circumstances might arise. After leaving the mining districts sheep-raising appealed to him as affording profitable returns, and for many years this industry was followed with most gratifying results. During the later years of his life he became deeply interested in the cultivation of the vine, and at the time of his death his ranch of three hundred and twenty acres contained one of the finest raisin vineyards in Kings county, about eighty acres being devoted to that purpose.

In Yolo county, September 5, 1867, Mr. McJunkin was united in marriage with Nancy A. Duncan, who was born in Missouri, but after the age of two years was reared in Illinois. Her parents, Charles and Dorcas (Coffman) Duncan, made the trip to California overland in 1864, locating near Woodland, Yolo county, where the young people became acquainted. Mr. and Mrs. McJunkin became the parents of four children, Ella L., Mrs. Alice M. Biddle, Ida B. and Frank T., who have been given excellent educational advantages in Oakland and San Jose.

Mr. McJunkin was a self-made man in the truest sense of the term. He was compelled to leave school at the age of fourteen years, when he began the struggle of life alone and unaided. He won his position in the world by unvarying industry and honest effort, and became recognized as a man of influence and unquestioned probity. Politically a strong Republican, he always took a deep interest in the welfare of that party, and at various times was honored by election to public office at its hands. Fraternally he was identified with the Masons, and it was with Masonic rites that his remains were laid to rest. In his death the community lost a useful, practical and public-spirited citizen, who was always willing to lend his assistance toward the promotion of well-considered efforts to advance the best interests of the people.

HON. VITAL E. BANGS. A man of culture and scholarly attainments, Hon. Vital E. Bangs, of Modesto, holds an honored position among the pioneer settlers of Stanislaus county, which has been his home for almost a half century. In the educational progress of this section of California he has been a potent force. In the establishment and management of beneficial enterprises he has borne a conspicuous part, and as an office holder has shown good judgment and excellent administrative abilities in his manner of discharging his duties to the public. A son of Samuel Bangs, he was born, August 26, 1834, in the city of Victoria, Mexico, of old colonial ancestry on both the paternal and maternal side, the emigrant ancestors of both his father and mother having emigrated from England to the United States at an early period of its settlement.

A native of Boston, Mass., Samuel Bangs remained in the east until failing health demanded a change of climate. Going then to Mexico, he resided there with his family until his death. He married Susan Payne, who was born in Virginia. She survived him, after his death returning to the United States. She subsequently married Henry Brees, a wholesale merchant of Matamoras, Mexico, and they located in Kalamazoo, Mich., where her death occurred, March 20, 1884.

The fifth child in order of birth of a family of seven children, Vital E. Bangs laid a substantial foundation for his future education in the public schools of Kalamazoo, Mich., after which he continued his studies at Cedar Park Seminary, and then entered Kalamazoo College. Leaving home in 1855, he crossed the plains to California, locating in El Dorado county, where he was engaged for a few months in teaching school and mining. Returning east, he completed his education at the Kalamazoo College, remaining in Michigan until 1858. Moving in that year to Vernon county, Mo., Mr. Bangs taught school there for two years, and then returned to Michigan, from there going to Douglas county, Kans., where he was married. The next year, in 1864, Mr. Bangs and his bride crossed the plains to Stanislaus county, Cal., where he resumed his professional career, for many years thereafter teaching school in this and in Tulare, Placer and Sacramento counties.

Locating in Modesto in 1873, Mr. Bangs became connected with the Modesto schools as vice-principal, and has since then been prominently identified with the advancement of the educational welfare of this part of the county. For twelve years he was a member of the county board of education, and was a popular contributor to the "California Teacher" and other educational journals. His services were appreciated and recognized by the state of California, which, through its Department of Public Instruction, presented him with a teacher's Life Diploma.

Mr. Bangs was appointed by Governor Markham a director of the Twenty-eighth Agricultural District, in which he served most acceptably, and he was also the first assessor of the Modesto Irrigation District. Being elected by the Democratic party to the state legislature, he served in the session of 1888 and 1889, and in 1892 was re-elected without opposition, receiving the support of both parties, and polling the largest vote of any man in the assembly.

Tom Deer

Mr. Bangs owns a fine ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, lying three and one-half miles north of Modesto, where he has a very pleasant and attractive residence, surrounded by a magnificent grove of trees. He devotes forty acres of his farm to alfalfa, the rest being planted to grain, and keeps a dairy of fifteen cows.

In 1863, in Douglas county, Kans., Mr. Bangs married Mary G. Moore, who was born and reared in Illinois, and into their household four children were born: Henry T., Susan, Victoria, and Vital E.

JOHN DUNLAP COX. Looking back over his sixty-six years of life, John Dunlap Cox must needs find abundant cause for gratitude, not only because he has been endowed with sterling traits of a worthy ancestry, and a constitution which responded to the working of his active brain, but for the perseverance and determination which have enabled him to make the best of his opportunities, resulting in such substantial assets as extensive land ownership in Stanislaus county, the comfort and inspiration of a family which reflects his example and ambition, and a good name and universal esteem which rewards his integrity and uprightness. Coming to the state a few months after attaining his majority, in the fall of 1859, he found hundreds who sympathized with him in his effort at advancement, and who also were struggling to combine the climate and soil and glories of air and vegetation to their own and the state's perpetual good. The fifth of four sons and four daughters in a family dependent upon the resources of William Cox, and the maternal guidance of Sarah (Dunlap) Cox, he was born in Colchester county, Nova Scotia, March 22, 1838, his parents being natives of the same northern country. William Cox was a man of varied gifts, in early life making his living by teaching navigation and the studies in the common schools, and later on devoting himself entirely to farming and stock-raising.

John Dunlap came west on the steamer John L. Stevens, of pioneer fame, and upon arriving at his destination in the San Joaquin valley worked by the month on farms, first for Ben Holliday, and after a short trip to Oregon, entered the employ of Mr. Ovenheiser of San Joaquin county. For a time he drove cattle from Stockton to the mines, and from 1864 until 1870 owned and operated a ranch in connection with his freighting business. He then took up one hundred and sixty acres near Grayson, where he farmed for three years, removing then to Tulare county and engaging in the sheep business near Tipton for three years. Returning to Grayson in 1877, he bought his present home farm of two hundred and forty acres adjoining Grayson on the south, to which he has since added one hundred and sixty acres on the east, and seven hundred and sixty-four acres adjoining his first purchase, making in all eleven hundred and sixty-four acres in one neighborhood. He also owns a mountain ranch of five hundred acres, devoted chiefly to stock, and in connection with his home ranch leases and operates twenty-six hundred acres of the Patterson estate for wheat and barley. His enlightened methods and practical business sagacity have done much to elevate the grain-raising industry in this section, and his career is yet another proof of what may be accomplished by sheer force of will power and wise disposal of advantages. In his grain-raising he is ably seconded by his stalwart son, W. W. Cox, who shares with him the use of the Patterson land and also assists him in the management of the home farm. Mr. Cox married Rebecca Curry, a native of Iowa, and besides William, the oldest of his children, there are four others: Sadie, Frank A., Mabel and John D., Jr. Mr. Cox cast his first presidential vote for the great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, and has ever since espoused the cause of the party he represented. He is not an office seeker, but is a staunch supporter of his party, as he is of education, and the various up-building institutions which tend to the lasting good of the community.

CHARLES SPENKER. Among the younger generation of grain raisers of Stanislaus county none holds out greater promise of continued success than Charles Spenker, now the manager and lessee of five thousand acres of land near Oakdale. Mr. Spenker has known no other home than the county in which he lives, and in which he was born September 20, 1875. As his name indicates he is of German ancestry, and his parents, Joseph and Julia (Stelling) Spenker, were born and reared in the Fatherland. The father came to America as a single man in 1864, and the mother came with her uncle in 1872, meeting and marrying in California after Joseph Spenker had made a start in life. Mr. Spenker was sixteen years old when he arrived in the state with his paternal uncle, Fred Spenker, having journeyed by way of Panama, and settled near Stockton. In 1868 they moved to eighty acres of land upon a portion of which Modesto has since been built, Mr. Spenker entering this in his own name, at the time little thinking that residences and institutions and the hum of general industry would some time be heard on his land. Still regarding his possession as nothing out of the ordinary, he traded his farm for his present place in 1882, and now owns nine hundred and sixty acres, of which four hundred are in the river bottom. He has a rich and productive property, and is one of the representative men of his section, having reared a large family of children and taken part in the general affairs of the community. In the order of their birth his children are: Mrs. Ida Reinhart, Charles, Millie, Joseph, Nellie, Harry (deceased), Leonard and Donald.

As a youth, Charles Spenker attended the public schools of Stanislaus county, and took readily to farming, profiting by the careful agricultural training of his able father. At the age of twenty-one he started out on his own responsibility, and when twenty-five rented nine hundred and sixty acres of land, which he devoted to grain, and two years later, in 1902, rented the Leach ranch for five years. At present he is farming five thousand acres of land, all in Stanislaus county, and is making a special study of grain, upon which he has become an authority. He is a careful and painstaking farmer, methodical in his habits, and progressive in his methods. He has an incentive to labor in a helpful and sympathetic wife, who was formerly Freda Cook, a native of Germany, and daughter of Nicholas Cook, a pioneer of Stanislaus county. Mr. Spenker is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Woodmen of the World. He has the typical German's thrift and enterprise, and also his large heartedness and hospitality, and among his neighbors and friends is noted for his honorable and upright dealings.

JOHN R. MCKAY. One of the most enterprising and popular liverymen of the San Joaquin valley is John R. McKay of Fresno, proprietor of the Dexter livery stables. Endowed with good business qualifications, accommodating and trustworthy, he has built up an extensive and lucrative patronage in the city, and has won the respect and esteem of the community. He was born December 17, 1867, in Riverton, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, which was also the birthplace of his father, Isaac McKay, and of his grandfather, John McKay. His great-grandfather, D. McKay, a native of Scotland, emigrated to Nova Scotia at an early day, and, according to historical records, blazed the first trail across the province. Settling in Pictou county, he took up a tract of forest-covered land, and from the dense wilderness cleared and improved a homestead, on which he spent his remaining days. His son, John, the next in line of descent, was a blacksmith and farmer, and spent his entire life of ninety-four years in his native county, dying in 1902.

Learning the trade of a blacksmith when young, Isaac McKay followed it first in Riv-erton, Nova Scotia, then in Churchville, later in Sunnybrae, and is now engaged in his chosen occupation in Bridgeville, Nova Scotia. For more than sixty years he has worked at his trade, and is without doubt the oldest-established blacksmith of his community. He is a man of sterling character and worth and a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. He married Mary Robertson, who was born in Churchville, Nova Scotia, a daughter of Colin Robertson. Mr. Robertson was a lifelong farmer, and was also employed in the milling business for many years, owning a saw mill and a grist mill. He was of thrifty Scotch stock, and lived to a venerable age, dying in 1899, aged ninety-three years. Of the union of Isaac and Mary (Robertson) McKay, nine children were born, and all are living, five of them being residents of California.

The second child in succession of birth of the parental household, John R. McKay, acquired his early education in the common schools of his native county. At the age of fourteen, under his father's instruction, he began learning the blacksmith's trade in Sunnybrae, where he completed his apprenticeship. Going to Boston, Mass., in 1884, he there followed blacksmithing for four years. In 1888 he came to Fresno, and for the first two months after locating here worked in a vineyard. Turning his attention then to horse-shoeing, Mr. McKay was first employed by the Fresno Agricultural Works, and subsequently by D. W. Cutten.

Embarking in business on his own account in 1890, Mr. McKay bought a shop on I street of Creba & Son, and made horseshoeing a specialty. Subsequently buying a livery business on I street, he ran both the livery and the shop for a while. Selling the latter, he formed a co-partnership with H. W. Wilbur, and was head of the firm of McKay & Wilbur until December, 1901, when the partnership was dissolved, the I street stables being sold. In October, 1903, Mr. McKay bought his old stable, on I street, corner of Kern street, and now carries on a substantial business, keeping one of the finest livery, boarding and sale stables in the county, his large brick barn being 75x150 feet and well equipped with horses and vehicles of all kinds. He is also financially interested in an orchard of forty acres at Kingsburg, Fresno county.

In Fresno, Cal., November, 1891, Mr. McKay married Belle E. McDonald, who was born in Sunnybrae, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Clarence R. and Wilbur R. Mr. McKay is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, sustaining its principles by voice and vote. In his religious faith he is a Congregationalist. He belongs to the Fresno Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and of the Woodmen of the World, of which he is a past officer.

GEORGE KIRKHAM HOSTETTER. Since a boy of but five years, Mr. Hostetter has been without father or mother, and while he has succeeded it is the result of his own well-directed efforts. His father, Francis Hostetter, was a native of Kentucky, but finally migrated to Missouri where he followed farming up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1844. He married Catherine Lankard, who died two years later.

G. K. Hostetter was born in St. Charles county, Mo., January 14, 1841, and after the death of his mother he and two sisters made their home with Alden Farnsworth near St. Charles until 1854, when the family crossed the plains to the Pacific coast. The trip was made with ox-teams, the party following the old Carson route. After a weary journey they arrived in California in October, 1854, and settled in the beautiful Santa Clara valley where one of the party, O. W. Farnsworth, had previously lived. On arriving in the valley Mr. Farnsworth settled on a one hundred and sixty-acre ranch four miles from San Jose and Mr. Hostetter remained with him until 1864, when he went into the mines of Idaho. This trip proved a failure and after a few months he went to Oregon, locating in the Grand Ronde valley, where he found employment for one year. In 1865 a return was made to California and farming was resumed in the Santa Clara valley. A year later, on December 11, 1866, Mr. Hostetter married Margaret Rea, who was born in Illinois. She is a daughter of James Rea, who was born in the western part of Virginia, March 9, 1799, of Irish and Scotch parentage. He made his home in the vicinity of his birth until early manhood, when he accompanied his parents to Ohio, locating in Gallia county, and there he married Hannah Hudson-pillar. The latter, also a native of Virginia, was born the same year as her husband and with her parents removed to Ohio about the same years the Reas did, both families settling in Gallia county. James Rea engaged in farming for some time after their marriage, being located near Gallipolis, Ohio. In 1833 he took his family to Hancock county, residing at Fort Findlay until the fall of 1838, when they removed to the vicinity of Decatur, Macon county, Ill. In 1854 he crossed the plains to California and located near San Jose, Santa Clara county, where his death occurred, at the age of eighty-three years.

From 1865 until 1891 Mr. Hostetter was engaged in farming and horticultural pursuits near Berryessa. While there he improved an orchard of fifty-three acres, meeting with marked success in his business ventures. In 1891 he disposed of his interests and located in San Jose where he resided until March, 1899, when he located in Lindsay, Tulare county, having purchased his present ranch in 1893. Upon his locating on his ranch in 1899 he set out an orange grove of fifteen acres. He also owns two hundred and sixty-four acres a quarter of a mile north of Lindsay.

While Mr. Hostetter has resided in Lindsay but a few years he has taken a prominent position in the affairs of the town, and aside from his own personal interests is now vice-president of the Rochdale Company and is a director in the Lindsay Orange Growers' Association. In both of these concerns he is a valued member, his advice being freely asked on all important questions. He has made a success of his life work and has overcome obstacles that would have discouraged many, being determined to win for himself a position of prominence. That he has accomplished his aims all will admit, but in this battle for a competency he has never neglected the duties of a citizen, and when called upon to assist he has always been willing to respond, both with his advice and his means.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hostetter have been born five children, as follows: Frank F., George F., Alvin M., Rea H. and Mary A. They have been reared amid the comforts of life and all have been given the advantages of a good common school education. The family is liked by all and both Mr. Hostetter and his estimable wife are welcomed into the best homes in the state. In Santa Clara county where they lived for many years they have scores of friends who sincerely regretted their departure.

WILLIAM B. WAUGH. A young man of worth and ability, William B. Waugh is named among the successful stockmen in this section of Tulare county, where he is associated with his father, J. D. Waugh, an old settler and early pioneer, whose sketch also appears on another page of this work. A native of the state, William B. Waugh was born in Grass Valley, Cal., November 28, 1864, where he spent the first nine years of his life. In 1873 he accompanied his parents to Tulare county, and received his education in the public schools and the Visalia Normal. Following the precept and example of his father he began an independent life at the age of twenty years, renting his father's dairy and pasturing the cattle on the present site of Millwood, Fresno county, which land his father homesteaded. It was then known as Mill flat, and was later sold to Smith Comstock, and later to the Millwood Company, which dammed it up for fluming lumber. He now takes his cattle to the Rearing river, the head-waters of the Kings river, where he has a permit from the government. He took the first cattle into that section and built the first trail into the mountains. He is also engaged in general farming on the old home place of seven hundred and sixty acres in the Antelope valley, combining this with his stock-raising industry. His brand is an anchor on the left hip. He has made a success of his work and has won the esteem and respect of all who know him, both for his business ability as well as the integrity which has marked his entire life.

In Visalia, December 12, 1886, Mr. Waugh was united in marriage with Fannie Kirkland, a native of San Francisco. Her father, W. P. Kirkland, was born in Mississippi, and in manhood conducted a steamboat on the Mississippi river. He took his family first to Central America, where he owned a cocconut grove, and later brought them to San Francisco, where he engaged as a merchant. Removing to Visalia he filled many important public offices, among them that of county superintendent of schools and county auditor. He died in Visalia in January, 1900, at the age of eighty-one years. His wife, Louise, died early in life. They were the parents of ten children, seven of whom are now living, namely: Mrs. Howard, of Goshen; Alonzo, of Auckland; Mrs. Perzian, of Auckland; Mrs. McClure, of San Francisco; Walter, of Auckland; Mrs. Cason, of Visalia; and Mrs. Waugh, the youngest, who received her education in the schools of Visalia. To Mr. and Mrs. Waugh were born three children, namely: Harry, Earl and Lawrence. In his political affiliations Mr. Waugh is a staunch Democrat.

BONNIE BRAE RANCH, owned by the Merryman Fruit, Land & Lumber Company, and planted by George T. Frost in 1896, was under his management until 1904, when he was taken sick and died at his home in Riverside, Cal. Three hundred acres are in navel oranges, and two hundred acres are devoted to lemons, pears, olives, figs, vines, etc. The ranch comprises two thousand acres, divided into two parts, Badger Hill and Bonnie Brae ranches. The property is owned by A. C. Merryman and family, incorporated, with R. C. Merryman as manager, and in its management and care about thirty-five people are employed in the various departments.

Badger Hill tract is irrigated by three large wells, there being at the foot of the hill a pumping plant to carry the water to a reservoir of about two acres. From this reservoir, by means of a seventy-five horse-power electric motor, it is forced to the top of the hill, a distance of five hundred and eighty-six feet.

JOHN STURM, For the past forty years Rev. John Sturm has been active in the ministry of the Evangelical Church, and is also well known for his success as a horticulturist. A native of Alsace-Lorraine, France, his birth occurred June 16, 1824. His father, Jacob Sturm, was born in the same place, where he followed farming until his death. His wife, formerly Sarah Fröhle, was also a native of the same locality, where she died. Of their eleven children, six sons and five daughters, John Sturm was the third in order of birth. He received a preliminary education in the common schools of Germany and France, after which he worked for his father on the home farm until he was twenty-two years old. At the age of twenty-nine he married, and after remaining in his native locality for a time, came to America in 1854 and located in Chicago, Ill., near which city he engaged as a gardener until his removal to Nebraska in 1857, to Weeping Water, Cass county, engaging in trade for a livelihood. After remaining there eight years he located for a time in Oregon, Mo., where he was likewise occupied, returning in 1870 to the vicinity of Chicago. For the ensuing twelve years he was located in Wheeling, when he located in St. James, Minn., remaining there until 1896, when he sought a home on the Pacific coast, locating one mile northeast of Portersville, Tulare county, where he cultivated ten acres devoted to various kinds of fruits—oranges, prunes, apples, etc. In 1900 he located in Portersville, where he has a residence and two lots, with the cultivation of fruit to occupy his time.

In 1855 Mr. Sturm was ordained a minister in the German Methodist Episcopal Church, preaching in all the localities in which he has made his home. In 1875, in Barrington, Ill., he became identified with the Evangelical Church, in which faith he has since remained. He has a charge in Portersville, and delivers a sermon every second Sunday, remaining actively interested in the work although he is past eighty years of age. He is a regular attendant of the Annual Conference and Annual Camp-Meeting held at Santa Ana, Cal.

In Alsace-Lorraine, Mr. Sturm married Madeline Herschberger, a native of that place, and they became the parents of eight sons and one daughter, of whom all but two sons are living, namely: John, Jacob, Fred, Andrew, George, Daniel, and Lena, the wife of Chris Sturm, of Tulare county. The sons are all located in the vicinity of Portersville, and have ranches of their own with the exception of Andrew and George, who are interested in lands in North Dakota. Mr. Sturm has divided his property, which consisted of two hundred acres (one hundred acres of orange land) besides other ranches which he afterward purchased, giving his sons the land. The first four sons are married. Politically Mr. Sturm is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

JOHN NEHLS, an influential fruit-grower of Hanford township, Kings county, may with justice be termed a self-made man, as he was thrown upon his own resources at an early age, and his present position of independence has been reached solely as a result of his own unaided efforts. Born in Prussia, February 17, 1850, he was reared in his native surroundings, attending the public schools, until he was thirteen years of age. He was then brought to the United States by his mother, his father having died when he was a small child. After four weeks and five days on a sailing vessel Mr. Nehls and his mother landed in New York City in May, 1863, later going to Racine county, Wis. When fourteen years old he began to work as a farm hand, for a time receiving $4 a month. For several succeeding years he worked on various farms during the summers and went to school during the winters, working for his board. Being economical, he saved his money and continued to follow farm work until he was twenty-one years old, in time accumulating $1,000. Being obliged to seek a change of climate on account of asthma, he wisely determined to come to California.

On the first day of January, 1877, Mr. Nehls arrived at Hanford. Being well pleased with the outlook, he invested his savings in real estate, purchasing the forty-acre farm which is still his home and which is located two miles west of Hanford. Planting part of his land in vines he raised wheat on the remainder. In 1881 he returned to Wisconsin and married Miss Lucy Johncox, a native of that state, her parents being natives of England. Returning to California with his bride, Mr. Nehls continued farming along the same lines until 1886, that year planting five more acres in vines and seven in orchards of assorted fruits. These yielded such fair returns that he subsequently planted his entire farm to fruit, with the exception of a few acres reserved for pasture, and his place now contains many select varieties of peaches,

Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Nehls, of whom one died in infancy and the others are: George, aged twenty; Mazy, eighteen; Jennie, fourteen, and Alta, nine. In their religious inclinations the family favor the doctrine of the Christian Church, of which both Mr. and Mrs. Nehls are active members, the former officiating at the present time as elder. In his political views he is a staunch Republican, but has never sought office, and is a strong adherent of the cause of temperance. He has improved and beautified his place in many ways, having built a substantial two-story residence and other buildings. His land has not only increased in productiveness with the lapse of years, but also in value, being now worth from $250 to $300 per acre. As a citizen worthy of the fullest recognition in the early history of Kings county, whose services in various fields of labor for the advancement of the interests of his section will not soon be forgotten, Mr. Nehls has made an enviable record.

JOHN E. BAILEY. Well known among the most industrious, respected and prosperous men of Bakersfield, Cal., is John E. Bailey, an extensive land and property owner, and a stock raiser and dealer of note. In the achievement of his great material and financial success he has had no assistance, but has been the sole architect of his fortunes. Inheriting from his parents a good constitution, a sound mind and great energy, he began earning his livelihood when young, and from the start has met with encouragement and success. A native of Ireland, he was born November 28, 1852, in County Down, where his parents, James and Lusana Bailey, are both living, well advanced in years.

Reared in the Emerald Isle, John E. Bailey worked as a farm laborer until twenty years old, when he turned his face toward the New World. Crossing the Atlantic on a Cunard liner, he arrived in Boston, Mass., in November, 1872. Three months later he sailed from that city for California, coming by way of Panama. For about a month after arriving in San Francisco he drove a street car, and then went to Sonoma county, where he worked with a threshing machine gang for one summer. Mr. Bailey then tried to obtain work in the lumber camps at Duncans Mills, but failing in the attempt he came to Bakersfield in 1873, and the following year worked on the railway then being constructed between Lathrop, Bakersfield and Los Angeles. He subsequently found employment on ranches or canals for four years. Embarking in business on his own account in 1877, Mr. Bailey started a livery and hotel business in Bakersfield, opening the Cosmopolitan hotel, which he managed for twenty years. He was also engaged in the cattle business on a small scale at the same time. In 1893, however, he formed a partnership with T. L. Briggs, and has since been extensively engaged in ranching and stock dealing. He owns a ranch of six hundred acres lying about seven miles from Bakersfield, the land being subject to irrigation; on section 32, nine miles from Bakersfield, he has two hundred acres of good land, and also owns fourteen hundred acres of mountain land in Kern county. Mr. Bailey buys cattle in Mexico and Arizona, fattens them, and sells to different markets, shipping to various parts of the northwest. He has made considerable money in buying and selling town property, and still has title to several houses and building lots of value. In 1889 he sold fifty-five acres of land in Bakersfield, receiving $200 per acre for it, a price far below its present value.

In January, 1884, Mr. Bailey married Carrie Voges, who was born in New Orleans, and came with her sister to California in 1875, and to Bakersfield in 1877. In his political affiliations Mr. Bailey is an independent Democrat. He takes great interest in the general welfare of town and county, and is now serving his second term as town trustee.

JOSEPH HALFORD. Numbered among the active and prosperous business men of Fresno is Joseph Halford, proprietor of the Novelty Iron Works, which are located at No. 1826 Mono street, corner of I street. Skillful, industrious and enterprising, he has made excellent use of his mechanical genius, and by his business ability and tact has commanded success in his various undertakings. A native of England, he was born April 26, 1848, in Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, which was also the birthplace of his father, Charles Halford. His grandfather, Edward Halford, was born in the same place, and for many years was there employed as a millwright.

A moulder by trade, Charles Halford was employed in a foundry for many years in his native land, being an expert workman. Some time after his marriage, he emigrated to America, and joined his son Joseph in San Francisco, and as a co-partner with him was employed as a moulder in that city and in Stockton. Now, at the age of fourscore years, he is living, retired from active pursuits, in San Francisco. He married Elizabeth Hitchen, who was born in Chester, England, and died in Alameda, Cal. Four children were born of their union, two sons and daughters. Joseph, the oldest child, is the subject of this sketch, while Thomas E., the other son, is a well-known resident of San Francisco; Harriet, the widow of Henry Holm, and Clara, the widow of LeGrand Morehouse, both reside in San Francisco.

Brought up and educated in the city of Wolverhampton, Joseph Halford began learning the trade of a moulder when fourteen years old, serving an apprenticeship of five years with his father, and afterward working as a journeyman in Liverpool until attaining his majority. Emigrating to New York City in 1869, he was in the employ of McKinley & Smach for two and one-half years. Going then to Chicago, Ill., Mr. Halford worked at his trade, and as a foundryman, for nearly three years. In 1874 he came to the Pacific coast, and for eight years was employed as a moulder in the Risdon Iron Works, in San Francisco. Starting in business for himself in 1882, Mr. Halford established a foundry at the San Leandro Agricultural Works, in which he was a stockholder, operating it successfully for four years. Locating in Stockton in 1886, he worked at his trade for a short time, and then opened the Eagle Iron Works, which he subsequently named the Novelty Iron Works. Disposing of that property in 1894, he came to Fresno as foreman of the Fresno Agricultural Works, and three years later established his present plant and foundry, the Novelty Iron Works, of which he is sole proprietor. Mr. Halford has built up the foundry from the ground, and is carrying on a very extensive and lucrative business, manufacturing machinery of all kinds and iron and brass castings.

In San Francisco, Mr. Halford married Harriet M. Bradley, a native of England. Mr. Halford is a member of the Fresno Merchants' Association. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member, and past master, of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, which he has served as district deputy. Mrs. Halford is a member of the Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM GANN. A resident of Lindsay, Tulare county, William Gann is engaged as a blacksmith, in which trade he has met with a gratifying success. He was born in Santa Cruz, Cal., November 13, 1866, a member of a family of six sons and five daughters, of whom all but one daughter are living. His father, John Gann, was a native of Tennessee, as was his grandfather, John, also. The elder man crossed the plains to California and located near Stockton, where he made his home until his death. In 1850 John Gann, Jr., crossed the plains with ox-teams, and upon his arrival in the state followed mining for a time. He finally located in Santa Cruz county and engaged as a farmer until 1881, when he went to Kern county and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres near Glennville. Since his settlement there he has engaged in the raising of stock. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Hitchcock, was a native of Missouri and the daughter of Silas Hitchcock, who crossed the plains in 1846. He went first to Oregon, the following year, however, coming to California, where he became a farmer in the San Joaquin valley, later in Los Gatos, in which place his death occurred.

William Gann remained in Santa Cruz county until he was seven years old, then accompanied his parents to San Joaquin county, thence to Inyo county, and in 1881 to Kern county. He attended the district schools in these various places, acquiring a substantial foundation for the practical knowledge which has since given him success in his life-work. He learned the trade of blacksmith in Glennville and Bakersfield, completing his apprenticeship in the latter city. Until 1896 he remained in Bakersfield, when he came to Tulare and worked at his trade two years. Locating in Lindsay, in 1898, he bought out the shop of Charles Kirkhan and continued his work here for a time. In 1904 he purchased two lots and put up a large, roomy shop, where he carries on an extensive trade in his line of general blacksmith. He has also built a comfortable residence here, and in many ways takes an active interest in the growth and upbuilding of the town.

In Lindsay Mr. Gann was united in marriage with Maude Denton, a native of Kentucky. Mr. Gann is a member of the Woodmen of the World, having been made a member of Lindsay Camp No. 334, of which he is past council commander, and also belongs to Women of Woodcraft. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

ROY CHASE TRABER. Among the younger generation in California, as well as elsewhere, we find men who have disclosed both tact and capacity for business and have met with gratifying success, and of this class we mention Mr. Traber, who for a few years past has given his attention to the raisin culture in the vicinity of Parlier, Fresno county. A native of the same county, which has ever been his home, Mr. Traber was born near Mendocino school house December 30, 1877, and he is the youngest but one of four sons born to John Wesley and Anna (Kane) Traber; the latter, although a native of the state of Vermont, was reared in Michigan and her marriage took place in Missouri.

The father of Mr. Traber was born in 1849, in Albany county, in the state of New York, but afterward became a resident of Wisconsin. In 1866 he went to Missouri, which was his home for a few years, removing to California in 1872. The first three years of his residence in this state were spent teaching school in Mendocino county. In 1874 he first went into Fresno county and took up a homestead claim on government land, being one of the original twenty-five settlers who developed the Long ditch, commonly known as the Church ditch, which brought the first water on those plains. This was the beginning of the great system of irrigation in that section. Mr. Traber improved one hundred and sixty acres of land in the vicinity of Parlier. To him belongs the distinction of being the first teacher of the Mendocino and the Kingsburg schools, and with the exception of two years he has followed teaching continuously ever since, being at the present time one of the most successful educators of Fresno county. The four sons who blessed the union of this couple are: J. Orra, Charles H., Roy Chase and C. B., the latter a resident of the home place; Charles H. is also a teacher by profession.

Having every advantage in the way of education, it is not strange that Mr. Traber should be competent to manage his affairs successfully. His common school education was increased by a complete course in the Selma high school, from which he graduated in the class of 1894. He became a student at the Fresno Business College in the fall of 1896, and the following spring was graduated from that institution, having completed a full commercial course. Having a desire to take up the study of law, he entered the law office of Lewis H. Smith of Fresno in 1898, and after pursuing his studies there for one year, he went into the office of Judge Carter, continuing his legal studies there for a while. In the meantime, while attending school, Mr. Traber had not been idle in vacation time, as in 1891-93 he served as deputy assessor, being also appointed in 1892 deputy in the tax collector's office.

His subsequent return to his father's ranch was matter of surprise to some of his friends, no doubt; but in this, as in other matters, he substantiated his claim to good judgment, as his present prosperity will testify. He not only owns an interest in the home place, but has a clear title to twenty acres of adjacent land, which he utilizes in raising raisins and other dried fruits. By his marriage, December 27, 1903, he wedded Esther Becker, who was born in San Francisco and is a daughter of H. J. Becker, a native of Germany. Mrs. Traber's father was brought to San Francisco when but a child of four years. He is now superintendent of a Pacific coast tannery. Being politically an active and earnest Democrat, Mr. Traber has proved himself a useful member of his party; he is a member of the county central committee, has at all times been a zealous worker, exercising an important influence in the affairs of the county. He is allied with the Modern Woodmen of America of Kingsburg and the Knights of Pythias of Selma.

JAMES H. BLAIR. Probably no name in the northern part of California is better known than that of Blair, as the father of our subject was one of the pioneer ministers of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. For many years he continued in the ministry in addition to farming and stock-raising. Rev. Jonathan Blair was a native of Tennessee, but on reaching manhood migrated westward and for a time lived in Arkansas and Missouri. In 1857 he crossed the plains, coming in the customary way, as in those days ox-teams were the only means of transportation across the continent. He was one of the few to bring a drove of cattle to California. After living in Sonoma county for a short time he located in Little Lake valley, Mendocino county, where he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, devoting most of his time to the latter industry. During the winter of 1861-62 he lost nearly all his cattle, as that winter was an extremely cold one and the stock was frozen to death. In 1862, with the few head that were saved, Rev. Blair located in Tulare county and here engaged in stock-raising near Visalia. Two years later misfortune again overtook him and he lost nearly everything he owned, that being the year of the great drought. In 1874 he purchased the ranch now owned by his son which he improved and placed under a high state of cultivation. From time to time he added to his first purchase until at the time of his death he was the possessor of one thousand one hundred acres of fine land. While most of his attention was given to the raising of cattle he was for ten years interested quite extensively in the sheep business.

Soon after coming to California Rev. Blair began preaching in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and during his long residence here he continued an active worker, organizing and establishing churches at many different places. The territory he covered was large, preaching in the towns between the Tule and Kings rivers. Sincere in his work he refused to give up the ministry until forced to do so by old age, but his voice was heard up to within three years of his death, which occurred in 1886 at the age of eighty-one years. He married Mrs. Nancy Moffett nee Mayfield, who died in 1897. By her union with Mr. Blair she became the mother of ten children, eight of whom reached maturity.

James H. Blair was born in Mendocino county, February 28, 1860. When but a small child his parents removed to Tulare county where he was reared on his father's farm. His education was obtained in the public schools and when young he began learning the ins and outs of the stock business. When old enough he took charge of the ranch which has since been his home. He now owns one thousand one hundred and twenty-four acres of land, and is engaged in an extensive stock business, making a specialty of the Aberdeen Polled Angus cattle, of which he has over two hundred head. This industry has proved a decided success and he is now considered one of the leading cattle men of the county. In 1904 he erected for himself a handsome residence of ten rooms which is modern in every way. Running water is piped into the house from a two thousand gallon tank which is filled by a windmill.

Mr. Blair married Miss Susan Brotherton, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of William Brotherton, who came to California in 1875 and here became an extensive stock man. By this marriage six children have been born, as follows: Edith, Ewell, Elsie, Edgar, Ruth and Lulu. Both Mr. and Mrs. Blair are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, the former being the ruling elder. Fraternally he holds membership with the Modern Woodmen of the World and in politics is a Democrat.

CHARLES M. ABBOTT. Probably no man near Mountainview has made his influence felt in greater degree as an establisher of beautiful home places than Charles M. Abbott, at present owning an ideal cottage surrounded by ideal grounds on the corner of Alice avenue and Front street. Mr. Abbott has three acres in his place, and all that the landscape artist has at his command has been utilized to produce a representative California retreat. A true lover of nature, and appreciative of its beautiful influences, this honored citizen has improved his opportunities in a rare way, understanding well his materials and offering an example of what may be accomplished when ability is combined with judgment and good taste.

Born on a farm near Boscawen, Merrimack county, N. H., May 11, 1843, Mr. Abbott passed his childhood and youth in a neighborhood rich in memories of his paternal grandfather, Joseph, who enlisted in the Revolutionary war when sixteen years old in Colonel Peabody's regiment, and in return for services rendered received the soldier's warrant with which he purchased the land near Boscawen. On this same farm Joseph, the father of Charles M., was born, also three of his older sons, and lived there until the family was dispersed by their various ambitions. Joseph and his wife, formerly Mary Elkins, also of New Hampshire, were the last to leave the old place, coming to California in 1875, and settling in Oakland, where both died, the former in 1877, at the age of eighty years. The four sons of this couple were educated primarily in the public schools of New Hampshire, and Charles M. outlined his future by serving an apprenticeship to a carpenter near the home place. In Concord, N. H., he married Emma Bailey, a native of Franklin, N. H., and daughter of Simion and Nancy (Bachelder) Bailey. Mr. Bailey was a cabinet maker by trade, and learned to do fine finishing work on pianos and other expensive furniture, but his promising career was cut short at the early age of thirty.

J. S. Gillette

In the fall of 1861 Mr. Abbott gave vent to a long-thought-out project and embarked on a sailer with prow turned toward the south seas, and, going around Cape Horn, arrived in San Francisco April 28, 1862, after an adventurous journey upon the deep. Beginning in a small way he followed his trade in San Francisco, and gradually worked up a large business as builder and contractor in the vicinity, extending his operations to Oakland and other near-by towns. He remained a resident of the metropolis until 1885, meanwhile making five trips back east, during one of which he brought his wife to the coast. Locating in Mountainview in the fall of 1885, Mr. Abbott engaged in carpentering and building and also bought a small place and set out an orchard. This place was improved and cultivated and sold, and since then four others have come under his capable management, each passing to some one desirous of profit by his taste and skill in improving upon and developing natural resources. His methods have been stimulating to others settling in the community, and his example of thrift and enterprise has been reflected in the homes of many of his fellow townsmen. Besides his home place, he is the owner of other properties in the town, both residence and business, from which he derives a substantial income. Mr. Abbott is a staunch Republican, but aside from the formality of casting his vote has never been identified with the local undertakings of his party. He is highly respected for his success and public spirit and for the integrity which has made his word as good as his bond.

J. LOTUS GILLETTE. In one of the beautiful modern residences erected in 1902, in the vicinity of Le Grand, Merced county, resides J. L. Gillette, one of the prosperous and successful ranchers of the county. He was born in Onondaga county, N. Y., March 12, 1852, a son of Jason and Margaret (Fancher) Gillette, both of whom were descended from prominent and old families of that state. The latter died in 1860. At the age of eighty-eight years, Jason Gillette is living retired in the state of his birth.

J. L. Gillette was reared on his father's farm, remaining at home until twenty, when he went to Emporia, Kans., but a few weeks later went to Michigan, where he spent the summer. In 1879 he made the trip to California, locating at once in Merced county. Three years later he purchased four hundred and forty acres of land, two miles west of Le Grand, which is a part of his home place, adding to the original tract until he now owns five hundred and sixty acres. Returning to New York in 1883, he was married October 31 of that year to Carrie Newman, who was born and reared in Onondaga county. They have three children, Florence M., Hazel and Glenn H. The family stands high socially, and politically Mr. Gillette is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. As prosperity has come his way he has added to the value of his property, erecting a modern country home and substantial outbuildings. In all matters pertaining to the public welfare he has given such assistance as his means would allow, and by his public spirit and energy has become recognized as one of the representative men of the county.

ANNIE LAURIE BOND, M. D. A woman of rare and admirable qualities, Dr. Bond is widely known and highly appreciated for her work as a physician and surgeon, which has brought her into prominence in Lindsay, Tulare county, and its vicinity. She was born near Woodbine, Harrison county, Iowa, the daughter of Charles Krepps. He was a native of Ohio and an early settler of Iowa, where he improved and cultivated a farm. He remained in that location until 1873, when he brought his family to California and located them at Lemoore, Kings county, in the Mussel Slough country, about six miles south of Grangeville. There he improved a farm upon which he lived until his retirement from the active cares of life, when he located in Lemoore. His death occurred in 1902, in Lemoore, at the age of seventy-eight years. He was a man of strong, earnest character and deeply imbued with the principles of right. From 1862 until the close of the war, he served as a volunteer in an Iowa regiment, taking part in the Atlanta campaign as well as many engagements where courage and endurance were the requisites of the soldiers who brought victory to the Union. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and in religion was identified with the United Brethren Church. His wife, formerly Melinda Scovel, was a native of New York state and the daughter of Loomis Scovel, who came from the Empire state to Illinois, thence to Iowa, where he was a pioneer farmer. Mr. Scovel still makes his home in that state, at the venerable age of eighty-five years. Mrs. Krepps survives her husband and makes her home with Dr. Bond. Mr. Krepps was married twice, having four daughters and two sons by his first wife, of whom one son and one daughter are deceased. By his second marriage he had four daughters and two sons, all of whom are living.

The eldest of this family of children, Annie Laurie Bond, came to California with her parents in 1873, where she received her education in the public schools of the state. In womanhood she took up the study of medicine, entering the California Medical College of San Francisco, from which institution she was graduated in 1897 with the degree of M. D. Immediately following her graduation she began a practice in Stockton, which continued but six months, when she was taken ill. In December, 1898, she located in Lindsay and has since continued the practice of medicine and surgery here. She has made a success of her work and has won the confidence of those with whom she has had professional intercourse as well as those who have witnessed her success.

In Visalia, in 1886, she married Seth H. Bond, a native of Iowa. He is an educator, having taught for many years in Oregon and California. They are the parents of one child, Ruth. Dr. Bond is a member of the Fraternal Aid and Women of Woodcraft, and is examining physician for both. In religion she is a Seventh Day Adventist.

HARRY HILL NEWMAN, who is known as one of the prominent and successful farmers of Tulare county, was born in Booneville, Mo., February 21, 1867, a son of Judge Jesse G. Newman, whose biographical record appears at length in the sketch of Robert O. Newman, which appears in another part of this volume. He was reared to manhood on the home farm, three miles southwest of Booneville, receiving his education in the district school. His father died in 1873, leaving him a half-orphan, at the tender age of six years. He remained at home until 1884, when he came to California and located in Tulare county and farmed with his brothers, Robert O. and Jesse H. Newman. Afterward he formed a partnership with Jesse H. Newman, which has continued ever since. They are now engaged in grain farming, for the first four years of their partnership conducting four hundred acres southeast of Visalia, when they removed to the Fielding Bacon place of two thousand acres. In 1900 they rented the old Curtis ranch of a thousand acres, which now belongs to the Bank of Visalia, and in addition to this also operate six hundred and forty acres, which is devoted to grain. They engage in general farming and dairying, having their own separator; run four eight-mule teams, and conduct a Houser combined harvester, which requires thirty-two mules. They also have a fine place on the Cottonwood, about eleven miles northeast of Visalia, where they have a prune orchard of forty acres; a peach orchard of thirty acres, and ten acres in Simona prunes. They are very successful farmers and are numbered among the representative agriculturists of Tulare county.

In Visalia Mr. Newman married Elizabeth A. Grove, a native of Astoria, Fulton county, Ill., and a daughter of Matthew Hamilton Grove, now of Bowling Green, Mo. They have two children, Elsie Catherine and Claude Hugh. Mrs. Newman is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Newman is a staunch Democrat, and in the interests of his party has served as clerk of the board and school trustee for the Stone Corral district. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America.

CHARLES FORSYTHE. Among the enterprising fruit and vine growers of Selma there is probably no one more energetic or persevering than Charles Forsythe, whose name appears at the head of this sketch. By birth and breeding, as well as by choice, he is a farmer, and, notwithstanding a few reverses, has made substantial progress along the highway to success, being the owner of a fruit ranch that in its appointments, equipments and productions compares well with any in this section of Fresno county. He was born September 25, 1861, in Perry county, Ohio, which was also the birthplace of his father, the late John Forsythe.

An extensive and prosperous agriculturist, John Forsythe owned a farm of six hundred acres in Perry county, Ohio, where he spent his entire life. He was a man of excellent business capacity, and a citizen of considerable prominence and influence. He died in 1896, aged eighty years. He married Hannah Gobel, who was born in New Jersey and died in Ohio on the home farm. Of the eleven children, seven boys and four girls, born of their union, Charles was the ninth child.

Until he was seventeen years old, Charles Forsythe remained at home, attending the district schools and assisting in the work incidental to life on a large farm. Starting then in life on his own account, he went to Colorado, at first locating in Silverton, San Juan county, where he was employed in freighting and in a feed stable. Subsequently removing to Durango, Colo., he was for a few years employed in the grocery and queensware business. Desirous of investing in land, Mr. Forsythe came to California in 1890, locating in Fresno county, seven miles north of Selma, where he bought forty acres of land. He spent much time and money in improving the property, setting out a large vineyard, but in the season of unusual depression that followed soon after he lost the entire estate. Nothing daunted, Mr. Forsythe, with characteristic courage, in 1896 bought his present ranch, which consists of sixty acres of land lying two and one-half miles northeast of Selma, on the line of the Centerville and Kingsburg ditch. He pays especial attention to the culture of the raisin grape, having a fine vineyard of forty acres of bearing vines. He also raises alfalfa on twenty acres of his ranch, this crop being profitable and useful. Mr. Forsythe is also a stockholder in the Co-operative Winery of Parlier and in the Selma Co-operative Packing House.

In Fresno county, Cal., Mr. Forsythe married Ina May Fine, a native of Oregon, and they have one child, Ora. In his political affiliations Mr. Forsythe is a staunch Republican, sustaining the principles of his party by voice and vote.

MATTHEW W. GRACE. A son of George W. and Elizabeth (Keller) Grace, Matthew W. was born in Newton county, Mo., January 12, 1860. His father was a farmer and during the Civil war enlisted in a Missouri regiment and died during his term of service. Elizabeth Keller was a native of Missouri and a daughter of David Keller, who was born in Pennsylvania and became an early settler in Missouri.

When Matthew W. Grace was eight years of age he accompanied his mother on her removal to St. Charles county. Here he was brought up on a farm and attended the district schools, remaining there until 1893 when he came to California, first locating in Exeter, Tulare county. Entering the employ of the Giant Oak Fruit ranch he continued with this company two years and then formed a partnership with Charles Kirkman and engaged in the butcher business in Exeter. The following year they opened a meat market in Lindsay, Mr. Grace coming to the latter place in 1896 to take charge of the market which he continued to conduct until 1898. In January of that year he received his appointment as postmaster of Lindsay, having filled that position up to the present time. Mr. Grace has found time to engage in other lines and now deals in drugs, books and stationery, and has met with success. Aside from his duties as postmaster and merchant, Mr. Grace is also the local manager for the Pacific States Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Fraternally Mr. Grace is a member of the Woodmen of the World, the Fraternal Aid and the Women of Woodcraft. Since coming to California he has taken a keen interest in politics. Being a firm believer in the principles promulgated by the Republican party, he is ever ready to work for the success of the party candidates. He has met with success as the result of his own efforts. Since reaching young manhood he has had to make his own way in the world, and in making a success of his life he has gained position and respect.

MARION KINMON HENDERSON.

Among the enterprising and substantial business men of Lindsay, Tulare county, mention belongs to Marion K. Henderson, of the firm of Henderson & McGregor, merchants of this place. Mr. Henderson was born in Modesto, Cal., July 31, 1871, a son of William G. Henderson, who was a native of Harlan county, Ky., in which state his parents lived and died, and where he engaged in farming in young manhood. Deciding to emigrate to the more remote west, he crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1858. After his safe arrival in the west he lived in various places, among them Sonoma county and other places north of the center. For a time he located near Modesto. In 1873 he came to Tulare county and located in the Mussel Slough country, near Grangeville, and followed farming. Later he removed to Upper North Tule river at what is now Milo, and there his wife's death occurred. For a time thereafter he removed to the coast, when he returned to Tulare county and now makes his home in Lindsay. His wife was in maidenhood Nancy Ainsworth, a native of Cedar county, Mo., whose father, Alfred Ainsworth, crossed the plains with his family in 1857, locating in Sonoma county, where his death eventually occurred. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, Marion K. of this review, and Ruby, the wife of Henry Dillon, of Lindsay.

After the death of his mother, when he was only four years old, Marion K. Henderson went to live with an uncle, F. M. Ainsworth, and was reared to manhood on the latter's farm on the Tule river. At the age of eighteen years he began clerking at Daunt, when he also became assistant postmaster. He then engaged in the mercantile business for one year independently. Coming to Lindsay in October, 1895, he was one of the first business men of the place. It was then only a small town, with no orange shippers nor any enterprises worthy of mention. He formed a partnership with W. I. Hodge, under the firm name of Hodge & Henderson, and they erected a store on the west side of the Southern Pacific Railroad tracks and began a mercantile business. Later they moved to the East Side when they shortly afterward dissolved partnership. Mr. Henderson continued the business alone for one year, when, in 1900, the firm of Henderson & McGregor was formed. They have continued successfully to the present time, now carrying agricultural implements in addition to a line of general merchandise. Mr. Henderson has also taken a strong interest in the growth of oranges in this section, setting out an orchard of fifteen acres of Washington navel.

In Oakland Mr. Henderson married Nellie J. Seybolt, a native of Omaha, Neb., and they are the parents of one daughter, Helen, and an infant son. Politically Mr. Henderson is a Democrat. He was made a Mason in Portersville, is now a member of Portersville Lodge No. 303, F. & A. M., and Portersville Chapter No. 85, R. A. M., also a member of the Woodmen of the World.

JASPER NEWTON CROW, a rancher of the Sycamore valley, Contra Costa county, was born in central Missouri, January 22, 1833, the second son of his parents, Lewis and Nancy (Zumalt) Crow, both of whom were natives of the same state. The father eventually located in Lee county, Iowa, from which place the entire family crossed the plains with ox-teams, arriving in California in September, 1853. The first winter was spent in the Santa Clara valley, after which they located in what has since been known as Crow canyon, where the father and his five sons each took up a quarter section of land. The father became the owner of two hundred and ninety acres, which is now in the possession of John Lewis. Mr. Crow died at the age of sixty-two years, while his wife lived to the ripe age of eighty-seven. Besides Jasper N. they were the parents of the following children: William C., John J., Armilda J., Francis M., Lewis A. and Olivia A.

Jasper N. Crow pre-empted a quarter section of land at the same time that the rest of the family located in Crow canyon. This he improved and cultivated for some time, but finally sold out. Since then he has rented property in various locations, among them being Haywards, Livermore, San Ramon, Tassajara, Pleasanton, and in Sycamore valley, where he is now conducting the Owens ranch. Mr. Crow has been married twice, his first wife being Adelaide

Cline, a native of Oregon, who died at the age of twenty-one years. In 1868 he married Josephine Williams, who was born in Oregon, the daughter of David Williams. She died at the age of forty-six years, leaving six children, namely: Lewis D., a farmer, who married Nellie Babbitts, by whom he has two children; Irving Lewis, and Earl; Nancy Jane, who married Henry Christmann, by whom he has two children, Gertrude and Henry; William, who married Maggie Jones, and lives in Oakland; Leonor, who married Lewis Eddy, and has one child, Lola Evelyn, and two other children who died in youth.

WILLIAM ANTONE YOST. One of the many capable, trustworthy and respected citizens of Fresno county is William Antone Yost, a resident of Selma. He is actively associated with the advancement of the agricultural and horticultural interests of this locality as a vineyardist and fruit-grower, and as a contractor and builder is identified with its industrial prosperity. Of German ancestry, he was born January 21, 1854, in Pettis county, Mo., a son of the late John Philip Yost.

A native of Germany, John Philip Yost was bred and educated in the Fatherland, and there learned the baker's trade. On attaining his majority he emigrated to this country, locating in Morgan county, Mo., where he took up wild land, from which he improved a farm. In 1850 he came with an ox team train across the plains to California, paying his traveling expenses by cooking for the party. Locating near a mining camp, he worked in the mines three days, and then opened a bakery, which he operated for a year, in that time clearing three thousand dollars. Returning to Missouri in 1851, he resumed farming, and continued in that occupation the ensuing twenty-five years. He married Elizabeth Giles, a native of Kentucky, and they spent the most of their married life in Pettis county, where their eight children were born. In 1877 he and his wife came to Contra Costa county, Cal., to visit their son, William Antone, and both died within two weeks' time, his death occurring thirty-six hours after that of his good wife.

The oldest child of his parents, William Antone Yost received such educational advantages as were afforded by the district schools of his native county, and was well trained in agricultural pursuits by his father. Migrating to California in 1876, he settled first near Kingsburg, Fresno county, where he worked as a farm laborer for a while, and afterward as shareholder. Going to Contra Costa county in the fall of 1877, he rented land, which he carried on two years.

Milton M. Dale

Returning to Fresno county in 1880, Mr. Yost rented a ranch for two years, conducting it with profitable results. In 1882 he bought, in Shaw's colony, one and one-fourth miles northeast of Selma, twenty-three and seven-tenths acres of land lying on the Centreville and Kingsburg ditch. He has made practical improvements on his estate, setting out a vineyard and an orchard, and on the remainder of the ranch raising alfalfa. A natural mechanic, he is an expert in the use of tools of all kinds, and in addition to looking after his ranch carries on a substantial business as a contractor and builder, having learned the carpenter's trade by himself.

In Tulare county, Cal., Mr. Yost married Phoebe Purves, who was born in this state, and they have five children, namely: Philip Morse, living near Selma; William Henry of the United States navy; Albert Melvin, at home; George E.; and Alice Marie. Politically Mr. Yost affiliates with the Republican party, and has served as school director. Fraternally he is a member of Selma Lodge No. 277, F. & A. M.; the Eastern Star, the Fraternal Aid, and Woodmen of the World.

MILTON M. DALE. One of the largest individual dairymen in Tulare county, Milton M. Dale is carrying on a successful business in the vicinity of Poplar, and ranks socially with the representative citizens of this section. A native of Georgia, he was born near Carrollton, Carroll county, September 16, 1866, a son of Valentine B. and a grandson of John M. Dale, for further information regarding whom refer to the sketch of S. E. Dale, which appears elsewhere in this volume. Valentine B. Dale is still living, making his home on a farm near Modesto, Stanislaus county. He was also a resident of Georgia and served in Cobb's Legion, in a Georgia regiment, during the Civil war. In 1869 he came to California and located near Modesto, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, which still forms a part of the old home. His wife, Susan Hinden in maidenhood, was a native of Georgia, and the daughter of Benjamin Hinden, a farmer of that state. She is also living and enjoying the fruits of their early industry. They were the parents of five sons and four daughters, of whom one daughter is now deceased.

Milton M. Dale was the fifth in order of birth in the family of his parents, practically his entire life having been spent in California, where he accompanied his parents when only three years old. He was reared to young manhood in the vicinity of Modesto, receiving his education in the public schools and in Lytton Springs College, of Sonoma county. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he came to Tulare county, and in the vicinity of Poplar began grain-raising. For several years he conducted this business, at times having as many as twelve hundred acres in grain. Realizing the risk he ran each year he soon discontinued his efforts in the farming line and began to devote his attention to stock-raising, having now a herd made up largely of full-blooded and high-grade stock, of Holstein-Friesian cattle. In 1901 he started his dairy, beginning with eighteen milch cows, since which time he has increased the number to fifty-five, and now has one of the most extensive dairies in the county, owning his own separator. His property, which consists of one hundred and sixty acres, the northwest quarter of section 4, township 22, range 26, one mile and a half west of Poplar, is under irrigation from the Poplar Irrigation Company ditch. Ninety acres of the place are in alfalfa. Mr. Dale pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres of land, the northwest quarter of section 24, township 22, range 26, which he afterward sold.

In Poplar, May 5, 1896, Mr. Dale was united in marriage with Mary Jones, a native of Stanislaus county, Cal. Her father, W. J. Jones, a native of Tennessee, crossed the plains in 1850 and became a farmer in Stanislaus county. He is now located near Poplar, engaged in the raising of grain. His wife, formerly Lucy Bailey, was a native of Georgia. They became the parents of seven children, of whom three are living. Mrs. Dale was next to the oldest and was reared to young womanhood in Tulare county. Fraternally Mr. Dale is identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and Modern Woodmen of America, and politically is a staunch Democrat, being an ex-member of the county central committee.

JOHN W. VAUGHN. A sturdy and industrious tiller of the soil and one who is practical in his methods, John W. Vaughn is recognized as a prominent dairy farmer, residing in the British colony, in Merced county, Cal., four and a half miles west of Merced. His productive farm contains sixty acres of choice land and he keeps from sixteen to twenty-five dairy cows, has five acres in orchards, forty-five in alfalfa, and the balance in pasturage. His place is well improved and provided with excellent buildings, adequate for the needs of the farm. Not least among the improvements is the substantial two-story residence surrounded by well-kept lawns, ornamented with shrubs and choice rose bushes, and in 1904 he erected a silo, the second to be erected in his community.

Mr. Vaughn was born June 20, 1854, in Greene county, Mo., a son of Thomas and Charity (Denny) Vaughn, the former a native of North Carolina. He was a farmer by occupation and in his boyhood days he left the south for a home in Missouri, removing afterward to Tennessee, but subsequently returning to Missouri, where he spent three years. In 1851 he crossed overland to California behind ox teams and at Rough-and-Ready Camp, near Marysville, followed mining pursuits for a year. He came to California with a brother, Wilson Vaughn, and before leaving home they had agreed not to part, so when the latter was called home by his wife's illness, Thomas accompanied him, and he remained in Missouri until 1874, during this time following farming and stock-raising. In 1874, accompanied by his family, including John W., Thomas Vaughn went to Colorado and a short time afterward located for a time in Prescott, Ariz., pushing on to California in September, 1875. The family took up their abode in Santa Ana, where the father died at the age of sixty-six years.

Some time after the death of his father, John W. Vaughn engaged in the livery business at Pomona, Los Angeles county, where he continued to do a profitable business until 1893. January 11, of that year, he came to Merced county and purchased the farm where he now lives and which has since been his home. While visiting in Missouri, Mr. Vaughn was joined in marriage with Miss Mary J. Ray, a native of that state, and they have seven children, namely, Effic M., Essie, Ray W., Percy H., William A., Freda J. and Fay G. In politics Mr. Vaughn has always affiliated with the Republican party, and has ever been faithful and reliable. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and as a man and a citizen he is of that class which represents good government and stability.

ROBERT OSCAR NEWMAN. The Newman family is one well represented in Tulare county, the name standing for strong business ability, keen and far-sighted discernment, as well as a personal integrity which has won the confidence and esteem of all those who have had either business or social relations with the members of the family. The family came originally from the south, Jacob Newman being born in North Carolina, the son of a patriot in the war of 1812. Jacob Newman located in Booneville, Mo., in 1821, where he became a farmer and conducted a distillery, located one mile back from the Missouri river. In 1854 he went to Texas and located at Port Sullivan, where his death occurred. In his family was a son named Jesse G., who was born in Booneville, where he grew to manhood, married and began farming in the vicinity of the town. In 1849 he crossed the plains with ox teams and mined at Feather river, but returned east in 1852. His death occurred at Booneville, Mo., at the age of fifty-two years. He was a prominent man in his community, becoming county judge of Cooper county, which office he filled for eight years, and during the Civil war (although he was a Democrat politically) he served for a time as captain of a company of Missouri Home Guards of the Federal troops. Fraternally he was an Odd Fellow. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Hill, was a native of Kentucky, her father, James Hill, being a native of Mississippi, and an early settler in the vicinity of Booneville, Mo., where he engaged as a farmer. He was also prominent in public affairs in Cooper county, where he served as the first sheriff. His death occurred in the state of his adoption. Mrs. Newman survived her husband and died in Tulare county, Cal. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom four sons and two daughters are now living, namely: Robert Oscar, of this review; Jesse H.; Harry Hill; Frank; Fannie, the wife of George P. Robinson of Nevada; and Maggie, the widow of Marion Grove, late of Visalia.

On July 4, 1848, occurred the birth of Robert Oscar Newman, in Booneville, Mo. He was reared on the paternal farm in the vicinity of that place, receiving his education in the district school, the Booneville school, and Allison's Academy for boys in Booneville. For a time during the Civil war he served as a member of his father's company in the Home Guards, being called out during Shelby's raid of 1863, and Price's raid of 1864. In this latter raid Price came to Booneville with thirty thousand men, and as there were only one hundred and fifty men in the Home Guards they were taken prisoners. Three days later they were paroled, while this same raid proved the time of defeat for Price, who was driven from Newton, Kans., to Texas. After the war Mr. Newman engaged in work on the home farm until he was twenty-three years of age. In that year he went to Elko, Nev., where he engaged in teaming into the mountains for two years. After his father's death he returned to Missouri to take charge of the home farm, conducting the interests of the place for his mother until 1882. He then bought a farm adjoining the home place and kept it for two years, when he sold out and came to Tulare county, Cal. He first rented land on the Cottonwood, where he engaged in wheat farming, having charge of four thousand acres of the extensive property owned by Fielding Bacon. He ran a large farming outfit, having seven eight-mule teams. In the fall of 1892 his assets amounted to \$25,000. Following his successful career came the panic of 1893 and several dry and with these reverses he once more found himself at the beginning. Undaunted, he began again, in 1898 locating upon the property which he now makes his home, the old Morgan Beard ranch. He now conducts three hundred and twenty acres devoted to grain and alfalfa, and also runs six hundred and forty acres of the old Fielding Bacon ranch. His principal occupation now is the raising of fine trotting stock, he being the only dealer in Tulare county who has the regular Standard horses. In the past few years in which he has engaged in this business he has produced more record horses than any other man in the San Joaquin valley, among them being the following: Robert Basler, record 2.20, by Antevolo, 2.19, son of Electioneer, his dam being Elizabeth Basler; De Bernardi Basler, 2.16 $\frac{1}{4}$, by Robert Basler; Ida May, by Grosvenor, the dam of Homeward, 2.13 $\frac{1}{4}$, by Strathway, sired George G., record 2.06 $\frac{1}{4}$; Dr. W., 2.12 $\frac{1}{2}$, by Robert Basler; Jonesa Basler, 2.11, by Robert Basler; Stoneway, record 2.22, by Strathway, 2.19, whose dam was Elizabeth Basler; sired Myway, record 2.22; Stoneleta, record 2.20 at two years old. He owns at present Robert Direct, three years old, by Direct, record 2.05 $\frac{1}{2}$, dam Daisy Basler, by Robert Basler, one of the finest bred horses in the United States; Dew Drop Basler, by Robert Basler; Ida May, by Grosvenor; Daisy Basler, by Robert Basler; Wedding Bells, by Robert Basler; all fine Standard bred mares. Mr. Newman is universally conceded to be one of the best judges of equine flesh in California, or indeed in the United States. He has given the subject able thought and has brought about the best results to be obtained in this line of work. For a time he also dealt in cattle, having a fine herd of Jersey cows, which, however, he sold recently.

In Booneville Mr. Newman was united in marriage with Frances Ziegel, a native of Rochester, N. Y., and the daughter of Andrew Ziegel, an early settler of Missouri, where he farmed and conducted a tannery. Born of this union were seven children, namely: Grace, the wife of Henry J. Lyman of Hilo, Hawaiian Islands; Walter, attending the University of California, class of 1906; Tracy, engaged in merchandising in Portland, Ore.; Elizabeth, a trained nurse located in Honolulu; Nellie, a member of the class of 1905 of the Visalia high school; Robert O., Jr., attending the University of California, in the class of 1908; and Lola, a member of the class of 1908 of the Visalia high school.

In his political affiliations Mr. Newman is a staunch Democrat and has always taken an active interest in the support of the principles he endorses. For the past eight years he has served as a member of the county central committee and has rendered efficient service. Progressive and enterprising, Mr. Newman advocates all movements calculated to advance the general welfare, and is regarded as one of the most substantial and prominent citizens of Tulare county.

JOHN HOLMES HUNTLEY. A pioneer of California since 1852, J. H. Huntley has been a factor in the upbuilding of the state and of Tulare county since 1865. He was born September 7, 1829, in Canajoharie, Montgomery county, N. Y., a son of Oliver D. and Mary (Stark) Huntley, the former born in Stonington, R. I., and the latter in Connecticut, a daughter of Joshua Stark, a farmer, who died in New York. Mrs. Huntley died in New York when her son, John H., was but six years of age. Oliver D. Huntley learned the mercantile business when a boy and followed that career for many years. He was twice married; by each union six children were born. His second wife was a sister of his first wife. He died at the age of sixty-five years. The Huntley family is of Scotch ancestry.

John Holmes Huntley was the third child by the first marriage; was reared and educated in the public schools of his native county and Anes Academy, and for two years found employment in a law-book store in Albany. In 1852 he started for California via the Nicaragua route, and arrived in San Francisco in November of that year. He went at once to the Sonora mines in Tuolumne county, and then turned his attention to buying and selling stock until he enlisted for service during the Civil war. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Company E, Second California Cavalry, being mustered in at San Francisco. He served for a time against the Indians on the northern border, and then was transferred to Tulare county, where he served in the outbreak on Owens river, acting as sergeant-major of a division of his regiment. He was mustered out in 1864, after serving three years and four days.

After the war he spent one year in the mines in Nevada, then went to Tulare county and engaged in money loaning in Tulare, Kern and Fresno counties. He purchased land from time to time, until his holdings amount to eight hundred and forty acres in the San Joaquin valley, devoted principally to stock-raising. His residence is located on the Mineral King road, two miles east of Visalia.

August 23, 1879, Mr. Huntley was united in marriage at San Rafael with Nina R. Willford, a native of Southampton, England. They are the parents of two children, Willard H., attending Heald's Business College, and Chester S., a student in the Oakland Polytechnic. In 1900 he moved his family to Berkeley to give better educational advantages to his children.

In politics a Republican, Mr. Huntley has served the party in various offices of trust, being deputy internal revenue collector for Tulare, Kern, Inyo and Fresno counties for five years, or until the office was abolished, and was gauger of liquors and surveyor of stills, holding that office until he resigned. He is a member of General Wright Post, G. A. R., of Visalia.

In all matters that have advanced the social and educational welfare of Tulare county, Mr. Huntley has been an important factor. He is a man of public spirit and strict integrity, and is one of the best known men in the county.

JAMES R. ROGERS, a valued citizen of Merced county, Cal., and one of the successful fig-growers of the state, of which he is a pioneer of 1850, was born November 14, 1826, in Oldham county, Ky. In tracing the ancestry of Mr. Rogers it is found that he is a descendant of distinguished families of Virginia on both paternal and maternal sides. His father, Thomas Rogers, was born in Spottsylvania county, of that state, and his mother, Priscilla Chancellor, was a Virginian and a sister of Sanford Chancellor, a wealthy miner and a member of a prominent family of Virginia. Thomas Rogers followed farming for a livelihood and as early as 1812 moved to Kentucky, and in that state the family made their home until James R. was sixteen years old. In 1842 they removed to Missouri, the father becoming prominently identified with that community, remaining there until his death at the age of seventy-eight years. Four of his children are still living, namely: Winslow, a resident of Missouri, now eighty-eight years of age; William, a retired rancher of Santa Rosa, Cal.; George, a resident of Solano county; and James R.

The boyhood days of Mr. Rogers were spent on a farm and at sixteen he accompanied his parents to Missouri, where he lived until his twenty-fifth year. In 1850 he came overland to California, the train of which he was a member consisting of about forty people. His first month in California was spent in the mines; he then went to the entrance to Grass valley and conducted a hotel for a year and a half, after which he spent some time in both the northern and southern mines. Before the close of 1852 he was homeward bound and while crossing the Isthmus of Panama saw for the first time a railroad. The following year he again left Missouri with the Williams party for California, and upon his arrival, was married in Sacramento to Polly Ann Williams and took up his residence in Sonoma county, near Santa Rosa. He afterward bought four hundred acres of land in Solano county near Vacaville, which he put out in orchard and lived upon it for forty years.

In 1866 Mr. Rogers came to Merced county and August 15 of that year he purchased his home place of fifty acres four and a half miles northeast of Merced, in partnership with his son, S. M. Rogers. Mr. Rogers has his entire place planted in figs, having six hundred and fifty-two trees which are now thirteen years old. These trees yielded in 1902 twenty tons and the fruit was sold on the trees for $750. In 1903 the yield was the same, but $100 additional was realized for the sale of the fruit in the same way. Mr. Rogers has upon this place a comfortable residence containing eleven rooms, and fitted throughout with all modern improvements. His wife died in 1865, leaving three children, Commodore P., Seldan M., and Zilla, deceased. By his second marriage, in 1866, he was united with Laura Church, a native of Pontiac, Mich., who was born in 1844, and came to California in 1865. Two children were born of this union, namely: Celia May and Bertie Agnes, the latter the wife of Bert Hatch. The family unite in worshipping at the Christian Church, of which Mr. and Mrs. Rogers are active members. Mr. Rogers is a member of Merced Lodge No. 97, F. & A. M., having been made a Mason in Vacaville Lodge No. 133, F. & A. M.

JOHN B. OSBORN. A successful business man and influential citizen of Atwater, Merced county, is John B. Osborn, since 1892 a resident of this place and a participant in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community. A native Californian, he was born in San Joaquin county, October 10, 1858, a son of Henry A. Osborn, who came to this state in 1852. The latter was a native of Woodbury, Conn., where he was born February 13, 1828. He remained in the east until attaining manhood, when he came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, on his arrival engaging in freighting out of Stockton. After some years he found employment in ranching, which occupied his attention for some time, after which he entered upon a mercantile life in Turlock, Stanislaus county, where he has since remained, meeting with success in his work and establishing himself in the business life of that section. His wife, formerly Minerva J. Baker, is a native of Pennsylvania and the daughter of W. J. Baker, an early settler of California. The children born of their union are named in order of birth as follows: William, of San Francisco; John B., of this review; Ellen, who married

R. Porter Putnam

Clark Coulthard, of Fresno county; Edward, who is in business with his father; and Mary, the wife of Albert Owen, of Atwater.

After spending his youth in Turlock, John B. Osborn came to Atwater in 1892, accepting a position as agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad at this place, and retaining the same with credit to himself until April 15, 1904. In the same year he also engaged in the mercantile business here, purchasing a small store, and building up in the passing years a custom which has justified him in the erection of his present commodious building, which he put up in 1902. He carries a large and complete stock of general merchandise and caters to a large trade throughout this part of the county, his conservative methods and unswerving integrity having won for him many friends. In addition to his mercantile interests Mr. Osborn owns a seventy-five acre peach orchard, and four hundred and eighty acres of stock range, located four miles from Atwater, and well stocked with cattle. He also deals largely in sweet potatoes, shipping in a single season over two hundred carloads.

In Stanislaus county Mr. Osborn was united in marriage with Mattie B. Legallee, a native of Iowa, and they have one son, Charles A. In his political convictions Mr. Osborn is a Republican, and is a popular and progressive man. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias.

R. PORTER PUTNAM. Conspicuous among the early pioneers of Tulare county was the late R. Porter Putnam, who settled near Portersville when the town was in its infancy, and resided here until his death. With pleasure and gratification he watched its rapid and healthful development, in the meantime taking an active part in the work necessary to accomplish such an achievement. He became identified with the agricultural interests of this part of the county, and was the pioneer merchant of the young town, which in his honor was named Portersville. He came of distinguished New England ancestry, being a kinsman of Gen. Israel Putnam, a hero of the Revolutionary war. His parents, Thomas and Zilpha (Porter) Putnam, were life-long residents of Pennsylvania, and there reared their five children, of whom R. Porter was the youngest, his birth occurring August 5, 1837, in Covington, Pa.

At the age of eighteen years, having acquired an excellent common school education, R. Porter Putnam took charge of his father's store, in Covington, Pa., remaining thus employed for two years. In 1857 he started with a train of government wagons for California, and while crossing the plains did guard duty. Being taken ill while on the way, the party continued the journey without him, leaving him lying under a tree. The Indians were very kind, bringing him water, and watching him carefully, but not offering to molest him. Being picked up by the next train that came along, Mr. Putnam went with that party to Fort Yuma, at the junction of the Gila and Colorado rivers, and as soon as he was able, made his way to Los Angeles, Cal., arriving October 14, 1858. For a few weeks he worked on Colonel Banning's ranch as a day laborer. On December 3 he started with the Overland Stage Company for the Kern river, coming to Tulare county, and locating about ten miles from Visalia. Unable on account of ill health to do any hard manual labor, Mr. Putnam entered the employ of the stage company, receiving $30 a month. Locating in what is now Portersville in 1859, he built a small store and hotel, which became a meeting place for the cowboys, who invariably spoke of going up to "Porter's," and the name thus became so familiar that when the town was laid out and incorporated it was called Portersville in his honor. Mr. Putnam also erected a blacksmith's shop, and was engaged in general ranching, owning some land in his vicinity. As a merchant he was very popular and successful, and carried on an extensive dry goods business until his death, in 1889.

In Bainbridge, Chenango county, N. Y., Mr. Putnam married Mary J. Packard, a native of that state, and the daughter of Anson Packard, a blacksmith and a life-long resident of the Empire State. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Putnam two children were born, namely: William Porter, of Portersville; and Frank O., a general merchant in Campbell, Cal. Identified with the Democratic party, Mr. Putnam was one of the most faithful supporters of its principles, and though not an aspirant for political honors served one term as associate judge.

WARNER I. HODGE. Horatio Hodge, the father of Warner I., was a native of New York state, and on reaching his majority he became a pioneer settler of Jackson county, Mich., and here Warner I. Hodge was born, November 7, 1851. In the same year his father started for the gold fields of California, coming by way of the Isthmus of Panama. While crossing the isthmus he contracted the yellow fever and died there. His wife, who was Savilla Clark, a native of Vermont, came to California in 1885 and died here.

Senator H. C. Hodge, a brother of Horatio and a farmer near Concord, Mich., took charge of Warner after his father's death. His mother married the second time, a Mr. Clement becoming her husband. They then lived in Iowa and at Lincoln, Neb., on Goat Island, where Warner I. remained until he was twenty years of age, when he went to live with his uncle, the senator, who was residing at Concord.

In 1876 he returned to Nebraska and secured employment as a clerk at Firth. Later he went to Oregon and Idaho where three years were spent. In 1884 Mr. Hodge came to Tulare county, first living at Visalia, where he was engaged in clerking. A year later he secured a position with the Coburn Lumber Company, on the Tule river and here he remained for eight years, acting as general superintendent and manager of the store and mill.

In 1895 another change was made, this time coming to Lindsay, where he formed a partnership with M. K. Henderson under the firm name of Hodge & Henderson. Continuing here until 1897, he disposed of his interest in the firm and became interested in the real estate business. He is now dealing quite extensively in colony lands, farms, etc., meeting with good success in his operations.

In Tulare county, March, 1886, Mr. Hodge married Eva M. Coburn, a native of Maine and a sister of A. M. Coburn of Springville. They have three children, namely: J. Herbert, Dora Mae and Allen.

Mr. Hodge takes an active interest in the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Ever since starting out in life he has had to make his own way in the world. His efforts have been well rewarded as the result of his ability to make the best of opportunities. Since engaging in the real estate business he has demonstrated his adaptability for this line of business. Both he and his wife have a large circle of friends.

WILLIAM THORNTON. This well-known rancher, now practically a retired resident of Merced county, Cal., was born in county Kerry, Ireland, November 15, 1840, and is a son of John Thornton, a prosperous farmer of that country. Reared on his father's farm and educated in the land of his nativity, Mr. Thornton, at the age of twenty-four, in 1864, left Ireland for a home in the United States, and upon his arrival came direct to California and took up his residence in Napa county, Cal., where he worked five years on a ranch as hired man, and having been economical, he accumulated some capital. With this, in 1868 he purchased two hundred and thirteen acres of land in Merced county, a part of the place upon which he now resides. By additional purchases from time to time he has acquired a farm of seven hundred and forty-two acres.

The intervening years of Mr. Thornton's life have been spent in the active cultivation of the soil, raising grain and stock. His ranch is located four miles southwest of Merced. In 1904 his land was divided as follows, this being an average, three hundred and fifty acres in barley, sixty-five in wheat, six in alfalfa and the rest in pasture; having also one hundred and ten head of high-grade cattle, a small number being choice dairy cows, and forty head of sheep. Although he is in poor health, he manages the work on his farm. He wedded Julia Whalen, also a native of county Kerry, Ireland, and they have eight children, as follows: Patrick, Mary, Maggie, John, Anna, Rose, William and Joseph. In politics Mr. Thornton is a conscientious Democrat and votes to uphold the principles of that party with the convictions of a man who believes he is right and dares to maintain his position. He is a member of the Catholic Church.

SAMUEL H. FERRIL. An only child, Mr. Ferril was born in Saline county, Mo., near Marshall, April 13, 1872, a son of David and Cynthia (Wheeler) Ferril. The father was also a native of Missouri, being a son of Henry Ferril, who migrated to that state from Kentucky, settling at Miami, where he lived the remainder of his life, dying at a ripe old age.

David Ferril passed his boyhood on his father's farm and in early manhood learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in connection with farming. In the early '50s he crossed the plains with ox-teams, coming to California, where he lived a few years, when he returned to Missouri. He engaged in farming and contracting and building until 1881, when he again came to California, locating in Fresno county, where he purchased land upon which part of the town of Sanger now stands. Here he lived until his death in 1887. During the Civil war he was in General Shelby's brigade. His wife, who in maidenhood was Cynthia Wheeler, was born in Slater, Mo., a daughter of Samuel Wheeler. The year after her husband's death, Mrs. Ferril sold the farm at Sanger and purchased the property now owned by her son. Here she lived until her death, September 3, 1894, past the age of sixty years.

Samuel H. Ferril was reared on a farm in Saline county, Mo., where he lived until his parents came to California. While he was compelled to assist his father who was in poor health, he was permitted to attend the district schools, and in this way received a good common school education. At the age of nineteen he began farming his mother's place. From the first he made a success of the business and now owns two hundred and forty acres adjoining the town of Exeter. Here he has one of the finest ranches in Tulare county, devoting the whole to grain and stock-raising. In Farmersville he was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Mades, a daughter of Philip Mades and a native of Missouri. She is the mother of one child, Virgie.

Mr. Ferril takes a prominent part in lodge work, being one of the enthusiastic members of the local lodge of the Knights of Pythias. He also belongs to the Uniform Rank and has done much to further the interests of the order in this section of the county. He also holds membership in the Woodmen of the World. In politics he supports the men and measures of the Democratic party, but has neither the time nor inclination to take an active part in political matters. Socially he and his wife are popular and have a bright future.

JAMES KIRK. As proprietor of the Kirk hotel, James Kirk is represented among the prominent and successful business men of Exeter. In connection with his son, he has just completed the finest business building in Exeter, a two-story brick block, known as the Kirk building, given over entirely to the interests of the hotel with the exception of a large room designed for a general merchandise establishment. It is universally conceded by the traveling public that there is no finer hotel for its size in the San Joaquin valley, with its well-arranged rooms, large, light and airy, complete in all appointments, and always presenting a gratifying appearance of neatness and cleanliness. Born in Marshfield, Webster county, Mo., April 26, 1856, James Kirk is the son of Isaiah Kirk, a native of Alabama.

The Kirk family came originally from Scotland and located in the southern part of the United States. John Kirk, a native of Alabama, married into a German family prominent in the state, and after some years removed to Missouri, where he engaged as a farmer and stockman until his death at an advanced age in 1890. His son, Isaiah Kirk, followed the same occupation in Greene county (now Webster county), at the breaking out of the Civil war enlisting in Company K, Twenty-fourth Missouri Volunteer Infantry and serving as corporal until the close of hostilities. Returning to civil life he engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1899, at the age of seventy-five years. He was very prominent man in his community, serving as justice of the peace and school officer for many years, while he held the office of postmaster at Morningson for twenty years. He was always a staunch Republican in his political convictions and was active in local affairs. His wife, formerly Minerva Atkisson, was born in middle Tennessee, a daughter of Benjamin Atkisson, also of that state, who settled in Missouri as a farmer and died during the Civil war. Mrs. Kirk died on the old home place, leaving a family of three sons and eight daughters, of whom ten children are now living.

The fourth in his father's family, James Kirk was reared on the paternal farm. He received excellent educational advantages, attending the district schools and Mountindale Seminary, and later the Henderson Academy, graduating from the last named at an early age. He began teaching at the age of nineteen years, continuing in the work in Greene and Webster counties for a period of fourteen years. Coming to California in 1890 he located in Exeter, which had then but one store and a postoffice. The following year he built his home, the first two-story residence in Exeter, and engaged in the insurance business, representing different insurance companies. In 1891 he was appointed justice of the peace, and since then has been elected three different times, serving seven years. In connection with insurance he dealt in real estate, in which he met with success. In 1896 he established a general merchandise store, in which business he has continued up to the present time, this interest now being conducted by his son. In 1904 he planned and built the Kirk hotel building, a two-story brick building, 60x88 feet in dimensions, while the store on the corner has a dimension of 32x60 feet, with an addition 16x24 feet. The merchandise business is conducted under the firm name of James Kirk & Son. On Sunday, October 30, 1904, the Kirk hotel was opened for business, and bids fair to prove one of the most important enterprises of the city. Mr. Kirk owns a ranch of forty acres near Exeter.

In Webster county, Mo., August 25, 1881, James Kirk was united in marriage with Alabama Thomas, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Edgar, manager of the store; Ethel; Elbert and Ezeta, all at home. In national politics Mr. Kirk is a Republican, while locally he gives his support to the man whom he considers best qualified for public office.

FRED GILL. A successful stockman of Tulare county, Fred Gill is located in Yokohl and Frazier valleys and Epperson Flat, where he has large herds of cattle, roaming over fifteen thousand acres of land, which he and his brother own in partnership. He is a native of Iowa, where he was born April 13, 1869, the third in a family of five sons and four daughters, all of whom are living except one daughter and one son. His parents, L. L. and Eliza Gill, were both natives of Iowa, the father being a stockman. He brought his family to California in 1874, locating in Yokohl valley, where he bought a farm. Later he removed to Frazier valley, where he now makes his home on a well-tended and improved ranch, still engaged in the raising of cattle.

But five years old when he came to California, Fred Gill has spent practically his entire life within the confines of this state. He was educated in the district schools of Yokohl and Frazier valleys, after which he engaged with his father in the stock business until he was twenty-six years old. Entering the business for himself in 1895, he located in the Frazier valley and with his brother, William Gill, conducted the business for a time. Later they located in Yokohl valley and increased their stock with Durham and Hereford cattle. They now own three thousand acres in the Frazier valley, upon which is located a number of springs, which furnish an ample supply of water the year around. They have two ranches in the Yokohl valley of five thousand and six thousand acres, the former being the home property of Mr. Gill, while the latter is located two miles east. A ranch in Epperson Flat contains one thousand acres. In addition to devoting much time to cattle they also deal largely in horses, raising from seventy-five to one hundred head, among which are draft horses and roadsters, while their cattle number over a thousand. They are extensively interested in the business and have met with uniform success in their operations, holding the esteem and respect of all for the business qualities, the executive ability and the energy which have distinguished them in their efforts.

In Visalia Mr. Gill was married to Carrie Hickman, a native of Tulare county, and the daughter of Alexander Hickman, a pioneer stockman who resides in Mountain View, this state. They are the parents of two children, Roy and Emmet. Politically Mr. Gill is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

MCLEES BROTHERS. George W. and Martin C. McLees are sons of J. H. McLees and were born in Ontario, Canada, Oxford county, near Norwich. J. H. McLees was also a native of the same place and a son of James McLees, a sketch of whom will be found in connection with that of Edmund McLees. J. H. McLees now makes his home in Lindsay, where he is living in the enjoyment of a good old age. He married Elma Cornwell, who was born in Norwich, Ontario.

George W. McLees was the second in a family of three children. Both he and his younger brother, Martin C., were brought up on a farm in Ontario, receiving their education in the district schools. In 1899 the father purchased a young orange grove near Lindsay, and in 1900 both the brothers came to California, becoming interested in the orange industry. The year after their arrival here George W. purchased ten acres which adjoins the old place. In all the brothers now own some twenty acres, three-quarters of a mile west of Lindsay, and during the season of 1904 the McLees orchard was one of the banner ones of the county.

In 1904 the brothers, with others, erected the Independent Packing House in Lindsay and organized the Independent Packing Company, of which George W. is the secretary. Mr. McLees has also become interested with other parties, and in company with McIndoo bought one hundred and sixty acres of land two miles west of Lindsay. This has been subdivided into ten-acre tracts, and all has been sold to people who have converted the land into bearing orange groves.

Fraternally both gentlemen are members of the Woodmen of the World and the Fraternal Aid, and both are Republicans. They are meeting with excellent success in their business undertakings.

SCHUYLER A. BARBER, M. D. The success achieved by Dr. Barber has been entirely the result of his own efforts, directed by the energy and ambition which are distinguishing characteristics of the members of this family. In Portersville, where he is located, and the surrounding country, he is held in the highest esteem for the ability he has evinced in his profession, the earnestness and thought he gives to his work, and the spirit in which he ministers to the needs of suffering humanity. A native of Wolcottville, La Grange county, Ind., he was born September 20, 1872, and was next to the youngest in a family of seven daughters and two sons. His father, Leonard Barber, was born in Ohio, in which state the paternal grandfather had become an early settler from New York. In young manhood Leonard Barber entered Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. He located in Kendallville, Noble county, Ind., where he engaged in the practice of medicine, and later in Wolcottville, where his death occurred. He was a Knight Templar, and politically was a staunch Republican. His wife, formerly Adeline Alleman, a native of New York state, survives him, now making her residence in the old home in Indiana.

In Wolcottville Schuyler A. Barber was reared until 1888, receiving his education in the public and high schools of that place, graduating from the latter when sixteen years of age. After his father's death he came west to California and in Tulare City found employment as a clerk in a lawyer's office, where he remained eighteen months. He then came to Portersville and with his brother-in-law, W. W. Henry, established a nursery, raising orange and lemon trees principally, and succeeded in building up a lucrative business. His business career, however, was only a means toward an end, for it enabled him to take up the study which had been the ambition of his life. Disposing of his interest in the nursery in 1896, he entered Cooper Medical College of San Francisco, from which he was graduated in the fall of 1899, after a four years' course, with the degree of M. D. He immediately returned to Portersville, where his ability in business lines had won him recognition, and has since demonstrated the talent which inspired his love for his chosen profession. He has met with success as a physician and surgeon, and holds high rank among professional men of the vicinity of Portersville. He has built up an extended practice, which has brought him satisfactory returns. In addition to his profession he is also interested in orange growing to some extent and gives some time and attention to this work.

In San Francisco Dr. Barber was united in marriage with Edith F. Henry, a native of La Grange county, Ind., and the daughter of Oliver O. Henry, who is represented on another page in this volume. Born to the doctor and his wife is one son, Philip Schuyler. Dr. Barber is city health officer and examining physician for six of the old line life insurance companies, as well as the Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen of America and Independent Order of Foresters, being a member of these three orders. Politically he is a staunch Republican.

JOSEPH KING. One of Merced county's substantial citizens and up-to-date farmers near LeGrand, Cal., is Joseph King, who owns a two-thousand-acre ranch four miles east of the city, upon which he is successfully engaged in the raising of grain. Prior to his occupancy of the land in 1892 it was used as a sheep ranch. Mr. King was born in the Azores Islands, Portugal, in December, 1851, a son of Frank and Isabel King, honored residents of his native country.

Leaving home at the age of nineteen years, Joseph King first followed the sea, cruising for three years on the South Pacific ocean and on the coast of Africa. In 1873 he came to the United States, locating first in Pennsylvania, where he again took up a sea-faring life, sailing on Lake Erie for a short time. He later went to Texas, but returned to Pennsylvania the same year. In 1874 he came to California, spending the winter of 1874-75 in Sonoma county, and in the spring of 1875 settled in Stanislaus county. Remaining there until 1892 he then located in Merced county, upon the ranch which has since been his home. Upon locating in Stanislaus county Mr. King was united in marriage with Miss Mary Mendonca, also born in the Azores, the ceremony being performed in Bedford, Mass.

Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. King seven children have been born, namely: Emma (the wife of Manuel Ray, of Merced county), Frank, William, Julia, Mamie, Joseph, Jr., and Bessie. The family are highly esteemed in the community in which they make their home. Fraternally Mr. King is an Odd Fellow, having been identified with the order for over nineteen years, and is a member of the Encampment. In his political opinions he is a Republican.

CHARLES ORTON COWLES holds a place in the esteem of his fellow citizens which has been won by the rare qualities and sterling traits of his character. Broad-minded, liberal and enterprising, he has proved a potent factor in the development and upbuilding of this section of Tulare county, being numbered among the most successful orange growers in the vicinity of Lindsay. Born in Rochester, N. Y., February 16, 1867, he is the third in a family of five sons and one daughter, of whom four sons are now living. His father, Norman Benjamin Cowles, was also a native of the same place, his grandfather, Joseph Cowles, having located near that city from his birthplace in Massachusetts. The elder man engaged as a farmer until his death. Norman B. Cowles became a farmer on property at Brighton, East Rochester. This he sold in 1884 and moved near Jefferson, Ohio, locating on an extensive farm, which he occupied for a number of years, then retired from active life, making his home in Jefferson. He is a prominent man in his community, a staunch Republican, as such serving as supervisor for several terms. He volunteered for service in the Civil war but was rejected. His wife, formerly Frances Green, born in Massachusetts, a daughter of Daniel Green, who settled near Rochester, N. Y., as a farmer, is still living at the age of sixty-nine years, being three years the senior of Mr. Cowles.

Until 1884 Charles Orton Cowles remained in New York, where he attended the public schools, and after the removal to Jefferson, Ohio, he became a student in the high school of that place. Following this he attended the Williams & Rogers Business College, of Rochester, N. Y. In 1890 he came as far west as Colorado, locating at Boulder, where he engaged in clerking. Deciding to locate on the coast, he came to Caliifornia in January, 1892, and in Butte county found employment in a nursery and orange orchard. Having become interested in Tulare county, he bought a five-acre tract at Lindsay and in the spring of 1893 set it to fruit. In 1900 he bought another tract of five acres just across the road from his first purchase, and in 1903 followed this with the purchase of sixteen and a half acres a half mile from Lindsay, having now twenty-six and a half acres of Washington navels in full bearing. He purchased seventy-seven acres of unimproved land in 1905, which he intends putting in oranges. His places are equipped with two pumping plants, operated by eight and a half horse power, irrigating the entire ranch. In June, 1900, he built his handsome residence, which is located a quarter of a mile from the Lindsay depot.

Mr. Cowles is also associated with the Rochdale Association, in which he is a stockholder. Politically he is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and fraternally affiliates with the Woodmen of the World, and also the Fraternal Aid. He is a member of the Baptist Church, in which he officiates as a deacon, being chairman of the board, and for ten years has held the office of superintendent of the Sunday-school.

JOHN P. BERGER. A resident of Lindsay since 1893, Mr. Berger has improved his time and is now the owner of as fine a ranch as can be found in this section of Tulare county. He is what America is proud to call a self-made man. Ever since reaching man's estate he has made his own way in the world, and while he is not a wealthy man, he has accumulated a comfortable competency. Born in Iowa, he is a son of Enos Berger, a native of Richmond, Va. In early life his father removed to Indianapolis, Ind., where he was one of the first to engage in the lumber manufacturing business. Later he migrated to Iowa where he entered land and again engaged in the lumber and milling business. He was the founder of the town of Winterset. After several years spent in Iowa he settled in Nebraska, at Rock Bluff, Cass county. There he became a large land owner and was also interested in the milling business until he came to California in 1886. Settling in San Jose, he lived a retired life until his death at the age of eighty-three years. While in Iowa he took an active part in political matters and for three terms was treasurer of Madison county. Enos Berger was united in marriage with Elizabeth Wallace, a native of Delaware. Her death occurred in San Jose at the age of seventy-seven years. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Berger, are as follows: Josephine, wife of S. S. Alley, of Cass county, Neb.; Mary, wife of G. L. Seybolt, of Alameda; Annie, who became the wife of S. R. Johnson, of San Jose; James, a resident of Cass county, Neb.; George, in San Jose; and John P., the youngest of the family.

John P. Berger was born January 15, 1857, in Cass county, Neb., where he attended the district schools, the only educational advantages offered boys in those early days. Remaining at home with his father until reaching his twenty-first year he then struck out to make an independent living, first engaging in farming, but in a short time he became interested in the drug business at Beaver City, Neb., where he continued a short time. His next location was at Hay Springs, Neb., where he entered into a general merchandise business, and after carrying on a successful business at this place for some time he sold out. Removing to Boxbutte county he became a large land owner and laid out the town of Berea, where he again engaged in the general merchandise business. He also served as postmaster of the town for a time. In 1892 he arrived in California, and for a year was in charge of a fruit ranch near the city of San Jose, and then, as stated before, he came to Lindsay in 1893 and purchased twenty acres of land, ten now being devoted to oranges while he expects to have the balance planted in a short time. This place is improved with modern appliances, including a pumping plant equipped with a five horse power electric motor which has a capacity of four thousand gallons per hour.

Since locating in Lindsay Mr. Berger married Minnie E. Halliburton, who was born in Tulare county, a daughter of William Halliburton, who up to the time of his death was engaged in ranching near Lindsay. One child, Thurston Wallace, has been born to them.

Fraternally Mr. Berger is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Pythias. In political belief he supports the men and measures of the Republican party, but he has never had time to take an active part in public affairs. Still, no man in the county is more ready to perform the duties devolving upon him.

J. E. FENLEY. As a farmer and stockman. J. E. Fenley occupies a place among the representative men of Tulare county, where he has been located since 1888. A native of Missouri, he was born in Callaway county November 9, 1866, his father, T. H. Fenley, also being a native of the same locality. The elder man was a farmer and stockman in Missouri until he came to California, locating near Winters, Yolo county, where he is now retired at the age of eighty years. His wife, formerly Carrie Jane Baker, was born in Missouri and died in California. Of the eleven children born of this union eight attained maturity and seven are now living.

The ninth in the family of his parents, J. E. Fenley was reared to young manhood on the paternal farm in Missouri, receiving his education at the district school in the vicinity of his home. He remained at home until 1884, in which year he came to California and located at Winters, Yolo county, where a brother had previously settled. He found employment on a farm during the summer months, following which he engaged as a clerk in the town of Winters for a period of three years. In 1888 he came to Tulare county and located on the plains, where he has since improved and cultivated a farm of six hundred and forty acres on section 22, township 17, range 25. He has devoted his time and attention principally to the raising of grain and stock, while he also raises some alfalfa. He has a pumping plant on his property, equipped with a five-inch pump, a thousand gallons an hour being supplied for irrigation purposes. He has erected ample and substantial buildings for all purposes, among them a handsome and comfortable residence.

In Tulare county Mr. Fenley was united in marriage with Etta Calcote, a native of the county, and a daughter of Allen Calcote and sister of William Calcote, whose sketch appears upon another page of this volume. They are now the parents of two children, Arlie and Carl. In his political affiliations a Democrat, Mr. Fenley has been and is one of the staunch supporters of these principles in this section. In the interests of educational lines, he has served as school trustee for three years.

WILLIAM HOWARD. Probably no man in Tulare county has had a more roving or adventurous life than the one whose name introduces this review. Since early manhood he has traveled much of the time, and while it is only possible for us to give an outline of his career, his life, if fully written, would be of intense interest to the reader.

A native of the Keystone state, Mr. Howard was born in what is now Wyoming county, July 11, 1833. His father, Charles, was also a native of Pennsylvania, and was the first white male child born in the vicinity of Wilkesbarre. By trade he was a cabinet maker, but in later life was employed as a lock keeper on the Lehigh canal. His last days were spent in Luzerne county, where he worked for a coal mining concern. He married Sarah Blakslee, a native of Connecticut, who became the mother of seven children, our subject being the eldest and the only one living in this state. Two sons lost their lives in the Civil war, one being killed and the other dying of small-pox.

William Howard was reared and educated in the country about Wilkesbarre. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed to learn the marble cutter's trade. In 1854 he was married to Miss Rosalia Peck, after which they migrated to the westward, Mr. Howard following his trade in different states. At the time of the breaking out of the Civil war he was living in Tennessee, being overseer of a plantation. Later he received a government appointment as assistant assessor of the internal revenue department at Nashville, where he lived until the close of the war. Soon after he went to Alabama to engage in growing cotton, the product at the time being worth $1.25 per pound, but a year later the price went down to six and nine cents, and after one year devoted to this industry he sold out and started for Texas, but before reaching his destination changed his mind and went to Venezuela. There he joined a colony that had received a grant of land from the government. A year was spent on the Orinoco river, when he returned to the United States, finally locating in Michigan, where he was employed by the United States Government Coast Survey. His first wife having died two years after their marriage, Mr. Howard was again married while in Michigan and shortly after he engaged in farming and stock-raising, continuing in this until the Wash railroad cut his farm up, when he sold and engaged in a mercantile business, which he conducted for eight years. At this time his wife died, so he disposed of his store and next located in Ocean Springs, Miss., where he followed farming, and where he was again married, but four years later his wife died, and he then came to California, arriving in Tulare county in December, 1890. Locating in Goshen he purchased a small store, which he conducted for three years, when he enlarged his store and has since carried on a general merchandising business.

In January, 1892, Mr. Howard married Mrs. Cora (Kirkland) Halstead, who was born in Mississippi and is a daughter of William Pitt Kirkland, a native of Baton Rouge, and by profession an attorney and newspaper man. Later in life Mr. Kirkland removed to the Isthmus of Panama, where he conducted a hotel until 1864, when he came to San Francisco and engaged in the restaurant business. In 1870 he took up his residence in Tulare county, engaging in the grocery business at Visalia. He finally removed to Auckland, where he lived at the time of his death. His wife bore the maiden name of Louisa Wilson and was born in Cincinnati, Ohio. Her father, William, was a merchant there, where he lived at the time of his death. Mr. and Mrs. Kirkland were the parents of ten children, seven of whom are now living, Mrs. Howard being the eldest. Much of her earlier life was spent on the Isthmus, although two years were devoted to schooling in Brooklyn, N. Y. She remained at home until 1866, when she was united in marriage with James Halstead, who crossed the plains in 1854. After leaving home he engaged in farming and stock-raising, which vocation he was following near Visalia at the time of his death in 1888, at the age of forty-six years. By this union Mrs. Howard became the mother of four children: Ermie, now Mrs. Morrow of Visalia; William Franklin, residing near Layton; Robert Edward, who is a contractor and builder in Los Angeles, and Harry D. at home. Mrs. Howard and her children own one hundred and twenty acres of land three miles southeast of Goshen and one hundred and sixty acres in the Isham valley.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Howard have many friends, and while the former has lived in Goshen but a few years and is a man well advanced in years, he is still very active and one who can be relied upon to do his duty as a citizen.

ALPHONSE WEILL. The distinction of being the longest-established merchant in Bakersfield, Kern county, belongs to Alphonse Weill, who has been engaged in mercantile pursuits here for upward of thirty years. Beginning business in a small way, he built up a good patronage, and as the demand for his goods increased he, from time to time, enlarged both stock and store, and is now carrying on a thriving trade. Since the completion of the Weill block, which he erected on Nineteenth street, between Chester avenue and K street, he has occupied the whole of the first floor, devoting one room to hardware, one to groceries, and one to dry goods, managing, in fact, a department store.

Born December 21, 1852, in Alsace-Lorraine, then in France, Alphonse Weill was brought up and educated in his native country, and was there employed as a clerk for a short time. Immigrating to the United States at the age of eighteen years, he disembarked in New York City in June, 1870. Two weeks later he came to California and located first in Havilah, then the county seat of Kern county. This section of the state was then but sparsely populated, there being no railroads in the valley, and but little to invite the attention of the new-comer. For a year he engaged in clerking there, and was afterward similarly employed in San Francisco for another year. Settling in Bakersfield in September, 1872, Mr. Weill worked for about a year as a clerk, and then started in business on his own account. Putting in a small stock of general merchandise, he devoted his entire attention and energy to the details of his business, which has grown to a large proportion, and is now one of the most extensive and lucrative in this part of the county. A man of much enterprise, public-spirited and progressive, Mr. Weill has been the encourager and promoter of different beneficial projects, and was one of the original stockholders of the Southern hotel and of the Bakersfield water works, although not now a shareholder in either. He is one of the principal owners and incorporators of the Jewett Oil Company, which has valuable producing oil property in Kern county. In 1889 Mr. Weill sustained a great loss by the burning of his first block, which he built in 1887, but he has rebuilt it, and now occupies the entire first floor. His residence is pleasantly located at the corner of Seventeenth and H streets, and is ever open to his large circle of friends and acquaintances.

October 15, 1882, Mr. Weill married Henrietta Levy, of San Francisco, and they have four children, namely Blanche, who was graduated from the University of California in 1900; Irma, a student in the same institution; Adele, and Lawrence, attending the Bakersfield high school. Politically Mr. Weill is a staunch Republican, but has never been an aspirant for official honors. Fraternally he belongs to Bakersfield Lodge, F. & A. M., which he joined in 1873 or 1874; to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and to the Eagles.

ALFRED EDWIN PRUNER. A native of Lodi, Washington county, Va. Alfred Edwin Pruner was born October 30, 1852. His father, James M., was also a native of Virginia, where he engaged in farming and also worked at the wagon maker's trade. He took an active part in county affairs, and at the time of his death was the treasurer of Smith county, Va. James M. Pruner married Fanny Sever, a native of Wythe county, Va. She is still living and makes her home in her native state. By this marriage eight children were born. Two of the sons served in a Virginia regiment during the Civil war.

Alfred Edwin Pruner was brought up on his father's farm and remained at home until reaching his nineteenth year. Leaving home he went to Wytheville, where he served an apprenticeship at the cabinet maker's trade. After three years he removed to Jefferson, N. C., where he continued working at his trade. At the expiration of his stay in Jefferson he took up his residence in Washington county, where he lived seven years, working at his trade all the time. Hearing much of the splendid opportunities offered the ambitious in California, he came to the coast in 1901 and located in Exeter, where he secured employment as a carpenter. The same summer of his arrival he purchased sixty acres of land adjoining Exeter on the northeast. At the time of purchase the land was a wheat field, but with characteristic energy Mr. Pruner at once began the improvement of his land, and now has one of the finest vineyards in this section of the county. In partnership with a friend he has installed a pumping plant which has a capacity of irrigating one hundred and forty acres of land, the water being secured from a well one hundred and twenty-eight feet deep. In addition to his vineyard, Mr. Pruner also owns land in Exeter, where he lives.

In Washington county, Va., Mr. Pruner was united in marriage with Pattie Rosenbaum, who is a native of the same state. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Pruner, namely: J. Ottie M., Charles D., Pearle, Emma, Myrtle and Edwin, all of whom are living at home.

Fraternally Mr. Pruner is a member of the Odd Fellows, having united with the order while still a resident of Virginia. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, but has never had the time to take an active part in public affairs. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and take a deep interest in religious work.

Mr. Pruner has made his own way in the world since leaving home. He has made the most of his opportunities and is now in a position to enjoy the latter years of his life. Surrounded by all the comforts and many of the luxuries, he can look back upon the past and feel that he has no regrets. In his battle with life he has been fortunate in having the assistance of a most estimable wife, who has never failed him. To her he owes much.

WILLIAM HENRY SAY. Enterprising, ambitious, and of keen perceptions, William Henry Say, of Selma, is a prominent agriculturist, and one of the most successful business men of Fresno county. He is a man of untiring effort and indomitable courage, and in his various undertakings has had the encouragement and support of his wife, who is equally as brave and unflinching as he. One of California's native sons, he was born August 2, 1864, in Mendocino county, of pioneer stock.

James H. Say, father of William H., was born and brought up in Venango county, Pa. In 1853, sailing by way of the Isthmus, he came to California, and for ten years or more was successfully engaged in mining in Placerville. The following ten years he was employed in general ranching in Mendocino county, and then, in 1874, located in Fresno county. He pre-empted and purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land lying five miles northeast of Selma, and also bought other tracts of land, becoming quite a holder of real estate. A part of the time he resided in Selma, where he erected the Renfro hotel, which was burned in 1890, and a part of the time lived on his home ranch. He died October 14, 1902. His wife, whose maiden name was Laura Jane Coats, was born in Wisconsin in 1855, and now owns and occupies the home ranch. She bore her husband six children, four sons and two daughters, William Henry being the firstborn of the household.

Having completed his early education in the district schools, William Henry Say was well trained in agricultural and horticultural pursuits by his father. Beginning life for himself at the age of eighteen years, he bought a vineyard of sixty acres lying north of the town, and subsequently purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land lying south of Selma, eighty acres of which he devoted to the culture of grapes, and eighty acres to the raising of alfalfa. In the management of his ranches, Mr. Say met with most satisfactory results, reaping bountiful harvests each season. His home ranch, adjoining the city of Selma on the northeast, contains thirty-seven acres of rich and arable land, ten acres of which he devotes to the raising of fruit, while on the remainder he sows alfalfa, which he finds a profitable crop.

In 1898, with characteristic enterprise, Mr. Say went with the crowd of gold-seekers to Dawson City, Alaska. Locating in the town of Grand Forks, he bought claim No. 6, on the Bonanza creek, and claim No. 48 on the Eldorado, and was there employed in mining until October, 1901. Coming back to California in that month, he remained here until the following spring, when he returned to Alaska. On May 24, 1902, he sold his claims for a snug sum, clearing from $50,000 to $75,000, and on June 2, 1902, was again back in Fresno county. Very soon after he bought his home ranch, alluded to above, and has since resided in Selma.

In 1884, in Fresno county, near Selma, Mr. Say was united in marriage with Mary E. De Witt, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of T. B. DeWitt. Mr. DeWitt, a native of old Virginia, was a pioneer settler of Missouri, living first in Sullivan and later in Adair county. In 1883, on account of ill health, he, accompanied by his daughter Mary, came to California, and was so pleased with the climate that in 1884 he returned to Missouri for the remaining members of his family. Locating on a ranch five miles northeast of Selma, he was there engaged in the raising of fruit, grapes and alfalfa until his death, in 1891, at the age of fifty-seven years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Say two children have been born, namely: DeWitt H., who died at the age of four years, and Harry Lyle. Mrs. Say has made three trips to Alaska, making her first trip in 1899, and taking her baby with her. In the fall of 1900, she came back to California to put her young son in school here, and November 29 of that year started north across the ice, arriving at Dawson December 30. In October, 1901, she came with her husband to Selma, and subsequently accompanied him on his trip to and from Alaska in the spring of 1902. Politically Mr. Say is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of Selma Lodge No. 309, I. O. O. F.; of Selma Encampment No. 176; of the Rebekahs and of Selma Circle, and of the Woodmen of the World. Mrs. Say is a member and secretary of Selma Lodge No. 178, Daughters of Rebekah, and of Selma Lodge No. 191, Women of Woodcraft.

JAMES WILLIAM CENTER POGUE. It is especially pleasing for the biographer to write a sketch of a man who is as deserving as Mr. Pogue. A son of John Pogue, he was born in Greene county, Tenn., June 1, 1839. The father was also a native of the same state and was a son of another John, who was born in Virginia of Scotch-Irish descent. The first of the family to come to America were three brothers, who landed on the James river in 1740. All owned plantations below Richmond and were very wealthy people. The grandfather of our subject was a first lieutenant in a Virginia Light Horse Cavalry and served with distinction during the Revolutionary war. The father, John, was a farmer and stock-raiser in Tennessee, where he died at the age of about fifty years. He married Sarah McConnell, who was born in Tennessee, and whose father immigrated to this country from the north of Ireland. She died in her native state on the same day as her husband, and they were buried in the same grave. Of this union but one child was born, James William Center, although he had several half brothers and sisters, two of whom came to California, but are now deceased.

Left an orphan at the tender age of three months, James William Center Pogue lived with his grandmother Pogue until her death, when he was but two years old. After this he went to live with a brother and sister, who moved to Missouri, where he was given the advantages of a subscription school education. At the age of seventeen he, accompanied by his brother and sister, started for the Pacific coast. The trip was made overland with ox teams, the start being made on April 15, 1857. From Missouri the old trail to Fort Bridger was followed, and from there the Dawson route was taken as far as Humboldt. Then the party took the Honey Lake trail to Red Bluff, arriving at the latter place late in September. After a short stop at Red Bluff, the journey was continued to Santa Rosa, where the brother, John, purchased land and engaged in farming, Mr. Pogue remaining with him until 1859. In that year he was united in marriage with Nancy M. Blair, whose father, Rev. Jonathan, was a pioneer Presbyterian minister of California. Soon after marriage Mr. Pogue removed to Little Lake valley, Mendocino county, where he took up a government claim of eighty acres and engaged in the stock business until 1862. In that year he came to Tulare county, where he has since made his home. The first location Mr. Pogue made was at Venice, on the St. John's river, where he followed farming and teaming. In 1864, with the money he had saved from his earnings, he purchased two hundred and forty acres on Bravo lake. This tract he improved, and after a time engaged in the stock business, but the flood of 1868 proved very disastrous, washing away much of his land. It was a hard blow, but with an energy that has made for him his present position of affluence, he again started in, this time locating at Limekiln, on the Kaweah, where he was soon the owner of five hundred acres of land, on which he resumed general farming and stock-raising. As time passed he continued to add to his first purchase, and later became interested in the sheep business with two partners, C. W. Crocker and W. H. Wallace. This combination continued for several years, and at one time they owned ten thousand acres, which was known as the Cove ranch. Mr. Pogue being the superintendent. Mr. Wallace died in 1881, and after the division was made with the estate, Mr. Pogue purchased the interest of the other partner, becoming the sole owner of six thousand acres. On this he carried on an extensive stock business for several years, much of the land still remaining in his possession.

In 1877 Mr. Pogue began experimenting with the growing of oranges and lemons. Up to this time it was thought impossible to grow this fruit in this section on account of the frosts. Twenty orange and lemon trees were set out in his orchard, the irrigation being done the first year with buckets, but the following year a ditch was made, and as the trees grew they showed great vitality and were not injured by the frost. In 1885 George Patten examined the fruit and advised Mr. Pogue to send sample boxes to the Los Angeles fair. This was done and as a result the fruit received a high award and created quite an excitement among horticulturists, which was responsible for the starting of the citrus fruit industry in Tulare county. A demand for land was at once made and Mr. Pogue disposed of four hundred acres at $75 per acre. Since then he has sold to various people, in all disposing of over one thousand acres, all of which is devoted to the growing of oranges and lemons. Thus the name, "Lemon Cove," came in a perfectly natural manner. Under great disadvantages Mr. Pogue dug the Lemon Cove ditch, which is now owned by a company, but at the time it was constructed no one would invest in the enterprise, as the plan was not considered feasible. Every one knows the result, as this whole country is now irrigated with ditches.

As a result of the marriage of Mr. Pogue and Nancy Blair the following children were born: Martha L., who became the wife of W. H. Moffett of Visalia; Nancy E., now Mrs. Crookshank of Dinuba; J. Earl, postmaster and head of Pogue Bros., Lemon Cove; Thomas A., of Pogue Bros.; Sarah Eva, who is a professional nurse, having graduated from the Hollenbrock Sanitarium, now lives in San Francisco; Olive, now Mrs. F. M. Mixer of San Francisco, and Nora Alice, the wife of Dr. D. V. Montgomery of Lemon Cove. The mother of this large family is now deceased, dying in 1891.

In politics Mr. Pogue is a Democrat, and at different times has been very active in county affairs, having served two terms as supervisor. He was also school trustee for eight years, and during this time did much to assist in building up the schools of his district. Fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason and also belongs to the Visalia Commandery K. T. In religious matters he is a Presbyterian. In all these various organizations he has taken an active interest, helping in every way possible to further their welfare. By industry and economy he has attained a position which he is well qualified to fill. Throughout the county he is well known, and in all sections has hosts of friends. By developing and experimenting with the citrus fruit industry he has done more than the ordinary man for this county. It is now one of the greatest sources of income for thousands, and places Tulare county well up as one of the leading counties of the state.

ELIAS JACOB holds a place in the memory of the citizens of Tulare county which will not be effaced with the passing years. So much of energy he gave to the upbuilding of his personal fortunes, so much of success he won, that his achievements are pointed out with pride by those who worked with him, side by side, in the pioneer days of the state. Parallel with his own interests he gave his efforts toward the upbuilding of the country, its development, improvement and cultivation, taking a strong interest in all movements which tended toward the general advancement of the community. Unlike many citizens whose efforts have won success, his personal success meant the upbuilding of the country's best interests, and the broadening of commercial, political and social affairs.

Born in Germany in 1841, Elias Jacob was the son of German parents, his father being a merchant in his native country. With the sturdy independence characteristic of the German lad, he came to California when only twelve years old. In Stockton he found employment in a dry-goods store, which position he retained until 1856. Deciding to see a little more of the country before locating permanently, he started southward, spending one year at Millerton, then the county seat of Fresno county, after which he came to Visalia and took charge of his brother-in-law's store in this city. After the death of his brother-in-law, H. Mitchell, in 1859, he became his successor, whereupon he enlarged the store and continued the business until 1876. During these years he opened several stores in Fresno and Tulare counties, and met with the same success. On account of declining health he retired from a mercantile life in 1876, and gave himself up entirely to that occupation which ever afterward engrossed his attention. In the years following he became the owner of land in Tulare county, estimated at forty-five thousand acres; the largest tract in one body is eight thousand acres, and in some years the entire acreage was sowed to wheat. An improvement of incalculable benefit to his property has been the artesian wells which he has made, on some tracts having as many as eight wells, which average a flow of two hundred and eighty thousand gallons of water in twenty-four hours, the water being used both for irrigation and stock purposes. During his mercantile employment Mr. Jacob was one of the strongest supporters in the opening up of irrigation ditches, and this brought him manifold returns, as the lands he then acquired have become very valuable by reason of the water supply. The stock upon this vast estate up to the present time, has remained intact. He erected many residences in Visalia, all of which still belong to the estate.

In his political affiliations Mr. Jacob always gave his support to the Democratic party, and was one of its most influential adherents in Tulare county. Personally undesirous of the honors of public office, he repeatedly declined to accept such as his party wished to bestow upon him, but at the same time gave his strongest efforts to promote the principles he endorsed and add to the power of the party in the county. For many years he served as a member of both the county and state Democratic committees and was looked upon as a man of broad influence, progressive views, as a Democrat loyal to his party, and a citizen loyal to the best interests of the country. Fraternally he was a Royal Arch Mason, an honor conferred upon him by this organization being his appointment as orator at the laying of the corner-stone of the Tulare county court house by the grand master of the state.

The death of Mr. Jacob occurred October 1, 1902, removing from the old associations of worth and work a man known and appreciated for his personal characteristics, and a citizen whose best efforts were ever given toward public advancement. His name is honored and will be remembered as long as Tulare county continues to be a prosperous agricultural center and Visalia a city of financial and commercial importance. He made many friends who mourn his loss.

JAMES ROBERT BAXTER. Among the reliable citizens of Merced county, Cal., mention should be made of James Robert Baxter, who is engaged in farming, having spent his entire life in this occupation. A native of San Joaquin county, born April 23, 1872, when two years of age he was brought to Merced county, and upon his father's farm in the vicinity of LeGrand received his early training. Supplementing his education in the local district schools by a course in the San Francisco Business College, he then turned his attention to farm work and has since followed a life of consistent industry. He has attained success in a business way, and in private life is esteemed by all who know him.

The Baxter family is of Scotch origin, the paternal grandfather, David Baxter, a native of Scotland, immigrating as a young man to America and settling in the Dominion of Canada. Some time afterward he married Helen Waugh, a native of Canada, and they lived on a farm in that section of the country, where Mr. Baxter died in 1849. Their son, James C. Baxter, father of James R., was born in Nova Scotia, Canada, March 19, 1841, and grew to manhood upon his father's farm, remaining at home until he had attained the age of twenty-seven years. In 1868 he came to California by way of the Panama route. He landed at San Francisco, going from there to San Joaquin county, where he rented land for five years.

In 1871 he visited Merced county with a view to locating here, and being favorably impressed with the outlook he purchased land in 1873, six miles east of LeGrand, near the Madera county line. Here in time he acquired twenty-seven hun-ded acres of land and raised grain on an extensive scale. He is now living retired, the ranch being conducted by his sons, to each of whom he has given a half section of land. While a resident of Canada he married Agnes Miller, a native of that country, and they have six children living, namely: George W.; Maggie E., the wife of E. D. Kahl; James R.; David A.; Mabel A., and John J. The eldest son has a ranch near the home place, owning three-quarters of a section of land and renting other farms. John J. is a resident of Oakland, Cal. The elder Mr. Baxter is a Republican in his political convictions, and fraternally is allied with the Ancient Order of Workmen. The religious views of the family incline toward the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

The home ranch of twenty-seven hundred acres is well cared for by James R. and David A., and in addition the former purchased another section of land adjoining the home ranch. The brothers raise barley and wheat, and some attention is paid to raising fine graded horses and mules. The marriage of James R. Baxter united him with Jessie Frances Brandon, who was also born in the San Joaquin valley, the daughter of A. Brandon, whose biography appears elsewhere in this volume. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Baxter, Robert Brandon and James Harold. Like his father, an unswerving Republican, Mr. Baxter has contributed much toward the success of his party in this community, and fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. A man of marked ability and an ideal farmer, it is needless to add that Mr. Baxter stands foremost among the representative men of his locality, and his popularity among his fellow-citizens was attested when, November 8, 1904, he was elected supervisor of District No. 2, of Merced county.

MRS. AMELIA (SIMPSON) CAVANAGH. Among the many women who are prominent in the horticultural life of California Mrs. Amelia (Simpson) Cavanagh is deserving of mention, for the ranch upon which she has been located for the past five years in Merced county evidences her ability along these lines. She is a native of Toronto, Canada, and a daughter of William Simpson. He was born in the northern part of Ireland, where his people had settled upon their emigration from Scotland, where they had flourished for generations. He came to Canada when a young man and became a farmer, remaining so engaged until his death at the age of fifty-seven years. His wife was in maidenhood Sarah McCoy, also a native of Ireland.

Abner Monroe

Amelia Simpson was married in Canada to James O. Patterson, who was also a native of that country, and in 1867 they crossed the line into the United States, and coming west, located in Salem, Ore. He shipped the first carload of lumber from that city. Their home remained in that locality until 1873, when they removed to Idaho and engaged in ranching and stock-raising for two years. The climate being less agreeable than that of their Oregon home they then returned to Salem, where Mr. Patterson secured employment with the Pioneer Oil Company at a good salary. He was the first to introduce the culture of flax in Washington and Idaho. He was a successful farmer and met with financial returns adequate to the efforts he put forth in his years of active life. He died in 1884. They were the parents of two children, namely: Joseph A. and Robert J. These young men are now both numbered among the prominent ranchers of Merced county, farming about one hundred and fifty acres of land. They make their home with their mother. In 1885 Mrs. Patterson was again married, the ceremony being performed in Placer county, Cal., and uniting her with James H. Cavanagh. He was a real estate and grain broker of San Francisco and died in that city December 24, 1891. The year following Mrs. Cavanagh came to Merced county, both on account of her health and to look after property which belonged to her. This consisted of fifteen hundred and forty-six acres located on Bear creek, which she has since sold. She made her home near Athalone for five years. She then removed to her present location, five miles northeast of Merced, an eighty-acre place, thirty five acres being devoted to figs, while the balance is given over to assorted fruits and pasture. Mrs. Cavanagh, with the aid of her sons, has made a success of her work, proving herself a woman of rare business judgment and tact, as well as a cultured and entertaining lady. She is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Merced.

ISHMAEL MONROE. Prominent among the longest-established and most intelligent and prosperous agriculturists of San Joaquin county is Ishmael Monroe, an extensive land owner, living on the river road, about nine and one-half miles from Oakdale. During the half century that he has resided in this vicinity he has won for himself an enviable reputation as an honest man and a valuable citizen, and as one who has contributed his full quota toward the advancement and development of one of the finest counties in the state of California. A son of David Monroe, he was born May 29, 1836, in Huron county, Ohio, near Norwalk. His paternal grandfather, Joel Monroe, was born near Boston, Mass., and when a young man settled as a mechanic in New Hampshire. He subsequently removed to Cayuga county, N. Y., and from there to Ohio, where he lived a few years, although he died in Massachusetts.

Born and reared in Cheshire county, N. H., David Monroe moved with his parents to Cayuga county, N. Y., and subsequently located in Huron county, Ohio. Having in the meantime learned the carpenter's trade, he settled as a carpenter and contractor in Elkhart county, Ind., removing from there in 1848 to Illinois. In that state he followed farming until 1853, when, with his wife and three children, he started for the Pacific coast. On April 13 he crossed the Mississippi river at Albany, Ill., and on May 20, at Kanesville, he crossed the Missouri and began his tedious journey across the plains. Keeping on the north side of the Platte river, he came by way of Devil's Gate, north of Salt Lake, following the Walker trail to Tuolumne county, Cal., arriving in Sonora October 4, 1853, having been almost six months en route. The following six years he kept hotel in Sonora, being quite popular as a landlord. In 1860, joining his son Ishmael, the subject of this sketch, he located in San Joaquin county, buying six hundred acres of land on the Stanislaus river, and began the improvement of the present homestead farm. In 1862 he purchased three hundred and twenty acres of adjoining land, and soon afterward erected a substantial residence. Here he was successfully engaged in farming until 1877, when he sold his share to his sons, Ishmael and Euphrates, and removed to Modesto, where, as a carpenter, he built seven different residences. He continued a resident of that place until his death, in 1883, at the age of seventy-two years. He was a man of great integrity and worth, and a member of the Christian Church. He married Maria Butler, who was born in Delaware county, Ohio, a daughter of David Butler. Her father, a native of Massachusetts, served in the war of 1812, and afterwards settled as a farmer in Ohio, living first in Delaware county and later in Huron county. His wife, a Miss Barr, was the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, who served throughout the war, taking part in many engagements. He was not wounded while in the service, but had several narrow escapes. At the battle of Bunker Hill his cartridge box was shot off, and in another battle a bullet pierced his hat. Of the union of David and Maria (Butler) Monroe three children were born, namely: Ishmael, the subject of this sketch, with whom the mother spent her closing years, dying at the age of seventy-one years; Euphrates, living in Contra Costa county; and Abigail, who was drowned in the Stockton Slough, in 1860, at the age of twenty years.

Obtaining his early education in the district schools of Indiana and Illinois, Ishmael Monroe remained at home throughout the days of his boyhood and youth. Starting with the family for California in 1853, he drove a team across the plains, and took his turn regularly in standing guard, once in a while, when necessity demanded it, taking a double turn. In Sonora he assisted in the management of the hotel until 1859, when he made a visit to his old home in Illinois, traveling a part of the way by stage. During the journey, while he was in Texas, Mr. Monroe wrote to his father to stay in California, as he should soon be back. After spending a short time with his former companions and friends Mr. Monroe was married in Chicago, and with his fair young bride came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to the Pacific coast, being thirty-eight days on the journey from New York to San Francisco. The ship in which they traveled, the Aerial, was wrecked on a barren island on a fair day. It was commanded by Captain Jones, who later bonded it to Captain Semmes of the Confederate navy. Looking about for a favorable place in which to locate permanently, Mr. Monroe and his father selected this land, and as previously mentioned they carried on general farming and stock raising together for a number of years, improving a good ranch. Dividing the property between his two sons, Ishmael Monroe came into possession of one-half of the old home farm, which contains four hundred and seventy-six acres of bottom land, and he also has five hundred acres of upland. He has since continued in business as a general farmer, raising hay, grain, stock and alfalfa, and meeting with undisputed success in his operations. He has a commodious and conveniently arranged residence, fine barns and outbuildings, and a well-equipped blacksmith's shop, in which he does much of the repairing necessary where machinery is used. Mr. Monroe also owns other property of value, having a grain farm of four hundred and sixty acres near Sanger, Fresno county, which he rents, and an eighty-acre ranch, which he rents, in Tulare county. Prior to the opening of the Santa Fe railroad he was for thirty-two years postmaster at Burwood, the office being in his house.

In Chicago, Ill., in 1859, Mr. Monroe married Anna E. Slaymaker, a native of Lancaster county, Pa., and a daughter of George Slaymaker, an early settler of Illinois. Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Monroe, namely: George David, who died at the age of twenty-two years; Charles Thomas, who died when nine years old; Mrs. Abbie B. Keeley of Stanislaus county; and Henry E., a prominent attorney of San Francisco. Henry E. Monroe is a young man of noteworthy attainments and of great legal ability. At his graduation from the Stockton high school he stood at the head of his class. In 1888 he was graduated from the University of California, and the following two years was a student at the Columbia Law College. The required six months of law office work was completed in the office of Secretary Elihu Root, in New York City, and he was admitted to the New York bar in the supreme court, standing third in a class of ninety. Returning to California, his admission to the bar was recognized and he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession in San Francisco, being head of the firm of Monroe & Cornwall. Mr. Monroe has ever evinced a genuine interest in local progress and improvements, and as school trustee has been influential in advancing the educational status of the district. In national politics he is a straightforward, uncompromising Republican. His estimable wife is a faithful member of the Methodist Church.

A. CLIFFORD DUNGAN. Although a young man, Mr. Dungan has attained a position in the fruit industry of which he may feel proud. He has made his way in the world alone, and while his efforts have been rewarded with success, it is the result of perseverance and industry. A native of Virginia, he was born at Glade Spring September 10, 1875, a son of Thomas N. Dungan, whose sketch will be found in that of Dr. J. F. Dungan, of Exeter.

Mr. Dungan is the youngest son in a large family of children. He came to California in 1894 and for a time was at Three Rivers, Tulare county, where he labored in a sawmill employed by his brother. In 1895 he entered the employ of the Kaweah Lumber Company, and continued with them for three years, having the care of a lemon orchard. At the expiration of that time he secured a position with the Ohio Lemon Company, with whom he remained one year. During these years he had been very saving, and with the money thus secured he purchased seven acres of land five miles southeast of Exeter. When this property came into the possession of Mr. Dungan it was rough and unimproved, but with the energy that had made him popular with his employers, he began the improvement of the place. He set out orange trees, erected a pumping plant, and now has five acres of fine bearing navel trees, which are proving very profitable.

After he had improved his place he again sought employment and entered the services of George T. Frost, who at the time had charge of the Bonnie Brae orchards. Mr. Dungan was placed in charge of the vineyards belonging to the Merryman Fruit, Land and Lumber Company. Here he remained for two years when Mr. Frost placed him in full charge of the orange grove on Badger Hill. All this time he was improving his spare time studying the fruit business, and in 1903 he began taking care of groves in the Bonnie Brae district on contract. He now has control of one hundred and seventy-five acres of bearing trees, and for the past ten years he has met with success in this line of business. In addition to the acreage previously mentioned, he, in partnership with his brother, owns a block in the town of Exeter which is set out with fine bearing orange trees.

In Fresno Mr. Dungan was united in marriage with Nellie Tuohy, who was born in Oakland, a daughter of A. V. Tuohy, of Vacaville, and a niece of John Tuohy, of Tulare. Mrs. Dungan is a graduate of the San Francisco Normal, and for a time was a student in the Johns Hopkins Art Institute. By her union with Mr. Dungan she has become the mother of one child, Mary Virginia.

Politically Mr. Dungan is a Democrat, and in fraternal relations is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. He has been a resident of California since 1894. He came to the state without a dollar, but by hard work and the exercise of a keen business foresight he has accumulated a good property.

EDWIN S. BALAAM. A merchant of Exeter, where he is one of the oldest settlers, E. S. Balaam is carrying on an extensive business and assisting materially in the growth and upbuilding of this section. Born in Johnson county, Ark., December 19, 1841, he is a son of George Balaam, who was a native of England, born in London, in 1805, attaining maturity in that location where he was also married. Eventually he brought his wife and three children to the United States, settling in Louisville, Ky., where he engaged as a plumber and painter. Three children were born there during his residence. He later located in Cincinnati, Ohio, finally removing to Johnson county, Ark., where he followed farming. During his residence in that section his family was increased by the birth of three more children. In 1851 he emigrated to Denton, Tex., and two years later brought his family across the plains by ox-teams, via El Paso, Tucson and Fort Yuma, the journey occupying six months. From Warner's ranch they went on to Los Angeles, the trip having been made in safety beyond a few adventures with the Apache Indians, who stole a small amount of their supplies. They located in El Monte, about twelve miles east of Los Angeles and began stock-raising, having brought through with him from the south between forty and fifty head of cattle. He remained in that location for five years, when, in January, 1858, he drove through to Tulare county, settling one mile west of Farmersville, purchased a farm and engaged in the raising of grain and stock. Afterward he sold out and went to Cambria, Cal., where his death occurred, when over ninety years of age. His wife, formerly Sarah Swain, a native of Leicestershire, England, died in the old home in Tulare county at the age of sixty-eight years. They were earnest Christian people, and members of the Presbyterian Church. Of the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. Balaam, seven were brought to California, two being left in the south when the trip was made overland to the Golden State. Five are now living, four sons and one daughter, all in California.

Next to the youngest of the living children, E. S. Balaam was but twelve years old when he came across the plains, his duty being to ride a big brown mule and drive cattle. In the early days educational advantages were limited in the new state, and the knowledge which today makes of him an intelligent, practical and helpful citizen has been gleaned in his years of manhood in a patient and indefatigable effort to acquire what his youth had failed to supply him. He remained at home until he was twenty-one years old, when he married and settled on a farm located two miles west of Exeter. He homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, putting up adequate buildings, and improving a farm he engaged in grain raising. For many years he remained a substantial farmer of this section when, in 1891, he located in Exeter, and built a small store, the third in the town, preparatory to a mercantile career. He has since remained so occupied, enlarging the store at four different times, the dimensions of the building now being 40x120 feet. He has since taken into partnership his two sons, and the firm is now known as that of E. S. Balaam & Co. He built a residence and improved an orange grove, and in various ways has added to the material upbuilding of the place.

Near Farmersville Mr. Balaam married Medora M. Glass, a native of Texas, whose father, Robert Glass, brought his family across the plains in 1853. He became a farmer and teamster, freighting from Stockton to Visalia, until his death, which occurred in Tulare county. Mr. and Mrs. Balaam are the parents of the following children: Emma, the wife of W. G. Davis, of Exeter; Albert S., a teamster, of Exeter; Walter J. and Charles F., partners in the mercantile enterprise. In his religious convictions Mr. Balaam affiliates with the Baptist Church, and politically is independent, reserving the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for office. He is a charter member of the Exeter Board of Trade and is on the executive committee. Fraternally he was made an Odd Fellow in Visalia, and now belongs to Exeter Lodge No. 308, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand.

HARVEY A. FRAME. Although a resident of Tulare county for comparatively a brief time, Harvey A. Frame has won a recognition as a citizen of worth and ability through the sterling qualities which distinguish him. A native of Wisconsin, he was born in Monroe December 20, 1869, the oldest in a family of three sons and four daughters, all of whom are living. His father, Elias Frame, was a farmer in Wisconsin, to which state the grandfather, Silas, had removed from his birthplace in Illinois. The latter, who was a farmer, later in life removed from Wisconsin to Johnstown, Neb., where his death occurred. Elias Frame also removed to Nebraska, locating first near Lincoln, then on a farm near Valparaiso, where he remained for eight years. Locating in Johnstown, Brown county, that state, he engaged as a general farmer and stockman for the ensuing eleven years. In 1892 he came to California, locating in Portersville, and set out five acres of oranges, where he continued to make his home until his death, which occurred in Green county, Wis., in 1901, while there on a visit. He is buried at Martintown, near Monroe, the place of his residence for so many years. In addition to his farming interests he was also a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, having taken up that work in Nebraska, serving as pastor of the church at Seward and Johnstown. This he was forced to give up on account of ill health, when he came to California. Politically he was a staunch Republican and was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, having served in Company A, Forty-sixth Wisconsin Regiment, during the Civil war. His wife, formerly Mary Catherine Trickle, was born near Monroe, Wis., and now resides in Portersville. Her father, Andrew J. Trickle, was a native of Michigan, who settled as a farmer near Monroe, where his death occurred.

Harvey A. Frame received his education in the common schools of Johnstown, Neb., where the greater part of his boyhood was spent. On attaining manhood he engaged in farming and the stock business with his father until he was twenty-one years old, when he came to California. In February, 1891, he located in Portersville and entered the employ of the Pioneer Company, under R. H. McDonald and E. Newman, with whom he remained for two years.

Benefiting by his previous business experience Mr. Frame felt justified in establishing a produce business on his own responsibility in 1894 and has continued the same successfully to the present time. He handles all kinds of farm produce, grain, seeds and live stock, shipping by the carload. His business has grown to such proportions that he has the largest establishment of the kind in the county and is second only to those of Fresno. Mr. Frame is also interested in horticulture with his brother, Jesse E. Frame, having set out a twenty-acre orchard two miles from Portersville, in navel oranges, the entire property irrigated by an electric pumping plant.

In Tulare Mr. Frame was united in marriage with Maggie McDonald, a native of Placer county, and the daughter of George McDonald, an early and esteemed settler of California. They are the parents of four children, Laura Lurine, Lloyd Harvey, Alton Harley and Paul Donald. Fraternally Mr. Frame was made an Odd Fellow in Portersville Lodge No. 359, of which he is past grand, and also belongs to Encampment No. 99, of which he is past chief patriarch. He is also identified with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which he is financier, and the Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a staunch Republican and in the interests of the party holds various positions of trust and responsibility. He is now a member of the county central committee, and is also serving as councilman from the second ward, elected to the office in April, 1903. In addition to his other duties he is acting as chairman of the street committee, and is a member of the Board of Trade, of which he is a director.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER BROTHERTON. A veteran of the Civil war and a resident of California since 1875, Mr. Brotherton is now one of Tulare county's most highly respected citizens. A native of Tennessee, he was born February 23, 1837. His father, Henry R. Brotherton, was born in North Carolina and later settled in Tennessee, from which state he removed in 1851 to Missouri, locating in Carroll county, three miles from Carrollton, where he engaged in farming for the remainder of his life. He was united in marriage with Miss Susan James, a daughter of Thomas James and a native of North Carolina. Of this union there were born thirteen children, eleven of whom reached maturity and three are now living.

William A. Brotherton attended the district schools in his native state and in 1851 accompanied his parents to Missouri, remaining under the parental roof until reaching his twenty-third year. He then married and began farming near Carrollton. March 18, 1861, he enlisted in the Third Missouri Cavalry, Company K, and served until 1865, when, on April 16, he was mustered out of the United States service at St. Louis. During the war he was wounded by bushwhackers in the left shoulder and he was also accidentally shot in the left leg by the premature discharge of his own revolver.

Returning to Carroll county after the war, he again engaged in farming, remaining there until 1875, when he sold out and came to California, locating in Tulare county. In 1877 he purchased his present place, which he has improved extensively and where he is now engaged in raising grain, cattle, hogs and horses. For eighteen years he made a specialty of raising turkeys, marketing each year from three to six hundred.

In 1860, while still a resident of Missouri, he married Miss Margaret Coop, who was born in Rutherford county, Tenn., and as a result of this union he has become the father of two children now living: Susan, now Mrs. J. H. Blair, and Elmer, who is a merchant and postmaster at Naranjo. For many years he has been an active member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, serving for a long time as the ruling elder. Independent in politics, he believes in voting for the man he thinks best qualified for the office, regardless of party lines. While practically all of Mr. Brotherton's time has been devoted to his own business, he has ever been found ready to do his duty as a citizen, and while he has never cared for the emoluments of office he has nevertheless been active in promoting any plan that was calculated to be of material benefit to his county. Both he and his wife are earnest Christian people who have hosts of friends wherever they are known.

JAMES MILLER. A resume of the industrious and self-made men who are identified with ranching interests in Kings county would be incomplete without due mention of James Miller, owner of a ranch of eighty acres six miles southwest of Hanford, and of a two-hundred-acre ranch in the immediate vicinity of Portersville. Mr. Miller owes much of his success to the possession of conservative and reliable Teutonic traits, and to an early training in a home where frugality and industry were paramount. Born in Prussia, Germany, in 1840, he recalls nothing of his native land, for he was two years old when his parents brought him to America in a sailing vessel, settling on a farm in the state of Wisconsin. At the age of sixteen he struck out from the occupation in which his forefathers had engaged for generations and found employment in the copper mines on the shores of Lake Superior, during two years in the mines saving enough money to place him above want for some time to come.

With comparative ease Mr. Miller learned the language of his adopted country, and found out enough about its resources to determine him in locating in the far west, to which he came in 1859, by way of the Isthmus of Panama. For a time he worked on a ranch, and then devoted a few weeks to placer mining, not experiencing the success he had expected, however. Next he turned his attention to working in the copper mines at Copperopolis, also operated a quartz mill in Salt Spring valley, Calaveras county, for four years, altogether spending about sixteen years in these occupations, and acquiring a comfortable competence. By this time he was keenly anxious to possess a home of his own, and so bought a ranch in the Salt Spring valley, which he sold after two years and removed to Stockton. There he started a draying business, but shortly afterward removed to Modesto, where for seven years he followed the same calling. Disposing of his business he came to Hanford in 1877, and when the town was laid out he bought two lots, upon one of which he erected the second house upon the town site. For a time he operated a dray in the town and county, a business which increased as the locality became more settled, and he assisted in building the mill at Lemoore. He then bought eighty acres of land three miles west of his present home, and later had to pay the railroad company for the same land. He lived thereon for about seven years, and then bought a squatter's right to his home ranch, purchasing the same when the land came into the market. Adding eighty acres adjoining, his home farm now consists of eighty acres, of which eight acres are under orchard, twenty-two acres under vines, and the balance under alfalfa. He has a dryer on the ranch, and every facility for caring for and preparing for the market the various products of his farm. For the past two years Mr. Miller has rented his fruit lands for $1,500 a year, and he also rents his ranch near Portersville. His health at the present time hardly warrants the assumption of large responsibilities, and he is enjoying comparative immunity from active labor of any kind. Mr. Miller has an enviable reputation as a business man and neighbor, and enjoys the fullest confidence of all with whom he has to do. He has brought success from a small start in life, and furnishes a worthy example of the advantages of integrity, industry and perseverance.

WILLIAM C. STELLING. Among the prominent citizens of Tulare county mention belongs to William C. Stelling, whose home is located one mile southwest of Lindsay. A man of ability and shrewd judgment, energy and perseverance, Mr. Stelling has made his influence felt along various lines conducive to the growth and upbuilding of the community, being now a director and president of the Lindsay Improvement Company and is also prominent as one of the successful horticulturists of Tulare county. Born in San Jose, Santa Clara county, Cal., November 27, 1864, he is the eldest of six children, all of whom are living, his father, John Stelling, being a native of Hanover, Germany.

John Stelling emigrated from the fatherland in young manhood, locating first in New Orleans. Deciding to come to California he made the trip in a sailing vessel around Cape Horn in 1849, arriving in San Francisco in 1850. Thence he went to the mines and followed that occupation until 1856, when he located in San Jose. He was one of the first orchardists of that section, purchasing property on Julian street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, and setting out an orchard of six and a half acres. Later this land was subdivided and became known as the Stelling Addition, and is now entirely built up. Mr. Stelling afterward conducted a ranch ten miles from San Jose in the vicinity of Cupertino, and there set out an eighty-acre orchard, consisting principally of prunes and apricots. In the passing years he has made a gratifying success of his work, acquiring a handsome competency and at the same time winning by his sterling qualities of manhood the esteem and respect of all with whom he came in contact. He is now living at the age of eighty years, his health and strength the result of temperate living. He owns a beautiful home on Magnolia avenue, San Jose, and also a summer residence in Capitola. His wife, formerly Louise Stephens, a native of Germany, has also been spared to enjoy the comforts and luxuries which the years have brought to this pioneer couple. On her trip to California Mrs. Stelling came via the Isthmus of Panama.

The education of William C. Stelling was received in the public schools, while he was also trained in the practical duties which have meant so much to him in his career. He remained at home until he was twenty-three years old, when he removed to Los Gatos and was employed for three years by C. M. Meriam. In 1891 he went to Santa Maria and bought eighty acres of land which he set to fruit, it being the first orchard in that locality. Not meeting with the success which he had hoped for, Mr. Stelling sold out in 1900, when he located in Lindsay, purchasing an orange orchard of forty-three acres, all Washington navels, and in splendid condition. On his place he also has a pumping plant, operated by an electric motor.

On October 31, 1888, in Los Gatos, Mr. Stell-

ing was united in marriage with Gertrude Meriam, a native of Quincy, Ill. The family is of New England extraction, the grandfather, Daniel Dodge Meriam being a native of Brandon, Vt. Daniel D. Meriam became an early settler in Quincy, where he entered the lumber business, continuing so employed until his death. The father, C. M. Meriam, also followed this occupation until 1883, when he came to California, and in 1886 located on a fruit ranch one mile from Saratoga. This property of thirty-six acres he later sold, when he retired from the active cares of life and made his home in Los Gatos until his death, at the age of fifty-four years. He was a Mason. His wife, formerly Emma Osborn, was a native of Quincy, Ill., and a daughter of William Osborn, a builder, who located there from his native country of England. Mrs. Meriam died in Los Gatos April 19, 1896. Mrs. Stelling is the second in a family of three children, and received her education in the schools of Quincy and also of California. She is a woman of rare culture and refinement, and many admirable traits of character. To Mr. and Mrs. Stelling were born four children, namely: Carl Meriam, John Lloyd, Emma Gladys and William Raymond. Mrs. Stelling is a member of the Baptist Church, and belongs to the Order of the Eastern Star. Fraternally Mr. Stelling affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, the Fraternal Aid, and the Independent Order of Foresters. Politically he is a staunch Republican. He is interested in the Rochdale Association, and also the Lindsay Improvement Company, serving as president and director of the latter, which built the fraternal hall, the finest building in Lindsay, a two-story brick building whose dimensions are 50x65 feet. They also built the postoffice annex and in many ways have added to the prestige which belongs to Lindsay as one of the progressive and up-to-date towns in Tulare county.

SUSMAN MITCHELL. The sterling traits of character which have won for Susman Mitchell the confidence and esteem of business associates as well as of those who know him socially, are an inheritance from sturdy German stock. His father, Hyman Mitchell, was a native of Prussia, from which country he emigrated to California in the early '50s. He first located in Stockton, where he engaged in a mercantile enterprise until 1858. Removing to Visalia, Tulare county, in the last-named year, he followed the same line until his death, which occurred a year later, at the comparatively early age of forty-seven years. His wife, whom he married in Stockton, was formerly Dora Jacob, also a native of Prussia. She survived her husband and has since become the wife of Julius Levy, making Visalia her home.

The only child of his parents, Susman Mitchell was born in Stockton, Cal., February 7, 1859. He was reared in Visalia, attending the public schools of this city, after which he attended the Stockton schools. Entering Gates Business College, of San Jose, he completed a commercial course, graduating from that institution in 1873. Returning to Visalia in the same year he found employment as clerk for his uncle, Elias Jacob, with whom he remained until the death of the latter October 1, 1902. During a large part of this time he acted as manager of his uncle's business, always in the capacity of confidential man. In the meantime he had taken up other interests, in 1886 entering upon the duties of postmaster of Visalia, to which office he received appointment from President Cleveland. Three years later he resigned from this position to accept that of cashier in the bank of Harrell & Son, retaining the latter until 1893, when he assisted materially in the organization of the Producers' Bank, with a capital of $45,000, successors to the firm of Harrell & Son. For ten years he filled the position of cashier in the Producers' Bank, winning a reputation for his conservative yet progressive methods in the banking business, and a constantly increasing popularity for his business ability, as well as the strong integrity and fidelity which marked his every operation. In 1903 the First National Bank of Visalia was organized with a capital of $100,000, and of this institution he became cashier, and still holds the position. Throughout the San Joaquin valley he enjoys an appreciation for his unusual ability as demonstrated in his present line of work, universally conceded to be one of the best bankers in this section of the state. He is as well a leader in other circles, wielding a broad influence in the development and settlement of lands throughout this section, in which he is quite liberally interested. He is associated with the Kaweah Lemon Company that has done much to build up the citrus industry in Lemon Cove. He is also treasurer of the Visalia Steam Laundry Association, and occupies the same position in relation to the Visalia Armory Hall Association, which recently erected the armory hall, a building measuring 66x132 feet. In the municipal life of the city, Mr. Mitchell has been a most important factor, having held the office of city treasurer for fourteen years, the time of his service at each election being for two years until 1902, when the term was changed to four years.

In Stockton Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage with Eva Rosenthal, a native of that city, and the daughter of Louis Rosenthal, a pioneer of California. Fraternally Mr. Mitchell is very prominent, having been made an Odd Fellow in the lodge of Visalia, and served as noble grand for two terms in Four Creek Lodge, I. O. O. F. Of the encampment he is past chief patriarch and also belongs to the Canton. Of the Visalia Parlor No. 19, Native Sons of the Golden West, he has served as secretary since its organization eighteen years ago. He is a prominent member of both the State Bankers' Association and the American Bankers' Association. Politically he is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, on national issues giving his vote to that party, but reserving the right to cast his vote locally for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. Always enterprising, liberal and public-spirited, Mr. Mitchell commands the respect of thoughtful citizens, who best appreciate him for his qualities as a business man (and through this his association as an upbuilding factor in the community), as well as for the sterling integrity of his life and the manhood which has made him a representative citizen.

JOSEPH AKERS. A man of marked ability and enterprise, possessing great mechanical ingenuity and skill, Joseph Akers occupies a substantial position in the industrial and business circles of Tulare county, being the leading blacksmith of Dinuba, and one of the foremost dealers in agricultural implements. The owner of a snug little ranch in this vicinity, he is actively identified with the advancement of the agricultural prosperity of this place, and as a stockholder in the Bank of Dinuba is intimately associated with its financial interests. A native of Wayne county, Pa., he was born December 26, 1855, a son of John and Mary (Nevins) Akers, life-long residents of the Keystone state. His father settled as a blacksmith in Newfoundland, Wayne county, Pa., where he became a citizen of prominence and influence, for two terms serving as supervisor of the township. To him and his wife eleven children were born, eight of whom are living, namely: Warren, of Wayne county, Pa.; T. J., living near Visalia, Cal.; C. W., of Wayne county, Pa.; Richard, residing near Visalia; Mrs. Eliza Bird, of Wayne county, Pa.; Joseph, the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Mary A. Heberling, of Visalia; and Eber, of Scranton, Pa.

Educated in the district school and brought up on the home farm, Joseph Akers early developed a talent for mechanical pursuits, and while yet a boy learned the blacksmith's trade. Settling in Potter county, Pa., in 1879, he worked first at his trade, afterwards being there employed in tilling the soil. Coming to California with his family in 1888, Mr. Akers worked for a short time in Visalia, and then opened a smithy in Monson, which, on account of the extensive teaming of lumber and grain, was a very desirable location for him, and he found it profitable from a financial point of view. Coming to Dinuba in 1898, he bought out White & Son, pioneer blacksmiths, and has since been here prosperously employed at his trade. His shop is finely located on a corner tract of land containing ten lots, and adjoining this property he has erected a fine residence. Mr. Akers also owns forty acres of land lying one-half mile east of Dinuba, and on this he has made improvements of much value, having a productive vineyard of fifteen acres, and a five-acre orchard, the remainder of his ranch being devoted to the raising of alfalfa. In 1901 Mr. Akers embarked in the agricultural implement business, and has built up a large and remunerative trade, handling Studebaker wagons and buggies, the old Hickory wagons, Emerson plows, and such other implements as are demanded by the modern, up-to-date agriculturist and horticulturist.

In Wayne county, Pa., Mr. Akers married Mahala Kelley, a native of that county, and they are the parents of seven children, namely: Walter (engaged in farming and teaming in Dinuba), George (a wagon maker in Dinuba), Mrs. Grace Whittington of Dinuba, Dick, Fern, Ruby and Clayton. Fraternally Mr. Akers was made an Odd Fellow in Wayne county, Pa., and is now a member and the treasurer of Dinuba Lodge, I. O. O. F.; and belongs to the Beavers also. Politically he is a staunch Republican. Mrs. Akers belongs to the Rebekahs, and is a member of the Christian Church.

JAMES ALLEN BACON. The trials and dangers of pioneer life have been widely experienced by James Allen Bacon, who came to the state in 1858 in young manhood, ready for the burden of hewing out a home in a new country. He is located upon property in the vicinity of Orosi, Tulare county, which he purchased in 1889, consisting then of a stubble-field, which he has since transformed into a well-cultivated, well-developed ranch, thirty acres being devoted exclusively to a vineyard. He has made a success in his efforts since engaging in independent work, winning a competence and building up a comfortable home, and at the same time making for himself a place in the esteem and respect of his fellow citizens.

Born in St. Louis county, Mo., November 19, 1838, James Allen Bacon was the oldest in a family of eight children, of whom seven are now living. His father, William Bacon, was a native of Kentucky, and the son of Nathaniel Bacon, of that state, who located in St. Louis county, Mo., some time after the war of 1812. William Bacon engaged as a farmer in St. Louis county for some years, but in 1849 he started with his family to Texas. On account of illness they stopped in Crawford county, Ark., and he there purchased a farm and made it their home until 1858. In that year he started with ox-teams for California, setting out in April with his wife, four daughters and three sons. They came west by way of El Paso as far as Tucson, Ariz., and there they stopped for a time. Later they came on to California, traveling via Yuma to Los Angeles and over the Tejon Pass to Tulare county. Ten miles northeast of Visalia, on the Kaweah, he bought a farm, and in 1868 homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, which is now the site of Orosi. He was one of the first settlers in the town, James A. Bacon hauling lumber from the mountains and with the help of hired men building the first house in Orosi, which is still standing. Mr. Bacon afterward located in Visalia, where his death occurred at the age of eighty-one years. His wife, Permelia, a native of St. Louis county, Mo., died in Fresno county, at the age of seventy-eight years. Besides James Allen the sons of the family are as follows: Thomas, of Fresno; Charles F., of Hollister; and William, of Phoenix, Ariz.

When ten years of age James Allen Bacon was taken by his parents to Arkansas, where he grew to young manhood. In childhood he attended school in a building of primitive make. Upon the second emigration of the family he drove a team to Tucson, Ariz. As the family remained there for a time he spent a year in that section, securing employment as the driver of a stage for Butterfield, the route lying east for about eighty miles. He had to change horses every ten hours, a distance of twenty miles. While in this occupation he was twice attacked by Indians, once in war paint, but through the swiftness of his team he managed to escape. At another time by his presence of mind he saved not only his own life but the lives of the passengers in the overland stage. In 1858 the family came on to California, and for a time he found employment with an uncle, Fielding Bacon, who was engaged in the stock business. Later he went to the mines in Mariposa county, at Marysville and other points, continuing so employed for about five years, when he returned to Tulare county and locating in Orosi built his father's house. Once more he engaged with his uncle in the raising of sheep and hogs, remaining so occupied for many years, and meeting with a success which justified his continuance in the work. He also found lucrative employment by driving stock to the southern mines.

P. F. CHAPMAN

In Tulare county, October 17, 1880, Mr. Bacon married Sarah Edmiston, a native of Calaveras county, and the daughter of N. B. Edmiston, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. In January, 1880, he located upon his present property, where he has since made his home. His wife died March 17, 1901, at the age of forty-six years. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She left a family of five children, namely: Alice Maud, now the wife of William Mackersie, of Dinuba; Thomas Allen; Edith Theodate; Jessie Ethel; and Elsie Viola. Mr. Bacon is a Democrat in his political affiliations, and in the interests of his party has served as school trustee for two terms as well as assisting materially in the erection of the school building. He has served efficiently as a member of the county central committee. Since the organization of the California Raisin Growers' Association he has been an active member and has given no little aid toward its development. He is universally recognized as one of the landmarks of Tulare county, connecting the present prosperity with the days when hardy men and women were required to give the best of their lives for the formation of a new statehood.

PLEASANT FAIR CHAPMAN, M. D. Prominent among the most highly respected and esteemed citizens of Portersville was the late Dr. P. F. Chapman, who was for several years one of the leading physicians of this section of Tulare county, but for several years, on account of ill health, lived retired from his professional labors. His death occurred October 10, 1904, at his home in Portersville. A man of strong mental attainments, he was endowed with business ability and tact, and during his active career accumulated a fine property. A native of Illinois, he was born June 27, 1831, in Fulton county, a son of Wilson and Sarah (Steward) Chapman, both of whom were born in Tennessee, and died in Arkansas. His father was a farmer by occupation, and after moving from his native state to Illinois lived there but a few years, going thence to Washington county, Ark.

The eldest child of a family consisting of two sons and three daughters, P. F. Chapman was brought up in Arkansas, receiving his early education in the public schools. He subsequently began to read medicine with Dr. Pollard, of Lafayette, Ark., and was afterward graduated from a medical college with the degree of M. D. He began the practice of his profession in Washington county, Ark., and at the time of the breaking out of the Civil war was conscripted into the southern army, but was left at home to look after the women and children. He was subsequently again conscripted, sent to the front, and being taken prisoner, was confined at Fort Smith, where he resumed the practice of his profession, remaining there several years after the close of the conflict. Coming to California in 1874, Dr. Chapman resided for a short time in Sacramento before locating in Portersville as a physician. He also established a drug store in the village, and for many years carried on a substantial business as a druggist, besides having an extensive and lucrative patronage as a general practitioner. His health failing, the doctor was forced to relinquish his practice, and very soon afterward, in 1897, his store was burned, entailing a heavy loss. He then retired from active pursuits, honored and respected by all. In 1898 Dr. Chapman erected the Chapman block, a fine brick building, situated in the central part of the town, and he also owned a valuable ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, located on the Tule river, about twenty-five miles from Portersville.

In Fayetteville, Ark., Dr. Chapman married Sarah House, who was born in Raleigh, N. C., a daughter of Warren House. Mr. House was born and reared in North Carolina, but removed from there to Tennessee, locating on a farm near Nashville. He subsequently became a pioneer of Arkansas, and having improved a ranch in the vicinity of Fayetteville, resided there until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Delilia Carroll, was born in North Carolina and died in Arkansas. Dr. and Mrs. Chapman became the parents of three children, namely: Mrs. Elizabeth Wallace, living near Portersville; Mrs. Melissa Jane Logston, of San Bernardino, Cal.; and Mrs. Tennessee Treefry, of Portersville. In his political affiliations the doctor was a staunch Republican. He belonged to the Knights of Pythias, and was an active member of the Christian Church.

ARTHUR HILL. The work which Arthur Hill is accomplishing as a grower of grain in Merced county is such as to properly place him among the representative agriculturists of this community. His ranch is very extensive, consisting of twelve hundred and thirty-four acres of fine farming land, and this is given over entirely to the cultivation of barley and wheat. His crops are among the best produced in the county and are an evidence of the value of the property, as well as the care and thought given to the cultivation of the land. A native son of the state, Mr. Hill was born in San Joaquin county, August 27, 1857.

Thomas B. Hill, the father, was a native of Pennsylvania, where he grew to manhood's estate. Dissatisfied with the limitations by which he was surrounded he early sought a change of location, going first to the southern states, after which he came to California, in 1850, making the trip by way of the Isthmus of Panama. On his arrival in the state he located at Stockton, where he remained about five years, removing then to Woodbridge, San Joaquin county, a distance of ten miles from the former city, and becoming the owner of two ranches of three hundred and twenty and one hundred and sixty acres, respectively. This property he devoted to the cultivation of grain and stock-raising. In 1861 he removed to Calaveras county and conducted a saw-mill there until 1869, when he brought his family to Merced county and located on Bear Creek, where he engaged in ranching until his death, January 1, 1869.

Arthur Hill remained on the paternal farm until 1878, assisting in the home duties and the cultivation of the ranch. He then located upon his present ranch of twelve hundred and thirty-four acres and has since been engaged in grain-raising. He is located seven miles northeast of Merced and in a good farming section of the county. In his political preference Mr. Hill is independent in his views, reserving his right to vote for the man whom he considers best qualified to serve the people officially. Fraternally he is identified with the Native Sons of the Golden West and Knights of Pythias.

FRED ACKERMAN. The sterling traits of character which have distinguished the citizenship of Fred Ackerman during his residence in Portersville, Tulare county, are a direct inheritance from a long line of sturdy German ancestors. He was born near Freiburg, Baden, Germany, November 25, 1857, the fifth in a family of thirteen children, of whom nine are living; three are in America and only one is in California. His father, Andrew Ackerman, was a native of the same locality in Germany, where he earned a livelihood as a farmer. He was a man of patriotism and loyalty, and during the revolution of 1848 he served in the German army. His death occurred August 8, 1903, at the age of eighty-five years, removing from the community a helpful and earnest citizen and one whose best efforts were always given for the betterment of the general welfare. Until his retirement on account of advanced age, he gave effective service as city trustee, and enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He was a devout member of the Lutheran Church. His wife, Anna Maria Ackerman, was also born in Baden, Germany, where her death occurred in July, 1902, at the age of eighty-three years.

Fred Ackerman was reared on the paternal farm to the age of fifteen years, receiving a practical education in the common schools of his native land. When fifteen he was sent to Stuttgart, where he was offered a place as a barber with Fritz Schaentzel, having been apprenticed to learn this trade when fourteen years old. He also learned hair-dressing under Mr. Schaentzel, with whom he remained until 1874, when he came to America and located in Brooklyn, N. Y. He followed his trade in that city, and later in Hoboken, N. J., remaining until 1878, when he returned to Germany and spent the ensuing six months at home. Deciding again to locate in the United States, he returned to New York and remained there until 1880, when he went to Providence, R. I., then Manhattan Beach, thence to St. Louis, Chicago and Cincinnati, finally returning to New York in the same year. In 1881 he went to Chicago again, and from there to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he spent six months, thence to Butte, Mont., and in December of the same year to Helena. In the spring of 1882 he went to Cook City, National Park, and Bozeman, Mont., where he remained one year, then during the Coeur d'Alene gold excitement went to Spokane Falls, Wash. Returning to Helena, he remained until the fall of 1887, when he came to California and attended Barnard's Business College in San Francisco. In February of the following year he opened a barber shop in Portersville, which he conducted for eighteen months, when he returned to Cook City to settle up his affairs. For a time thereafter he was located in Whatcom, Wash., where he still owns property, conducting a successful business until 1891, when he returned to Portersville and opened a restaurant, bakery and lodging house, which brought him large returns for the period of three years that he was interested in it. He then sold the restaurant and bakery, and in 1900 sold the building, continuing the lodging house until 1901, when he finally disposed of that. In the meantime he purchased the Putnam block, containing two stores, the dimensions of which are 75 x 126 feet, holding it intact until January, 1905, when he sold thirty-five feet. He also owns other valuable business, residence and farm properties in this section, among which is a thirteen-acre orange tract adjoining the city, and three acres adjoining the high school building. Mr. Ackerman has had many experiences in his business career, but has met with success in his efforts which have given him a competence, and at the same time has won for himself the respect of those with whom he has had business dealings.

In Portersville, September 2, 1897, Mr. Ackerman was united in marriage with Catherine Sturm, a native of Alsace-Lorraine, and a daughter of Christian Sturm, a farmer of that locality. He came to America in 1892, locating first in Elgin, Ill., thence to St. James, Minn., where he remained four years, in October, 1897, coming to Portersville. In 1901 he returned to his old home in Alsace-Lorraine. His wife, Madeline, is also living and enjoying the fruits of his early industry. They are devout members of the Lutheran Church. Mrs. Ackerman was the youngest child in her father's family. She is the mother of the following children: Ulrich, who died when one year old; Martha; and Rebecca.

Fraternally Mr. Ackerman is identified with the Woodmen of the World and Knights of Pythias, while his wife belongs to the Ladies of the Maccabees. He is a member of the Evangelical Association, and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Interested in the progress and development of the city, Mr. Ackerman takes an active interest in every movement that pertains to the general welfare, acting as a volunteer fireman and holding the office of secretary of the fire department. Upon the incorporation of Portersville as a city he was elected one of the trustees.

ABNER FRASER. In promoting the agricultural and horticultural prosperity of Tulare county within the past few years the ranchmen, individually and collectively, have labored with diligence and perseverance, taking advantage of every feasible method offered by men of science and thought, and putting into their work as much brain power as physical exertion. The result is everywhere visible in the large orchards, productive vineyards and extensive fields of alfalfa that are in evidence on every hand, adding richness and beauty to the sunny landscape. Prominent among the enterprising and progressive men who have generously assisted in bringing about this grand evolution is Abner Fraser, a successful vineyardist and orchardist, living two miles southeast of Dinuba. A son of the late Robert John Fraser, he was born September 15, 1863, in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia. His grandfather, John Fraser, whose father emigrated from Scotland to Nova Scotia, was a lumberman by occupation, owning and operating a sawmill on East river, New Glasgow, where he was accidentally killed by a splinter which penetrated his abdomen.

Born and brought up in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, Robert John Fraser learned the trades of a stone mason and plasterer, and also became an expert cooper. Moving to Massachusetts shortly after his marriage, he lived for a short time in Mansfield, where his oldest son was born. Returning from there to his native town, he lived in New Glasgow several years, following his trade. In 1868 he took his family to Omaha, Neb., where he worked as a stone mason for two years. Coming to California in 1870, he took up land in Visalia, on the Tule river, and for a year carried on farming in connection with his trade. The following five years he was employed as a grain raiser on the west half of section 11. Homesteading one hundred and sixty acres of wild land, two miles east of Dinuba, in 1878, he changed it from a sheep range to one of the finest-improved ranches of this part of the county, setting out orchards and vineyards, and bringing the land to a high state of cultivation. On the ranch that he so improved he lived and labored successfully until his death, in 1898, at the age of sixty-nine years. He married Anna Forbes, who was born in Nova Scotia, which was also the birthplace of her father, William Forbes, a manufacturing cooper and prosperous business man, inheriting the industry and thrift characteristic of his Scotch ancestors. She survived her husband, and now resides near Dinuba, an active and esteemed woman of seventy-five years. Three children blessed their union, each of whom is represented in this volume: John W., Larkens K. and Abner, all of whom reside near Dinuba, and are actively identified with the agricultural and horticultural interests of the place.

But five years old when his parents removed to Omaha, Neb., Abner Fraser there began his study of books. Coming to Visalia with the family in 1870, he completed his early education in the district schools, and as soon as old enough learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for several years, in the meantime becoming interested to some extent in fruit culture. In 1884 Mr. Fraser purchased his present home ranch near Dinuba, and has since devoted his time and attention to its improvement, sparing neither labor nor expense in his efforts to transform the wild range into a valuable and productive farming estate. When the ditch was completed in this locality, he set out his first vineyard, and has since bought adjoining land, having now one hundred and forty acres of rich and fertile land in his ranch. Here he has a peach orchard of fifteen acres and a vineyard of fifty acres, eighteen acres being planted to Muscat raisins, twenty to the Thompson Seedless, and twelve to Sultanas, the remainder of his land being sowed to alfalfa, which yields him rich and bountiful harvests.

Mr. Fraser married, in this part of Tulare county, Luana Hildreth, who was born in Sandyville, Iowa, and came to California with her father, James Hildreth, a well known photographer. Seven children have been born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Fraser, namely: Clarence (attending the Dinuba Union high school, a member of the class of 1906), Violet (a pupil in the same school, belonging to the class of 1908), Rowena, Lucille, Ione, Robert and Aileen.

Mr. Fraser is a trustee of both the Dinuba public school and the Dinuba Union high school, and for one term was a director in the Alta irrigation district. Politically he is a zealous supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and a member and past officer of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

EDMUND McLEES. Among the successful orange growers in the vicinity of Lindsay, Tulare county, is Edmund McLees, a native of Ontario, his birth having occurred in Norwich, October 27, 1845. His father, James McLees, was a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., from whence the grandfather, Peter, removed to the vicinity of Norwich in 1811. He became a farmer and made that location his home until his death. James McLees followed farming on the old home place located by his father three miles from Norwich, the barn which was built in 1811 still standing and in good condition. In 1894 Mr. McLees retired from active life and in December of that year he came to California and made his home with his son, Edmund, until his death, which occurred August 24, 1904, at the age of ninety-four years six months and five days. Although so advanced in years, he yet remained hale and hearty up to the very last, retaining his faculties in a remarkable manner. For over sixty years he was a constant member of the Baptist Church. He was prominent in the affairs of his adopted country, during the Canadian rebellion in 1837 being a strong Mackenzie man and for his principles suffering imprisonment for a time. His wife, formerly Rachel Dennis, was also a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., and a daughter of John Dennis, who settled in Norwich as a pioneer farmer. Mrs. McLees died in Ontario at the age of seventy-three years, leaving a family of two sons and two daughters, of whom one daughter is now deceased.

On the old homestead in Ontario Edmund McLees was reared to young manhood, attending the common schools for a time. At an early age he became an active worker on his father's farm, where he remained until 1868, when he came to California via New York City and the Isthmus of Panama. Immediately after his arrival in San Francisco, May 28, 1868, he went at once to Solano county, where he found employment on a ranch near Vallejo. Later he was located in Napa county, then purchased a farm near Milpitas, Santa Clara county, where he raised fruit and vegetables for three years. In March, 1898, he removed to Lindsay and bought an orange orchard of sixteen acres, all Washington navels, about ten or eleven years old, since which time he has continued in orange growing. In 1904 he put up a new residence in Lindsay and has made improvements in various ways on his property.

In Norwich, Ontario, May 21, 1873, Mr. McLees was united in marriage with Juliette Cornwell, who was born near that city. Her father, Martin Cornwell, was born in Poughkeepsie, Dutchess county, N. Y., a son of Samuel, who came from England to New York and in 1819 settled in Norwich, Ontario, as a pioneer. Fraternally he was a Mason and was also a prominent man in all local affairs. Martin Cornwell became a farmer in Ontario, where his death occurred at the age of seventy-six years and six months. He married Phoebe Young, who was born in New York, a daughter of William Young, the representative of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and an early settler of Norwich. He was an Orangeman politically, and fraternally affiliated with the Masons. Mr. McLees was made a Mason and is still a member of Naval Lodge No. 87, of Vallejo, of which he is past master; is a member of Naval Chapter, R. A. M., of the same city, and now belongs to Visalia Commandery, K. T., and also Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is also identified with the Odd Fellows, and both himself and wife are demitted from the Order of the Eastern Star, of which he is a past officer. Mrs. McLees is a member of the Baptist Church. Politically Mr. McLees adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

OSCAR AMOS COLLINS. A skillful and enterprising agriculturist and a man of sterling worth and integrity, Oscar A. Collins, whose well-cultivated and highly improved ranch joins Dinuba on the southeast, has been exceedingly prosperous in his chosen vocation, his practical and systematic methods, excellent judgment and marked ability in the prosecution of his calling being conducive to success. He possesses great natural mechanical genius, is handy with tools of all kinds, and makes good use of his talent, saving himself many a penny in the way of manufacturing or repairing machinery and farm implements. A New Englander by birth and ancestry, he was born October 5, 1856, in Irasburg, Orleans county, Vt., a son of A. P. Collins. His grandfather, Charles Collins, a life-long farmer and stockman in Vermont, served in the war of 1812.

A native of Orange county, Vt., A. P. Collins pursued the independent occupation of a farmer in his native state for many years, living there until forty years of age. Then, in the prime of a vigorous manhood, he migrated westward, locating in Dane county, Wis., near Black Earth, where he carried on farming two years. Going then to Bremer county, Iowa, he settled on a farm near Waverly, and was there a resident until 1884. Returning east, he lived in his old home for two years, and in 1886 came to California, and here he lived a few years. Not quite content, however, he went back to Iowa, and until 1904 resided in Plainfield, but he is now in Tulare county, making his home with his son, Oscar A. He comes of a family noted for its longevity, his mother, whose maiden name was Susan Currier, having lived to be ninety-nine years of age, while her mother and her grandmother both passed the century mark. He married Lucinda Sawyer, who was born in Orange county, Vt., and died in Bremer county, Iowa. She bore him six children, five of whom are living, three being residents of this state.

Brought up on the home farm in Iowa, Oscar A. Collins acquired the rudiments of his education in the district school, after which he attended the Bradford Academy, then the Waverly high school. At the age of twenty years he began farming on his own account, continuing three years. Going to Colorado in 1879, he remained there a year, and then went back to Iowa. In 1881 Mr. Collins came to the extreme western coast, locating in Chico, Cal., where he resumed his former occupation on the Bidwell ranch, remaining there three years. From 1884 until 1885 he lived in Salinas, Monterey county, from there coming, in 1885, to Tulare county. Locating near Traver, Mr. Collins purchased forty acres of land, and on that, and a large tract which he rented, he was employed as a grain raiser for six years. Hoping to better his financial condition, he migrated to Oregon, but his stay in that state was very brief. Returning to California, he was for a while engaged in the milk business in San Francisco, after which he rented land near Dinuba, and for two years raised grain, meeting with satisfactory results in the operation. In 1893 he took a pleasure trip east, visiting the Columbian exposition, held in Chicago. Returning to this county, Mr. Collins located, in February, 1894, on his former ranch, near Dinuba, and remained there about a year. In 1895 he bought his present home ranch of sixty acres, adjoining Dinuba, and has since been profitably employed in farming, fruit growing and stock raising. Fifteen acres of his land is devoted to the culture of grapes, but on the rest he raises principally alfalfa.

June 8, 1884, in Chico, Cal., Mr. Collins married Sarah E. Parsons, who was born near Horseshoe Bend, W. Va., which was likewise the birthplace of her father, Andrew Parsons. Her grandfather, James Parsons, a native of old Virginia and for many years a farmer and stockman in West Virginia, was a son of one Miles

Parsons, who emigrated from England with three of his brothers, and settled in the old Dominion state. Andrew Parsons came from his native state to California with his family in 1871, and lived first in Salinas, subsequently settling in San Miguel, where his death occurred in 1893. He married Phoebe Ann Howe, who was born in New York state, and died in California. Of the nine children born of their union, eight are living, seven being residents of this state. Mrs. Collins came to California in October, 1875, joining her two brothers in Salinas. Politically Mr. Collins is a steadfast Republican, and Mrs. Collins is an ardent suffragist, and a member of the Dinuba Woman's Club, of which she was formerly vice president and secretary.

GEORGE MARION CALDWELL. As a prominent ranchman of Tulare county George Marion Caldwell is remembered by his many friends as a man of energy and industry, and a progressive and enterprising citizen. He was a native of Indiana, where his birth occurred March 30, 1850. His father, George Caldwell, a native of Virginia, located as a pioneer in Indiana, and in 1852 crossed the plains to California. Here he engaged in mining in the vicinity of Shaws Flat, later going to San Juan, and eventually locating in Tulare county, near Visalia, where he followed farming and stock raising. His death occurred in Tulare, December 16, 1881. His wife, formerly Lydia Williams, a native of Indiana, died in Portersville, Tulare county.

The entire life of George Marion Caldwell, with the exception of two years, was spent in the state of California. In boyhood he attended the common schools in the vicinity of his home. In manhood he followed the example of his father and engaged in stock raising, in partnership with his brothers purchasing the Elk Bayou ranch, which they operated for some time. In 1875 the property was divided and Mr. Caldwell took that which now forms the home place of his family, its location being two and a half miles southwest of Visalia and consisting of one hundred and seventy acres. Upon this property he successfully engaged in farming and the cattle business until his death April 29, 1892. He was esteemed for his spirit of progression and liberality, his interest always being given to movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community. Politically he was an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, and was always active in the interests he endorsed.

In Visalia, July 1, 1875, Mr. Caldwell married Matilda Louisa Kelly, a native of this city and the daughter of Greenbury M. Kelly, whose sketch is found on another page of this work. She survives her husband and is located on the home place, acting as manager in the cattle and dairy business which is now carried on. A part of the property is also given over to the cultivation of alfalfa. Eight children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell, namely: William L.; Jasper C.; George L.; Edward E.; twins, who died in infancy; Etta May and Ernest M., all of whom are at home.

JOHN F. FIREBAUGH. Once the owner of all the land upon which the town of Exeter is built, John F. Firebaugh is rightly designated as the founder of the place and a citizen whose efforts have been most productive of material good, growth and prosperity. Of southern ancestry, he was born near Lexington, Rockbridge county, Va., December 12, 1846, a son of Benjamin Firebaugh, a native of the same locality. The grandfather, John Firebaugh, went south from his native state of Pennsylvania, where the family had been founded by German ancestors, and became a farmer and stockman in Virginia. Benjamin Firebaugh also followed the same occupation in his native state until his emigration to California, when he became a farmer in Tulare county, making it his home until his death. He was a Presbyterian in his religious faith and a man of strong and earnest character. His wife was in maidenhood Rebecca Horn, a native of Rockbridge county, Va., and a daughter of Jacob Horn, a farmer, who was also born in the Old Dominion, the descendant of German ancestry. Mrs. Firebaugh died on the old home place, two miles from Exeter. She was the mother of seven children, four of whom attained maturity, namely: James, who died during the Civil war; John F., of this review; N. B., of Exeter; and Cornelia, who became the wife of H. H. Harlow of Fresno.

Although a Virginian, the elder Firebaugh owned no slaves, nor did he believe in the traffic, but under the weight of southern influence and prejudice the sons were forced into the army. After the war John F. Firebaugh came to California with the family, following an uncle, Andrew Firebaugh, who crossed the plains in 1849 and established the town of Firebaugh, Fresno county, and also established and conducted the ferry at that place and built the road over the Pacheco Pass. He became and remained a prominent citizen throughout his residence in Fresno county, his death occurring near Fresno. John F. Firebaugh went from San Francisco in February, 1868, to San Jose, and afterward engaged in farming near Watsonville. In the fall of 1869 he came to Tulare county, remaining at home, as his father had just bought a farm of eighty acres and he was needed to help in its cultivation. In 1873 he married and located first on the railroad lands on the north-east quarter of section 3, township 19, range 26, but as these lands were not in the market he removed in 1875 to the northeast quarter of section 10, township 19, range 26, where he pre-empted one hundred and sixty acres, paying out on eighty acres and homesteading the remainder. He put up a small house which formed the home of the family for some time, and broke the land and sowed it to grain. Later on he bought railroad land, the southeast quarter of section 3, and afterward the southwest quarter of the same section, and in addition to his homestead took another eighty acres, in the north half of the north-west quarter of section 10, making five hundred and sixty acres in one body. This extensive property he devoted to general farming and stock-raising until the founding of the town of Exeter. Through his inducements the Southern Pacific Railroad Company located a station here, and in connection with D. W. Parkhurst, Mr. Firebaugh began the laying out of Exeter. The town is laid out on sections 3 and 10, a portion of two hundred and forty acres, half of which was given to the Pacific Improvement Company, which built the railroad.

The West Villa addition to Exeter, consisting of forty acres, was laid out by Mr. Firebaugh and Mr. Parkhurst in 1890. About ten years ago the town began a rapid growth, which has not ceased with the passing of the years, but continues to the present day, the population now being over eight hundred. Mr. Firebaugh still owns one hundred and sixty acres of the original property, and a half-interest in one hundred and twenty acres adjoining the city and in town lots. He also owns one hundred acres located three miles east of Exeter, on section 14, which is devoted to general farming. He also has a pumping plant, the well being one hundred and thirteen feet deep, the electric motor, fifteen horsepower, bringing up fifty-eight inches of water continuously. This will irrigate two hundred and fifty acres of orchard and is designed to reach every piece of land owned by Mr. Firebaugh. He has also planned to put in one hundred acres of Rocky Ford canteloupes, having already made a contract with a firm in New York to dispose of the product. Another of Mr. Firebaugh's extensive interests was the building of a mill on the site of the old Dillon mill, three and a half miles west of Exeter, the roller process being introduced and many modern improvements adding to the value of the enterprise. It was known as the San Joaquin Roller Mill, and was first owned by Mr. Firebaugh and H. J. Ottson, the former eventually purchasing the entire interest and conducting it successfully for a period of ten years, when he sold out. His business interests, horticultural, farming and stock-raising, as well as the executive ability exercised in the establishment and upbuilding of Exeter, have made him a potent factor in the development and growth of this part of Tulare county, and justly places him in the front rank of representative citizens.

In Tulare county, in the vicinity of Exeter, Mr. Firebaugh was united in marriage with Mary E. Davis, who was born in Amador county, Cal. Her father, Edwin Davis, came across the plains in 1852 to California, engaging first as a miner, but eventually locating as a stockman in Tulare county until his retirement, now making his home in Exeter, in his seventy-first year. His marriage was romantic, occurring on the plains on the trip to California and uniting him with Sarah Ann Spier, a native of Missouri, who died in 1901. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Firebaugh: Minnie B., the wife of M. D. Twiehaus of Exeter; Luther W., a rancher near Exeter; Edna E., the wife of George Hinds of Exeter; Elmer J., located in Bakersfield, in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad; Clarence E. and Lorena D., at home. Mrs. Firebaugh is a member of the Baptist Church and supports all its interests generously. Politically Mr. Firebaugh is a staunch Democrat. For many years he has acted as a member of the school board, being one of the first school directors in his district.

MOSES DUDLEY, a pioneer of the state, and a man of fine business qualities, was born in Bath, N. Y., July 13, 1833, a son of Moses Dudley. The elder man was a native of Maine, and became a farmer in Bath, N. Y., where his death occurred. His wife, formerly Mary Atwood, is also deceased. Two of their children came to California, a son, John, locating here in the early days, making his home in San Jose, Santa Clara county, at the time of his death. Moses Dudley, Jr., was reared in his home in New York state, in young manhood following the example of his father in seeking his livelihood along agricultural lines. He finally removed to Hennepin county, Minn., and engaged in farming and stock raising, later locating in Kansas, where he took an active part in the border troubles in the army of that state. Returning to Minnesota, he was married October 16, 1868, to Sarah Bristol, a native of Delaware county, N. Y. In 1870 they decided to locate in California, and accordingly settled in San Jose, where they made their home until March of the following year, when they removed to the home now occupied by Mrs. Dudley. Here Mr. Dudley improved a ranch and also purchased other property, taking an active part in the material upbuilding of this section of Tulare county. The home ranch is located twenty miles northeast of Visalia and is devoted to stock-raising. His death occurred July 27, 1897, at Campbell, Santa Clara county. He was a man of strong religious nature, an earnest and faithful Christian, and a practical citizen. Politically he cast his ballot with the Republican party.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Dudley are the following children: John Guilford, in the stock business on the home ranch; Edmund R., associated with the Golden West Real Estate business in Visalia, Cal.; Benjamin B., in the same work at the same place; and Frances E., the wife of J. K. Yoakum of Visalia.

GEORGE WALTER KIRKMAN. A wide-awake, enterprising man, ever ready to take advantage of any offered opportunity for improvement, George Walter Kirkman is one of Tulare county's most substantial business men, and an important factor in promoting its industrial interests. He owns and occupies a ranch, lying nine miles east of Visalia, and in its care and management spares neither time nor expense. He is likewise interested in other pursuits, handling contracts, and being identified with two meat markets, one at Exeter, and one at Lindsay. A son of John Kirkman, he was born, December 4, 1853, in Wayne county, Ind., where his grandfather, George Kirkman, settled as a pioneer, removing there from North Carolina.

A native of North Carolina, John Kirkman moved from there to Indiana with his parents when seven years old, and was brought up on a farm, which he helped to clear from the wilderness. Early in the '70s he migrated to Missouri, locating in St. Charles county, where he was employed in tilling the soil for about ten years. In the fall of 1881 he came with his son George to California, and subsequently made his home with him. He is now seventy-seven years old and is a remarkable hunter. In the last five years he has killed eleven deer in eleven shots. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Thornburg, was born in Wayne county, Ind., and died in Missouri. She bore him eight children, six boys and two girls, George Walter, the subject of this sketch, being the second child.

At the age of seventeen years George Walter Kirkman went with his parents to Missouri, where he assisted his father in the pioneer labor of clearing a homestead. Coming to California in the fall of 1881, he bought land near Exeter and began the improvement of a ranch. In 1889, the railroad being extended to Exeter, Mr. Kirkman and his brother, foreseeing its mercantile possibilities, built the first store established in the town, and became the pioneer merchants of the place. As the town grew and developed, their trade increased, and for four years they carried on a substantial business in general merchandise. In 1893 Mr. Kirkman accepted a contract to furnish the provisions for the Sanger Lumber Company, and to haul the same to the mountains, in Millwood. This business he has continued since, going each summer into the mountains to fill the contracts. In 1900 Mr. Kirkman bought his present home ranch of three hundred and fifteen acres, which he devotes to general farming and stock-raising. He also has meat markets in Exeter and Lindsay, both of which he supplies with meat from his own farm. He is also interested in breeding and raising race horses, having a string of fine trotters and pacers, including Rockaway, one year old; Frank B., two years old, with a record of 2:30, and Myway, three years old.

In Missouri Mr. Kirkman married Mary Delilah Yarnall, a native of that state, and they are the parents of four children, namely: John Montreville, Maud, Carrie Minerva and Bertie Erwin. Politically Mr. Kirkman is a steadfast Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Exeter Lodge, K. of P.

ORVILLE CAUGHEY GOODIN. One of the oldest settlers and one who, as a pioneer, has endured the privations and hardships incident to the upbuilding of a new statehood, is Orville Caughey Goodin, well known throughout Tulare county, where all but five years of his life have been spent. He was born near Pineville, McDonald county, Mo., September 5, 1856. His father, William Severe Goodin, was born in East Tennessee, from which state his father, Benjamin, removed to Missouri, where his death occurred. William S. Goodin engaged as a farmer in McDonald county until 1857, when he brought his wife and son across the plains with ox-teams. He first located in Sonoma county, where he remained until 1861 and then located near Visalia, Tulare county, engaging in agricultural pursuits on a farm seven miles east of the city. He was later located on another farm and also owned a farm near Lovell, which he devoted to grain-raising. His death occurred at the age of sixty-seven years. His wife, formerly Eliza Blair, was a native of Missouri, and the daughter of Jonathan Blair, who emigrated from his birthplace in Tennessee to Missouri, thence to California across the plains in 1857. He located as a farmer east of Visalia, where his death occurred. Mrs. Goodin died in Farmersville, leaving a family of three children, namely: Orville Caughey, of this review; W. L., a farmer and horticulturist near Oroshi; and Sarah L., a resident of Fresno.

But one year old when the trip across the plains was made, Orville Caughey Goodin knows no other associations than those of a California home. From the age of five years he was reared in Tulare county, attending the public schools while receiving the practical training of a farmer's son. When only ten years old his mother died. He remained at home until he was eighteen years old, when he sought employment on neighboring farms and also engaged in teaming. In 1878 he came to Oroshi, then nothing but barren plains, his first employment in this location being the hauling of lumber to Visalia from the Wagy, Thomas, Comstock and Turbine mills, during which long drives he saw many animals, among them antelopes, which have long since disappeared from the plains. One week was consumed in making the round trip, and on account of bad roads from six to eight horses were required to draw the loads. Until 1890 he remained in this employment, ten years earlier, however, purchasing a half section of railroad land where Oroshi now stands, for which he paid $4.50 an acre. The land was wild and uncultivated and without improvements of any kind. He built a house and began improving his property, cultivating it to grain. In 1890 he gave up teaming and since that time has given his attention entirely to the cultivation and improvement of his property. The same year he set out considerable fruit, keeping in his possession about ten acres of the original tract, while he sold in ten and twenty acre lots the larger part of the remainder. A part of the town of Oroshi is laid out on what was once his farm, his first residence being on the corner now occupied by the Beinhorn Bros. store. He has since built a handsome residence, barns and outbuildings and has made his property to rank with the best in this section. He now owns a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres near Lovell, devoted to stock and alfalfa, one hundred and sixty acres near Traver, a stock ranch, and eighteen hundred acres in the foothills, ten miles from this place, up Sand creek, this large property being entirely fenced. This ranch is devoted to the cultivation of hay and stock-raising, Polled Angus and Hereford cattle, and draft horses forming no small part of the live-stock cared for by Mr. Goodin. He has made a success of his work as rancher, stockman and horticulturist, and is numbered among the progressive and enterprising citizens of this part of Tulare county.

Near Lemon Cove, Mr. Goodin was united in marriage with Nannie Ragle, a native of Sonoma county, the daughter of William Ragle, who came from Tennessee, his native state, to California as a pioneer, locating eventually in Tulare county and whose history appears in another part of this volume. In his political convictions Mr. Goodin is a Democrat and in the interests of his party has served as school trustee. Through his efforts a postoffice was first secured for Orosi and he served as the first postmaster, the office being in his house. He held the position for two years, when he resigned. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, being past officer and ex-representative; Woodmen of the World; Women of Woodcraft; Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Rebekahs. Mr. and Mrs. Goodin are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he officiates as trustee and treasurer.

GEORGE W. CAMERON. The substantial and progressive citizens of Fresno have no better representative than G. W. Cameron, a successful agriculturist and horticulturist, who is now serving with eminent satisfaction as county assessor of Fresno county. A son of Elisha Cameron, he was born May 5, 1836, in Sparta, White county, Tenn. His grandfather, William Cameron, was born and reared in Scotland. Emigrating to America when a young man, he located first in North Carolina, from there removing to Sparta, Tenn., where he carried on general farming for several years. Migrating then to northern Alabama, he lived there until his death at the age of eighty years. He was a deeply religious man, and, like his Scotch ancestors, was a staunch Presbyterian.

A native of Tennessee, Elisha Cameron spent his entire life in White county, dying at the age of seventy-two years. He was a farmer by occupation, and was also a successful tanner, owning a large tannery near Sparta. As a man and a citizen he was held in high respect. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion a Presbyterian. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Hudson, was born in South Carolina, a daughter of James Hudson. Mr. Hudson was a native of Wales, but came to this country when young, and for a number of years resided in South Carolina. From there he removed with his family to Tennessee, performing the journey with packhorses, and cutting his way through the cane brakes. Taking up a tract of unbroken land, he improved a good farm from the wilderness, and in his new home spent his remaining years. He, too, was a faithful Presbyterian in his religious affiliations. Of his family of eight boys and four girls all grew to years of maturity, and all but one reared families of their own. Three of his sons served in the war of 1812. Of the union of Elisha and Mary (Hudson) Cameron fourteen children were born, eleven daughters and three sons, and of these two sons and two daughters survive. Two of the sons served in the Confederate army during the Civil war, both being in the same regiment and the same company, namely: George W., of this review, and William Newton, who is now a prosperous banker of Coleman, Tex. The latter was an officer, serving as second lieutenant of his company.

The oldest son, and the seventh child in order of birth, George W. Cameron grew to manhood in Sparta, obtaining his early education at a subscription school. Under his father's instruction he learned the trade of a tanner and currier at Cameron's tannery, which still retains its original name, working in the yard until the breaking out of the Civil war, when his father, being left without help, had to give up the business. At the first call for troops in the spring of 1861, Mr. Cameron enlisted as a private in Company A, Twenty-fifth Tennessee Confederate Volunteer Infantry, and took part in several engagements of importance, including those at Fishing Creek, Stone River and Chickamauga. At the battle of Chickamauga, September 19, 1863, Mr. Cameron received a minie-ball in the left hand, and was taken to Georgia for treatment. At the hospital gangrene set in, an infected patient spreading the disease through the ward in which he was confined, and October 18, 1863, Mr. Cameron's forearm had to be amputated. Honorably discharged from service in February, 1864, Mr. Cameron soon afterward returned home, arriving in Sparta April 24, 1864. He found his former home a desolate ruin, the house being demolished, and not an animal left on the place. Going to work as best he could with his one hand, he managed the farm for five years, making a living. Disposing of the property in 1869, Mr. Cameron came to California on one of the first railroad trains that crossed the continent. Locating at Modesto, Stanislaus county, he put in a crop, but not being pleased with the results of his labors he turned his face eastward. Arriving in Buchanan county, Mo., he engaged in farming there for a year, and then removed to Arkansas, where he was similarly employed for two years.

Returning to California in 1874, Mr. Cameron, who had sent his wife and their two children back to Tennessee, arrived in Modesto one Saturday evening with just $1.75 in his pockets. Walking out into the country about seven miles, he found employment on a ranch, on which he remained until after harvest, receiving $30 per month and board. Renting a ranch in the fall, he put in a crop, sent for his family, and lived on the place five years. In 1879 he bought a farm of three hundred and twenty acres, about two and one-half miles north of Modesto, paying $16 per acre. Erecting a house, barns and all necessary outbuildings, he carried on general farming, making a specialty of grain raising. In 1882 Mr. Cameron was elected county assessor of Stanislaus county on the Democratic ticket, and served for four years. He subsequently bought a ranch of six hundred and forty acres in San Luis Obispo county, and managed that in addition to carrying on his home farm. Selling his Modesto farm in 1894, Mr. Cameron located in Fresno and engaged in the business of a vineyardist, renting twenty acres of land, which he devoted to the culture of grapes of various kinds, making a specialty of the raisin grape. In 1902 he was elected county assessor of Fresno county on the Democratic ticket, receiving a majority of two hundred and ninety votes, and in January, 1903, took the oath of office.

While living in Tennessee, Mr. Cameron married Mary Stone, a native of that state, and the descendant of an old and honored family. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cameron four children were born, namely: Jennie, wife of E. Shepherd, of Laton, Cal.; Emma, who died at the age of twenty-eight years; Florilla, who died at the age of eighteen years; and Forest, the wife of J. B. Pettit, of Mill Valley, Cal. In 1861 Mr. Cameron was made a Mason in Sparta, Tenn., and is now a member of Stanislaus Lodge No. 206, F. & A. M. He also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and Lee Camp, U. C. V., of Fresno, which he has served as commander. In politics he is one of the leading Democrats of the county, and in religion he is a consistent member of the Christian Church.

JOHN KAMBICH. Among the foreign-born citizens who have made a success in the western states mention belongs to John Kambich, who is located as a farmer on a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres adjoining Plano, Tulare county. A native of Austria, he was born December 25, 1857, a son of Steven Kambich, also of that country. The elder man came to America in 1869 and located in Chicago, Ill., where he engaged in peddling for some time. In 1871 he came to California and was occupied in agricultural pursuits in Yolo county for seven years, when, with his competence, he returned to Austria, where his death occurred in 1893. His wife, formerly Mary Ogalin, a native of the same country, still survives her husband. They were the parents of four sons and one daughter, of whom John Kambich was the oldest.

John Kambich received his education in the common schools of Austria and America, in young manhood being apprenticed to learn the trade of a blacksmith. He remained in Illinois engaged in the prosecution of his trade until April 22, 1883, when he came to Yolo county, Cal., and at Blacks Station worked on a ranch and followed blacksmithing. In 1887 he located in Tulare county and in the vicinity of Plano bought three hundred and twenty acres of land, which is devoted to the cultivation of wheat and general farming. In Visalia, Cal., he was united in marriage with Emma M. German, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of seven children, all of whom are at home, namely: May Cecelia, Lewis Edward, Henry John, Jo Frank, Anthony M., Bertha Marie and Paul August. Mr. Kambich is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and politically casts his ballot with the Democratic party.

JAMES FORNEY DUNGAN, M. D. The success of James Forney Dungan as a physician and surgeon is the result of well-directed effort, sustained by a thorough and earnest preparation for his work. In 1893 he located in Exeter, Tulare county, since which time he has built up an extensive and lucrative practice in the town and vicinity, and even attending patients at a distance of more than fifty miles, having won the confidence of all who have either benefited by or witnessed the value of his efforts.

Born in Glade Spring, Va., August 4, 1866, Dr. Dungan is the oldest in a family of eight children, of whom six are now living. His father, T. N. Dungan, was a native of Missouri, whither the grandfather located as a pioneer in the early days of the state, and where his death occurred. In manhood T. N. Dungan went to Virginia, where he became a farmer and stockman at Glade Spring. In 1894 he came to Exeter, Tulare county, and two years later set out the first grove of oranges in this district. He met with gratifying success in his work until his retirement, now making his home in Exeter. His wife, formerly Joanna McKee, was born near Glade Spring, Va., the descendant of an old Virginia family whose sterling traits were inherited from a long line of Scotch ancestry. She died in Exeter, after a useful and earnest life, her religious work being in the Baptist Church, of which she was a devout member, while her husband belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

James Forney Dungan was reared to young manhood in his native place, after receiving a preliminary education attending Holston Academy for two years. Deciding to take up the profession of medicine he began the study under Dr. W. L. Dunn, of Glade Spring, with whom he remained two years. He then took a course at The Medical College of Virginia, at Richmond, after which he entered Vanderbilt University. From this latter institution he was graduated in 1891 with the degree of M. D., spending a part of the following year at the University of Nashville (the old Peabody School), in post-graduate work, from which he also received the degree of M. D. Entering upon the practice of medicine in 1892, he was located first in Watauga Valley, Tenn., where he remained a year, when he came to California and became a resident of Exeter. At that time there were only three or four buildings on the east side of the Southern Pacific Railroad tracks, where the doctor located, and since then he has given his best efforts towards the material upbuilding of the town, as well as devoting thought and attention to the increase of his practice. Through Dr. Dungan's influence the first drug store was established in the town by his uncle, J. W. Dungan, and in various ways the business activity has been increased by the doctor's efforts. He has also given some time to horticultural pursuits, having a seven-acre orange grove, as well as several orange tracts not yet planted to fruit. He has also manifested his faith in the future growth and prosperity of the town by the purchase of both business and residence properties.

Dr. Dungan has been twice married, the first ceremony being performed in Watauga Valley, Tenn., and uniting him with Emma J. Kitzmiller, who was born near Glade Spring, Va., and died in Exeter. She left two children, Lake L. and Mamie Virginia. The doctor's second marriage occurred in Exeter, and united him with Sue Combs, a native of Missouri, and daughter of James Combs, now of Lake county, Cal. She was reared and educated in San Mateo and Lake counties, later graduating from the San Jose Normal, and for ten years taught school in Lake and Tulare counties. They have one son, Marshall. Mrs. Dungan is a member of the Episcopal Church. Fraternally Dr. Dungan affiliates with the Knights of Pythias and Woodmen of the World, of Exeter. Politically he is a staunch Democrat, active in his efforts to advance the principles he endorses, and at one time served as a member of the county central committee. Along the line of his profession he is examining physician for several of the old line insurance companies represented in Tulare county.

THE LINDSAY FRUIT ASSOCIATION was formed in 1904 by three of the leading growers in the Lindsay district, H. S. Black, L. S. White and Hugh Latimer, the latter a resident of Riverside, but owning orange groves in this section of the state. The plan was to pack and ship the products of their own orchards and to also handle fruit for others if desired. The three members of the association have seventy-three acres of Washington navels and twelve acres of late Valencias, and all the fruit is packed and shipped from their packing house, which was erected on a siding of the Southern Pacific at Lindsay. The plant has a capacity of three cars per day. The oranges are sold through the Southern California Fruit Exchange, and thus far the venture has proved a success.

The men who organized the company are well known throughout Tulare county. Mr. White located in Lindsay in 1902, soon afterward becoming interested in orange growing. Mr. Black settled here in 1893 and was one of the first men to set out oranges in Lindsay. The other member of the firm, Mr. Latimer, makes his home in Riverside, but is well known in Tulare county.

From its inception the association has met with success. The men connected with it understand their business thoroughly and do all in their power to bring about the desired results.

JOHN W. STOKES. A prominent rancher and stock dealer of Tulare county, John W. Stokes is located in the vicinity of Visalia where he leases land to carry on his business. He was born in Daviess county, Mo., July 2, 1837, a son of Yancy B. Stokes, the latter a native of Kentucky. Yancy B. Stokes came to Missouri in an early day and engaged in farming and stock-raising, in the course of time traveling extensively throughout the middle west in his business of buying and selling stock. About 1840 he removed to Iowa, where he made his home until 1850, in which year, on April 10, he started across the plains to California. The trip was made by ox-teams and occupied seven months, the company arriving in Hangtown, (now Placerville) October 12. He spent his first winter in California in Stockton, being ill the greater part of the time. His son, John W. Stokes, who accompanied him on the journey, cared for their stock that winter, and in the spring they went to Curtis Creek mines. The three months spent there were productive of considerable money, but Mr. Stokes had the misfortune to have it stolen from his trunk. He then went to Mokolunne river, in Calaveras county, where he remained until the spring of 1852, after which he located near Marysville, on the Yuba river. He spent the following spring and summer prospecting for mines, after which he returned to Stockton. In the fall of the same year he went back to Iowa, and in 1853 brought his family across the plains to California, although they stopped and spent the winter in Carson valley, the following spring locating in Contra Costa county, near Martinez. For one year this continued to be the home of the family, when, in December, 1855, they came to Tulare county and located on government land which Mr. Stokes took up six miles west of Visalia. He there engaged in general farming and stock-raising for some time, when he sold the property to his son, John W. Stokes, and bought another tract in the same vicinity, owning at the time of his death about sixteen hundred acres. His death occurred March 4, 1886. His wife, whom he married in Missouri, was formerly Elizabeth Moore, a native of that state. Her death also occurred in California. In his political convictions Mr. Stokes was a staunch Republican.

In a family of six sons and five daughters born to his parents John W. Stokes was the third in order of birth. He received a limited education in the common schools of Iowa and California, to which state he first came with his father in 1850, being then a lad of thirteen years. He remained in California while his father returned to Iowa for the remainder of the family, working in the mines at various odd jobs. Upon the location of the family in the state he came with them to Tulare county and with his father engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He has continued in this work since, handling extensively cattle, horses, hogs, etc. He has purchased a large amount of land, while he also leases land for ranges. He is meeting with a success that bids fair to number him among the successful stockmen of the county.

In Tulare county, Cal., Mr. Stokes married Rachel M. Gibson, a native of Missouri, who died in San Luis Obispo county, Cal. She left a family of five children, namely: Christina, the wife of Adam Spauth, of Tulare county; Thomas, of Visalia; Elta, a resident of Los Angeles; Miles Andrew, of Visalia; and Claud, of San Luis Obispo county, Cal. Mr. Stokes' second marriage occurred in Visalia, and united him with Nancy Liggett, a native of Tennessee, and born of this union are two children, namely: Henry Jenkins and Roxanna, both at home with their parents. In his political convictions Mr. Stokes is like his father, a staunch Republican.

R. L. MARCH. An enterprising and successful farmer, R. L. March enjoys to an unusual degree the esteem and confidence of his fellow citizens, who appreciate the ability and energy he has displayed in the cultivation and improvement of his farm of one hundred and sixty acres, located seven and a half miles northeast of Visalia, Tulare county. He was born in Boone county, Mo., August 13, 1865, the eldest of five living children. His father, George March, was a native of Missouri also, where he engaged in farming until 1881, when he came to California, and, locating near Visalia, engaged in agricultural pursuits for a time. His death occurred in Visalia at the age of forty-seven years. His wife, formerly Maggie Boyce, was born in Missouri, in which state her father was a farmer, and where his death occurred. Mrs. March survives her husband and makes her home in Visalia.

R. L. March was reared to young manhood in Missouri, attending the district schools in both his native state and California, where he came with his parents when only sixteen years old. He remained at home until attaining his majority, when he became dependent upon his own resources. He worked on various neighboring farms until he had earned money to buy a six-horse team and plow, when he rented land and followed grain farming. He finally located on his present place, which he has since improved and cultivated. In addition to his home property he has a farm of one hundred and sixty acres a mile northwest, devoted to farming and stock raising, and eighty acres nine miles west of Visalia, on the Mill creek bottoms, where he herds stock.

In Tulare Mr. March was united in marriage with Belle Campbell, a native of Missouri, and the sister of J. E. Campbell, of Monson, whose sketch appears on another page of this work, giving the family history. They have one child, Loraine. In his political convictions Mr. March is a Democrat, and fraternally affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He and his wife are consistent members of the Christian Church of Visalia.

J. J. CAIRNS. It is always interesting to chronicle the history of the pioneer. The man who has braved the hardships of frontier life and who has become accustomed to the vacillating fortunes of the farmer on the California plains, is the one who has helped to build up Tulare county in more avenues than one. And particularly is this true in the interest he takes in irrigating by means of wells. When J. J. Cairns first began the sheep business he found it necessary to seek other sources of water supply than that of the river and creeks. He at once put down wells in Madera county, where he then lived, and as that was considered very dry land he was surprised to find water in sufficient quantity for his stock at a depth of fifteen or sixteen feet; this he also found true of other localities in the San Joaquin valley. In Tulare county he obtained water by sinking wells to a depth of fifty-five to one hundred and fifty feet. For a time the cost of the wells was out of proportion to the benefits received, and he therefore experimented until the desired result was obtained at a cost of $90 for a well that would irrigate an entire section of land. By leaving out the casing the expense was materially lessened and its absence allowed the water to flow freely instead of shutting it off. He thus proved the efficacy of his scheme and was the first man of the valley to accomplish what is destined to make this one of the greatest farming and horticultural regions in the world.

J. J. Cairns was born in Fortarshire, Scotland, August 10, 1844, the youngest of four children born to Andrew Cairns. His father was a forester and came of a sturdy old Scotch family. Mr. Cairns received a very good education, obtained in the private schools of his native shire. In 1866 he located in New Zealand and engaged in the sheep business for five years, when he came to California. He located in that part of Fresno county which is now Madera county, where he followed the sheep business until 1877, when on account of the drouth he took his flock to the Sacramento valley, ranging them in Colusa, Butte and Tehama counties. He sold out inside of a year, and taking into consideration the expense of moving and the death of so many, his receipts enabled him only to come out even on the venture. Once more at the beginning of the business, he located in 1881 in Tulare county five miles from his present home. Two years later he also became interested in the raising of grain, and shortly afterward disposed of his sheep and gave his entire attention to extensive farming. In 1894 he farmed twenty thousand acres of land, all in grain, of which six thousand was his own property. A failure of crops that year compelled him to dispose of his land to pay off indebtedness to the amount of $175,000. He was left with one hundred acres, his present property. In 1893 he set sixty-five acres of this land to navel oranges, which have proved a success and is considered as one of the finest bearing orchards in the Lindsay district. He is still engaged in grain raising, farming about three thousand acres which he operates with five eight-mule teams. He also owns six hundred acres within three miles of Lindsay. On his home ranch he has fine buildings and improvements, the entire property being under irrigation from a large well operated by a nine-horse power electric motor. Mr. Cairns is one of the organizers and the president of the Lindsay Orange Growers' Association, which company has put up one of the largest packing houses in the county. He was also an organizer and is a director in the Lindsay Improvement Company, having acted as its first president. This company built the Fraternal Hall, a large, two-story brick building, and a credit to the place. He is a stockholder in the Lindsay Rochdale Association and a director and vice-president in the People's Telephone Company, of Tulare. One of the most popular and prominent men of the section, he holds a high place in the esteem and confidence of all who have come in contact with him, either in a business or social way.

In 1877 Mr. Cairns was united in marriage in Fresno county with Eliza Galbraith, who is a native daughter of California. She is very active in the social life of Lindsay. Recently she has formed a club (of which she acts as president), whose aim is to plant trees in the avenues and in general promote the beautifying of this already famous orange section. Mr. and Mrs. Cairns are the parents of the following children: Walter, a stockman of Lindsay; Edith, attending the Santa Cruz Business College; Ethel; Laura and Norman. For many years Mr. Cairns has served as school trustee, and has always been greatly interested in educational work and the enhancing of the opportunities of the youth of our country, both intellectually and morally. Politically he is an uncompromising Republican.

ADONIRAM J. PACKARD. For more than a quarter of a century the late Adoniram J. Packard was a resident of Stanislaus county, his home being near Newman, and during that time he was held in high respect as an industrious and enterprising citizen, an able business man, a kind and accommodating neighbor, and a most loving and devoted husband and father; and his death, which occurred May 28, 1903, was a cause of general regret. Coming from honored New England ancestry, he was born July 26, 1840, in Norridgewock, Somerset county, Me., and was there brought up and educated.

In 1860, having previously served an apprenticeship at the blacksmith's trade, Mr. Packard came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California. Settling first in Alameda county, he followed his trade at Hayward for nine years, and was afterwards a blacksmith at Hill's Ferry for two years. From there he removed to Cottonwood Grove, where he had a smithy for two years. In 1874 Mr. Packard came to Stanislaus county, locating at what was then called Dutch Corners, and, purchasing the home estate now occupied by his widow, was here prosperously engaged in farming until his death. A skillful workman and an expert mechanic, he was kept busily employed until a few years before his death, and possessing good business tact and judgment, he accumulated considerable property. He at one time owned one hundred and twenty acres of land lying just east of Newman, but sold it prior to his decease.

On December 1, 1874, in Merced, Cal., Mr. Packard married Miss Leonora Dougharty, who was born in Calhoun county, Ill., a daughter of William and Elizabeth Dougharty. A native of Mississippi, William Dougharty settled in Calhoun county, Ill., when a young man, living there until 1854, when he came with his family to Contra Costa county, Cal., journeying by way of Panama. In 1855 he removed to Amador county, but after mining there a short time at Volcano, he returned to Contra Costa county. Locating in Merced county in 1869, he took up land near Cottonwood, and was there engaged in farming until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Gorham Brown, was born in Illinois, and died, in 1900, in Contra Costa county, Cal.

Six children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Packard, namely: Maurice L., manager of the home place, and a mail carrier on a rural free delivery route; Lucinda May, assistant postmaster at Newman; Bertha M., wife of Alfred Eachus of Newman; Judson; Byron; and Reuel. In his political affiliations Mr. Packard was a staunch supporter of the principles promulgated by the Republican party. He belonged to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and was a faithful member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

L. N. BLACKLEDGE, M. D. The confidence of the citizens of Orosi and vicinity has been won by Dr. Blackledge in his work as a physician and surgeon, and he has built up an extensive and lucrative practice, although he has been a resident of this place but a short time. He is a native of Nottingham, Ind., where his birth occurred December 22, 1854. He is the third child and the only one in California in a family of nine sons and two daughters, of whom four sons and the two daughters are now living. His father, Jason R. Blackledge, was a native of Columbiana county, Ohio, where his father, a native of Bucks county, Pa., had settled upon emigration to the middle west. The elder man subsequently located in Wells county, Ind. The family came originally from English ancestors and in their location in Pennsylvania belonged to the Society of Friends. Jason R. Blackledge was reared in Indiana after he had reached the age of ten years, in manhood following the example of his father and becoming a farmer. Removing to Newton, Jasper county, Iowa, he followed the same occupation until his death. His wife, formerly Mary Paxson, is a native of Ohio and the daughter of Benjamin Paxson, who removed from his birthplace in Pennsylvania and settled first in Ohio and later went to Jay county, Ind. Mrs. Blackledge survives her husband, making her home in Newton.

L. N. Blackledge was reared in Iowa after reaching the age of three years, his father locating in that state in 1857. He attended the public schools and later the Hazledell Academy. Deciding to take up the profession of medicine, he entered the Penn Medical University at Philadelphia, from which institution he was graduated in 1880 with the degree of M. D. Locating in Pennville, Jay county, Ind., he entered upon a practice of his profession which continued for twenty years in the same location. He met with a success in his work which was not the result of accident, but of earnest and conscientious study, his every effort being to keep abreast of all advancement in the science of medicine and surgery. In 1887 he took a course in the Indiana Dental College at Indianapolis, graduating therefrom with the degree of D. D. S., while he also took special clinics on surgery at the Medical Department of the University of Indiana, in Indianapolis.

In Pennville, Ind., in 1879, Dr. Blackledge was united in marriage with Amanda J. Brown, a native of Monroe county, Ohio, and the daughter of Isaac Brown, of Maryland, who settled first in the Buckeye state, where he engaged as a merchant in Bellville, and later as a farmer in Jay county, Ind. Mrs. Blackledge is also a graduate of the Penn Medical College, having completed the course in 1874 with the degree of M. D., and practiced her profession in Pennville until her marriage. In 1899, on account of his wife's health, Dr. Blackledge came to California, spending the first six months in Pomona, from there going to Long Beach for a like period, and from there to Piru, Ventura county, where he engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery. In February, 1904, he located in Orosi and entered upon a general practice, which has already grown to lucrative proportions. He has evidenced his faith in the growth of the country by purchasing a twelve-acre orange orchard as well as property in Orosi. To himself and wife were born the following children: Cleola, at home; Inez G., a graduate of the high school of Pomona, and now a nurse in the California Hospital; and Brennan, in the high school of Dinuba. In Pennville, Ind., Dr. Blackledge was made a Mason and is demitted, and was also made a member of the Knights of Pythias, of which he is past chancellor, and is an ex-representative to the Grand Lodge. He is also associated with the Woodmen of the World.

In addition to his professional work Dr. Blackledge has always taken an active interest in oil wells, drilling twenty-two wells in Pennville, some of which were excellent producers.

JOSEPH CARTER, a successful orange grower of Tulare county, was born near Banbury, Oxfordshire, England, October 23, 1845, the eldest of three children. His parents, John, a farmer in Gardener, and Mary (Coleman) Carter, were both natives of the same place, where their death also occurred. Joseph Carter was reared on a farm, receiving his education in the public schools. Deciding to emigrate he came to America in 1867 and located near Columbus, Ohio, where he followed general farming until March, 1873. In that year he came to California, for nearly two years remaining in the vicinity of Stockton; in January, 1875, he came to Portersville, Tulare county, purchasing the property upon which he has since made his home. This consists of eighty acres located one mile east of the town, all being under the Pioneer Ditch, of which company he has since become a director. He began at once upon modern methods of improvement and cultivation, putting out alfalfa and deciduous fruits. When growing and bearing he set out oranges. He began this work in 1888, and since that time has budded his entire orchard of twenty-three acres to navel oranges. It is his intention to set out the balance of his property in oranges, in the growth of which he has met with a gratifying success. In conjunction with Moses Davidson he is also interested in a well and pumping plant, whose capacity is fifty inches, operated by an electric motor, his interest being two-thirds of the concern. In 1899 he put up on his property a new and handsome residence, which has added immeasurably to the value of the place.

Mr. Carter married Mary Lewis, a native of Amador county, who was a resident of the vicinity of Portersville, and born of this union are five children, namely: Ella; Joseph and John, horticulturists, located on forty acres of orange land; Etta; and Clara. Mr. Carter is a member of the Baptist Church. He is a man of much worth and integrity and has taken a prominent place in affairs in Portersville, acting as school trustee and also as clerk of the board. He is broad-minded and public-spirited in every way, and always takes an active interest in movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community.

JOHN HERVEY DEMAREE. The name, Demaree, is of French origin and was first known as Demorest. The emigrating ancestor settled in the eastern states, where the family flourished for some time. Cornelius Demaree, a native of Pennsylvania, emigrated to Kentucky, thence to Indiana, where he followed farming as a means of livelihood. In his family was a son called Samuel, who was born in Kentucky, growing to manhood in that state, where he married. He followed teaching for a time, later locating as a farmer in Parke county, Ind., where his death eventually occurred. His wife, formerly Nancy J. Curry, of Kentucky, also died in Indiana. Of their family of ten children four sons and one daughter are living.

The fifth in his father's family, John Hervey

Demaree was born near Rockville, Parke county, Ind., June 27, 1843. He was reared on the paternal farm in Indiana, receiving his education in the district schools. He remained at home until the fall of 1863, when on December 14 he was mustered into Company A, Eighty-fifth Regiment Indiana Infantry, at Indianapolis. Following his enlistment he served under Sherman, participating in the battle of Resaca and various others in that locality. At the battle of Big Shanty he was taken ill, and was sent to the hospital at Nashville, thence back to Madison, Ind., where he remained under the doctor's care until the spring of 1865. He received his honorable discharge and was mustered out June 7, 1865. His brother, William Scott Demaree, now of Idaho, served through the Civil war in the Thirty-eighth Indiana Regiment of Infantry. Upon the close of the war Mr. Demaree found himself a cripple from the effects of sciatic rheumatism. Desiring to complete the education interrupted by the enlistment, he entered the Waveland Academy, and remained for nearly four years, when he graduated and entered upon his work of teacher in the same institution. After two years in that location he went to Wabash College, but was forced to give up that work on account of trouble with his eyes. Later he located in Kansas and engaged in teaching near Carlyle for a year, when he went back to Illinois and followed the same occupation until 1875. In that year he came to Tulare county, Cal., and bought the eighty acres which forms his present home. This is located on the St. John's river, and at that time consisted of entirely wild land. This he has since improved, and is cultivating to alfalfa and pasture, being principally engaged in stock-raising and the dairy business. The latter business he has been in for the past twenty years, being a pioneer in the work, making butter and selling milk supplied by a herd of fifteen cows. In addition to this property he also owns a farm of three hundred and twenty acres on the White river and forty acres one mile and a half from his home.

In 1875 he was united in marriage with Martha E. Depler, a native of Ohio, and they are now the parents of four children, all of whom are living, namely: Bertha Belle, Justin Hughes, Missouri Curry and M. Ray. Mr. Demaree is a member of the Presbyterian Church, while his wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically he is a Republican in national issues, but reserves the right to cast his ballot locally for the candidate whom he considers best qualified for public office. Taking a practical interest in all local affairs, he helped build the Willow school-house, and has served as school trustee for fifteen years. He is now acting as rural mail deliverer, on Rural Free Delivery No. 2, delivering to four hundred patrons north and east of Visalia, having been appointed to this position November 16, 1903. Mr. Demaree is a broad-minded and enterprising citizen, winning the esteem and confidence of his fellow townsmen by the many qualities which distinguish his citizenship. He has taken a practical interest in the upbuilding and development of this section, making his own success parallel with that of his adopted state.
